spoken evil goes forth wounding and slaying and cannot be recalled. The cruel jest, the heartless scoff sinks into some soul, and like a heavy weight, lies there, preventing its rise Godward. It is often lightly spoken, with no thought of mischief, but effects are not controlled by intentions and the wound is as deadly as if it had been caused by a shaft deliberately aimed. Looking back over our past lives, we can all see how large a portion of our sorrow and suffering has been caused by words. Even our temptations and sins have received added power from the same source. The unclean story, the ribald jest on sacred subjects, the witty epigram which makes evil seem good, may lie in some mind inactive until, in some struggle with temptation, it recurs to the memory and opens the vulnerable place by which the enemy may enter. The tongue, then, must be tamed. It must be brought into subjection. It must be trained to avoid hasty and foolish and passionate utterances. It must be the servant of the soul, acting only under deliberate command. The Christian ought never to have to say, "Forgive me, I spoke hastily, I meant no harm;" or "I was carried away by excitement, I did not mean what I said." Such humiliating confessions may be made and ought to be made more frequently than they are. Husbands and wives, parents and children suffer and inflict suffering in this way on each other that years of devotion do not erase from the memory. The loving heart quivers under the stroke as if it had been a blow and the lifted shaft rankles there long after he who has winged it has for-

of its members. That in a town of about thirty thousand population a building like this, costing fifty thousand dollars should have been erected for the use of the Association implies a degree of enterprise of no mean order. The Association has 300 members, of whom two-thirds are on the active list. It has a large gymnasium with the most modern appliances, and an organized system of secular classes in which four branches are taught. It is also gratifying to see from its annual report that the religious department is in a flourishing condition. The average attendance at the Bible classes and devotional meetings last year was over fifty.

The Brooklyn, N. Y., Christian Endeavor Union held its monthly meeting Feb. 23 in the People's Church on Chauncey Street. It has adopted the custom of making the first part of these monthly meetings an Open Parliament, and the plan is found to be very enjoyable. After the Parliament, the Rev. Doremus Scudder addressed the meeting.

The Juniors of the Baptist Young People's Union of San Jose gave an interesting exhibition of proficiency in Bible study at the meeting held to welcome President Chapman recently. The children gave the names of all the books of the Bible and classified them, reciting Scripture verses as each division was made. The whole exercise showed that they had given intelligent and diligent study to the Bible.

The Washington Revival.

(Continued from first page.)

there is proof that they have not been spoken in vain. Numbers of men and women whose lives gave no evidence except their church connection of their belonging to Christ, have gained new power and new will and they are now active in bringing their friends to the meetings, and in going from one to another of their acquaintance in the Convention Hall to pray with them or to direct them to Christ. This has not been accomplished by scolding or denunciation, but by the simple, manly, kindly expostulation of the great Evangelist, who has shown them that they are not living up to their privileges, and are not enjoying the blessings that come to all who work for Christ. Mr. Moody possesses remarkable tact in dealing with such people, and indeed with people of all classes. His sermons do not seem so much like sermons as like a friendly, personal talk of a man of strong common-sense who wants to show his friend good points which perhaps have before escaped his notice. Yet his utterances are epigrammatic and incisive to a remarkable degree. That those of our readers who have never heard this word-famed preacher may understand something of his pulpit power, we append the following nuggets extracted from his recent sermons in Washington:

"I once heard a Scotchman say that there wasn't a man in all Saul's army who did not believe God could give him the power to overcome Goliath, but there was a boy outside of the army who believed God would give it to him. That is the kind of faith needed."

"What we want to do is to make the heart pure. Don't do as the man did who imagined he could purify the water in the well by painting the pump white. Purify the heart, my friend, that is all that needs to be done."

"Some one once surmised that Noah must have been a deaf man, or he could not have stood all the scoffings and derision heaped upon him. Yet he was not so deaf that he could not hear the Lord when he told him to build his ark."

"I heard an old Scotchman say one time that it had taken two people to accomplish his salvation. I asked him who they were, and he said, 'Miesel' an' the Lord, I did all I could against it, and he did the rest.' That is just about the amount of help the most people give the Lord when he tries to save them."

"God wants to do something for you instead of your doing something for him when it comes to the question of salvation." You must just stop trying and striving with yourself to make yourself all right before you go and offer yourself to God. Give yourself up to him and let him redeem you, and then all those worldly attractions and pleasures which seem so sweet and so hard for you to get rid of by yourself will just naturally fade out of sight, and you will cease to long for them and so cease to strive to be rid of them."

"Why, suppose I should tell you I had lost a very valuable diamond here in this hall to-night, and that I would give $10,000 to the one who found it. Do you think I could get any other idea into you to-night? Not much. Why, every man of you, and every woman and child, too, would get down on the floor searching for that diamond, and not all of the police here in Washington could get you out of the hall until it was found. You laugh at it, but it is so. Now, my friends, isn't eternal life worth more than $10,000?"

Speaking of Christians who were not able to direct a sinner to Christ or did not care to try to do so, Mr. Moody said: "It is very much like one of those signs you see in the window of a building that is for rent. 'This building to rent with power so much; without power so much.' There is an engine hidden away down in the basement there, and if you get the room with the power you have to pay for it. Without power it comes cheaper. That's the way with a lot of Christians. They rent their premises without power."

Referring to sinners who want to try to reform and get rid of sin before accepting Christ, Mr. Moody said: "What nonsense. Suppose I want to get this glass filled with water and say, 'Oh, it's filled with air; I must get the air out of it before I can fill it.' How do you suppose I would get along trying to pour the air out? Here is the way I would do it," picking up the pitcher that stood on the desk beside him and pouring the water into the glass. "I'd get the water into it and that would take care of the air. Get your hearts filled with righteousness and the love of God and there will not be any room in them for sin."

"Many a man and woman won't come to a church where they know they are going to hear the truth, because they know they will be made uncomfortable. They are like a man I heard say once that he liked to go to a church where they did not preach politics or religion. Yes, of course he did. Then he did not have anything to disturb him, but could sleep right on. I have had lots of people get mad when I was preaching and get up and stamp right out and slam the door after them. But, bless you, that is not a very bad sign. When you get a man mad and ready to take issue with you there is some hope of convincing him. It is these people who are always agreeing with you and then going out and agreeing with the first ungodly scuffer that they may meet with that are the ones hard to reach."

"I tell you, we are all of us a mighty poor lot. I hear folks speak of naturally good people. But that kind of people is mighty scarce. Suppose a fellow should come to Washington and say he could photograph the human heart. How many people in the city do you suppose would dare to have theirs taken? Mighty few, I tell you. Why? Because we don't like to see ourselves shown up in true colors. But when we primp up, look very fine, and get a good picture, why, then, we order about fourteen dozen. The truth of the matter is, we try to whitewash our bodies, but leave our hearts as black as ever."

"I hear people talking about culture, but I tell you I have heard so much talk about it that I am sick and tired of it. Suppose I should take an acre lot and plough it this way and that way, day in and day out, pretty soon some one would want to know what I was planting, and when I would tell them that I wasn't planting anything, just cultivating it, they'd be very apt to say that it was about time for me to begin planting some seeds. They'd be right, too. Don't wait until it is too late. Begin at once; stop cultivating. The soil is ripe. Think, think—it is thinking of what we are and what we should be that saves us."

"A mother brought her little child to one of my meetings one night and became separated from her in the crowd. She was distracted and went about calling 'Mary, Mary,' but could get no reply. At last when she was almost crazy she found her daughter sitting demurely in the front seat. She asked the child why she had not answered her call and the baby replied, 'Oh, I wasn't lost. I didn't know you were calling me!' That's the way with a good many professing Christians. They listen to what I say and remark to themselves, 'That doesn't mean me; he means John Brown. I've noticed those things about Brown myself.'"

PREPARED FOR DEATH.

An aged man was an enthusiastic zoologist, and from youth had spent much of his time in collecting by the sea-shore, shells and other objects of natural history. On this last occasion he had gone to a quiet secluded spot, where he had hoped to gather some rare specimens, and was successful; but in his intentness he wandered out to a little mound which, though quite dry when the tide was out, was covered with water when the tide was in. While busily engaged collecting shells and weeds, he did not notice that the tide had turned, until he suddenly awoke to the fact that he was completely surrounded by water, and all escape cut off. The water was two deep for him to ford, and he was too frail to even attempt to swim. There was no person within a mile of him, who could come to his aid, and he saw he must die: so taking out his notebook he wrote down how he came to that place, and how the accident had occurred, and added: "Tell my brothers and sisters that I am quite happy, and die rejoicing and trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ." That veteran was prepared for death, and though it came upon him suddenly, he did not quail. He knew in whom he believed, and was persuaded that Christ was able to keep that which was trusted to him.

In David's Camp.

Tent Life among the Bedouins and its Delights—A Surprising Cuisine—Our Arab Cook and his Wonderful Art.

AS when the weary traveler gains
The height of some o'erlooking hill,
His heart revives, if 'cross the plains,
He sees his home, though distant still.

I repeat the lines wistfully, from a "height" so lofty and crowning a descent so steep that all have alighted from their horses to walk down.

David Jamal has lifted his hand to point down the valley lying at foot of the range: "There is our camp!"

According to custom, the mule-train was sent on early this morning to make all ready for our coming. The little encampment is always a goodly sight. It was never more inviting than as we see it now, nestled among olive trees and backed by a green plain. We give hardly a glance to the range beyond, which must be passed to-morrow. Visions of precipitous defiles and sudden "drops" in the road, and hills full of rolling stones, to me most formidable of all, where the formula, "I believe I will walk up this!" excites the good-humored smiles of the escort—none of these things mar the pleasure which warms our hearts at the first glimpse of the white tents that by now mean home to the wanderers. We walk cheerily down the rugged slope, and more cheerily traverse the stony level at the bottom, a river in the rainy season, and now filled with pebbles and boulders brought down by freshets; blithely we climb the knoll on which smiles our encampment.

David and the Bedouin sheik, who is our safe conduct through the country, have spurred forward, and the former stands ready to lift me down at the door of "the lady's tent." Within, water and towels await me, and a bed as comfortable as I have found in any hotel, should I care to rest until "afternoon tea" is served. By David's wise management, we are seldom if ever too late in arriving for this refreshment. By the time I have washed face and hands, and brushed my hair and garments, Imbarah, tall and serene, has set the tray in order, our camp-chairs beside it, and awaits further orders. The tea is swallowed and our hearts are "revived" into actual joyousness.

"The jolliest life in the world!" sighs Alcides, in blissful content. "Don't get out your note-book. It is enough to be alive on an evening like this—and here!"

We never weary of the incidents and scenes of camp-life, and continually discern new and picturesque features in it. Opposite the door of my tent is the luncheon-booth, different in shape from the rest, with an awning above the entrance, never let down to close up the interior, except when rain overtakes us on the road, for it accompanies us everywhere, and is the only tent pitched at noon. Like the others, it is lined with a vari-colored fabric of Cairene needlework, the outside being waterproof and "wind-tight." To the right, as we sit, yawns the cooking-tent. In fine weather, the construction, I cannot yet dignify it by the name of "range," stands outside. It is a series of holes with a slight sheet of iron built about them, and each glows with a charcoal fire. At this hour, the cook—Johannes Johanan ("Yohanan")—or as we prefer to know him, plain John—presides over these craters, like a burly priest above sacrificial fires. Before I had learned wisdom by experience, I used to watch doubtfully processes so unlike any other methods of cookery with which I was acquainted as to awaken apprehensions as to the outcome. That, without other utensils than two or three pots, a couple of kettles, a frying-pan, a gridiron, a chopping-tray and knife, and a few spoons, he could get up a decent meal might well tax the credulity of a Middle States housewife. That from the enchanted craters or retorts, will be sent to our table at six o'clock, a six-course dinner, as well-cooked and as daintily garnished and served as if furnished by Delmonico's chef, is a fact stated upon the authority of all who have partaken of these magical repasts. Excellent soup is the first course; two dishes of meat, always chickens or partridges, a "made dish" or "entree," salad, pudding, or tart or custard, or blanc mange, fruit, nuts and raisins and black coffee—is a bill-of-fare that represents our every-day family dinner. When a holiday intervenes, or distinguished guests are expected—ah, then John of many names buckles on his armor of proof and spreads a table in the wilderness that would have made David the Royal open his eyes in amazed delight.

Next to the kitchen comes the dining-tent, furnished with table, and jointed or camp-chairs of Jamal's own design, having each four stout legs, perpendicular and trustworthy, and a good back of its own. Besides these, are camp-stools that may be used as foot-rests, and steamer-chairs or lounging-chairs for lazy and weary hours. The table-furniture is that of an elegantly-appointed home: the invariable brightness of the silver is a despair to one housewife who, after many years of patient effort, confesses herself unequal to the task of training hirelings to keep urn and teapot and spoons up to looking-glass lustre.

Imbarah dwarfs the tent every time he enters, by his slim attitude of six-feet-three. He serves each course faithfully, omitting not one jot or tittle of the waiter's duty, and moves like a long-drawn-out shadow.

The number of sleeping-tents is regulated by the size and material of the party. That allotted to the only lady of the present company is in nothing more luxurious than that occupied by Alcides. It is spacious, and I can stand upright in any part of it. On one side is a dressing-table and behind it hangs a mirror. The cot-bed is most comfortable, supplied with feather pillows, clean linen, white counterpane and warm blankets. The floor of earth beaten hard and smooth, has two coverings of carpet, the uppermost being Oriental rugs, soft and pretty. The polished pole in the centre is set about with hooks and rings on which wraps and extra clothing are hung.

I am the more explicit as to the details of our present abode because of letters lately received from friends over the sea, sympathizing with me in the hardships of camp-life, and fearing that I may be permanently injured by the experience. One dear friend writes:

"I cannot express my admiration of your courage in undertaking to dwell in tents for whole nights together. It is well enough for men, especially the young and healthy. For women, and those who are well—to say the least, not as young as they once were—it is, in my way of thinking, imprudent and hazardous."

There are hundreds in America who would echo her sentiments, who, but for dread of the difficulty and discomfort attending Palestine camp-life, would gladly extend their journeyings to the oldest and most interesting of lands. For the benefit of such, I am describing our encampment just as I see it, this hour. In rainy weather, if we are caught abroad, we find our quarters snug and dry, if somewhat confined as to sitting-room space. If the torrents are heavy, trenches are dug about the tent to lead the water off. The floors never become wet.

Dinner over—and we discuss it as leisurely as we like, time being no object in the evening—our lounging chairs are set—if the night be dry—without my tent-door. To our left, the mules, eight or ten in number, and the horses, are pitched on the extreme verge of the encampment. Nearer to us, the muleteers, "the boy," (thirty or thereabouts) whose name ought to be spelled as it is pronounced—but probably is not—"Serkess" and the grave-eyed, gentle-voiced sheik (pronounced "Shake,") sit upon the earth about the camp-fire, where they will sleep to-night. We wish vainly for an artist, or for a camera warranted to report by fire-light, that might preserve for us the picture made by the unconscious group. The red light flames fitfully upon the bearded faces framed by the silken handkerchiefs (kafeyahs), wound over their caps and under their chins; touching the gilt embroidery of the sheik's vest and the butt of his sword, bringing out the red scarf of one man, the yellow "kafeyah" of another, and showing the intent eyes fastened upon the narrator.

We call up David to translate a few sentences of the story. He laughs in indulgent amusement at seeing that Serkess is the speaker, and bends an attentive ear to the tale. It is, we learn presently, a story of a Sultan's son and a fairy who is enraged because he has broken her water-jar. "I cannot punish you because you are the son of my Sultan," she says, "but you shall fall in love with a beautiful woman who lives seven mountains away." "It is a scene right out of the Arabian nights!" cries Alcides, delightedly, and we fall anew to watching the countenances of the auditors.

Serkess uses his hands freely as he goes on: sometimes he is very animated; the attention of the listeners never wanders from him; now and then a low exclamation evinces the feeling aroused by the simple—to us childish—recital of love and adventures, of dangers many and miraculous deliverances. Men fifty years old will hang upon the utterance of such until midnight, occasionally they hearken immovable all night long.

We have our own talk in the dimly-lighted background, while the hands of Orion glitter in the zenith and the nebulous glow of the Pleiades brightens in the darkening night, and the sacred mountains keep watch and ward upon the horizon. Often we ask David to join us and tell us stories of real life; of Bedouin prowess and Bedouin thievery; of Arab love and Arab murders; of Moslem manners and customs and superstitions. He has them all at his tongue's end, and if urged, will give us, less freely, incidents of his own early adventures, when travel in the Holy Land was another name for peril. It was not possible, then, for foreigners, or natives, for that matter—to go from Dan to Beersheba with no other protection than a mounted sheik as a pledge of nomadic tribes that all is right, and, according to their tribal code, lawful. Armed men by the score attended the travelers, and attack, in certain regions, might be expected at any instant.

"What has made the change?" we ask him. The loyal Syrian draws himself up proudly.

"The present Government, madam!" We laugh, having anticipated the reply.

"Why, David, you will convince us, by and by, that your Sultan is a pretty good sort of fellow."

"We never had a better ruler, madam. Look at the improvement in our roads, and how it is so much safer to go from place to place, and what he is doing for the poor. He is most merciful and tender-hearted, moreover. He has given from his own purse twenty thousand pounds toward rebuilding the mosque that was burned at Damascus.

JOHN OF MANY NAMES.

"Then, too, there is Abraham Hakee Pacha, Governor of Jerusalem, who gives much attention to the condition of the city and the poor and needy. A very just and upright man in all his dealings. And El-Haj Saleem-Effendi-el-Husane, head of the municipality of Jerusalem, gives all facilities for the welfare and comfort of the inhabitants. A noble gentleman is he. His parents are of the oldest house in Jerusalem. I cannot but speak well of our rulers and governors, madam. They are doing their best for us. And madam must see that there is much to be done."

He is so much in earnest that we refrain from expressing our gratification that the sheik of the neighboring village has sent a guard to patrol our camp to-night. Whenever it can be done, the encampment is within a few minutes' walk of a hamlet or town, whence a guard of two men is drawn to be guarantee to the government for the safety of the travelers. So secure does this precaution make us that we lay us down to sleep as tranquilly as if we were behind walls and bolts at home. If additional surety were required, we have the knowledge that David Jamal makes the rounds in person twice during the dark hours to assure his faithful soul that all is well with his charges. I have never slept more soundly and healthfully than in his tents. If we awake once in a while to hear the queer cry of jackals over their prey, or are startled by the weird laugh of a hyena and the bark of a wolf, we smile at the oddity of the situation and turn us again to our pillows with renewed consciousness of safety in our guarded nest.

Morning comes all too soon. Usually, the first knowledge we have of the return of the light is brought through the scratch that serves as a knock at the door of the tent, and the civil sentence in Arabic that signifies "hot water" in English. The smoking can for our toilet stands at the entrance.

No refinement of civilization that thought and pains can secure is lacking. Ours is the universal continental breakfast, also in vogue at the East—coffee and tea, bread-and-butter, eggs in some form, and marmalade, honey, or jam. While we eat it, all the tents except that in which we sit, are quietly "struck" and packed. When we come out, horses and men are ready, and the gravely-courteous morning salutation of our incomparable dragoman is coupled with the reverent,—"By God's will we will see" such-and-such a place "before the sun sets again."

The sheik swings into his saddle, and leads the way in the direction taken by the mule-train; Massoud, the wiry gray ridden by Alcides, curvets and kicks, like a merry colt in falling into line; Serkess rides briskly by, a grotesque figure upon his perch atop of the roll of luncheon booth and hampers; before we have gone a hundred yards, David, who has tarried to issue a parting order to the three men engaged in clearing up the debris of the camp, gallops to my side, his mettled charger, Dervish, brave with embroidered saddle-cloth and fringed housings, and we are fairly started on the march.

MARION HARLAND.

CHAPTER IX Continued.

MARIE walked, unbidden, every morning down the two hills grading the half-mile slope lying between the hill-side farmhouse and the village post-office. She had to-day taken quite a batch of letters with other mail from the freckled hand of the social young clerk who inquired, in giving it, if her folks kept pretty well. She sorted the "mail" hastily in the long porch of the "store."

Three letters for her mother—one in uncle Roger's hand-writing; one with a New York grocer's letter-head upon the envelope, for Elspeth; one for herself from Lanier, and one other which she tore open hastily.

Four pages were covered with the fiercely-pronounced chirography peculiar to some fifty thousand-and-odd young women of the modern school, and which, until this fact is recognized, leaves one unprepared for the very small beer of ladylike correspondence.

Marie did not pause to read it. A glance showed her that the envelope contained nothing besides this epistle from Carrie Storrs, her bosom-friend and class-mate at Mrs. Marcy's school. She tucked it back into the cover, dropped it with the rest of the letters, the daily paper and a magazine, into the flat satchel on her arm, and instead of going home, set off, at a swift gait, across the bridge and up the broad highway beyond. It was shadeless for a quarter of a mile, but the city-bred girl did not raise her parasol. The air breathed freely over acres of hay-meadows and corn-fields, and there were no brick walls to absorb and radiate heat.

She did not heed or care whither her brisk pace would take her.

CHAPTER X.

"The humblest occupation has in it materials of discipline for the highest heaven."—F. B. Robertson.

Dear Comforter! Eternal Love!
If thou wilt stay with me,
Oh lowly thoughts and simple ways
I'll build a nest for thee. —Faber.

Carrie Storrs was the one confidante of the tremendous secret that Marie Paull had been trying, since the middle of last December, to open communication with her father. She had easily convinced her friend that Ernest Paull was foully maligned by his enemies, and persecuted by his relations-in-law. In each of the letters Marie had dispatched, at first, hopefully, of late, desperately, to "Mr. Paul Morgan, Nice, France," she had instructed her father to reply under cover to Carrie, whose parents were too well disciplined, according to free American ethics, to inquire into their daughter's correspondence. Not a line had rewarded her filial fidelity, yet the sight of Carrie's handwriting upon the outside of an envelope would set her pulses to galloping and check her breath until inspection of the contents brought a sickening revulsion of feeling.

As she had walked down the hemlock-and-cedar-shaded road to the post-office twenty minutes ago, the lake one side, the woods upon the other, the plunge of the waters at the lower end of the pretty sheet over a thirty-feet-high dam, booming upon the rocks that threshed them into clouds of fleecy spray—an inspiration as refreshing as the cool breath of the falls and the spicy incense of the evergreens, had stolen into her soul.

She recalled bitterly in her way-side musings the stages of her lapse from exaltation to despondency. For one quarter of an hour she had permitted herself to feel sure that to-day's mail would yield up for her the news from a far-country for which she really believed she was slowly pining to death. While she waited in the dark low-browed "store," redolent with soap, cheese, brown sugar and molasses; new shoes, new woolen and new gingham, watching with interest that flattered the clerk, the freckled fingers that manipulated the contents of the mail-bag, the hope assumed the proportions of certainty. The clerk was airily arrayed in dust-colored corduroy trousers and a loose linen coat of indescribable hue; his hair would have been exactly the color of ground ginger had it been less heavily greased. It hung straight behind, and was parted so low upon the left side that the comb laying out the line must have grazed the hem of his prominent red ear. His hands were red, too, where the great brown freckles let out glimpses of the background; his fingers were stubby, with square tips, and flat nails edged with black.

She noticed all these things as senses, over-stained by excitement, become sensitized plates for the repetition of the minutest particular of environment. She recollected that she had prayed with especial fervor at rising that morning, for the coming of the letter. For one second her fingers tingled, prophetically, in closing upon Carrie's envelope—

It was all over, now! As she forged up the shadeless turnpike, she registered a mental vow never to let herself be sanguine again in expectation of the coveted good. It was a daily death. By the time she reached the elm-shadowed portion of the road, she had arrived at the conclusion that it would be folly to commit any more bread to the waste of unknown waters. If her father had cared to hear from her, why had not he, ready-witted as he was, devised some method of communication? Could there be a minute grain of truth in the version of his flight so coarsely retailed by Uncle Roger to Elspeth?

This, the first doubt of him that had ever assailed her, fairly beat the breath out of her lungs, the light out of her eyes. She felt herself grow sick and giddy—a leaf in a whirlwind of horror and despair. Then it was that she groped, rather than saw her way to the broad stone step and sank down.

She sat there so still that the Phœbe-birds, whose forbears had for many generations built mud-nests in the church-tower, hopped upon the stones within arm's length of her to peck the crumbs dropped yesterday by the school-children who had come across from the academy at recess to eat their lunch in the shade.

She sat there so long that a child, playing in the parsonage-garden, after staring at her himself unperceived until his nose took the impress of the two palings between which it had protruded, ran in to report to his mother upon the pretty lady who had gone to sleep upon the church-steps.

She moved stiffly at last; her head was light; her tongue had a queer, rough taste as if she had been dosed with calisaya or quassia. Automatically she fumbled in her satchel for Lanier's letter. She was not nearly rested yet. When she should be, she must go home. It was getting on toward noon. She would not think any longer. Thinking only made her pain the harder to bear, and did no good. For six months one idea had been the centre about which thought, affection, desire and hope had revolved. She had fixed her eyes upon it until when she tried to force them away, she saw nothing but whirling darkness everywhere else. Yet she had resolved to hope and expect no longer. In very idleness of misery she would see what Lanier had to say. She loved her brother, but there was little sympathy between them now-a-days. She had not seen him since Christmas, and then he was as plainly averse to speaking of the altered conditions of their home as even Uncle Roger could desire. All his thought seemed to be centred in their mother. He had not remarked upon his sister's rejection and reserve; probably had not observed them. That was another debt she owed to Uncle Roger. But he wrote entertaining letters—full of college news.

Instead of drawing out a sealed envelope, she had lighted again upon Carrie's. She opened it indifferently. Carrie's affluence of spirits jarred upon her friend occasionally. She carried no cross of personal sorrow and others' misfortune.

The opening paragraph of the unfolded letter set her teeth together as might the scratch of a pin upon glass.

MY MARY-BUD: Open your pretty eyes and read what a transcendently delightful, and yet comical happening has come to me. I cannot wait a minute longer without calling upon you to admire the cleverness of your usually-ever-so-much-less-bright-than-yourself friend and admirer.

Mr. Maynard, a friend of papa's, dined here this evening, and he and papa were speaking of the appointment of "Dick Oliver" as United States Consul at Nice. Of course, I pricked up my ears, and when there was a gap in the talk, I put in an oar.

"Papa! what are the duties of a consul?"

"To see that national interests are protected in foreign towns, Puss."

"What, for instance, could Mr. Oliver do for me if I were in Nice?" was my next advance.

"If you got into any trouble or needed any information, he would help you out."

"Suppose, then, I had run away from home, and was living in Nice, and calling myself, 'Sarah Jane Johnson,' and you wanted to ferret me out, could he find me for you?"

Well, they all laughed, and papa said I was a goose, but in the end I found out what I wanted to know. The thing for you to do is to direct your next foreign letter in care of "Mr. Richard Hurst Oliver, U. S. Consul, Nice, France," and put in it a note to Mr. Oliver, asking him to see that it reaches the person to whom it is addressed, etc., etc.

When both these letters are written, enclose them to me and let me mail them in New York. Country postmasters are the veriest gossips everywhere, and the official at Pequod (horrid name! why isn't it Avondale, or Rosemont, or Cedar Grove?) will have it all over the neighborhood that "that eldest girl of the Pauls sent off a funny letter to-day." Of course the reply, you'll be sure to get it now, my beauty! will be enclosed to me.

I rush this off that you may get it by to-morrow's mail.

Ever and forever yours,

CARRIE.

"Excuse me, but can I be of any service to you?"

Marie had sat motionless for ten rapturous minutes, her elbows upon her knees, her forehead upon her hands, tears of which she was unconscious, falling upon the letter in her lap. She flushed rosily at the query uttered in a pleasant, manly voice, her startled eyes, large with happy dew, were lifted to the countenance of a man in a strait-breasted black coat who had approached unheard across the turf. It was a genial visage, with regular, refined features, and she knew him for a clergyman before he added:

"I am Mr. Morse, the pastor of this church. My wife saw you sitting here and feared that you were ill, or that you had lost your way. Will you step into the Parsonage and rest, or, as I am just going out in my buggy, will you allow me to take you home?"

Marie arose, self-possessed and lady-like. In her lately-born happiness she showed at her best, and she had inherited much of her father's magnetic charm of manner.

"You are very kind, but I am quite rested now. I have walked a little too far in the hot sun, I think. I am Marie Paull, the daughter of Mrs. Paull who has taken the house on the other side of the lake. She has had the pleasure of hearing you preach several times, I think. I have just come home from my school in New York."

The frank reply pleased and attracted him. He held out his hand and removed his hat.

"I am happy to meet you, and esteem it a fortunate coincidence that I was just setting out to call upon Mrs. Paull. Will it be convenient for her to receive a visit in the forenoon?"

"She will be glad to see you at any hour of the day, Mr. Morse, and I accept gratefully the offer of a seat in your carriage if you are really going to call upon my mother." She was like the Marie Paull of by-gone days in the radiance and warmth of her new hope.

"A thorough little lady from crown to toe!" Mr. Morse informed his wife when he went around to the side-door of the Parsonage for his carriage and horse, Marie preferring to await his return at the church. "Judging from her behavior and from the mother's appearance, the family will be an acquisition to the church and to the neighborhood."

Mrs. Paull held long and weighty counsel with Elspeth while Marie was absent that morning.

To not more than one housewife in one hundred thousand is it appointed to be served as long and faithfully as this woman was by the sturdy Highlander. Without demur, or so much as the deepening of a furrow in a forehead criss-crossed by years of care-taking for others, she had gathered up such "stuff" as she could call her own and followed the family into a region as unknown to her as the Promised Land to Abraham. Country housekeeping was a vastly different matter than in this era, when hot and cold water, stationary tubs, bath-rooms and gasoline are insisted upon as essentials by "our girls" existence in rural districts as in the city.

Elspeth's kitchen occupied, with her chamber overhead, a whole wing of the old farmstead. By Mr. Lanier's orders, a modern range was set into the wide fireplace, but the brick oven still yawned in the wall to the right of this, and in the rafters ridging the ceiling were hooks where festoons of onions, dried apples and peppers used to hang. A wooden floor was laid upon the bricks worn by the tread of four generations of busy Marthas, and another window, let in at the back, made the room lighter and sweeter. The building was substantial and weather-tight; the walls of solid stone kept it warm in winter and cool in summer; a hipped Dutch roof gave the upper rooms a loftier pitch than would have been afforded by a story-and-a-half frontage, had the decline from combing to eaves been unbroken. There were seven bed-chambers above stairs, and four spacious rooms on the ground-floor, exclusive of the kitchen and store-closets. A dry cellar under-ran the whole house.

The consultation between mistress and maid was held in the long porch on the lakeward side. The flooring of this was of brick; white columns, small and frequent, upheld the roof, and honeysuckles of the old fashioned varieties, hardy and prodigal of bloom and scent, curtained this open-air sitting room of the present inmates. Clumps of such roses as our mothers loved to plant and tend—red and white damask, and many-flowering cinnamon, now a mass of pink fragrance—grew lushly upon the lawn. To the left of Mrs. Paull, as she sat beside her basket-work-stand, were garden and orchard; to her right, a row of tall pines broke the northern winds in winter. Beyond, and right in front of her, were the lake and the wooded hills she was learning to love—calm, restful and full of hopeful uplifting—abiding forever.

Elspeth was shelling peas into a brown bowl, sitting as straight as a ramrod upon her kitchen chair. The three children were at play in the grove of native woods—oak, hickory and tulip-poplar—that separated the house by several hundred yards from the high road.

"I feel virtue enter into me, day by day," Mrs. Paull had written to her brother the night before. "I am like a shipwrecked man, who thrown upon a friendly shore, sits in the shade, gathering his forces and recounting over to himself how much he has for which to thank God."

In like strain she had opened the dialogue with Elspeth. Nevertheless, there were certain matters that gave her serious and perplexing thought, she said.

"To begin with, I cannot let Mr. Lanier do anything more for us. Under his management, my income ought to support the children and myself. He is rich, and he is generous to a fault, but he has a family of his own, and you will understand me when I say that we cannot afford—nobody can afford—to be paupers."

Elspeth nodded in grim sympathy. She seldom spoke until a case was laid fully before her.

"We cannot get along without a horse and carriage, but I propose, when Lanier's vacation begins, to dismiss Aleck Sands, and let my big boy learn how to take care of a horse. He will have to make his way in the world, and the experience will be of service to him. One day's work from Aleck in each week will keep the garden in order with such weeding as Tom and Edwin must be taught to do. The two cows in your hands will supply us with milk and butter, and the poultry-yard will be my affair. I shall enjoy the open-air life and diversion it will give me."

"Elspeth!" coming to the point of the discourse—"we must, in one way or another, manage to live upon nine hundred dollars a year—the children's schooling and all. I know that I can depend upon you to help me do it."

"Ye may."

Whatever might be the spring of her mistress's earnestness she answered her as the helm the pilot's grasp.

(To be Continued.)

A Great Secret
underlies the principle that has brought success in the production and sale of the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk, and this partly accounts for the fact that competitors do not successfully imitate it. Thirty years in the lead.

Things are Looking Better.
Yes, every day shows cheering signs of improvement in every branch of business. If you are out of employment, or have spare time occasionally, write without delay to B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., who can make suggestions that will be worth your consideration.

A MISSIONARY SHIP.

In England recently a missionary steamship was launched which was built mainly by the contributions of children. The young people were asked to pay for this steamer as a centenary offering, the cost of which was about $85,000. It is 180 feet in length, 31 feet, 8 inches in breadth and 16 feet in depth. It will have cabin accommodations for twelve European missionaries and thirty native teachers. The usual voyage of a missionary in the South Seas covers fully 18,000 miles. The steamer is fully rigged with sails which can be used when the wind is favorable. She is to be named the "John Williams," in honor of that grand South Sea Island missionary, and is the fourth ship which has borne his name.

Weak and Nervous

Hood's Sarsaparilla Made Her Feel Like a Different Person.

"I was thoroughly disgusted with life for I felt certain there was no relief for me. I had been to many different doctors but they did nothing for that Weak, Nervous Feeling.

I was greatly run down. I did not get any better, but rather seemed to grow worse and was troubled a great deal with bleeding spells at the nose. My blood was poor and my features were pallid. I finally got a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla thinking that if it would do me no good it would do me no harm. I have now taken only three bottles but thanks to Hood's Sarsaparilla I Feel Like a Different Person altogether. Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped me wonderfully and I gladly recommend it." Mrs. W. E. HURLBURT, 739 E. 8th St., New York City.

Hood's Cures

Hood's Pills are prompt and efficient, yet easy in action. Sold by all druggists. 25c.

SOOTHING HEALING, PENETRATING For INTERNAL and EXTERNAL Use.

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT will cure Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cramps and Pains. Relieves Summer Complaints, Cuts and Bruises like magic. Illustrated Pamphlet free. Sold everywhere. Price 35 cts. Six bottles, $2.00. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

TO USERS OF

Cudahy's Rex Brand Beef Extract

We have secured a set of superb photographic reproductions in half-tone of the entire World's Columbian Exposition. This beautiful Art Portfolio will be issued in fourteen parts, each part containing sixteen engravings, or 224 in all. The complete work will contain engravings of every Main Building, every State and Territorial Building, every Foreign Building, Interior Views, Lagoons, Statuary, Grounds, Fountains, and about fifty views of the Midway Plaisance. These grand pictures, each one of which is a work of art, are printed from copper plates on the finest quality of cream-enameled paper. The original photographs of which these are reproductions, were sold for fifty cents each on the Fair Grounds. In order to secure any one of the fourteen parts, it will only be necessary for you to send six cents in postage stamps (to cover cost of mailing). Order by number.

We send free our illustrated booklet from "Ranch to Table," and interesting write-up of the cattle industry, from the "branding of the Maverick" to the "round-up" of the prime steer into delicious Beef Extract. Sample jar sent free for 6c. to pay postage.

The Cudahy Pharmaceutical Co., SO. OMAHA, NEB.

No local dealer can compete with us

WALL PAPER

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples

Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.

We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS, 50-52 W. 18th St., NEW YORK. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

GRAY HAIR RESTORED to youthful color by Dr. Hays' Hair Restorer. Removes dandruff. Don't stain. 50c. Send to London Supply Co. 533 Broadway, N. Y. For Hair Book and Best Hair Care, Best Cure Cure, both FREE

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" lamp-chimneys are carefully made of clear tough glass; they fit, and get the utmost light from the lamp, and they last until some accident breaks them. "Pearl top" and "pearl glass" are trade-marks. Look out for them and you needn't be an expert.

Pittsburgh

GEO. A. MACBETH CO.

Thin Children Grow Fat

on Scott's Emulsion, because fat foods make fat children. They are thin, and remain thin just in proportion to their inability to assimilate food rich in fat.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod Liver Oil is especially adaptable to those of weak digestion—it is partly digested already. Astonishing how quickly a thin person gains solid flesh by its use!

Almost as palatable as milk.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

PERSONALLY-CONDUCTED PLEASURE TOURS

FLORIDA. March 13th and 27th. Two weeks in the Land of Flowers on the first tour, while tickets for last tour are good to return until May 31st. Special trains of Pullman Sleeping and Dining Cars. Rate from New York $50.00, from Philadelphia $48.00. Proportionate rates from other points.

WASHINGTON. March 22d, April 12th, May 3d and 24th. Three-day tours to the National Capital, covering railroad fare and hotel accommodation. Rate from New York $13.00 and $13.50, from Philadelphia $11.00.

TOURIST AGENT AND CHAPERON ACCOMPANY EACH PARTY.

For tickets, itineraries, and full information apply to Tourist Agent, 233 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia; 1136 Broadway, New York; 860 Fulton Street, Brooklyn; or 205 Washington Street, Boston.

S. M. PREVOST, J. R. WOOD, GEO. W. BOYD, Gen'l Manager, Gen'l Pass. Agent, Asst. Gen'l Pass. Agent

ONLY 10% ABOVE FACTORY COST

$8.78 buys a $65 Singer

Style Machine. $19.38 buys Highest Grade modern style machine in the world. 25 different styles at intermediate prices. Warranted Ten Years.

We are the only manufacturers selling sewing machines direct. Liberal terms for securing a Sewing Machine FREE.

CHICAGO SEWING MACHINE CO. 96 Halsted St., CHICAGO, ILL.

OUR SYSTEM THE BEST

We want reliable women in every town to sell $6.00 worth of Teas, Spices and Baking Powder for us, and get a set of Silver Knives and Forks free, or $12.00 worth, and get a set of China Dishes free. No money required until you deliver goods and get premium. W. A. THOMAS, 48-50 E. 3d St., Cincinnati, O.

ARE YOU HARD OF HEARING OR DEAF

Call or send stamp for full particulars how to restore your hearing, by one who was deaf for 30 years. Address John Garmore, Hammond Bldg. 4th & Vine, Cincinnati, O.

2c. WALL PAPER. Give paper 3 1/2 cts. pp. Embossed golds 10 cts. to 12 1/2 cts. per roll. 100 New Samples mailed FREE for 8c. postage. Good Quality. Fair Dealings.

KELLY WALL PAPER CO., 183 Elm St., CINCINNATI, O.

Spurgeon's Own Words.

"DEAR MR. CONGREVE: As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man."

REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation." "Yours heartily,"

(Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON, WESTWOOD, B-ulah Hill, England."

G. T. Congreve's Message to America.

The above letter from the late eminent preacher, C. H. Spurgeon, is one of thousands of testimonials to the wonderful curative properties of my Balsamic Elixir, which not only cures consumption but gives instant and permanent relief in cases of Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, Influenza and all Chest affections.

GEO. THOS. CONGREVE.

For years I have been entreated to make my remedy known in the United States, but my time has been too much absorbed by my European patients to allow this. Now, however, I have been able to extend my organization so as to bring America within the scope of my personal observation, and my desire is to make it clear to all citizens of the United States that they may henceforth procure from my American Depot a cure for Consumption which, even in the advanced stages of that terrible disease, may be used with certainty of relief.

Every person suffering from Chest Disease, and all of us it lungs and delicate habit, should read my book on Consumption of the Lungs or Decline, and its successful treatment, showing that formidable disease to be curable in all its stages, with observations on Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, together with accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, to be had post free for 25 cts., or the book will be sent free with every first order of $1.00 bottle of my Balsamic Elixir.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR can be obtained from many drug stores, but it will take some time before it will be introduced into all of them throughout this vast country. If your druggist has not yet put it in stock, it will be sent you, carriage paid, from my own depot, on receipt of 50 cts., $1.00, $1.75, $3.75 or $7.00, according to the size of the bottle ordered.

GEO. THOMAS CONGREVE, London, Eng., and 4 Wooster Street, New York.

Druggists supplied by C. N. CRITTENTON CO., NEW YORK, OR

John D. Park & Sons Co., Cincinnati. Mention this paper.

Swiss Lozenges, For curing Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, &c. Price, 25 cts. a Box Mailed.

H. EDWARD WENDEL, S. E. cor. 3d and George Streets, Philadelphia

MODERN Ideas of HEALTHFUL Dress are Perfected in

Ferris' Good Sense

Corset Waist.

Best for Health, Economy and Beauty. BUTTONS at front instead of CLASPS. RING BUCKLE at hip for Hose Supporters. Tape-fastened Buttons—won't pull off. Cord-edge Button Holes, won't wear out. FIT ALL AGES—Infants to Adults. All shapes. Full or slim busts. Long or short waists.

Western Marshall Field & Co. Chicago, Wholesale Depot. Sold by all Leading Retailers. Send for Circular. FERRIS BROS. Manufacturers and Patentees, 341 Broadway, New York. Branch Office: 537 Market St., San Francisco.

ALL THE FAMILY USE

Comfort Powder

Because it heals all skin affections and allays irritation. It will positively cure

Eczema, Itching, Chafing, Erysipelas, Burns, Bed Sores, A Chafing Baby, Tender Feet, Irritation under Truss. It ensures a Clear Complexion.

Sold by druggists, 50 cents per box, postage paid. COMFORT POWDER CO., HARTFORD, CONN. Send 2 two-cent stamps for liberal sample and book.

Use COMFORT SOAP. The Finest Medicated Toilet Soap for the Hands, the Face, and Complexion, 25c. cake.

FREE — A Grand Offer — FREE.

MME. A. RUPPERT'S FACE BLEACH.

Mme. A. RUPPERT says: "I appreciate the fact that there are thousands and thousands of ladies in the United States that would like to try my World-Renowned FACE BLEACH; but have been kept from doing so on account of the price, which is $2 per bottle, or 3 bottles taken together, $5. In order that all of these may have an opportunity, I will give to every caller, absolutely free, a sample bottle, and in order to supply those living outside of city, or in any part of the world, I will send it safely packed, plain wrapper, all charges prepaid, on receipt of 25c., silver or stamps."

In every case of freckles, pimples, moles, sallowness, blackheads, acne, eczema, oiliness or roughness or any discoloration or disease of the skin, and wrinkles (not caused by facial expression) FACE BLEACH removes absolutely. It does not cover up, as cosmetics do, but is a cure. Address all communications or call on MADAME A. RUPPERT (Dept. V), No. 6 E 14th St., New York.

MUST HAVE AGENTS AT ONCE. Sample Sashlock free by mail for 2c. stamp. Immense Unrivalled. Only good one ever invented. Beats weights. Sales unparalleled. $12 a day. Write quick. BROHARD, Box 23, Phila.

EVERY WATCH GUARANTEED NO KEY REQUIRED NEW $1.50 AMERICAN WATCH & CHAIN

The cent watch represents our new 1894 American Lever Watch and Chain. It is not an imported watch, but entirely an American produced in this country by the best skilled mechanics. Neither is it a clock, but a perfect watch of ordinary size, 2 1/2 inches in diameter, 1 1/4 larger than cut. It is perfect in mechanism and we furnish with each a POSITIVE GUARANTEE as an accurate time-keeper for one year. Our factory produced last year nearly 500,000 watches and we have proven beyond doubt that America can make not only the BEST but the CHEAPEST watches. Do not be deceived by its low price or your past experience with other watches. Though cheap, it is good. The publisher of this paper will tell you that our guarantee may be relied on. DESCRIPTION: The movement is regular American Lever; Lantern pinion, 240 beats to minute; keyless (or stem) wind and set; 4 turns runs 24 hours; steel pinions, all parts of great durability and perfectly adjusted; patent escapement and regulator; dust proof case, handsomely finished in nickel or gilt; weight of watch 3 3/4 oz. diameter 2 1/2 in.; fully GUARANTEED one year—same as an Elgin or Waltham. SAMPLE post-paid with HANDBOOK CHAIN & catalogue $1.50; 3 for $4.00; 12 for $15.00 by Express. AGENTS and Storekeepers apply at once. Mention Paper. R. H. INCERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLAND ST., N. Y. CITY

WAITING.

WHEN life's hours of toil are ended,
And my day draws to a close:
When the bells of evening, chiming,
Call me to my long repose,
Eagerly my feet shall hasten,
And my eyes shall look to see,
Standing close to heaven's portals,
Loved ones, waiting there for me.

They who long for that far country
Watched me as I faltered on,
In earth's weary round of labor,
Strength and courage almost gone.
When they see me drop life's burdens
And to heaven's refuge flee,
Swift will gather round the portals
Loved ones, waiting there for me.

And when on their silver hinges
Wide the gates of pearl shall swing,
And by grace of him who loved me
I am suffered to come in.
First of heaven's joys so greet me
In that joyful hour shall be,
As I pass those shining portals,
Loved ones, waiting there for me.

Wonderful Cures of Catarrh and Consumption by a New Discovery.

Wonderful cures of Lung Diseases, Catarrh Bronchitis and Consumption, are made by the new treatment known in Europe as the Andral-Broca Discovery. If you are a sufferer you should write to the New Medical Advance, 67 East 6th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and they will send you this new treatment free for trial. State age and all particulars of your disease.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is a valuable medicine for the Grip. First as a preventive, preparing the system to resist the attack, and secondly, to assist convalescence by building up the system.

Every reason why it should

FIT

For Dr. Warner's Coraline Corsets are made in 25 styles—modelled to fit every variety of form.

Wear the one that fits
YOU

WORLD'S FAIR AWARDS TWO MEDALS
and one Diploma for Beauty, Strength and Cheapness. Over 50,000 of these vehicles have been sold direct to the people. Send at once for our complete catalogue. In every kind of vehicle & harness, also book of testimonials they are free.
ALLIANCE CARRIAGE CO., CINCINNATI, O.

MEPHISTO RING 25c
New & beautiful ring, made of two twisted bands of Rolled Gold and Silver. Turn it—the band is never to part! Lay it down—they seem to fall apart. Inspect it—you have a perfect ring! All the rage, over 1,000,000 sold in 2 months at 75c. We send sample with large retail for 25c postpaid. 1 box $2.50.
BOSTON NOVELTY CO., BOX 1540, BOSTON, MASS.

EVERY LADY WANTS OUR STOVE-POLISHING MITTEN.
Will wash a stove better than anything on earth and keep your hands clean at the same time. Ladies buy it at sight. They all want it. Big Profits to Agents. Sample Mitten and Letter by mail 30 cts.
BOSTON NOVELTY CO., BOX 1540, BOSTON, MASS.

LADIES we give you a set of silver knives and forks for a $6. club-order for our tea-extracts apices. No money asked until you get the Premium and deliver the goods. Consumers Wholesale Tea & Spice Co., CINCINNATI, O.

Page 21. Price $77.00.
TWO-SPRING CANOPY TOP PHAETON.

Page 47. Price $79.70.
CANOPY TOP PLEASURE WAGON.

Page 7. Price $55.95.
PIANO BOX BREWSTER BUGGY.

Page 46. Price $59.00.
OPEN PLEASURE WAGON.

Page 21. Price $77.00.
TWO-SPRING PHAETON.

FREE Catalogue

A CATALOGUE in itself is a very insignificant thing, especially so if it contains nothing to interest you. The Catalogue of our Murray $55.95 Buggies and $5.95 Harness is different. It will interest any person that can read the English language. It will surprise any person that is any way interested in any kind of a vehicle or harness. Our low prices astonish you and our elegant styles impress you. We'll mail you this Catalogue free (if you are the owner of a horse) simply for the asking. It costs us 20 cents, or an expenditure of $30,000 per year, for the 150,000 we send annually to our customers. We hope to secure your trade when you have examined the Catalogue; if we do not, no harm is done. To get you interested in its contents we give you below a few of the good things it contains:

Murray's World Renowned $5.95 Single Buggy Harness.

Murray World Renowned $55.95 Brewster and End Spring Top Buggies.

- Murray No. 2 Single Buggy Harness, $9.85
- Murray No. 3 " " " 10.95
- Murray No. 4 Double " " 15.70
- Murray No. 5 " " " 19.95
- Murray Phaeton Cart, - - 19.90
- Murray Road Wagon, - - 31.75
- Murray Canopy Top Phaeton, - 77.00
- Murray 4-Passenger Barouche, - 139.00

And a mammoth line of Saddles of all kinds, Harness of all kinds, and Vehicles of all kinds.

Just a few words more. We come to you as manufacturers, offering you direct from the factory new, bright and clean work, and at the same time save you the profits which you necessarily pay when buying from a dealer or agent. Besides, look at the elegant and mammoth stock which you have to choose from. All our goods are marked in plain figures, with one price for all. Is not this a good point, as it insures you that you are always getting the lowest price and are on the ground floor?

WRITE US FOR CATALOGUE NO. 16

THE WILBER H. MURRAY MFG. CO., CINCINNATI, OHIO,

Preserve This Paper. This Advertisement will not Appear Again.

Page 35. Price $143.00.
EXTENSION TOP 4-PASS. PHAETON.

Page 41. Price $19.75.
ENGLISH ROAD CART.

Page 30. Price $99.00.
JUMP SEAT SURREY ON END SPRINGS.

Page 15. Price $31.75.
SPINDLE BODY WAGON.

Price $5.95.
MURRAY HARNESS.

D*E*L*A*V*A*U*S
Whooping Cough
Croup
Violent Coughs
Tested over 40 Years.
EFFECTUAL AND HARMLESS.
60c. per bot. at druggists, or expressed from 6th and Wood Sts., Philadelphia, to any address 60c.

R*E*M*E*D*Y

SLOAN'S  Liniment
CURES RHEUMATISM
.. And all ..
Aches & Pains.
25 cts.
ALL DRUGGISTS & DEALERS.
MONEY REFUNDED IF NOT SATISFACTORY.
DR. E. S. SLOAN CO. - BOSTON, MASS.

SPRAY
YOUR FRUIT TREES
& VINES
Stahl's Double Acting Excelsior Spraying Outlets prevent Leaf Blight & Wormy Fruit. Insures a heavy yield of all Fruit and Vegetable crops. Thousands in use. Send 6 cts. for catalogue and full treatise on spraying. Circulars free.
WM. STAHL, Quincy, Ill.

MONEY RECEIVED.

Since our last acknowledgment, the following sums have been received and applied to the various funds indicated by the senders:

For THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School Missionary in the Southwest: Prov. 22: 6, Lynchburg, Va., $1; Sub'r in New Jersey, $5; Samuel Thatcher, $1; Friend, Scotland, Mass., $3; M. G., $1; Herald Sub'r, Washington, Pa., $1; L. A. P., Greenwich Village, $1; James Alexander, $25. Previously acknowledged, $149.67. Total, $187.67.

For the Bethesda Home for the Reclamation of Fallen Girls: M. G., $1; Herald Sub'r., Washington, Pa., $1; L. A. P., Greenwich Village, $1; Mrs. C. Bailey, $1; Lucy A. Wall-ran, $5; R. P., Bloomington, Wis., $5; S. F. Young, $5; James Alexander, $25. Previously acknowledged, $288. Total, $323.

For the Permanent Lodging House for Home-less Women: Mrs. C. Bailey, $1.50; M. G., $1; Herald Sub'r, Washington, Pa., $1; L. A. P., Greenwich Village, $2; Friend, $1; S. F. Young, $5; J. Alexander, $25. Previously acknowledged, $1502.15. Total, $1534.15.

For the Mary Washington Fund: Mary MacColl, 25c.; S. F. Young, 25c.; Mary Evalena Wright, 25c.; Mary Colbert, 25c.; Mary Lilleston, 25c.; Mary A. Gill, 25c.; Mary C. Rice, 25c.; Mary A. Colgan, 25c.; Mary V. Trahern, 25c.

For the Door of Hope: Mrs. C. Bailey, Darien, Ga., $1.50; M. G., $1; L. A. P., Greenwich Village, $1; Mattie Roberts, Rose Point, Pa., 1; James Alexander, $25. Total, $29.50.

For Bella Cook's Work: A Friend to the Poor, Sunbury, Pa., $1; Mrs. Alice Messer, Brockton, Mass., $1; B. Augspurger, Overpeck, Ohio, $5; G. H. Wells, Greenwich, $5. Total, $12.

For the Indian Industrial School: Mrs. C. Bailey, $1.50.

For Tello D'Aper's Bare Foot Mission: Mrs. C. Bailey, $1.50; "C," $2.

For Foreign Missions: Mrs. L. C. Briggs, $1.

For Cape Colony Mission: "C," $1.

For the Children's Hospital in Jerusalem: "C," $5.

For the Freedmen's Mission: E. A. Russell, $5.

The Jerry McAuley Mission: Henry J. Shrapnell, $5.

For Nervous Exhaustion
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. EDWIN F. VOSE, Portland, Me., says: "I have used it in my own case when suffering from nervous exhaustion, with gratifying results. I have prescribed it for many of the various forms of nervous debility, and it has never failed to do good."

Do You Have Asthma?

If you do, you will be glad to hear that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is reported a positive cure for the disease. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, have such faith in this new discovery, that they are sending out free by mail, large trial cases of Kola Compound to all sufferers from Asthma, who send their name and address on a postal card. Write to them.

Arnold Constable & Co.
LYONS
SILK & WOOL STUFFS
VELOUTINE BARRE, VELOUTINE FACONNE,
ARMURE POINTILLE,
SOLID COLORED VELOUTINE
Plain & Fancy Vville, NICOISE, BENGALINE,
WHITE AND COLORED
VELOUTINE AND CORDS
FOR EVENING WEAR.

Broadway & 19th St.
NEW YORK.

Our New Easter Service
By the REV. R. LOWRY,
Will be mailed on receipt of 5 cents.

Our New Easter Carols
By Six Popular Composers,
Will be mailed on receipt of 5 cents.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
215 Wabash Ave., Chicago, 76 East 9th St., New York.

"I was Raised on Mellin's Food,"

The only perfect substitute for mother's milk. Our book for mothers, — "The Care and Feeding of Infants," will be mailed free to any address, upon request. Doliber-Goodale Co., Boston, Mass.

The New French Challies.
An "All Novelty" Stock.

Now ready, extra choice lines of best French Challies, in designs made expressly for this house.

Satin Stripe Challies, blossom patterns, light and dark grounds.

Shaded Challies, with ring, dot and diamond figures.

Cheviot Challies, with braid border.

Novelty Mourning Challies.

Special styles for Children, wild-flower patterns, with narrow ribbon edge to serve as trimming.

300 pieces finest all wool Challies, just received, black, red and dark blue grounds, printed in dots, stripes and small figures, at 50 cents per yard.

James McCreery & Co.,
BROADWAY & 11th STREET, -
NEW YORK.

$5.00 WORTH FOR $1.00
"The Cream of New Chrysanth." PRES. SMITH, MAUD DEAN, KATE BROWN, G. W. CHILDS, NIVEUS, MRS. F. L. AMES, HUCKS ARNOLD, GOLDEN WEDDING.

This set of 8 Gems $1.00. 6 sets $5.00. By mail. Mention this paper, and we will give you free with each set, two choice Carnations.

Gladioli, 25c. doz. Tuberoses, 35c. doz. One doz. each 50c.

MERILES & PASFIELD, 20 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ANKLE SUPPORTERS
FOR CHILDREN AND ADULTS
No child should learn to walk without them. Recommended by physicians as best appliance for weak or deformed ankles.
Price 40c. up. Send for circular.
R. H. Golden, So. Norwalk, Conn.

FREE!

Our large 24-page catalogue of Organs, also our new and elegant catalogue of Pianos, containing 10 pages. We have the largest manufactory in the world, from which we sell direct to the consumer at wholesale prices, thus saving the profits of the dealer and the commissions of the agents. We furnish a first-class Organ, warranted 20 years, with stool and book, for $27.50 only.

NO MONEY REQUIRED

until instrument has been thoroughly tested in your own house. Sold on instalments. Easy payment.

We positively guarantee every organ and Piano twenty years. Send for catalogue at once if you want to obtain the greatest bargain ever offered on earth. Write your name and address plainly, and we will send by mail same day letter is received.

As an advertisement, we will sell the first Piano of our make in a place for only $175.00 Stool, Book and Cover Free. Regular price, $350.00

Beethoven Piano and Organ Co.,
P. O. Box 741 Washington, N. J.

SEND US
A TRIAL ORDER

SATISFACTION
GUARANTEED.

O'NEILL'S

Sixth Ave., 20th to 21st St.,
... NEW YORK. ...

IMPORTERS AND RETAILERS

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Ladies', Misses' and Children's Cloaks and Costumes. House Furnishing Goods, China and Glassware.

We make a specialty of
MAIL ORDER BUSINESS,
SENDING GOODS TO ALL
PARTS OF THE WORLD.

GUARANTEEING PERFECT SATISFACTION
TO THE CUSTOMER OR REFUNDING
THE MONEY.

SEND FOR OUR CATALOGUE.

We are now booking names for our Spring and Summer Catalogue, which will be issued about April 1st, and mailed FREE to out of town residents. Send us your name early as the demand is always greater than the supply.

6th Ave., 20th to 21st St., N. Y.

FINE GOODS
AT LOW PRICES.

SEND FOR SAMPLES
AND PRICES

MUSIC SALE.

To reduce our stock of Music we will send by mail, post-paid, 70 pieces of full sheet music size, all parts complete, including Marguerite, Man in the Moon, Mary and John, also Marches, Waltzes, Quadrilles, etc., all for 20c. Satisfaction given or money back. Read this: "Mr. H.: Am very much pleased with the music sent me: it is worth ten times the money." — R. J. Allen Hoosick, N.H. Address C. H. HATHAWAY, 339 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.

Take a Course in the SPRAGUE Correspondence School of Law, (Incorporated.) Send 10c. stamps for particulars to J. COTNER, JR., Sec'y, DETROIT, MICH. No 10 TELEPHONE Bldg.

PIMPLES AND FRECKLES

A TRIAL BOTTLE of treatment for pimples, blackheads, oily skin, moth, freckles, tan, unnatural redness of the nose or face, hair and scalp; rough and scaly skin, sent by mail for 60c. Dr. Atkins' Complexion Soap at dealers or postpaid 25c. or three cakes, 65c. N. Y. Dermatological Institute. L. R. ATKINS, M. D., President, 142 West 23d St., New York.

TYPEWRITERS.

Unprejudiced advice given. All makes half-price. Shipped anywhere for examination. Exchanging a Specialty. Monthly payments, 52-page cat. free. TYPEWRITERS 145 Liberty St., New York. HEADQUARTERS, 186 Monroe St., Chicago.

FREE

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send this Hard Rubber Fountain Pen. Warranted a perfect writer & immense list. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage. HORT, H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

AGENTS

wanted in every town. Something new. $75 a month. Write quick. Sherman & Butler, 26 W. Lake St. Chicago

IVORY SOAP

99 $\frac{44}{100}$ %
= PURE =

FOR THE BABY.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI.

The 1894 Columbias

are unhesitatingly pronounced by every one who has seen them to be the most attractive wheels ever offered to the public. Beautiful new designs, graceful, light, and strong to the last degree, and dressed with the incomparable Columbia finish, they are bound to "take." We predict for the 1894 Columbias an instant and wonderful success. Get a catalogue and give your order early if you want one at the beginning of the season.

STANDARD PRICE, $125.

POPE MFG. CO.,

Boston, New York, Chicago, Hartford

Catalogue free at our agencies, or mailed for two two-cent stamps.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Book free; pills 25c. At drugstores, or write B.F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

WIRE FENCING
WIRE ROPE SELVAGE.
McMULLEN'S
POULTRY AND RABBIT NETTING
Railroad, Farm, Garden, Cemetery, Lawn Fencing. Prices down. Freight paid. Catalog free. McMullen Woven Wire Fence Co., Chicago.

THE WORLD'S FAIR Highest Awards.
MEDAL AND DIPLOMA.
our INFANT and BROODER combined. If you are interested in Poultry, it will pay you to send a card in stamps for 75 page catalogue, giving valuable points on Poultry Culture. Address: Reliable Incubator Co., Quincy, Ill.

PILES CURED
Our Book on Piles—Free.
Hinson Medicine Co.,
Richmond, Va., U.S.A.

This Entire Page

—Of next week's CHRISTIAN HERALD will be——devoted to trying to persuade you to prove for——yourself the truth of the well-known motto,—

Burpee's seeds grow.

If you plant seeds it will pay you to read every word.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Innisfallen Greenhouses

Have been favorably known for more than twenty years, and always give satisfaction. In order to increase my business, I make the following SPECIAL OFFERS which are cheapness.

NEW EVER-BLOOMING DWARF CALLA

"THE GEM"

This is a novelty of great merit. The only objection to the old variety is that it sometimes grows tall and scraggly, but the "Little Gem" is of strong and dwarf habit. The foliage which is of a lustrous dark green, and is in great abundance. The flowers are produced in the greatest profusion, being literally an ever-bloomer. It will bloom freely all summer in the open ground, in September it can be lifted and potted and will continue blooming all winter. The "Little Gem" Calla will continue to grow and bloom for years without ceasing, and the quantity of flowers which a large plant will produce is astonishing. The flowers are snowy white in color, and of good size, it seldom grows higher than fifteen inches. Price of plants that will bloom this season, 30 cents each. For $1.00 I will mail 5 plants to one address.

ONLY $1.00 Will buy any one of the collections named below, delivered safely by mail, postpaid, to any address. The collections are all fine, strong plants of the best varieties and are marvels of cheapness. Every plant is plainly labelled, and there are no two varieties alike in the same collection.

FOR $1.00 I will mail FREE, 20 Prize-winning Chrysanthemums; 20 fine Single and Double flowering Geraniums for $1.00; 20 Choice Ever-Blooming Carnations for $1.00; 20 Flowering Begonias for $1.00; Twenty Assorted Flowering Plants for $1.00; 20 Fancy Leaved Colons for $1.00.

For $5.00 you can select any six of the above Collections.

To every one who sends an order from this advertisement and mentions this paper, we will send FREE a valuable plant.

ORDER NOW and ask for our CATALOGUE OF BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS for 1894.
CHARLES A. REESER Innisfallen Greenhouses SPRINGFIELD, O.

"WELL BRED, SOON WED." GIRLS WHO USE

SAPOLIO

ARE QUICKLY MARRIED. TRY IT IN YOUR NEXT HOUSE-CLEANING.

FOR MAGIC LANTERNS, STEREOPTICONS, AND MANY THOUSANDS OF VIEWS, ILLUSTRATING EVERY SUBJECT.
McALLISTER MFG. OPTICIAN
49 NASSAUST NEW YORK.
ENTERTAINMENT HOME INSTRUCTION AMUSEMENT PUBLIC EXHIBITIONS CHURCH & SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK. COLLEGES SECRET SOCIETIES. 240 PAGE CATALOGUE FREE. A PROFITABLE BUSINESS FOR MAN WITH SMALL CAPITAL.

Many Old Worn-Out FARMS require so much fertilizing that farms and gardens that farms and gardens won't produce a profit. The rich, loamy soil of Michigan Farms produces a fine crop of all kinds of crops, without this expense. The near markets, general healthfulness of climate and freedom from cyclones, blizzards, together with good society, churches, etc., make Michigan Farms the best in the world. Write to me and I will tell you how to get the best farms on long time; low rate of interest.
O. M. BARNES, Land Commissioner, Lansing, Mich.

WE WILL SELL YOU THE BEST BUGGY
Carl, Harness, Phaeton, Spring Wagon, Surrey or Roadster the world at lowest wholesale prices. Shipped anywhere with anyone with privilege to examine without paying one cent in advance. Two years written warranty. Send for our new illustrated catalogue. Its free with testimonials and references. Write to-day and save money.
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158 W. Van Buren St., B. X. 3, Chicago, Ill.

RUPTURE CURED
WITH our Improved Elastic Truss. Worn with ease night and day. Relieves the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain. Examination free. Lady in attendance for ladies. Send for pamphlet.
IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.,
822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York

PRINTING OFFICE 15c
A large font of Type (over 48) with Figures, Balder, Inlaid Ink, Pals, Tensers, Corkers, etc., as shown in cut, complete in best case. Best Linen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Regular Price 15c. Sample postpaid for 15c. To introduce, with Catalogue of 100 new articles. CAT. FREE.
INNISFALL BROS. 65 Cortlandt St., N.Y. City

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.
$10.50
Per the Offered Improved BINGER Sewing Machine, with a complete set of attachments and guaranteed for 10 years. Shipped anywhere on 3 days' trial. No money required in advance. 15c to receive the World's Fair Medal awarded. Buy from factory, save dealers' and agents' profit. Write today for our CATALOGUE FREE.
OXFORD MFG. CO., 342 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

FREE A fine 14k gold plated watch to every reader of this paper. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you one of these elegant, richly jeweled, gold finished watches by express for examination, and if you think it is equal in appearance to any $25.00 gold watch pay our sample price, $3.50 and express charges, and it is yours. Guarantee for 5 Years—not 100 every year, and if you sell or cause the sale of six we will give you time Free. Write at once, as we shall send out samples for 60 days only. Address: THE NATIONAL MFG & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C. O. D. Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal. $14.50 Carriage for $9.25. ers' profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95. Illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75. 10c Address: Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B. X. 29, Chicago, Ill.

TAPE-WORM Expelled alive in 60 minutes with head, or no charge. Send 2c stamp for circular. Dr. M. Noy Smith, Specialist, 721 Ohio, St. Louis, Mo.

FITS Epilepsy, Etc., permanently cured. Treatise, testimonials and Remedy for trial sent FREE to any sufferer. Established 23 years. Address: DR. ROSS, Richmond, Indiana.

The strength of Cleveland's baking powder comes from pure cream of tartar and soda only. It effervesces more slowly than powders containing alum, ammonia or tartaric acid.

To have the best results

REMEMBER,

the oven should not be too hot, and it is not necessary to hurry the dough into the oven.

Cleveland Baking Powder Co., New York, Successor to Cleveland Brothers.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

—OR— Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

Headquarters for the Choicest Seeds, Plants, Trees, Shrubs, Vines, Roses, Bulbs, Etc.
Elegant 168 page Catalog, FREE. Send for it Before Buying.
Seeds, Small Trees, etc., postpaid. Large by Freight or Express.
SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. 40th Year, 1,000 Acres, 28 Greenhouses.
Storrs & Harrison Co., Painesville, Ohio. Box 337

Don't Lose Heart.
PLANT FERRY'S SEEDS this year, and make up for lost time. Ferry's Seed Annual for 1894 will give you many valuable hints about what to raise and how to raise it. It contains information to be had from no other source. Free to all.
D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich.

INVINCIBLE HATCHER $17 have 100 Kegs Incubator, which is guaranteed to hatch as well as the highest priced incubator made or your money refunded. Send 4c. in stamps for No. 60 Catalogue. Write to our customers and you will use us either. 600 sold in 6 months, and no complaints from any customer. Address: BUCKEYE INCUBATOR CO., SPRINGFIELD, O.

AGENTS can make $50.00 to $100.00 a week canvassing for the best specialties ever offered. No competition. Write for terms. N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ANS'N, 84 East 14th St., New York, or Kansas City, Mo.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 17.

COPYRIGHT 1894. BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

NUMBER 11.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, MARCH 14, 1894.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

THE "FOOD FUND'S" MISSION BAND.

A Corps of Trained and Consecrated Women who Minister to the Needs of the Destitute—Their Hearts in the Work—The Fund now nearing $20,000.

At the opening of the eighth week of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Food Fund, the condition of the thirty-nine thousand destitute families in New York, is still such as to call for earnest sympathy. Much has been done in these weeks toward relieving their sufferings, and it is certain that, if the Christian people of America had not responded so nobly and generously to their appeal, through the Food Fund and other charitable channels, the record of want, misery and death in the crowded tenement sections of the metropolis would have been something appalling. As it is, the crowds wretchedness has been already relieved through the spontaneous generosity of those who have contributed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Food Fund cannot be estimated in words. It is a record of voluntary service, cheerfully rendered in the Master's name, and without hope or expectation of earthly recompense; but the precious lives that their charity has been the means of saving, the many hundreds of homes that have been brightened, and the thousands of hearts that have been cheered and strengthened and led to look upward, constitute in themselves a higher reward than the world can give. How widespread and comprehensive ing the phenomenal progress of this relief work:

No. of Stations.	Families Supplied.	Individuals.	No. of Meals.
1st week, 1	100	500	10,500
2d " 1	250	1,250	26,250
3d " 2	400	2,000	42,000
4th " 10	1,000	5,000	105,000
5th " 13	2,400	12,000	252,000
6th " 15	2,500	12,500	262,500
	6,650	33,250	698,250

Besides the foregoing, which constitutes the regular Station work of the Food Fund, an average of seventeen hundred men have been supplied every morning with breakfast at the "Travellers' Club," attached to the Eighth Avenue Station, and an average attendance of 950 women and children have been fed every afternoon, six days in the week, at the same place. Thus the record of the Food Fund's work during the first six weeks, complete, shows a grand total of needy over 9,000 garments, the gifts of thoughtful patrons in different states. Work has been procured for a limited number of the unemployed through the applications of out-of-town families and others requiring help. During the week just ended, the Food Fund has found itself restricted by diminished contributions from further extending its operations. This is due probably to some extent to the heavy snowstorms, south and west. As a consequence, supplies to some of the stations were reduced. This, although unavoidable, was unquestionably a real hardship for many destitute families between whom and starvation the Food Fund has stood for weeks past; but even the reduced supply is gratefully welcomed. At no time has the need been more urgent than now, when the last resources of the thirty poor have been exhausted and the numbers of the helpless have been increasing, of hungry men, women and children that gather daily at the Relief Stations show the crying need of continued help, until the season of sharpest suffering be over at least. How much of this great burden of human

MISSIONARIES IN THE SERVICE OF "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD FOOD FUND."
1. Annie A. Smith. 4. James Klein. 7. Minnie Condit. 10. Mrs. L. Kloppe. 13. Mrs. C. C. Gifford. 16. Miss Carter.
2. Mrs. H. Barber. 5. Florence A. Perrie. 8. Mary A. Johnson. 11. Matilda C. Paulhaber. 14. Isabel Montgomery. 17. Miss Collins.
3. Mrs. Witten. 6. Mrs. Lemley. 9. Mrs. Gayer. 12. Mrs. C. L. Penning. 15. Miss Thompson.

the Food Fund charity has been, may be gathered from the following figures, showing 793,650 meals supplied. During the same period, the Fund has distributed among the rather than diminishing. With the destitute and the unemployed it is the eleventh hour of their sufferings—the hour when the strain of hunger and privation is the hardest and

(Continued on page 16.)

The TABERNACLE PULPIT

UNAPPRECIATED SERVICES.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday at Mobile, Ala. Text: II. Cor. 11: 33, "Through a window, in a basket, was I let down by the wall."

DAMASCUS is a city of white and glistening architecture sometimes called "the eye of the East," sometimes called "a pearl surrounded by emeralds," at one time distinguished for swords of the best material called Damascus blades, and upholstery of richest fabric called damasks. A horseman by the name of Paul, riding toward this city, had been thrown from the saddle. The horse had dropped under a flash from the sky, which at the same time was so bright it blinded the rider for many days, and I think so permanently injured his eyesight that this defect of vision became the thorn in the flesh he afterward speaks of. He started for Damascus to butcher Christians, but after that hard fall from his horse he was a changed man and preached Christ in Damascus till the city was shaken to its foundation.

The mayor gives authority for his arrest, and the popular cry is, "Kill him! Kill him!" The city is surrounded by a high wall, and the gates are watched by the police lest the Cilician preacher escape. Many of the houses are built on the wall, and their balconies projected clear over and hovered above the gardens outside. It was customary to lower baskets out of these balconies and pull up fruits and flowers from the gardens. To this day visitors at the monastery of Mount Sinai are lifted and let down in baskets. Detectives prowled around from house to house looking for Paul, but his friends hid him now in one place, now in another. He is no coward, as fifty incidents in his life demonstrate. But he feels his work is not done yet, and so he evades assassination. "Is that preacher here?" the foaming mob shout at one house door. "Is that fanatic here?" the police shout at another house door. Sometimes on the street incognito he passes through a crowd of clenched fists, and sometimes he secrets himself on the house-top. At last the infuriated populace get on sure track of him. They have positive evidence that he is in the house of one of the Christians, the balcony of whose home reaches over the wall. "Here he is! Here he is!" The vociferation and blasphemy and howling of the pursuers are at the front door. They break in. "Fetch out that gospelizer, and let us hang his head on the city gate. Where is he?" The emergency was terrible. Providentially there was a good stout basket in the house. Paul's friends fasten a rope to the basket. Paul steps into it. The basket is lifted to the edge of the balcony on the wall, and then while Paul holds on to the rope with both hands his friends lower away, carefully and cautiously, slowly but surely, further down and further down, until the basket strikes the earth and the apostle steps out and at once alone starts on that famous missionary tour, the story of which has astonished earth and heaven. Appropriate entry in Paul's diary of travels: "Through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall."

Observe, first, on what a slender tenure great results hang. The ropemaker who twisted that cord fastened to that lowering basket never knew now much would depend on the strength of it. How if it had been broken and the apostle's life had been dashed out? What would have become of the Christian Church? All that magnificent missionary work in Pamphylia, Capadocia, Galatia, Macedonia would never have been accomplished. All his writings that make up so indispensable and enchanting a part of the New Testament would never have been written. The story of resurrection would never have been so gloriously told as he told it. That example of heroic and triumphant endurance at Philippi, in the Mediterranean euroclydon, under flagellation and at his beheading would not have kindled the courage of ten thousand martyrdoms. But the rope holding that basket, how much depended on it! So again and again great results have hung on what seemed slender circumstances.

Did ever ship of many thousand tons crossing the sea have such important passenger as had once a boat of leaves, from taffrail to stern only three or four feet, the vessel made waterpool by a coat of bitumen and floating on the Nile with the infant lawgiver of the Jews on board? What if some crocodile should crunch it? What if some of the cattle wading in for a drink should sink it? Vessels of war sometimes carry forty guns looking through the port-holes, ready to open battle. But that tiny craft on the Nile seems to be armed with all the guns of thunder that bombarded Sinai at the law-giving. On how fragile craft sailed how much of historical importance!

The parsonage at Epworth, England, is on fire in the night, and the father rushes through the hallway for the rescue of his children. Seven children are out and safe on the ground, but one remains in the consuming building. That one wakes, and finding his bed on fire and the building crumbling, comes to the window, and two peasants make a ladder of their bodies, one peasant standing on the shoulder of the other, and down the human ladder the boy descends—John Wesley. If you would know how much depended on that ladder of peasants ask the millions of Methodists on both sides of the sea. Ask their mission stations all round the world. Ask the hundreds of thousands already ascended to join their founder, who would have perished but for the living stair of peasant's shoulders.

An English ship stopped at Pitcairn Island, and right in the midst of surrounding cannibalism and squalor, the passengers discovered a Christian colony of churches and schools and beautiful homes and highest style of religion and civilization. For fifty years no missionary and no Christian influence had landed there. Why this oasis of light amid a desert of heathendom? Sixty years before, a ship had met disaster, and one of the sailors, unable to save anything else, went to his trunk and took out a Bible which his mother had placed there, and swam ashore, the Bible held in his teeth. The Book was read on all sides until the rough and vicious population were evangelized, and a church was started, and an enlightened commonwealth established, and the world's history has no more brilliant page than that which tells of the transformation of a nation by one book. It did not seem of much importance whether the sailor continued to hold the book in his teeth or let it fall in the breakers, but upon what small circumstance depended what mighty results!

Practical inference: There are no insignificances in our lives. The minutest thing is part of a magnitude. Infinity is made up of infinitesimals. Great things an aggregation of small things. Bethlehem manger pulling on a star in the eastern sky. One book in a drenched sailor's mouth the evangelization of a multitude. One boat of papyrus on the Nile freighted with events for all ages. The fate of Christendom in a basket let down from a window on the wall. What you do, do well. If you make a rope make it strong and true, for you know not how much may depend on your workmanship. If you fashion a boat let it be water-proof, for you know not who may sail in it. If you put a Bible in the trunk of your boy as he goes from home, let it be heard in your prayers, for it may have a mission as far-reaching as the book which the sailor carried in his teeth to the Pitcairn beach. The plainest man's life is an island between two eternities—eternity past rippling against his shoulders, eternity to come touching his brow. The casual, the accidental, that which merely happened so, are parts of a great plan, and the rope that lets the fugitive apostle from the Damascus wall is the cable that holds to its mooring the ship of the Church in the northeast storm of the centuries.

TRADITIONAL HOUSE IN DAMASCUS FROM WHICH PAUL ESCAPED.

Again, notice unrecognized and unrecorded services. Who spun that rope? Who tied it to the basket? Who steadied the illustrious preacher as he stepped into it? Who relaxed not a muscle of the arm or dismissed an anxious look from his face until the basket touched the ground and discharged its magnificent cargo? Not one of their names has come to us, but there was no work done that day in Damascus or in all the earth compared with the importance of their work. What if they had in their agitation tied a knot that could slip? What if the sound of the mob at the door had led them to say: "Paul must take care of himself, and we will take care of ourselves." No, no! They held the rope, and in doing so did more for the Christian Church than any thousand of us will ever accomplish. But God knows and has made eternal record of their undertaking. And they know. How exultant they must have felt when they read his letters to the Romans, to the Corinthians, to the Galatians, to the Ephesians, to the Philippians, to the Colossians, to the Thessalonians, to Timothy, to Titus, to Philemon, to the Hebrews, and when they heard how he walked out of prison with the earthquake unlocking the door for him, and took command of the Alexandrian corn-ship when the sailors were nearly scared to death, and preached a sermon that nearly shook Felix off his judgment-seat. I hear the men and women who helped him down through the window and over the wall talking in private over the matter, and saying: "How glad I am that we effected that rescue! In coming times others may get the glory of Paul's work, but no one shall rob us of the satisfaction of knowing that we held the rope."

There are said to be about sixty-nine thousand ministers of religion in this country. About fifty thousand I warrant came from early homes which had to struggle for the necessities of life. The sons of rich bankers and merchants generally become bankers and merchants. The most of those who become ministers are the sons of those who had terrific struggle to get their everyday bread. The collegiate and theological education of that son took every luxury from the parental table for eight years. The other children were more scantily appareled. The son at college every little while got a bundle from home. In it were the socks that mother had knit, sitting up late at night, her sight not as good as once it was. And there also were some delicacies from the sister's hand for the voracious appetite of a hungry student.

The years go by, and the son has been ordained and is preaching the glorious Gospel, and a great revival comes, and souls by scores and hundreds accept the Gospel from the lips of that young preacher, and father and mother, quite old now, are visiting the son at the village parsonage, and at the close of a Sabbath of mighty blessing, father and mother retire to their room, the son lighting the way and asking them if he can do anything to make them more comfortable, saying if they want anything in the night just to knock on the wall. And then all alone father and mother talk over the gracious influences of the day, and say: "Well, it was worth all we went through to educate that boy! It was a hard pull, but we held on till the work was done. The world may not know it, but, mother, we held the rope, didn't we?" And the voice, tremulous with joyful emotion, responds: "Yes, father; we held the rope. I feel my work is done. Now, Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." "Pshaw!" says the father, "I never felt so much like living in my life as now. I want to see what that fellow is going on to do, he has begun so well."

O, men and women here assembled, you brag sometimes how you have fought your way in the world, but I think there have been helpful influences that you have never fully acknowledged. Has there not been some influence in your early or present home that the world cannot see? Does there not reach to you from among the New England hills or from Western prairies, or from southern plantation, or from English or Scottish or Irish home, a cord of influence that has kept you right when you would have gone astray, and which, after you had made a crooked track, recalled you? The rope may be as long as thirty years or five hundred miles long or three thousand miles long, but hands that went out of mortal sight long ago still hold the rope. You want a very swift horse, and you need to rowl him with sharpest spurs, and to let the reins lie loose upon the neck, and to give a shout to a racer, if you are going to ride out of reach of your mother's prayers. Why, a ship crossing the Atlantic in seven days can't sail away from them! A sailor finds them on the lookout as he takes his place, and finds them on the mast as he climbs the ratlines to disentangle a rope in the tempest, and finds them swinging on the hammock when he turns in. Why not be frank and acknowledge it—the most of us would long ago have been dashed to pieces had not gracious and loving hands steadily and lovingly and mightily held the rope.

But there must come a time when we shall find out who these Damascenes were who ] WOULD not have a hand to guide

 But thine ;
 For thou hast trod where sinners stray.
 And knowest well life's troubled way,
 And mine.

I would not have a will to rule
 But thine ;
 For thou art wise as thou art good,
 And none can better choose what should Be mine.

Oh, I would tread the sorest path
 For thee ;
 For thou canst make the roughest plain,
 Give joy for grief and calm the pain
 For me.

The "Food Fund's" Mission Band.

(Continued from first page.)

sores. At such a time, genuine Christian sympathy, of the prompt and practical sort, is most urgently needed and most highly valued. That this is well understood by the friends of the Food Fund is apparent from the fact that their offerings continue to pour in from every quarter, affording encouragement to hope that the usefulness of the work they have entered upon "In His Name," may be prolonged until the emergency has passed.

Believing that the thousands of contributors to the Food Fund have a direct personal interest in all that relates to the management of the great work of Christian charity which they have established, we publish to-day the portraits of a group of CHRISTIAN HERALD missionaries, who have been engaged in the work up to the present time. From a modest beginning with a few missionaries as District Visitors, the Fund gradually extended its operations as the means multiplied, until twenty-seven missionaries and assistants were engaged in house-to-house visitation among the destitute poor, making all necessary investigation into the genuineness of the applications for relief, which soon began to pour in from every part of the city. Throughout the entire work, Mrs. Louis Klopsch bore an active part, co-operating with the missionaries in their duties, and personally visiting many destitute homes where hunger and despair had shut out hope, until the Food Fund's welcome arrival turned the gloom to sunshine. Her tact and ready sympathy endeared her to the missionaries and were exceedingly helpful to them in their labors. Mrs. E. Cater (No. 9), who sits to the right of Mrs. Klopsch (No. 10), in the group, is a South Carolina lady with a long experience in Christian work. For ten years she taught the children of the poor and ignorant factory hands in Atlanta, Ga., and for several years past she has been engaged as a missionary in Brooklyn, visiting among the poor and afflicted. Mrs. Cater was the first missionary engaged in the Food Fund's work and has rendered faithful and efficient service. Miss Matilda C. Faulhaber (No. 11 in the group), is another experienced missionary, having passed sixteen years in the Master's service, working among the poor in the most densely populated parts of New York city. For eleven years she was connected with the missionary work of the late Rev. Howard Crosby's church, and for the last five years she has been the private missionary of Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt. A majority of others in the group are women of Christian training and with some degree of missionary experience. Miss Collins (No. 17), and Miss Thompson (No. 15), are students at the Christian Alliance Missionary College, New York, and the latter contemplates making Africa her field of lifework; Miss Carter (No. 16), a graduate of the same institution, is a missionary medical student, who will soon devote her energies to Christian work in India; Miss Klein (No. 4), has had a long experience among the East-side poor; Mrs. Witten (No. 3), has charge of the Diet Kitchen of the New York Maternity Hospital; Mrs. Charlotte L. Fanning is a recent addition to the missionary field, but has already proved herself efficient and thorough; Miss Margaret A. Johnson (No. 8), is also engaged in her first year of this work, but her gentle nature, Christian character and perseverance fit her admirably for it; Miss Isabel Montgomery (No. 14), a native of Boston, has cherished missionary aspirations for years, and is now a student at the New York Missionary College; Miss Minnie Condit (No. 7), has already had experience in missionary work and loves it better than all others; Miss Blanche A. Petrie (No. 5), a graduate of the New York Missionary Training College, is looking forward eagerly to beginning missionary work soon in India; Mrs. C. Curtis Guilford (No. 13), has been a student at Rev. A. B. Simpson's Training College, and is warmly devoted to Christian work; Miss Annie A. Seasholtz (No. 1), is now in her second year at the same institution and is preparing for work in foreign lands; Mrs. H. Harder (No. 2), and Mrs. H. M. Lemberg (No. 6), have both had previous experience in the home missionary field and are doing good service for the Food Fund. As a whole, the members of the missionary staff can be truthfully characterized as true, devoted Christian women, full of sympathy and consecration to the work in which they are engaged, and which under their hands, has been faithfully administered.

Very faithful and energetic coadjutors in the work have been the pastors of the various city churches, in whose districts relief stations were opened several weeks ago. Rev. J. A. B. Wilson of the West Eighteenth M. E. Church, where a relief station was established, writes as follows:

"This winter has been one of the saddest and most terrible for the poor ever seen in New York city. Foreseeing the suffering which must come, many agencies were opened with a view of relieving the hungry and naked. This church held two donation days early in the winter and great quantities of clothing, groceries, etc., were sent in. There came a time, however, when it was difficult to tell what to do next. The pastor's door was continually besieged with callers for relief—often a hundred per day. All the resources of his church were inadequate to meet the case.

"Just when the question 'What are these among so many?' was wringing the heart of those concerned, like a life-boat to a stranded vessel came THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, with the most complete relief movement of the century. Its appeal to the multiplied thousands of its constituents made possible a systematic and mammoth relief method never before equaled.

"May God bless THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for this splendid conception and the contributions for the means of relief afforded. Their bounty is not for New Yorkers alone, but from all parts of the country stranded people have poured in this city in the vain hope of finding employment and they have been unable to get out. Thousands of families of strangers are being helped."

From many cities, towns and villages come offers of generous aid to the Food Fund. Mr. Hugo Keller, general merchant of Durhamville, N. Y., who has already sent a substantial cash contribution to the Food Fund, writes:

I see in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and other papers that you have stations to distribute to poor people all kinds of eatables, groceries, etc. Now since I really have no such poor people right here in my county as there are in New York city, I am willing and will gladly send you a lot of potatoes, onions, cheese, rice and tea. If you will designate the stations to which you will have them sent in New York either via N. Y. C. R. R., or N. Y. O. and W. I have worked in New York right after the war, and know what poverty is, but the Lord has blessed me since I came here, and now I wish to thank him by helping the poor all I can.

Contributions to the Fund received during the week are partially acknowledged below and on the next page. Gifts of clothing, etc., are acknowledged on page 163 this issue.

Previously acknowledged $15,268 85	Belts, Fred	1.00	Doolittle, F. G.	1.00	Friends in Phila. Pa.	100.00	Hine, Mrs. D.	5.00	Jones, E. N.	1.00
Adams, Della	1.00	Bryant, J. W.	2.00	De Swarte, Cornelius	1.00	Friends in Holland G. Co. Ia.	2.80	Hickman, Miss Bessie	1.00	Jagger, Mrs. J. M.	10.00
Aldrich, Mrs. N. C.	1.00	Burkett, Mrs. M. I.	1.50	Decker, W.	1.00	A friend of the friendless		Hickley, Mrs. E.	1.00	James, Mrs. E. A.	5.00
Armstrong, Mrs. S.	2.00	Baldwin, L.	1.00	Daskau, Mrs. J. E.	1.00	Bethlehem, Pa.	2.00	Higley, Mrs. S. F.	10.00	Johnson, Mrs. B. Jr.	1.00
Arnsperg, Mattie	2.50	Baker, Miss Matilda C.	5.00	Dando, Helen	1.00	Friend of the poor, Orange City, Ia.	1.65	Hayward, Mrs. B. F.	1.00	Johnstone, Miss Mary	1.00
Arnold, L.	5.00	Bradley, Paul T.	1.00	De Waal, D. G.	1.00	Friend and subscriber, Brant Lake, S. D.	1.00	Hayes, Mrs. Wm.	1.30	Jones, L.	1.00
Arthur, R.	2.00	Beck, Mrs. Agnes	1.00	Douglas, Mrs. C. S.	1.50	Friend to the poor, East Barnard, Vt.	1.00	Harvey, Mrs. M. A.	1.00	Jones, Mrs. E. C. F.	1.00
Austin, Jane	1.00	Beck, Mr. Alfred	1.00	Dorley, Mrs. Maria E.	1.00	Friend of the needy, Pittsfield, Mass.	1.00	Hart, Mrs. G. W.	1.00	Jones, Wm.	1.00
Auten, James	1.00	Calhoun, Margaret	1.00	Dand, E.	1.00	Friend of the needy, Pittsfield, Mass.	2.50	Haugen, Mrs. J.	1.00	Jones, E.	1.00
Andrews, Mrs. J. R.	1.00	Campbell, S. L.	1.00	David, E. W.	2.00	Friend and well-wisher, Elgin, Ill.	1.00	Hoyt, Mr. and Mrs.	2.00	Jenney, Mrs. W. B.	2.00
Adams, W. H.	1.00	Campbell, Colin	1.00	Edwards, W.	2.00	Friend of the poor, Marion, Ct.	5.00	Harter, Mrs. L. J.	1.00	James, Ida	1.00
Abbott, Mrs.	1.00	Carpenter, Mrs. Emily	1.00	Emmert, J. F.	1.00	Friends near Maxwell, Tenn.	1.00	Hansen, C. B. P.	50.00	Johnson, G. W.	1.00
Atwood, Mrs. H. L.	1.00	Caywood, Mrs. J.	2.00	Evans, Mrs. E. L.	1.00	Friends in Quadra, Thompson, Ont.	8.00	Haynes, A.	1.05	Jamerson, G. W.	1.00
Austin, Mrs. J. S.	1.00	Chambers, H. D.	1.00	Evans, Thomas	2.00	Friend of the poor, Marion, Ct.	1.00	Humphrey, Louise	2.00	Jensen, H.	1.00
Adams, L. R.	3.00	Chempion, Mrs. J.	1.00	Eynon, Wm.	1.00	Friend of the poor, Marion, Ct.	1.00	Hunter, J. A.	1.00	Johnston, Rohd	1.00
Anderson, John	1.00	Clark, Mrs. C.	1.00	Eddy and others, G. W.	6.50	Friendly family, Auburn, Kan.	1.00	Hanson, Joseph	1.00	Jennings, E. D.	1.00
Averill, Edw. and wife	5.00	Clark, C. T.	2.00	Elliott, M. and wife	5.00	Friends near Maxwell, Tenn.	1.00	Howard, Senella M.	2.00	Joslin, E. S.	1.00
Ayres, Miss Hester	5.00	Cleveland, W. H.	5.00	Eastman, J.	2.00	Friends in Quadra, Thompson, Ont.	8.00	Hause, Mrs. L.	1.00	Jordan, J.	1.00
Axford, Mrs. Wm.	1.00	Cochran, S. A.	1.00	Elliott, Mrs. Jane	3.00	Conn	8.00	Hawes, H. R.	1.00	Jones, C. A.	1.00
Atkinson, Mrs. R.	5.00	Coffin, Mrs. B. H.	1.00	Eldridge, Mrs. E.	1.00	Fruit, Mrs. J.	1.00	Hanna, W. N. and R. B.	2.00	Kelly, P.	1.00
Allen, Mrs. E. F.	1.00	Coffin, Miss Mary	1.00	Eagle, Mrs. L.	1.00	Fry, Charles W.	1.00	Hathaway, Mary E.	1.00	Kennel, Alex.	1.00
Abland, Chas.	1.00	Collected by Bertha, Culver and Lulu Race	4.00	Earhart, Mrs. Delia S.	1.00	Fletcher, A. J.	1.00	Hoof, Lewis	5.00	Kidd, George	1.00
Abland, Mrs. Nellie, school-mates and teacher	1.75	Courad, Marie W.	1.00	Flagg, Mrs. E. H.	1.00	Funk, Miss C. E.	1.00	Hopkins, Mrs. B.	2.00	King's daughter, Media, Pa.	5.00
Appel, Julia	1.00	Conde, Mrs. O.	1.00	Forbes, Mrs. A. H.	2.00	Foster, M. A.	2.00	Hilton, Mrs. S. A.	1.00	Kline, Mrs. Henry	1.00
Amnden, Mrs. A.	1.00	Courtney, David	1.00	Forbes, F. E.	1.00	Fuller, Mrs. Ann	10.00	Hastings, Robt. F.	1.00	Kuster, Mrs. R. O.	1.00
Allard, Frank H.	5.00	Corbett, Mr. Albert	3.00	Friend, Terrell, Tex.	1.00	Fuller, Mrs. Ann	10.00	Hastings, Chas. H.	1.00	Kendall, Harry	1.00
Aldrich, H.	2.00	Cranford, Ed. S.	2.00	Grenport, N. Y.	2.00	Gibbons, A. W.	2.00	Hunt, Wm. J.	2.00	Konyn, Mrs. W. G.	1.00
Atwood, J. W.	1.00	Creavens, Mrs. E. C.	1.00	Wabunsee, Kas.	1.00	Frost, Mrs. G. M.	1.00	Hoyt, Mrs. N. E.	1.00	Kirkpatrick, A. J.	14.00
Ashworth, J. T.	5.00	Conrad, D. E.	1.30	Worcester, Mass.	10.00	Farron, G. T.	5.00	Henderson, Florence M.	1.00	Kelsey, W. W.	1.00
Ashen, F.	2.00	Crawgill, Jno. F.	2.00	Sandusky, O.	1.00	Fuller, Miss Anna	3.00	Hopper, Frank F.	1.00	Kile, John	5.00
Abramson, Mrs.	1.00	Crisp, A. and S. S.	2.00	Newport, N. H.	1.00	Ferguson, Mrs. J. C.	2.00	Hoffine, S. M.	1.00	Kelso, Chas. E. and wife	2.00
Allen, Mrs. P. Jr.	1.00	Clyde, Mr. and Mrs.	2.00	Bridgeton, N. J.	2.00	Ferguson, Mrs. John S.	10.00	Houser, Mrs. John S.	2.00	Kern, Wm. H.	2.00
Atwood, E. A.	1.00	Cowan, Mrs. C.	2.00	Wessington Springs	1.00	Fellows, John	1.00	Harris, Mrs. Jane	1.00	Kirkman, Frederick	1.00
Aid Society of the M. E. Church	1.10	Carter, Mrs. J. E.	2.00	Bath, Mo.	2.00	Fuhrer, Rev. C.	1.50	Hill, Mrs. S. J.	1.00	Kilpatrick, Geo.	1.00
Marcellus, N. Y.	1.10	Clemson, Eliza A. and A. E.	2.00	Liberal, Kan.	1.00	Finney, Mr. and Mrs. H. C.	1.00	Husband, J.	1.00	Krause, Edward	1.00
Bowker, E. H.	1.00	Chapman, Mrs. A. G.	1.00	New Bloomfield, Pa.	1.00	Foot, Mrs. A. D.	1.00	Hallowell	1.00	King's daughter, Decatur, Ill.	1.00
Bailey, Mrs. M. P.	1.00	Croft, W.	5.00	Pokepsie, N. Y.	2.00	Falconer, Mrs. H. C.	1.00	Himmern, Caroline C.	5.00	King's daughter, Edgewood, Pa.	1.00
Burbridge, Wm.	5.00	Cruikshank, Mrs. J.	1.50	Barren Springs, Va.	1.00	Fraser, M. A.	2.00	Hoff, W.	1.00	King's daughter, Anburn, N. Y.	12.00
Baird, Elliott	2.00	Clark, A. S.	3.00	W. Brattleboro, Vt.	1.00	Graham and family, C. F.	5.00	Heale, Ellen S.	1.00	King's daughter, Batavia, Ia.	1.00
Beach, Mary C.	2.00	Clark, Emma D.	1.00	Hamilton, N. Y.	1.00	Grandma, L. Cal	3.50	Hutchinson, Frank	40.00	King's daughter, Mich.	2.00
Bigham, R. T.	2.00	Cox, Mrs. G. C.	1.00	Brewer, Me.	1.00	Green, J. J.	2.00	Hopes, Miss S.	1.00	King's daughter, Hokah, Minn.	1.00
Brown, Mania	2.00	Culver, Mrs. B. L.	2.00	Batesville, O.	1.00	Green and wife, G. L.	5.00	Hines, W. A.	1.00	La Dow, P. J.	1.00
Bett, Samuel	2.00	Chatterton, Mrs. M. E.	1.50	Milton, Mass.	1.00	Grimesey, L. P.	1.25	Henry, Wm.	4.00	Lajord, O. E.	1.00
Boyd, Mrs. May	1.00	Coskery, Mr. and Mrs. James	1.00	Colfax, N. D.	1.16	Grobb, Eva	1.00	Henricks, F. P.	1.00	Lane, W. P.	1.00
Bartholomew, Mrs. G. W.	1.00	Corr, Olive B.	5.00	Sanford, Fla.	2.00	Gruver, Mrs. Jacob	1.50	Hughes, John S.	2.00	Lane, Oliver	5.00
Barclay Literary Society, Jesup	10.50	Crosby, Nau E.	1.00	Brownville, Pa.	5.00	Gray, Mrs. James	2.00	Horton, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H.	5.00	Lee, Geo. W.	3.00
Iowa	10.50	Coby, O. J.	1.00	Burgess, City, Kas.	1.00	Gager, K. A.	3.00	Inasmuch, Owensville, O.	2.00	Le, Geo. W.	3.00
Botdorf, John H.	10.00	Chabot, T. T.	1.50	Leites Mt. Can.	1.00	Giles, Mrs. D. V.	1.00	In His Name, Granville	2.00	Le Grant, I.	2.00
Bacon, S. D.	5.00	Christensen, N.	1.00	Keene, N. H.	1.00	Gerard, Mrs.	1.00	New Brunswick	1.00	Lefferts, W. H.	2.00
Baker, Mrs. G. W.	1.00	Chittenden, Mrs. C. C.	2.00	Washington, D. C.	1.00	Gerard, Mrs.	1.00	Wurten, Pa.	1.00	Lautsack, R. J.	2.00
Bailey, F. M.	1.00	Connors, Mrs. John	1.00	Wilson's Crossing	1.00	Guise, John A.	1.00	Lewis, Wm. Cal.	1.00	Laudis, D. M.	2.00
Baldwin, Edwin	8.00	Crain, Mrs. B. J.	1.00	Ottawa, Kan.	5.00	Garrison, Wm. A.	1.00	Rutland, O.	1.00	Lautsack, Mrs. J. H.	1.00
Burney, M. J.	1.00	Chaplin, Mr. Wm.	5.00	Esmond, Ill.	5.00	Gregorio, Mrs. E.	1.00	Palmyra, Wis.	1.00	Lath, Mrs. J. F.	1.00
Barrett, Jennie	2.00	Collins, J. H.	1.00	Farmington, N. H.	1.00	Gordon, Mrs. D. C.	1.00	Clark, Mrs. E. L.	2.00	Laurie, Mrs. E. S.	1.00
Bates, Mr. and Mrs. E. L.	1.00	Collins, Fred	1.00	Novada, Ia.	1.00	Gibbons, A. W.	1.00	Richfield, N. Y.	1.00	Laws, J. C.	10.00
Bostar, S. E.	1.00	Crandall, Mrs. G. H.	1.00	Dover, N. H.	1.00	Groat, Josie E.	1.00	El Paso, Cal.	5.00	Leo, Mrs. M. H.	2.00
Boughton, J.	1.00	Case, S. L.	1.00	Webster, N. Y.	2.00	Griffin, Eva H.	1.00	Charlotte, Mich.	1.00	Lorimer, Mrs. Maria	1.00
Boston subscriber	1.00	Culman, E.	1.00	Ind.	1.00	Gray, Mrs. E. P.	1.00	Baltimore, Md.	2.00	Lawrence, Mrs. O. A.	1.00
Boyle, John F.	1.00	Cousens, W. F.	1.00	Sparta, Ill.	1.00	Gould, Mrs. J. E.	1.00	Highland Mills	1.00	Linn, Mrs. Alex.	5.00
Brainerd, Samuel	1.00	Cramer, Ella M.	1.00	Albany, N. Y.	1.00	Gambell, Mrs. E. M.	1.00	N. Y.	1.00	Light, R. G.	1.00
Brainerd, E. M.	1.00	Chapin, S. H.	1.00	Doylston, Pa.	1.00	Griffin, Mary E.	1.00	In His Name, New Bedford	1.00	Long, Mrs. John B.	1.00
Brainerd, Mrs. F. O.	3.00	Come, Julia E.	1.00	Alameda, Cal.	2.00	Gordon, H. D.	1.00	In His Name, New Bedford	1.00	Leonard, Mrs. B. W.	1.00
Briggs, Mrs. C.	1.00	Chase, B. P.	1.00	Woodson, Ill.	1.25	Gurnise, Mrs. Sarah S.	1.00	In the Master's Name, Leonia, N. J.	1.00	Lyon, Mrs. E. J.	2.00
Brooksbury, A.	1.55	Clark, Rev. Mrs. Geo. S.	2.00	Belleville, Ill.	1.00	Grunow, Mrs. Wm.	1.00	N. J.	1.00	Lacey, L. B.	1.00
Brooke, Mrs. H. A.	25.00	Compton, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar	10.00	Wellsville, O.	5.00	Gruver, Frank S.	2.00	Irvin, Miss Frank	1.00	Lacey, A. B.	1.00
Brown, S. M.	1.00	Crittenden, M. E.	1.00	Ont, Can.	1.00	Graham, Wm. F.	1.00	In His Name, Phila. Pa.	2.00	Lacey, A. F. and son	5.00
Brown, T. H.	1.00	Conrad, Mr. and Mrs. H. and daughter	2.00	Centre Sandwich, N. H.	1.00	Groff, Geo.	1.00	Peloe Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Brown, Mrs. Susan	1.00	Cole, N. E.	2.00	Woodson, Ill.	1.25	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Buck, W. R.	3.00	Cole, N. E.	2.00	Belleville, Ill.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Burnside, Mrs. M. B.	1.00	Collins, Rev. Q. J.	1.00	Burgess, City, Kas.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Bair, Mrs. A. A.	1.00	Como, Libbie	1.00	Wellsville, O.	5.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Bent, L. and M.	2.00	Chilcott, Mrs. A. K.	3.00	Ont, Can.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Born, I. and M.	1.00	Culley, Geo. W.	1.00	Centre Sandwich, N. H.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Beaton, Mrs. John N.	1.00	Carter, Mrs. Wm.	2.16	Greenwich, N. Y.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Baas, Amelia	1.00	Coop, Miss Annie	2.20	Orient, N. Y.	5.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Bauter, F.	2.00	Cunnings, Mrs. L. W.	1.00	Turin, N. Y.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Brecht, Mrs. Henry	1.00	Cure, Mr. J. W.	1.00	Stouben, N. Y.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Barker, M.	2.00	Chandler, Ettie A.	2.00	Pokagon, Mich.	2.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Buckleton, Mrs. Alfred J.	1.00	Clarke, A. N.	2.00	Gastoor, Ore.	2.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Brainerd, S. S.	1.00	Cook, Mrs. F. M.	5.00	Fremont, N. H.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Baldwin, S. H.	3.00	Cook, Mrs. L. W.	2.00	Providence, R. I.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Berndt, E. L.	1.00	Dikeman, A. A. and C. L.	100.00	Ridgebury	3.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Blankenbakes, Mr. & Mrs. A. S.	2.00	Denton, Mary A.	1.00	Frich, Mo.	2.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Barton, W. A.	1.00	Dimmick, E. G.	1.00	Belleville, Pa.	1.50	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Barker, J. A.	1.00	Divoll, Henry A.	2.00	Rumney, N. H.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Byard, Russel	1.00	Dix, Mary	2.00	Belleville, Pa.	1.50	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Bradshaw, Geo.	1.00	Ditz, Bessie P.	1.00	Rumney, N. H.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Bennett, Henry A.	1.00	Donglas, Freula	1.00	Belleville, Pa.	1.50	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Balecom, P. W.	1.00	Dunkley, T. A.	2.00	Rumney, N. H.	1.00	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Bull, Mattie	1.00	Durfee, Mrs. E.	1.00	Belleville, Pa.	1.50	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Burke, T. A.	1.00	Darling, L. A.	1.00	Belleville, Pa.	1.50	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Barton, Mrs. Eva	1.00	Dawly, H. F.	5.00	Belleville, Pa.	1.50	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Bell, Mrs. J. D.	1.00			Belleville, Pa.	1.50	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00
Brown, Cora.	1.00			Belleville, Pa.	1.50	Grove, Wm. H.	2.00	Pelee Island, Can	2.00	McCollum, Lizzie	2.00

[illegible]

FULFILLING THE WORD.

S.S. Lesson for Mar. 25. Col. 1:25. Golden Text, John 19:28. By Mrs. M. Baxter.*

THE very name of our blessed Lord was "the Word" (John 1:1). He came down from heaven, not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him, and this will he learned from Old Testament Scripture. Even as a child the Lord Jesus must have studied the Scriptures in the synagogue at Nazareth, that in his understanding, as a child of man, he might know his Father's will about every minute thing in his earthly life. He "grew in wisdom and in stature." What wisdom? Was it not in the Word of his Father, in which the doctors at Jerusalem found him so well read as a boy of twelve years old, that they were "astonished at his understanding and answers." May he not have recognized his birth, his being carried down into Egypt, his dwelling at Nazareth, etc., as the fulfilment of the Scripture? The Word was his continuous link with and means of intercourse between him and his Father, for he "emptied himself," and, though always divine, led his human life, as we do ours, under the direction of the Word of God, enlightened by his Spirit. He was baptized, as he himself said, to John the Baptist, "to fulfil all righteousness." He met the temptations of Satan, not by any divine power which he possessed from the beginning, but with the same weapon which he has given to us all. "It is written" was enough for him, and it is enough for us, to repel all the fiery darts of the wicked one. He changed his dwelling place, not from choice or for the sake of convenience, but "that it which was spoken by Esaias the prophet." He cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick for the very same purpose: "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying: Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses." He saw in the rejection of his ministry the fulfilment of Isaiah 6:9, and was not astonished nor discouraged by the hardened hearts and dull ears he met with. He knew that his death would do what his life alone could not. He understood Isaiah 53, and again and again broached the subject of his coming sufferings, death, and resurrection to his disciples, but they were not ready for it, and he must hide in his heart what he knew was coming, until the Holy Spirit should take possession of them and then they should understand. He knew that all which was written of him must come to pass.

Might be Fulfilled

Again and again, in his teaching, he sought to bring his hearers in contact with the Word. When the priests were offended because the children cried Hosanna, he said:

"Have ye not Read:

Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?" He had just before cleansed the temple from the buyers and sellers, giving, as his authority for so doing: "It is written: My house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves." When the Sadducees came to him with the question of a woman who should marry seven brothers in succession, he met them with the Scripture: "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." To many of us might he not say the same? How can those who are ignorant of the Scripture know the power of God? Are we beginning to recognize that the Scripture, which formed the life and the ministry of our Lord, is meant to fill a much larger place in our lives than it ever yet has done, if we, like Paul, see it to be our vocation "to fulfil the Word of God."

* The International Lesson for March 25th is either Psalm 139 or the Chapter's Lesson, Golden Text, Matt. 23:32 or the Resurrection of Christ, Mark 16:7, Golden Text, 1 Cor. 15:20.

Jesus was prepared for all that should come upon him by the study of the Word. He knew his disciples would forsake him and flee. He had read it in Zech. 13:7, and so he did not lose patience with them. He had kept step with his Father, all through his life, wakened morning by morning to hear and to know his will, never doing anything till his hour was come. But the light on that which was beyond the agony in the garden, beyond the cross and the grave, broke upon him. And he knew that those into whose hands he was delivered could do no more than was written of him. But all that was written must be fulfilled. He could say to Pilate: "Thou couldest have no power at all against me except it were given thee from above." But all which was written had such weight with him, that when he hung upon the cross he knowing that all things were now accomplished that the Scripture might be fulfilled, saith, "I thirst." Not so much as two little words which were prophesied of him must remain unfulfilled. He could not die until his life's work in all its details was accomplished.

And we? God is visiting the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name, whose vocation it is to fulfil the New Testament in their lives, as Christ fulfilled the Old Testament in his life; who shall be the living word to this generation, as he was the Living Word when on earth, and as the risen One is the Living Word still; he has, in a way, left us in his place to occupy till he comes. It is our recognized and accepted vocation to fulfil in our lives all which is written of him? What about our conversion? Has it been a conversion, not only out of sin, but out of the world and out of self into Christ? Is it true that being in Christ we are new creations, old things have passed away and all things are become new, and all things are of God?" (II. Cor. 5:17, 18)? Thus it is written of us:

Are we Fulfilling it?

"They are not of the world even as I am of not of the world." Thus it is written of us: do we in our life and conversation illustrate this distinct declaration of our Lord's? He said of himself: "No man hath ascended into heaven save he which came down from heaven, even the Son of Man which is in heaven. He was in heaven while he was yet on earth." It is written of us: "Our citizenship is in heaven from whence we wait for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he is able to subject all things unto himself." And this because he who died for us has raised us up together with Christ, and made us sit together with Christ in heavenly places in Jesus. Is this true? Is it a fact that we are actually, and not ideally, citizens of heaven? Is it real, and not only an empty aspiration, that we look for, wait for, prepare for, a Saviour who is coming, and that we really expect him to transform our bodies into the likeness of his glorified body? If this is really so, how is it possible to have our hearts set on any other thing down here than the accomplishment of the will of God! If this is real, it will also be accomplished in us: "As he is, so are we in this world."

But do we see the dignity of our calling? There is one name which is only given to our Lord after the marriage of the Lamb. When he has his bride with him; his Name is called:

"The Word of God."

(Rev. 19:13.) "The Word" from the beginning; now "The Word of God." Did Paul see something of this from afar when he understood that his stewardship was to fulfil, accomplish, fill up to its full measure, the Word of God? When our Lord in his last great prayer, speaks to his Father about those whom that Father had given him, he says, "I have given them thy Word; it was the choicest gift he could give; it was a kind of betrothal gift. In all his life on earth nothing had been to him like the Word; it was spirit and life to him as his words are to us.

But do we really follow our Master in searching the Word that we may discover what he wills about our habits of life, about our Christian work, about our family life, about the occupation of our time, about our words and thoughts? Do we know when the Word of God speaks of us? When it distinguishes between different classes, do we know which we belong to? Have we found our place in the word as our Master found his? Do we know how much or how little we can claim or possess here, so that the loss of our property, our earthly hopes, our reputation with men, our opinions, our friends, etc., ceases to be a grief to us; we have found in the Word that only such as forsake all that they have can be Christ's disciples; we accept discipleship on these terms to fulfil the Word of God.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

HIS day we celebrate the resurrection of Christ from the dead. The New Testament writers deal with the subject not as a doctrine but as a fact. They perceive ed that in rising from the dead, Christ had proved himself to be the Son of God. They built the superstructure of Christianity on the fact. On a previous occasion we presented the evidence of the historical truth of Christ's resurrection, showing that in the face of the hostility of the Jews and the Romans, fraud could not have been practised. Paul, writing about twenty-five years after the event, does not argue about it, but appeals to the five hundred persons who had actually seen Christ after his resurrection, the greater part of whom, he said, were still alive. The importance of emphasizing the fact cannot be exaggerated, for the truth of historical Christianity has never been assailed more bitterly in any age of the world than in this. The children in our schools should not be left with any doubts on the subject, but should be thoroughly convinced, so that when in future years they meet sceptics, they may be prepared for the objection that will be raised. There is, however, another and a practical view of the resurrection which should be presented. Christ should live in the world to-day in the spirit of his people. Every Christian boy and girl may make the resurrection of Christ a potent fact by doing, as far as possible, what Christ would have done. Thus, Christ will live again, not in body, but, as he wished to live, in spirit, when those who love him carry on his work, helping the poor, visiting the sick and the bereaved, cheering the disconsolate, and ministering to all who are in need. "Christ is dead." "Oh no," one who is thus helped may say, "he is not dead, I have seen him; he came to me in the person of one of his followers." We are not concerned about the physical appearance of Christ, the mere bodily presence. It is his spirit, his love, his sweet compassion that have touched the world's heart. In these he rises again in every act of love that is done for his sake. Thus may the world realize that Christ is risen indeed.

When the Sabbath was past. The three women had doubtless observed that Sabbath, but it is not likely that they ever observed another. A brighter and better day was to be hallowed through all time by the followers of Christ. The Jew clung and still clings to the Sabbath as the day of rest; but that morning, when the women came to that rock-hewn tomb at sunrise, a new era dawned for every lover of the Master. He ceased to celebrate the day of creative rest, and celebrated the day of greater portance to him when the seal was set to work of redemption. No longer did he one day of the week to rest, but filled day, which was rescued from world and occupations, with spiritual activity the Lord's service. The Sabbath was and the Lord's Day took its place. A motive prompted the observance and perfunctory obedience to law was superseded. The Lord's Day thus becomes a day and more delightful day than the Sabbath ever was, because the Christian feels in keeping it holy he is honoring his Lord. The conscientious observance of the day the subject of many anecdotes. Of these is the following: An Englishman was having some repairs made to one of his palaces. Every day the king came to the progress of the work and watch the workmen. One Monday morning he there as usual, and missing one of the whose activity had attracted his attention inquired where he was. He was at first answered evasively by the workmen; at however, they said that not being able to complete a particular job on the Saturday night they had returned to finish it on Sunday morning, and that as this man had refused to accompany them, he had dismissed from his employment. "Send back immediately," said the king. "The man who refuses to work on the Lord's Day is the man for me."

The stone was rolled away. The Evangelist says it was a very great stone. Probably it was like a mill-stone, and three women thought that their own strength would not be sufficient to roll it from before the opening. But the stone had already been rolled away and the stone had gone forth. The same principle which moved that stone can open all graves. One who doubted the existence of power lies buried in the Garden Churchyard of the city of Hanover. She left instructions that her tomb should be covered with heavy granite slabs which should be strongly bound together with iron clamps and over all should be a stone bearing inscription to the effect that the tomb was secured for all eternity, and should not be opened. But the monument which was erected in 1782 is now in ruins. A beetle must have fallen into the soil beneath the stones, for in a short time a tiny insect appeared between them which grew larger and larger. The stones and clamps could not resist the pressure of the tree which constantly demanding room for its growth and they fell apart. The beech went growing, and the monument lies scattered at its foot. So will all devices to oppose God's will fail, and his word declaring that the dead shall come from the graves judgment shall be fulfilled.

There shall ye see him. An Indian legend recorded by Mr. Schoolcraft to the effect that a young Indian warrior was overwhelmed with grief because his beautiful young wife was dead. He forsook the council and chase and spent his time mourning over her grave. One day a white haired old man came to him leave the grave and, if he so loved his wife, seek her in the land of souls. The man told him in which direction it lay and the Indian set out. For some distance the land was familiar to him, but by and by he came to the brow of a hill from which he could see but little as there was a haze over the prospect. But what little he could see he chanted him. Where he stood was wintry but before him it seemed to be spring. Passing through a lodge which was the entrance to the country, he was bidden lay down his club and bow and arrows and go to sleep. He obeyed and found himself passing mysteriously over an enchanted land. He was not walking but apparently floating over it as if with his body. He came to a lake and there a canoe was his lost bride. He embraced her and floated beside her on the bosom of the lake. Gladly would he have remained with her perpetually, but she said, "Not yet." She took him to the mother of life, who told him that work remained for him to do in the world. His wife would love him better and be prouder of him if he left her and went back to do his duty. This interview had been granted him that he might gain strength and courage for his duty. When that was done he would be welcome and he would find his bride waiting for him in the canoe and would never have to leave her again. He obeyed, and as he returned to the lodge he saw himself still sleeping there, and he entered again to his body and went back to his tribe comforted and invigorated.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

GIBRALTAR'S AERIAL ROAD.

ONE of the most interesting aerial railroads in Europe is that which has just been completed at Gibraltar, a picture of which appears on this page. The English have been adding to the means of defence ever since they secured possession of this fortress nearly two hundred years ago and this railway is the latest, and one of the most important, additions. The top of the crag, which stands like a giant sentinel at the Western end of the Mediterranean, rears its head fourteen hundred feet above the level of the sea. The Spaniards many centuries ago used it for a signal station and called it El Hacho, which means, a torch. Hitherto, the only way to reach the summit from the town, has been by a tortuous and circuitous path up the face of the cliff. But easy and quick communication with the signal station was long ago seen to be essential to a vigorous defence, in the event of an attack on the precious fortress. The problem of constructing such a means of communication was, however, not easy to solve. Success appears now to have been attained. Two cables are stretched, without support, from the north end of the town to the side of the cliff, a distance of nine hundred feet. Thence they are carried to the summit, being supported by huge trestles. Two cars are attached to the cables and connected by strong hawsers with a powerful horizontal engine, near the town anchorage of the cables. One is pulled up and the other is drawn down simultaneously. The journey is made in five minutes. To the observer from the ground the passage seems to be full of peril, but as a matter of fact, it is perfectly safe. A simple mechanical device makes it impossible for the cars to overturn and, as the cables are capable of resisting a strain of seventy-two tons, there is no danger of their breaking. The circuitous zigzag road up the cliff is likely to be little used in future. It may be that some sceptical, or nervous people, will refuse to trust their lives to the aerial road, but no one will have much respect for their intelligence. They will be few in number—not nearly so many as those who, desiring to climb heavenward, are not to be convinced by preachers and Christian workers that they can do so by trusting themselves to Christ, but insist on taking their own course of self reformation and good works. (Rom. 4:5)

A Surgeon's Mistake.

A curious blunder was made recently in Boston, Mass. It occurred in the vaccination station which was opened two or three months ago in the offices which were formerly occupied by the official who issues licenses to peddlers. One morning there was a large number of persons waiting their turn to be vaccinated. The surgeons passed quickly from one applicant to another doing their work promptly. In the crowd was a Hebrew apparently not long arrived from Russia. He watched the proceedings with some surprise and curiosity, such as a foreigner might reasonably show. After a short time the surgeon came to him and rather unceremoniously bade him take off his coat and roll up his shirt-sleeve. The Jew did not seem to understand and the surgeon thinking he did not know English showed him what to do. The arm bared, the surgeon performed the operation and entered the man's name in his book. As the Jew put his coat on, he said, "I can peddle milk now, ain't it?" Then the surgeon perceived the mistake. "Did you want a milk license, my man?" he asked. The Jew nodded. Then he was directed where to go for his license and informed that the operation to which he had submitted was of no service to him for the purpose he had in view. He had been directed to the building by some one who was not aware that the office for issuing licenses had been moved to another building. Doubtless the Jew felt aggrieved and he would feel worse afterward when the virus began to take effect. Had he been more familiar with our customs he would have been aware that the granting of a license depended on his character and not on his submitting to an operation. Persons who ought to know better often make a similar mistake as to religion. They imagine that being baptized, or joining a church, secures their salvation and are not concerned about their character. (Gal. 6:15.)

A Believer in Planchette.

A farmer on Long Island who does not like to spend his money or take much trouble was recently induced to do both in the hope of acquiring a treasure. He sank a well in his cellar, which in his part of the country is usually an easy business. But contrary to the experience of his neighbors, he encountered an obstacle before reaching the water-bearing stratum. When the pipes had reached a considerable distance down they struck something very hard. Heavy driving, however, finally overcame the difficulty and water was secured. But it was found that the pipes had not penetrated the obstacle, but had been deflected and gone down by its side. The farmer became curious about this obstacle, as all along the district there are old legends of buried treasure. Finally he decided to consult planchette, the little heart-shaped board running on wheels, which superstitious people believe is used by the spirits to reveal secrets. From planchette he received a message, deciphered in the usual way, purporting to come from his dead brother. It informed him that the obstacle was a treasure chest and advised him to dig it up. The farmer sent for a gang of Italians and set them to the work of excavating. It was a long job, but at last they reached the obstacle, and found that it was not a treasure chest, but a pocket of hard gravel. Never again is that farmer likely to heed planchette, or seek buried treasure on its advice. It may be hoped, however, that his experience will not lead him to distrust communications which really did come from heaven. One of these tells him of that "kingdom of God which is like treasure hid in a field." (Matt. 13:44.)

NEW AERIAL RAILROAD TO THE SIGNAL STATION ON THE SUMMIT OF THE CLIFF AT GIBRALTAR.

The Enemy in Stone.

A scientific journal commends to builders the use of the microscope, which, it says, may save them annoyance as well as loss. It is often found that a block of stone after it has been put in place in a building is disfigured by a black stain which gradually becomes larger and after some time becomes a centre of disintegration of the stone. If the stone had been examined under the microscope, it would have been noticed that a small crystal of pyrites was imbedded on the surface of the stone at the spot where the stain afterward appeared. The crystals are too small to be seen by the naked eye, but are easily detected by the microscope. These minute crystals are considered the most destructive enemies of the quarryman and constructor, as they not only lead to permanent disfigurement, but cause the stone to decompose. It is consequently important to find out before placing a stone in a conspicuous part of a building, whether any pyrites were on its surface. There is infinitely greater cause for examination of the living stones who are to be parts of Christ's temple. There should not only be self-examination, but the prayer of the Psalmist for God's scrutiny should be offered. (Ps. 129:23, 24.)

The Discovery of a Name.

The almost delirious joy of a patient in the Grady Hospital of Atlanta, Ga., caused some excitement among the physicians and patients a few days ago. The man had been three weeks in the hospital. He was found lying unconscious in a lonely road in the outskirts of the city, where he had evidently been beaten and robbed. The most serious of his injuries was one at the back of his head, which appeared to have been caused by a heavy blow from a club. The doctors at first had little hope of saving his life, but all they could do for him was done and the man slowly crawled back to life. But his memory was completely gone. He could not remember his own name nor where he lived. In other respects he was rational and answered the questions of doctors and nurses as to his condition and the events of her right course. He perceived that the compass must be wrong. He therefore sent the quartermaster to call the captain. After the quartermaster went on his errand the needle quivered for a moment and then swung around in the right direction. In a short time the quartermaster returned with the captain, and as the former approached the compass, the needle was again deflected. The captain being informed of the strange phenomenon, questioned the quartermaster, and insisted on knowing what he had about him that could affect the compass. At last the man said that he was wearing an electric belt. This explained the perturbation and the mystery was solved. The inconsistencies in the course of some professing Christians often have an analogous cause. A defect in early training, the existence of some strong propensity or some cherished secret sin perverts the conscience and leads them to call evil good. (Acts 26:9.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Our Readers will be Glad to Learn that Dr. Talmage will remain at the Brooklyn Tabernacle. On Sunday, March 4, he announced that, yielding to the urgent appeals of his officers and members of his church and to the counsels of other influential friends, he had consented to withdraw his resignation and would continue to labor among his attached people. He had been deeply touched by the evidences of affection which had been evoked by the prospect of separation at the close of the twenty-fifth year of his pastorate. A spontaneous outburst of applause, rarely heard in a place of worship on the Lord's Day, showed how welcome the announcement was to the vast audience.

The Methodist Protestant Church at Pinston, Pa., has received large accessions of membership through God's blessing on the labors of Mrs. W. E. Blandy of Brooklyn, N.Y. Other churches in the town have also received additions of members who ascribe their conversion to impressions received at the meetings.

Rev. E. W. Oakes has been holding meetings at Charlotte, N. C. An article on his preaching and work from the pen of Rev. R. T. Pritchard, D.D., appears in the local press expressing in strong terms the writer's appreciation of his labors and the benefit that is resulting from them to his congregation.

Rev. Solomon L. Ginsburg, Writing on Jan. 24, from Campos, Brazil, says: "Last Saturday I returned from Niteroy, where I was kept in prison nine days for preaching the Gospel. I had baptized four persons, and the police induced the police magistrate to prohibit my preaching."

Among the Audience at the Moody and Sankey meeting at Washington on Feb. 27, was Mrs. Cleveland, who was accompanied by Mrs. Gresham, Mrs. Carlisle and Mrs. Bissell. When Mr. Moody asked all to stand up who were not ashamed to confess Christ before the vast assemblage, it was gratifying to notice that all four ladies promptly arose in response.

The Daily Evangelistic Services in New York at Association Hall, Calvary Baptist Church, Mount Morris Baptist Church, Second Street M. E. Church, and several other places in the city have all been fruitful in conversions. Dr. Wharton, Rev. George C.

Needham, Dr. John Hall and other eminent preachers assisted Dr. A. C. Dixon in the noon meetings at Association Hall, beside preaching at the various churches in rotation in the evening. The meetings last week showed no decrease in attendance or interest.

Dr. H. Loomis, Writing from Japan, Tells a remarkable incident of the devotion of a Bible-seller. He says: "Mr. Yamashita suffered heavily in the recent flood. His home was destroyed and his private property nearly ruined. The poor fellow lost about everything he had; but like the real Christian hero that he is, as soon as he got his mother put in a safe place he rushed into relief work with our evangelist, Mr. Misunobu, without stopping to collect his own things together."

The American Bible Society at the recent meeting of its Board of Managers made grants of Bibles and Bible portions to the amount of $2,674, which included Spanish Scriptures for distribution by the Society's colporteurs in Yucatan, of Zulu Testaments to the Mission of the American Board in South Africa, and of the Scriptures in Bengali to the Gaboon and Corisco Mission of the Presbyterian Board for West Africa. Funds to the amount of $3,000 were also granted for work in Russia.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's Meetings at Jamestown, N.Y., have led to a deep religious movement throughout the whole neighborhood. Large numbers of people have been coming in every day from the surrounding districts to attend them. The largest hall in the town has been thronged to overflowing. On Sunday, Feb. 18, over two hundred persons made profession of faith. On Tuesday, Feb. 20, ninety-one factories, stores and offices were closed by arrangement during the early part of the day, in order to afford an opportunity for all to attend the services.

We deeply regret to hear of the death of Mr. Carl W. Knudsen of South Norwalk, Conn., which occurred on Feb. 26. Mr. Knudsen was widely known by his literary work, but still more for his Christian labor and his extensive philanthropy. His uniform kindness, loving disposition and purity of life endeared him to a large circle of friends, who now with his devoted widow mourn his irreparable loss. Mr. Knudsen was a native of Denmark, but had been in this country since the year 1850. He was not connected with any denomination, but gave his best years to the propagation of the simple Gospel, and built a chapel in Norwalk where all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ were cordially welcomed regardless of creed. Mr. Knudsen was a warm friend of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and used it extensively in his work.

A Disturbed Compass.

A naval officer recently back from a long cruise relates a remarkable experience. He says that one morning it was discovered that the ship was a long way out of her course. The quartermaster was questioned, but he insisted that he had accurately followed his instructions. The captain lectured him sharply and impressed upon all the men the need of greater care. The next night there was a similar deviation. The officers became alarmed, and their perplexity increased. On the third night the course was given out as usual, but the captain waking up in the night was horrified by seeing that the ship was evidently out of her course again. He rushed on deck, almost overturning the quartermaster at the wheel, and there saw to his surprise that the compass indicated that the ship was on

SERMONS WORTH READING

Helpful Discourses for the People.

STONES FLUNG FROM GLASS HOUSES.

Sermon Preached in the First Baptist Church, Atlanta, Ga., by Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, D.D. Text: John 8: 7, "He that is without sin among you; let him first cast a stone at her."

THE Scribes and Pharisees, offended by many exhibitions of our Lord's compassion for degraded and despised classes of society, seized an adulterous woman, dragged her into his presence, and said, "Moses in the law commanded that such should be stoned; but what sayest thou?" This they did to tempt him into saying something for which they could bring a charge against him before the Sanhedrim. Knowing what manner of men they were, looking down into their hearts, and back over their lives, he replied, "He that is without sin among you; let him first cast a stone at her." These words pricked their consciences, and constrained them to sit in judgment upon themselves. Self-condemned, with sealed lips and drooping heads, they retired from his presence.

If we will look at ourselves, and at society, in the light of the moral law of God, as interpreted by Jesus Christ, we shall find that the criminal classes include millions of people, besides those whose conduct is condemned by human law and reprobated by public sentiment. In taking such a view of ourselves, we shall discover that we are chargeable before God with some of the very offenses, for which others have been punished by the State, and loaded with the curses of society. Such a discovery would humble our hearts, open our eyes to our own need of God's forgiving and cleansing grace, and also soften our feelings toward those who are not more guilty than we, but less fortunate. Christ teaches that adulteries, thefts, and murders, have their genesis in the hearts of men. Whoever harbors the desire to do these things, is already guilty of them. Apply this test, and you will see how few of us could look God in the face, and say, "I am innocent."

Developed Depravity.

The naturally depraved heart is the source of every social evil; but natural depravity is stimulated and developed by a man's environment. Unless a new principle of life is implanted in him by the spirit and truth of God, and the bad influences, which he must of necessity encounter, are neutralized by wholesome influences, the evil that is in him will show itself in open transgression, and he will go from vice to vice, and crime to crime, until he is hopelessly wrecked. Look at that loathsome outcast from society—that old vulture, fragrant with the sickening stench of his last feast of filth. He was not always a vulture. His childhood and youth were as clean, as fair, and as full of promise as ours. He is the victim of parental neglect, and of evil thoughts and passions that were put into his mind and heart before he left the parental root. He is like the sun rising through the gates of morning, undimmed by any veil of mist gilding all the mountain tops, and giving promise of a glorious day, and then hiding his visage behind the foulest clouds, to the end of his journey. I am not mad, but speak the words of soberness and truth when I say, that many of our homes are schools of vice and crime. The influences which fill them and surround them, train the children to false conceptions of life, and feed their imaginations with pictures that breed a longing for unlawful and ruinous gratifications.

Mischief in the Home.

Who can doubt the evil effects of the greater part of the literature which comes into the average American home? Fathers and mothers read, and permit their children to read books, in which sensuality is invested with a drapery that is fascinating and bewitching to the last degree. Go to these parents, and say to them, "Do you desire your sons and daughters to live such lives as are portrayed in the romances which you encourage them to read?" and they indignantly answer, "No." Here is an inconsistency that is criminal, because it is deliberate, willful, and deprives the parent of all power to lead his children in the ways of truth and righteousness. If it be true that every home influence works its way into the heart of childhood, and then works itself out again, in the subsequent development of character, what can be expected of persons whose childhood and youth were spent in a home, where the intellectual diet consisted chiefly of novels, in which religion and morality are sneered at, and the heroes and heroines are men and women, who illustrate their lack of virtue and faith in God, by living only for sensuous and evanescent pleasures.

Evil in Art.

We all know the fondness of children for pictures and statuary; and we know also, that art has much to do with the formation of a child's taste, and in giving moral tone and color to his mind. The sentiment of Robert Ingersoll, borrowed from the infidel sensualists of Europe, that in criticizing art, all ethical principles must be ignored, is rapidly becoming a dominant sentiment in thousands of American homes. There are immoral books, and there are immoral pictures; and the latter are often more hurtful to character than the former. The display of undraped human figures on canvas, is disgusting to refinement and virtue and sensibility, and to make our children familiar with such indecency, is to corrupt their minds and degrade their lives. If you want to see the effects of eliminating ethical principles both from art and literature, go to France. Go to Paris, which is aptly called "the Corinth of Modern Europe." There you will find a people, who, though polite, intelligent, witty and brilliant, have no faith in God and moral government—a people whose only creed is social libertinism, and whose supreme aim seems to be, to find amusement. While I concede that there are numerous exceptions to the rule among them, and that there are no higher illustrations of Christian faith and virtue than can be found even in the very heart of Paris, I confidently and unhesitatingly affirm that it is the most immoral city in the civilized world. These are the people who rule these are the people whom our society circles allow to teach them home-decoration, and what to read, and how to amuse themselves; these are the people who teach American women how to dress, and how to dance; these are the people who furnish ballet-girls for our operas, and all the obscene features of our theatrical entertainments. These are generally the people from whom we get such dramas as "Camille," whose chief attraction is its refined sensualism. Following the example of such a people, filling out homes and flooding society with influences that poison the minds and corrupt the hearts of the young, we should not wonder at the rapid growth of vice and crime in our country.

The World of Fashion;

In view of these things, we have no right to look with scorn and contempt upon those who fall, and wallow in mire and filth, because it was our example that hurried them to ruin, and under God's law, we are as guilty as they. If Christ were on earth to-day, he would stand up in these society circles, where Parisian ideas, sentiments and fashions prevail, and pointing to some house of shame, he would say, "He that is without sin; let him cast a stone at it." It humiliates me to know that there are men and women in our country, who are too refined, clean, and prudish, to countenance the erection of a home for the reformation of harlots, but whose sensibilities are not at all disturbed by the sentiments and customs which promote the growth of harlotry, and all its attendant abominations.

If those Pharisees had gone out and caught a thief, and brought him to Jesus, saying, "Master, here is one whom we caught in the act of taking another man's property," I think the Master would have made the same reply that he gave them in the case of the unclean woman: "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at him." If we apply the law, "Thou shalt not steal," as interpreted by Christ and his apostles, how few men among us could honestly say, "I have never violated that commandment." When Paul exhorts the Romans to be honest in the sight of God and men, he is simply interpreting and enforcing the old law, which said, "Thou shalt not steal." In the New Testament, honest means honorable, but in the ethical code of modern commerce, it means simply conformity to the letter of a bargain. To be honest in the truest and noblest sense, is to be true to the largest spirit of social duty. The honest man considers an unwritten obligation just as sacred and binding as one that is written, signed, sealed, and delivered. He is just as careful to pay a debt of ten cents as one of a thousand dollars.

Dishonest Bargains.

I have a tract of land, on which my neighbor discovers a rich vein of gold. Knowing me to be ignorant of the real value of the property, he makes me an offer for it, which I accept. For a thousand dollars he gets from me something which he knows is worth a hundred thousand dollars. In this transaction, while he violates no law of the state, he transgresses the divine code, which says, "Thou shalt not steal." "Provide things honest." Under the laws of the state he is not chargeable with theft, but according to the law of God as understood and accepted by honest men, he is no less a thief than the man who runs away with the contents of a bank-vault.

A man makes a piece of counterfeit money, and buys something with it; or, he signs the name of some merchant to a commercial note, which he afterwards gets discounted in a bank. Is that man a thief? Yes. What is it that makes him a thief in the eyes of the law? It is the one simple fact, that he got another man's property without paying for it. Apply the same principle to other transactions, and you will convict thousands of men whom no court has ever indicted. According to this principle, every gambler is a thief. Every seller of fraudulent goods, is a thief. Every corporation that gives a fictitious value to its stock, is a combination of thieves. And the great commercial wreckers, who combine their capital to depress markets, and to get other men's property for half its value, are monumental thieves. Every form of by which men get the advantage of each other in business, is theft. The biggest, most persistent, remorseless, and incurable thieves, are not in the convict-camp, but in mansions, where they fare sumptuously every day. If all the thieves were put into the chain-gang to-morrow, it would make gaps in the business world too fearful to contemplate. It would almost wipe out Wall Street; it would annihilate the whiskey-rings; it would destroy half of the manufacturing, and shut up two-thirds of the brokerage offices; it would suspend half of the city water-works, cancel a majority of street-paving contracts, and ruin many men in the plumbing business. It would thin the ranks of the legal and the medical fraternities, and so reduce the representation in Congress that no quorum could be obtained until after the next election.

Deception

In view of these facts, when we look upon a young man convicted of embezzlement or forgery, and about to be sent away to a felon's prison, we cannot afford to spurn him and anathematize him, because his crime is the product of corrupting influences which pervade the whole commercial world, and for which every one of us is in some degree responsible. Tried by of honesty, that young man is not more a criminal than thousands, who stand high commercially and socially. Let him among you who never planned anything crooked in his business, or winked at crookedness in others, and who is no way responsible for the spirit of dishonesty in the world of trade, step forward, and hurl the first anathema at that young man, who stands before the tribunal of human justice convicted of theft.

God's Standard

I stand aghast to-day, not as I look on a criminal like that, but as I look upon the great army of colossal thieves, who walk abroad unwhipped of justice, and whose example and influence have led thousands of people to think, that dishonesty is disreputable and despicable, only when it is punished by the State. It is the conduct of these imperial rogues, that is spreading and strengthening the doctrine of the Anarchists, that "all property is theft," and that is hastening a revolution which will make the bloodiest picture in the book of time.

If that adulterous woman had been a murderer, Christ would have said just what he did say to those Pharisees—"He that is without sin among you; let him first cast a stone at her." Why would he have said it? Because he looked into their hearts, and saw that the spirit of murder was there. That spirit made them murderers, under the law of God, long before they laid wicked hands upon him, and crucified him between two thieves. The act of taking a human life, is not, in every instance, murder. It is what is in the heart, that gives character to his deed. If then we take Christ's interpretation of the law, which says, "Thou shalt do no murder," and in the light of it, look into our own hearts, we shall have grave doubts of our own innocence, and regard with less scorn, and more compassion, the man who is about to be executed for murder.

The Motive of the Slayer,

War, may be a just and sacred necessity, in some instances. Christianity does not annul the right of self-defense. But war inspired by revenge, or the lust of conquest and spoils, is murder. Every man who falls in battle, defending his home and country against an unrighteous invasion, is a murdered man; and the crime of taking his life, belongs to all who either joined or encouraged the invasion.

Look, too, at the victims of the polished deviltries of men, who are still allowed to move in what are called, "the highest circles of society." The world is dotted all over with the graves of deceived women—women who were robbed of virtue and deserted, and who, in the madness of their despair, sought refuge in the arms of death. The destroyers of these women are murderers, and yet, they are neither punished by the State, nor criticised by people who claim to be the very cream of our social life.

The Victims of Avarice.

Look also at the human lives that are sacrificed by men to gratify their greed of gold. Go into a great factory, the property of a millionaire, who revels in luxury, and you will find frail women and delicate children, standing all the day long in a room whose atmosphere is laden with poisonous impurities, and patiently, but painfully, toiling for wages, that are barely sufficient to prevent starvation. In God's record-book, the name for such cruelty and inhumanity, is murder.

I would not fail to mention that class of men and women to be found in every community, whose characteristic wickedness is slander. Their purpose is to elevate themselves on the ruin of others. Where they are too cowardly for open assault, they secretly beslime and blacken the reputations of their political or commercial or social competitors. When you destroy the good name of a good man, you destroy him; and such destruction is murder.

If there be one among you, in the light of the principles and facts presented in this discussion, feels that he is absolutely innocent of the sins which I have named, he, and only he, can afford to cast stones at those who have stumbled and fallen in the race of life. Seeing how much of

The Essence of Sin

and crime there is in our own hearts and lives; seeing how we have tolerated and even honored and exalted men, who, according to divine law, are as guilty as those upon whom the State has laid its iron hand and dragged to the bar of justice; and knowing how feebly we have opposed the agencies and influences which corrupt the minds and lives of men, and hurry them to disgrace and ruin, what ought to be our spirit and attitude towards those who have been branded as criminals and outcasts? What treatment of them does Christianity require of us? And what do the interests of society and the State demand? These are very practical questions, because the class referred to is large very large, and rapidly increasing. I am sure that Christianity does not require us to apologize for their offenses, or to shield them from punishment by the State. It would be hurtful to them, and a wrong to society, to persuade them that they do not deserve punishment. There is a sickly sentimentalism, in regard to crime all criminals, that is foreign to true religion as it is to common sense. The Author of Christianity is a God of law. He upholds the majesty of his own government, and promotes the welfare of his creatures throughout the universe, by the rigid enforcement of law. God hates sin, and all sin is punished, either in the sinner, or in his divine Substitute. The dignity and stability of the State, and the peace and security of its subjects, require the punishment of those who violate its laws.

But while we uphold the State, our attitude toward those who have fallen into the disgrace of vice and crime, should be one of sympathy and helpfulness. A sense of our own sinfulness, and the consciousness that we are in a large degree responsible for their downfall, should remove from us every vestige of Phariseism. We should remember, too, that though wretched, degraded and disgraced, they are still human beings, still our fellow-men, still children of the same God to whom we look up, and say, "Our Father who art in heaven." The same Christ who died for us, shed his blood for them; the same mercy through which we look for salvation from the wrath to come, can save them; and the same divine Spirit that made us new creatures, is able to transform them into lovers of truth, virtue, and God.

We should go to these poor creatures, who are fettered by sin and immersed in doom, and show them

The Helpful Side
The divine nature, should tell them that God, in Christ, is a tender and pitying Father, able and willing to save unto the uttermost, and that he has a royal welcome for every prodigal who will come home. We should tell them the compassionate and mighty Saviour, who snatched the dying thief from the jaws of hell, and opened the gates of Paradise to his departing spirit, is the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever; and that he who forgave the despised harlot, and made her one of the truest and noblest of women, will forgive them, and exalt them to usefulness, and honor, and happiness, if they will cast themselves on his mercy and power.

There is no more appropriate and hopeful missionary field, for the churches of Jesus Christ, than the jail and the convict-camp. Our obvious neglect of this department of Christian beneficence, is a disgrace which has furnished current infidelity with one of its most successful weapons. There are ex-convicts in this community, who when released from prison, were like the discharged galley-slave in Victor Hugo's "Misérables." Every door was closed against them. No human voice uttered a note of cheer or sympathy. But after awhile, pitying eyes were turned toward them. God gave them friends true and loyal as the old Bishop in Victor Hugo's story—friends through whom they have regained the respect, confidence, and happiness, which they had forfeited by their misdeeds. Upon these Friends of the Friendless,

God's richest blessings will surely descend. They will be the special objects of his loving and guiding care. His angels will sing along their pathway, and his rod and staff will comfort them in the valley and shadow of death.

When those two notorious young criminals have served out the term of imprisonment and labor to which they were recently sentenced by the court, what will the Christian people of Atlanta do for them? Will they treat them with Pharisaic scorn? Will they say to them, "You are hopelessly inhuman, and shall not return to us." God forbid!

Let us, in the spirit of him who on the Cross prayed for the mob that murdered him, and who bore a penitent thief upon his breast through the gates of Paradise, say to these young men, when they emerge from bondage, "Young men, come back, come back. As God is merciful to us, we will be merciful to you. Come back, and begin earnestly and hopefully to regain our lost estate, and we will be to you friends and brothers.

That is the charity of our Gospel. Charity hopeth all things; endureth all things; and never faileth. Charity, the queen of virtues, is eternal. It is like the cathedral tower, which rises so high above foundation, and wall, and parapet, that the huge razed cross upon its summit, shines like a star of evening, when all beneath it is hemmed by the deepening shadows of approaching night.

OUR SERVICE of SONG

Take my Voice and let me Sing ever only for my King

Conducted by Ira D. Sankey

Thy Word is a Lamp.

"Thy word is a lamp to my feet."—Ps. 119: 105.

GRACE J. FRANCES. HUBERT P. MAIN.

1. Thy word is a lamp to my feet, O Lord, Thy word is a
2. Thy word is a lamp to my feet, O Lord, And, trust-ing in
3. Thy word is a lamp to my feet, O Lord, And O, when Thy light to my way; It shines in my soul like a star by night, And Thee as my all, What-ev-er of e-vil may cross my path, I glo-ry I see, For all the rich blessings its truth has brought, The com-forts and cheers me by day. } O won-der-ful, won-der-ful nev-er, no, nev-er can fall. Thee.

word, My treas-ure, my hope, and my stay; Each prom-ise record-ed shall stand as now, When time and the world pass a-way.

Copyright, 1893, by The Biglow & Main Co.
From SUNNY-SIDE SONGS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS, by per. of the Publishers.

LIFE'S VOYAGE.

(Written for The Christian Herald.)

WE are sailing o'er an ocean,
Braving tempest more and more;
And we hear the wild commotion
Sounding on the distant shore.

Turn, O sinner! why this sorrow?
When he gave his life for you;
Put not off until to-morrow,
What the Saviour bids you do.

Through life's voyage lurking danger
Fills our pathway here on earth;
But we see the lowly manger,
Where the Saviour had his birth.

Crystal fountains never ceasing,
Burst for those who love the Lord;
And they'll ever keep increasing,
If we bide his gracious Word.

Then we'll anchor sure and steadfast,
If through faith we hold the chart;
Safely entering port at last,
Where the ransomed never part!

Manistique, Mich. F. A. ROGERS.

TRUST.

WHAT fills the soul with perfect peace?
What breathes a tranquil joy?
What makes doubt's weary troubles cease?

The tongue with praise employ?
What gives us grace to follow on
In paths the saints have trod?
Naught but the love of Christ the Son,
With steadfast trust in God.

What lightens up the darkest heart,
As with the sun's bright beam,
And life and love within upstart,
Lit by the yawning gleam?

What gives us grace to follow on,
The heavenward path to plod?
Naught but the love of Christ the Son,
With earnest trust in God.

O troubled soul! would you have balm,
Your sin's deep wound to cure?
In Christ there is a heavenly calm,
And healing ever sure,

Then pray for grace to follow on
The path that he has trod,
Pray for deep love to Christ the Son,
And perfect trust in God. E. E. Williamson.

THE SEVENTH TRUMPET.

The Mystery—The Two Women—The Mystic Babylon and its Doom.

BY REV. JOHN STORIE.

(Concluded from page 153.)
THE seven mountains on which the woman sitteth are mortal. They are only men. "They are seven kings," (ver. 10.) Five had already at the time of this vision, lived and fallen. The sixth was then alive and reigning (17: 9, 10.) He too is now fallen. The seventh has not come; nor has he risen yet. The six have been already named—Nebuchadnezzar, Alexander, Antiochus, Caligula, Nero, Domitian. But this woman lives on; and when the last, the Seventh Head, is risen, she will rule him also for a time; and, in the first stages of his advance, excite and madden him with the power of her sorceries and with the cup of her fornication.

Again, we read that this woman "sitteth upon the many waters" (ver. 1.) This too is symbolic; and is explained in ver. 15, "The waters which thou sawest where the woman sitteth are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." So immense is the spiritual sway this woman exerts. As the race of man has spread through the world, the life and spirit of the great Babylonian harlot has gone with it; the corrupt and corrupting mistress not of one nation, but of every tribe and tongue; seducing them from God; leading them to worship in his stead abominations and evil powers; ruling with her mystic spells their immortal nature; and even in these latest ages so perplexing the spiritual sense, so stimulating the pride of reason, and so intoxicating men with the passion of her cup, that there is a growing tendency, even in nominally Christian lands, to resist the Gospel.

The woman's condition: As seen by the Prophet in that proud seat, she is drunk; drunk with blood! "I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." She is then not only the mother of all the abominations that, in the name of religion, have defiled the earth; but the one Jezebel who has inspired and impelled persecution in all time. The deliberate determination to put down by fire and blood the pure worship of God began in that early day in Babylon; and, since then, in whatever land and in whatever period of the world's history there has been active persecution—whether among Jews, or Pagans, or Mohammedans, or nominal Christians—is she making her persecuting agents drunk with her own fierce and intoxicating passion.

In the very height of her pride and triumph, and by the hand of those who had sustained her with a devoted adhesion, she is now to fall. "The ten horns which thou sawest and the Beast, these shall hate her and make her desolate and naked; and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire." (Rev. 17: 16.) This her judgment is from God, but he uses them to execute it. "He has now put it into the heart of these kings to fulfil his will" in this woman's rejection, degradation and destruction, though they mean it not so.

What then moves them to this decided action? And why is it taken now? The course of events, it would seem, is this. These ten kings meet with the Man of Sin in the valley of Megiddo for consultation and decision. "They make one mind" with him. They agree to act together on one defined plan. First, with unanimous consent, they make him their head. "They give their power and strength to the Beast." They with one accord lay their crowns at his feet and proclaim him King of kings, the world's King." They proclaim his divinity. King of the earth, he is also to be its God; its one and only Deity." It is decreed with the unanimous consent of the ten kings. The Man of Sin is seated in the Temple: on its altar; on its throne. No man is to be permitted to live in this new generation who refuses to conform and to obey the mandates of the established power.

This done, the consecration and dedication of the Antichrist completed, the next inevitable act of these ten kings is to dethrone and despoil the Harlot. They are now animated by a hatred and contempt equal to that old infatuation. "They shall hate the Harlot, and make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and shall burn her with fire." These words are strong, but they express with striking effect the tremendous revolution which, by the united action of these ten Kings and the Beast, has, like a sudden earthquake, convulsed the religious aspect of the world.

RESURRECTION LIFE.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Commencing March 5, 11. Timothy 2: 1-13.

THE idea of resurrection life lies at the basis of all spiritual growth. It has a two-fold aspect; one affecting the Christian himself and the other influencing the world. One who has died in Christ, who has so completely identified himself with his Lord that his flesh has been crucified with its affections and lusts, is in truth a new man, in a new resurrection life. His past is set far behind him and his connection with it is one of memory only. If any question of the supernatural origin of Christianity were mooted to such a man, he need look no farther than his own soul for the proof. There is no human power, no power in circumstances, that could work the change in him that has been worked. It must be of God. Certain studies and pursuits may awaken new kinds of enthusiasm and turn the intellectual life into new channels; new conditions of life, such as the sudden acquisition of fortune, may give new standards of taste and feeling, but they do not change the man. They do not make him feel different toward his fellows; they do not give him new motives or new ideals. The spiritual change does these. The man who has experienced it lives a new life. The things which were formerly his delight are now tasteless and insipid. His love goes out to every one. He strives after attainments which were formerly meaningless to him, and his hopes are centred on higher objects. The life of the animal, content with the sunshine and abundance of food, is not farther from him than his old life of fleshly pleasure. The man is born again, he has died to his past and is living a resurrection life.

The change within, has an outward manifestation. Resurrection life is recognized by the world. Explorers like Livingstone, philosophers like Newton, philanthropists like Peabody, shed their light far forward to succeeding generations. Their spirit is in their successors, who carry on their work. Their bodies die, but their spirit lives on in the men that follow them. Elisha inherits the spirit of Elijah, and works like wonders. So, in infinitely higher degree, is it with Christ's spirit. "The works that I do," Christ said, "shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do." The life that he puts in his followers is a mighty force. It is ever finding new outlets and new spheres of operation. Christ's resurrection may be doubted by the sceptic, but he cannot shut his eyes to the fact that Christ's spirit is working in the world. He sees it everywhere, in the efforts to relieve suffering, in the kindness which goes to the rescue of affliction, in the condemnation of cruelty and oppression, in the ever growing hatred of selfishness. Christ rises anew in every generation; and his people show him in their lives. The savage wonders at the kindness of the missionary, at his loving disposition, and at his self-denial. It is Christ in the missionary, that he sees and admires and, though he knows him not, he is prepared, by what he sees, to recognize the Master in the servant. It is the resurrection life, Christ risen again in his people. So, in the daily life of the humble Christian, Christ may live in acts of helpfulness and mercy and magnanimity.

THE B. Y. P. U. PRESIDENT'S TOUR.

The warm welcome President Chapman is receiving from Baptist Young People's Unions on his Western tour indicates how firm a hold the movement has on the churches. Mr. Chapman has found the churches on the Pacific coast in no way less responsive than those nearer home. Mr. L. T. Bush of Oakland, Cal., writing to the "Standard" about the President's visit says: The First Baptist Church here has been highly honored of late in the visit of our President. Mr. Chapman was the guest of the B. Y. P. U. of San Francisco and Alameda counties in their quarterly meeting. Knowing that Mr. Chapman was to be present the young people rallied in great numbers to greet their national president. His address was able, timely and very helpful to the large audience of young people present. Mr. Chapman's six weeks' trip through the Western field will have a great unifying and uplifting influence and will greatly strengthen our Baptist young people's movement, and our whole Baptist cause. Mr. Chapman is making hosts of friends on the coast. The Sunday preceding this Monday evening meeting in Oakland, Mr. Chapman gave a full day's service to the San Francisco churches speaking in the morning at the Emmanuel, in the afternoon at the Hamilton Square, and in the evening occupying Pastor Henry's pulpit in the First church. All these addresses were spoken of in terms of high praise by those who attended them. Monday forenoon the Ministers' Conference of Oakland and San Francisco and vicinity listened to an address from Mr. Chapman of very great excellence and profit. His — A practical piece of advice which Leagues may find valuable in a delicate position in which tact is needed, is given by Mr. Charles H. McKeon in a symposium in "Zion's Herald." It refers to the difficulty of training inexperienced members to be leaders, the object being to prevent inexperience having a detrimental effect on the meetings. Mr. Keonon says: "Try this plan: Put the leadership of the meetings into the hands of four or five good leaders and one inexperienced but promising one. Drop one of the best leaders once in six months, putting another inexperienced one in his place. Then have two or three leaders to sit at the desk to help your least experienced when they lead. This plan, which has worked very successfully, provides for the training of new leaders without defeating the other and more important object of the meeting."

THE HARTFORD BUILDING.

Our friends of the Young Men's Christian Association of Hartford, Conn., are now rejoicing in entering on possession of their new building to which reference has already been made in these columns. The first impetus to the movement for the possession of a home of its own by the Association came six years ago, when the late Gen. Charles T. Hillyer, who during his life was a warm friend of the institution, bequeathed to it a magnificent site in the best part of the city. Gen. Hillyer was a shrewd buyer and the lot which cost him thirty thousand dollars was well worth the money. It lies on the corner of Pearl, Ford and Jewell streets, in the midst of a population from which most of the members came and where five lines of cars converge. On this lot the beautiful building, of which we give a picture on this page, has been erected. It is of brick with stone facing and has been visit has in it something more than a holiday vacation or sight-seeing.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION'S NEW BUILDING, HARTFORD, CONN.

EPWORTH LEAGUE NOTES.

At the united conference of the Kentucky Leagues at Louisville, Dr. Walter R. Lambuth who has labored in China and Japan, stirred the missionary enthusiasm of the delegates by recounting incidents from his experience. The League elected, as State President, Judge Joseph M. Carroll of Hopkinsville. A proposition to associate with the Christian Endeavor movement was almost unanimously rejected. The "Christian Advocate" says that it has received reports from the wide field of "remarkable success in the work of visitation by young Leaguers among the young people of their communities. In some cases nearly all the youth of the neighborhood have been brought by this means not only into a most friendly acquaintance with the visitors, but also into practical sympathy with the League work. In one instance fifty-three young men and women were found outside of church attendance and brought under Gospel training, and most of them into a conscious Christian experience." The League is making rapid progress in the South. The "Epworth News" has been established to give intelligence of the movement and form the medium of communication. It states that in the Asheville, N. C. District there are now ten Leagues, with an aggregate membership of seven hundred.

so planned as to accommodate every branch of the work. The gymnasium, which is one of the best-equipped in the country is separate from the main building, an artistic curved corridor giving access from one to the other. The main-room has an unobstructed space of over five thousand square feet and is fifty feet high. In the main building beside the usual offices is a parlor, recreation-rooms, a coffee-room and a large hall, besides library, reading-room and class-rooms. About $110,000 was raised before the foundation was laid. The Association enters its new home in the sixteenth year of its age, as it was organized in 1878. It has 905 members and a flourishing boys' auxiliary.

The Cape Town Y. M. C. A. Committee, earnestly call the attention of young men in other countries to the over-crowded condition of the labor market in South Africa, with the view of dissuading emigration on their part.

Dr. F. E. Clark, President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, is receiving a fund for the erection of a Christian Endeavor Technical School in Japan. It is to be in connection with the Earthquake Orphanage of Yokohama, in which two hundred of the children orphaned by the terrible earthquake are being sheltered. The work of feeding, clothing and educating the children is conducted on faith like the Bristol Orphanage, which Geo. Muller founded.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

S. M. Beach, Chicago, Ill. In common with thousands of others among your readers, I have had a humble share in the glorious work that is being done by the Food Fund. It is a work that realizes the highest conception of practical Christian helpfulness, reaching the mark promptly and affording instant aid, where such delays as are the usual accompaniment of organized philanthropy would be almost criminal. To thousands of earnest Christian people, it has opened a welcome door to serve the Master, and many a head has found its pillow softer and rest sweeter since helping the Food Fund. Like your noble contributor in Eureka, Cal., we were glad to "buy a little of the world's sorrow," and to be able to lighten some one's burden. The true Christianity is best exemplified in lives that are poured out in sacrifice and helpfulness, and those who have given to the Food Fund, as well as those who aided the Russian Relief Fund two summers ago, are better men and women for the blessed experience.

These two Funds have shown what a tremendous moral and material agency God's people are, when banded together for a common purpose. If his servants, all over this Union, could be organized as a permanent philanthropic force, there need be no such thing as suffering among "God's poor" for the actual necessities of life. Why not organize, then? The CHRISTIAN HERALD has already demonstrated that it possesses the faculty of organizing them for an emergency. Let it organize all who will as a permanent army of relief, and under the generous influence of such a host, such conditions as destitution and starvation among our Christian poor would be unheard of. Personally, I would most gladly send my name to be enrolled in such a movement, and I feel assured that I am but a unit among thousands who, like myself, believe it would be a blessing to us all. China, it is said, has no beggars within her borders. If a heathen land can point to such a state of affairs, it is surely not too much to venture the hope that united Christian America may be able and willing to secure her Christian poor against absolute want. We will always have the poor with us, as Scripture itself affirms, but we can, if we are so minded, fully realize the Psalmist's experience when he declared that in his time, in the happy, prosperous days of Israel's godliness, he had "never seen the righteous forsaken nor their seed begging bread."

The suggestion of our Chicago subscriber is a novel and striking one, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would be pleased to have a full expression of its readers' views on the subject, through the Mail-Bag. This is an age of Christian progress and the proposition is certainly one that merits the careful attention of all who are interested in the advancement of Christian principles.

Reader, Mill Creek, Ill. Did the crucifixion of Christ occur in the same place where Abraham was about to offer his son Isaac as a sacrifice unto the Lord? No; the scene of Abraham's attempted sacrifice of his son was on Mount Moriah which afterward became the site of the temple.

Mrs. M. L. M., Granville, Ill. Years ago I consecrated myself and all I have to the Master. For many years I have worked in the church, prayer meeting and Sabbath School, as superintendent and teacher. I want to do more Christian work. What can I do, so that I can at the same time pay my expenses?

We know of no field in which better work can be done by consecrated women than among the poor in our great cities. Write to Rev. R. A. Torrey, Bible Institute, Chicago, Ill.

"In God's Name." Boyertown, Pa. 1. Write to the Fleming H. Revell Co., publishers, N. Y. 2. Yes, your contribution to the Food Fund was received. 3. Send back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to Sing Sing Prison, Sing Sing, N. Y.—A. Chaplain, Williston, Vt. It is certainly not consistent with the profession of Christianity to indulge in profane language; for a minister of God to use such language, is totally inexcusable.—Old Subscriber, Rahway, N. J. In some cases it may be beneficial, and in others injurious. In the great majority of cases, it is doubtless a sinful waste of means that might be applied to better purpose.—Geo. Watts, Floral Park, L. I. No, as a rule they are not truthful, and it is a sheer waste of time to read them. They belong to the cheapest class of fiction, and represent a sort of literature which enfeebles and debases the mind. There is so much good, helpful, ennobling literature within reach, that it is a pity anyone should waste time on the poorer sort.—Reader, Ladonia, Ia. You can procure a copy of "Helps to the Study of the Bible" by sending fifty cents to this office.—Will Sechrist, Peabody, O. Address Rev. A. B. Simpson, 492 Eighth Ave., N. Y.—F. M. K., St. Louis, Mo. Write to the Chiefs of Police of the cities mentioned in your letter, stating all the facts as fully as you know them, and enclosing a stamped and addressed envelope for reply.—Mrs. J. F. Lath, Brockport, N. Y. Yes, they will continue to appear regularly.—Win Denton, Hickley, Ga. If you can give us the year and month, we may be able to find it.—Mrs. Abbott, Kansas City, Mo. We do not approve of them, and have already expressed such opinion.—W. A. D. C., Middleboro, Mass. and Mrs. C. A. Cook, Montclair, N. J. The premium offer still holds good. Send $2 and you will receive THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a year and the Teachers' Bible.—Subscriber, Dysart, Ia. It is impossible to discuss so great a problem in the limited space allowed by "The Mail Bag."—May L. Joy, Sunderland, Mass. Write to Harper Brothers for it.—S. P. Giddings, Washington, D. C. You are unquestionably right. Newell and Judson went out simultaneously.

Keep Up with the Times.

don't cling to the imperfect things. Do you use cereal foods on your breakfast table? Then you need cream. Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream is decidedly superior in richness and flavor to ordinary milk or cream.

The Native Girl.

"Lala's" Untrained Childhood—The Sad Lot of Syrian Women—Mrs. Jamal's Class—A Plea for Syrian Girlhood.

At my first interview with her, I for awhile, mistook her for a boy. She sat flat upon the floor, her legs crossed under her, and her head uncovered. Her body was clothed in a pair of cotton trousers, and a blouse of the same, belted at the waist. Besides these, she had on not another garment. Her eyes were black, her face expressive; her gestures were animated and she talked a great deal. She was, apparently, about ten years old, and well-grown for her age.

"A lively little fellow!" said I to my interpreter, after watching her for some amused minutes.

"She is a girl, and the terror of the neighborhood," was the rejoinder. "One who in your country would be a brilliant woman in time, maybe, with progressive ideas. Here—poor child!"

It was needless to finish the sentence. I knew enough already of the life of a girl in the East to be able to lay in the shadows of the scene.

"Can she read?" I asked.

"Not a word—and never will know her letters."

"What training has she in housework?"

"None. Her mother will tell you that she is lazy. She carried the baby—there is usually one every year—until a younger sister was big enough to shoulder the load. Then our little friend here, 'struck,' playing nursery-maid. She cannot sew a stitch, or knit, or cook, or wash, or iron. She runs wild all day long; she can outwear her brothers—and there is nothing that should be hidden from a young girl that she has not known since she was four years old."

The speaker was gentle of speech and of judgment, but I was inclined to hope that she was severe upon the subject of the unflattering sketch. Subsequently I learned to know Lala well, and recognized the fidelity of the portraiture.

I have told my far-off audiences how unwelcome our baby girl was when she first made herself heard, in the one-roomed abode of her wedded parents. It is doubtful if Lala's father has ever given her an affectionate word. If not actively unkind to her, he submits to her presence in his household as an inevitable disgrace. It matters less than nothing to him that she grows up like a weed, or like a "tramp" dog or cat. If passably good-looking, she will be married soon and out of his way.

She stands within sight of me as I pen these lines. To be fleshy is considered an attraction in a woman by her countrymen, but Lala (Lai-la) is as yet slim. She is also straight and well-formed, in spite of the circumstance that the eight-month-old brother she carries upon her own hip, encircled by her arm, is her charge when out of the cradle. Upon the back of her head is pinned a white veil—cotton and coarse. This she has been compelled to wear in the street from her eighth year. Seeing more babies with veils on, which they coquettishly pulled over their faces at meeting men or strange boys, I for some time supposed that they were worn of choice, as little girls with us masquerade in grown people's clothes. I discovered later that every prudent Moslem mother insists upon thus early investing her daughter with the badge of womanhood. When we come to comprehend what womanhood is in this land, we feel that the badge should be crape or sackcloth.

"Do you love your little brother, Lala?" is the beginning of my dialogue with her.

She laughs—the childish, half-bashful, half-pleased laugh, one often hears here from the mother of several children—women who never mature in intellect, and whose physical maternity is that of summer fruit that has a worm at the core. "I don't know." "Is he heavy?" "Oh, a little—some-

She laughs three or four times, and nods twice as often, then explains complacently that when she is a bride she will have a pair of stockings—perhaps several pairs—and sandals, besides other fine things.—new gowns and bracelets—holding out slender wrists encircled by strings of beads, blue and white.

The word "bride" is talismanic. When a baby-girl falls down, or hurts herself in any other way, the mother or neighbor checks her lamentations by calling her "little bride," as nurses in America "tie" their charges with, "Little ladies ought not to cry!" If the mother would cajole the unruly daughter she has never controlled by reasoning, she wheedles her with, "Come now, little bride, do so and so." Her narrow, pitifully starved life has but one ambition—to be married. She knows no other game than playing "bride," when her hair is dressed with flowers, herself covered with a veil, and a play-fellow takes the part of bride-groom. For this end she was created and has breath and being. I put up notebook and pencil and look at her, as she is—a type of tens of thousands in this so-called Holy Land—in the sight of women who have, all their lives (as have their mothers and great-great grandmothers before them) enjoyed the gifts of Christianity to our sex, without appreciating the depth and height, the length and breadth, the unspeakable value of what we owe to it. Pity for the ignorance I cannot enlighten, the degrada-diligent housewife, she, some years ago, collected in her own home a class of native girls and began to give them instruction in plain sewing, knitting, crocheting, embroidery, and in all departments of housework. Twice a week, she has presided over what in her humility, she never thought of calling "an industrial school," the attendance varying from thirteen to eighteen. She can accommodate no more than eighteen, and has always applications on hand from ten or twelve who wish to join the class, and cannot, for want of room.

Mrs. Jamal gives her time and house, and, up to this time, the expenses of materials for the work and the luncheon cooked twice a week by the girls under her supervision have been met by the sale of articles manufactured by the class, and an allowance of twenty dollars a month made by a benevolent man, a sojourner for some years in Jerusalem. He has now left Syria, and other circumstances make it impracticable for him to continue the appropriation to this branch of mission work. Unless help comes from other sources, this most sensible and practical enterprise of a Syrian woman for the benefit of her sex will have to be abandoned.

I wish it were possible for some of the societies represented by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, to take up the cause of this Industrial Class. Twelve "circles," contributing each twenty dollars a year, would enable Mrs. Jamal to carry it on and to receive a large number of pupils. I may add that, steadily and tactfully, she infuses religious teaching with instruction in handiwork and housewifery.

Upon a grander scale, and aiming steadily to accomplish the end—the elevation of Syrian women from fellowship with the beasts that perish to the plane of rational, immortal beings—are such schools as Miss Everett's in Beirut; that at Sidon, in which Miss Dale, the daughter of Dr. Bliss of the Syrian Protestant College, is an efficient laborer; and others at Nazareth, Haifa and Bethlehem under the care of English societies.

One and all, find a serious impediment to their work in the infamous system that gives children of ten, eleven and twelve years of age to men whose conceptions of the nuptial relation are of the lowest order. Still, there are parents who through ambition, or natural affection, desire that their girls should be educated like European and American women, and allow them to remain under the care of Christian instructors up to sixteen or seventeen before transferring them to their father's or husband's houses. For every such exception, we thank God and take courage.

My pen was in place to affix the signature to the above when the sound of chanting in the street drew me to the balcony. Down the middle of the muddy thoroughfare walked a short procession of men in striped "abieh's" (native cloaks made of coarse camel's hair), chanting intermittently and listlessly, followed by a troop of ragged boys. The foremost man bore in his arms the unconfined body of a baby. It was wrapped in a white cotton shroud; the waxen face and closed eyes were pretty and peaceful. The sight of a dead infant always wrings my heart to breaking, and the old, sadly-familiar ache forced from me an ejaculation of pain. "O, the dear little baby! and the poor, poor mother!"

"It is a girl!" said a voice in my ear. "Thank God it is dead!" An American woman, whose nature is all sweetness, and her guest, an English teacher in the Bethlehem school, were in the adjoining balcony.

"It is taken from the evil to come," pursued the speaker, answering my look of inquiry. "If you knew, as we do, the almost certain doom from which that little creature has been saved by death, you would say, 'Amen!'"

MARION HARLAND.

MRS. DAVID JAMAL'S "INDUSTRIAL CLASS" OF SYRIAN GIRLS.

(From a photograph forwarded by Marion Harland to "The Christian Herald.")

tion which nothing but the religion of the Christ who humbled himself to be born of a woman among the Bethlehem hills over yonder, can relieve.

Hampered, as I am by the absolute impossibility of putting into print that which might make the very paper on which I write blush for shame, I write, as in bondage, because our wisest and best American Christians are not familiar with so much as the general features of a woman's life here and elsewhere in Eastern countries. What I cannot write, and what you, my sisters, would not let your daughters read, is a part—and a large part—of the everyday life going on under my eyes. Our home-missionaries see much of what is popularly termed, "the seamy side" of human living. The missionary in the foreign field might cry out in bitter disgust of spirit that he sees nothing but seams, and darns, and patches in garments stiff with filth.

Mrs. David Jamal, the sensible Christian wife of our dragoman and guide, was educated in a Beirut school for girls, and went to Jerusalem as a native helper in a school there. Since her marriage, as before, the condition of her fellow-countrywomen has been a sore weight upon her mind, and although the mother of a large family and a

"Would you like to wear shoes and stockings, Lala?"

CHAPTER X. Continued.)

ELSPETH had, in early life, subsisted and thriven upon oatmeal porridge and milk, bannocks and tough cheese, and was not now to be terrified by talk of hardship. "T'wull likely come hard upon Master Lanier and the bit laddies for awhile," she subjoined, tentatively.

"Lanier will understand. He has become a man in the last few months, and is not ashamed to do a man's work. I shall keep nothing back from him. I know what his answer will be."

She folded the pair of Tom's socks she had mended; picked up one of Gladys's stockings, ran her hand into the toe, and, detecting a thin spot, threaded her needle. The rattle of the shelled peas, falling from Elspeth's fingers, the singing of the birds in the grove, and the distant voices of the children, made a summer song to the murmured accompaniment of the breeze in the pines. Elspeth did not steal so much as a glimpse at the face which, she divined, took on a graver thoughtfulness before the mistress spoke again.

"Nor do I intend to conceal from you why we must work hard and save all we can by simple living. There was a debt of three thousand dollars which Mr. Paul had not paid before he went abroad. Mr. Lanier paid it. While I live, the interest upon that money must be met regularly by me, or by my children, whatever Mr. Lanier may say to the contrary. My husband had no claim upon him. I have made my will. It orders, that, before my property is divided among my heirs, the sum of three thousand dollars shall be paid to Mr. Roger Lanier, or his heirs. It is a debt of honor and of conscience."

Again Elspeth gave her confirmatory nod. "Three thousand dollars! The interest on that 'wad be one hunder' an eighty."

"At six per cent—yes!"

"Where there's a will there's a way, barring the interference o' Providence, which ye have nae call to expect. What I have on my mind now goes to show that the leaning o' Providence is quite in the contrary direction."

She plunged both bony hands into the basket of peas at her side, brought up a bounteous supply which she bestowed in her aproned lap, and, eyes intent upon her task, proceeded to empty her budget.

She had spent a day in the city a week ago, and lunched with an old friend and fellow-countrywoman whose husband kept a grocery upon Sixth Avenue. In conversation with him at dinner, she had learned that he would pay eighteen cents a piece for half-pint tumblers of currant-jelly of really excellent quality, and stood prepared to take all she could send to market. He would pay sixteen cents per glass for grape and the same for quince jelly; fifteen cents for marmalade and for nice preserves; for chow-chow, picklette, and good mixed pickles, a dollar a gallon; fifteen cents a pint for catsup and chilli sauce of the best quality.

At this point of the narrative, Elspeth brought from her pocket a paper on which the same long-headed Scot had computed the cost of jars, glasses and bottles at wholesale and the freight to New York, delivered at the dock. He would do the hauling up-town with his own wagons.

"I've put down in me own figures, the wholesale price o' sugar, vinegar, spice and the like," added Elspeth. "The fruit ye have on yer own land for the picking. Thanks to Mr. Lanier, there's wood in the shed over vonder, to last a full year, so there's no expense of fuel. If me figures are correct ye should clear ten cents a glass on the jellies; ten cents on the jam, and eight on the preserves; ye can buy butter-tubs from the grocers for yer pickles for fifteen cents apiece, and new ones wholesale for thirty cents. Ye suld mak' on a' everedge from fifty to sixty cents a gallon, and eight on every bottle of catsup. There's no nicer pickles in America than yours, and self praise gaes leetle ways, I know, but the mither wha' tached me to mak' marmalade wad not hae been fashed had she heard that hers was on the Queen's table."

Mrs. Paul's hands, with stocking darning-ball and needle had fallen upon her lap; she stared bewildered at her lieutenant, as she returned the paper to her pocket, and dived for another double handful of peas.

"You take my breath away!" the lady found the strength to ejaculate, at length. "Do you really believe that you and I could make and send enough of such things to market to make it worth our while to undertake the work? With all the rest that you have to do?"

"We could put up enough in a year by working three days of each week in the summer, to more than half-pay yer interest money," declared the parent of the astounding scheme. "We'd mak' that our work. Just as a man goes into carpentering or blacksmithing or whatnot-ing, or"—her mouth twitching—"making marmalade for his leevings. I've had a-many serious thought o' late months ma'am. We've passed through that that sets folks' wits to working. And it's come to me—I don't believe from the de'il either—that one o' God's ways helping us when we are sair put about, and cast down in spirit, is to give us some one particular thing that we must do. Not to leave us to our own devices with leeberty to pick a bit at this duty an' a wee bit at that, as suits our notions."

"I can't but believe the needcessity o' working day by day, because that one peticklar thing has to be done, and done then, would do more for you than all the doctors on baith sides o' the sea, or even the sweet air of these blessed hills. There's all the differ betwixt this sort of work-a-day living and that done by most ladies that there was betwixt the ploughing done once upon a time by my twa brothers. Jem had his eyne on the ground, on the sky or anywhere, and Rab took tent o' one tree at the other end of the field, and never took his eyne off of it. One furrow was like the wriggle of a snake, and the other straight as a bow-string."

"There is a great deal of truth in what you have said. The same thought has been with me often, lately. I have found my mind swinging back to what I most wish to forget, as soon as I sit down quietly to my sewing, and, now and then, when I awake early in the morning, the old question comes in upon my mind—'Is life worth getting up for?'"

She was looking across the lake at a certain obtuse peak in the second range of hills. It had reminded her, when she first saw it, she could not have told why or how—of the "Old Hoary-head" of Jacob Abbott's ever-delightful book of that name. Into the midst of thoughts excited by what they had been talking of, recurred to her now, the proposition by Gilbert's mother on the evening of the day in which they had heard that they could not have the house they had hoped to buy:

"Cannot we do something to keep us from thinking about it?"

Gilbert had answered—"We might make maple candy."

While they were busied in the manufacture of the maple candy, came the news that the home they desired was to be theirs after all.

A sharp pain caught and sobered the dawning smile with which she recalled the story. Nothing could reverse the current of her life. Streams diverted from their course by earthquakes, do not flow back into the old channels. The river-beds are themselves riven and upheaved.

Yet Elspeth was wise in her generation. There is wisdom in every age in the pursuit of a specific line of labor as a balm for bruised hearts and bleeding sensibilities. "Something to take our thoughts off of ourselves," is the homely phrase for the conditions in which work is most truly God's medicine for his smitten ones.

"The idea gains upon me," she continued, after a thoughtful pause. "We are a colony in ourselves—a community with few ties to that which lies about us. Why not establish an industry of our own? be a hive of working-bees, and not drones or butterflies?"

Elspeth caught at one word:

"I had thought of bees for Miss Marie—after awhile, when her schooling is done. There's acres of white clover, and buckwheat and linden-trees yon by the lake. If she could fasten so much as one thought upon something near her home, it would be mair halesome for her. Mr. Cameron had his word to say about bees, as well as the preserves and pickles. He tellt me of one man who spent twenty-five dollars in hives and bees, and the very next year, he gathered fifteen hunder' pounds of honey. Bees are friendly, lovin' creatures, and if Miss Marie wad hearken to the notion, she'd tak' kindly to them at the end. But, it's not to be gainsaid that she is a very determined lassie."

Did the loving nurse suspect how "determined," or the deadly sinking of the mother's heart at the mention of the wilful child, who, of all her brood, held her eyes waking into the far watches of the night? Vigils in which one query was rung like a warning knell through the chambers of thought—"What will be the end of it all?" Labor for a definite and desired end might bring temporary relief from the wearing burden, but the cross would settle back into its place as soon as she let herself think of her love for her girl, and the gulf that gaped between them more widely every day.

"A determined lassie!" Her repetition of the words was an inward groan.

CHAPTER XI.

"It is the duty of all to be firm in that which they certainly know is right for them to do."

John Woolman.

"He often acts unjustly who does not do a certain thing: not only he who does a certain thing."

Marcus Antoninus.

"Evil, once manfully fronted, ceases to be evil. There is generous battle-hope in place of dead, passive misery. The evil itself has become a kind of good."

Thomas Carlyle.

Mr. Morse was a model country pastor, whom the appellation, always respectful, sometimes affectionate, of "Dominie," fitted as naturally as his skin. His sermons, as Mrs. Paul had already discovered, would never be brilliant or striking in originality. They would never be dull or devoid of spiritual instruction. Out of the pulpit, he was leader, teacher and brother. All this his people knew and appreciated without a glimmer of a suspicion that he was (for their good it is true), as very an autocrat in the hill township as was ever a Leo or a Gregory in his papal see.

He met Mrs. Paul, introduced by her daughter, with the easy free-masonry of one who had been at home in the world she had left. A reader of men, rather than of books, he had many acquaintances in New York, and he had kept step mentally with the advanced line of workers in church and letters. Of the Laniers, father and son, he had heard through those who were his personal friends and theirs. He asked not one word of her husband, a circumstance that might be significant, or unimportant. He might imagine that she was a widow; it was possible that through some of these same personal friends, he had become cognizant of what she had hoped to leave behind her when she had quitted the city. In either case he was a gentleman, and spared her needless pain.

"You have come into a quiet, orderly, God-fearing and kindly neighborhood," Mr. Morse was saying when she shook herself free from the haunting thought. "Primitive in their mode of living, and, you may think narrow in many ways, but should you ever be in trouble, they will show themselves to be made of the right stuff. I have lived among them for ten years, happily, and, I hope, not uselessly. They are a peculiar people in some respects—these New Jersey tarming folk. The New England yeoman is not more sturdy in his independence and pride of ancestry. Many of them live upon the very lands granted to their forefathers by the English crown, yet there was not a Tory in the Pequod Valley when Washington pitched his camp upon the beetling cliff you see over there. More than one bloody skirmish took place upon the road on which I found this young lady today,"—smiling at Marie.

He and she were friends already. Mrs.

Paul was surprised and gratified that the smile was brightly returned, and yet more when the girl joined in the talk, asking questions as to local traditions; the names of their nearer neighbors and the make-up of families, and engaging readily to take a class in the Sunday School, should her services be needed during her vacation. It was plain that she had taken an unusual liking to the frank-faced clergyman, and that his society, or the walk or drive had aroused her out of the morose apathy that had enveloped her for so long.

Yet when he took leave, she was flying off to her own room, without word or sign to her mother.

"Marie, love! come and sit out here with me!" called the latter from the porch. "I have something which I wish to talk over with you."

Feigning not to observe the partial scowl upon the fair young face, she pulled a chair close to her own, and motioned her daughter into it.

"Elspeth has broached an extraordinary scheme to me this morning," she went on to say. "Since your co-operation will be an important factor in our plans, I am impatient to see how it will impress you."

Elspeth, passing from kitchen to dining-room in preparation for the early country dinner, marvelled secretly at the mixture of wisdom and simplicity in the manner of the mother's communication. That which had commended the novel undertaking to the wife must be withheld from the defaulter's daughter, and in the place of reimbursement of the stolen funds, the hope of retrieving in some degree the fallen fortunes of the family must be made much of.

"We shall never be rich, dear," said the refined tones, wondrously gentle and cordial in the ear of one who had seen the speaker held persistently at arm's length during the period when physical infirmity and heartache should have commended her to her child's tenderest sympathy. "While we live in this retired quarter of the world we cannot expect to be 'society people.' But we can be a busy, happy, self-supporting community, working harmoniously together for one and the same end. There is a sort of Swiss Family Robinsonish flavor in the scheme that makes it inviting to me. I see, already in imagination, that long store-room on the north side of the dining-room filled with jars and glasses ready to be shipped to market. Don't that sound important? There are literally bushels of currants, red, white and black, in the garden that will be ripe in a week or so; raspberries, wild and cultivated, will be ready for picking by the time the strawberries are gone; the quince-hedge at the bottom of the orchard is loaded with fruit, and there are four large Siberian crab-trees, not to speak of other apple and pear-trees—oh! and plenty of grapes in the garden and woods, for jelly. The fruit on this place would seem to have been a hobby with the former owner. Elspeth sees a special providence in this."

Her manner was the livelier for the effort she was compelled to make to ignore the forbidding silence with which her remarks were received, and not to betray the failure in courage it caused. She was by temperament, and in practice brave beyond the average of her sex, but she had discovered lately that she was actually afraid of Marie.

In nearly every household where there are several members, there is to be found almost invariably one who has a Temper (with a capital T). As invariably this member is the object of more consideration than any or all of the rest. Let temper take on what guise it may, it demands, expects and receives solicitous conciliation. The owner may be "sensitive," and her tender-heartedness express itself in tears as softly abundant as the flow of Sweet Afton. It may choose to be classed as Moods, many and varying in intensity and duration. There is the Dynamite Mood, around which friends and kindred step with stockinged feet and cautious respiration. It may be the Slow Combustion Mood, low and dull, like ignited subterranean coals, betrayed only by a puff of smoke through an occasional fissure, until, all at once, everything gives way before the heat, and lives are wrecked in an abyss of vindictiveness. In all phases these are Temper (with a capital T). Not necessarily the child of the devil. Rather like fire, a good servant, but the worst of masters. Finally, I may observe that the most effectual way of nursing it into masterful proportions is by showing it the respect I have alluded to as the practice of many Christian folk who have to do with it.

(To be Continued.)

LET ME WALK WITH THEE.
FATHER, let me feel thy presence;
 Come, dear Lord, abide with me.
 I am thirsting for thy guidance,
 Let me daily walk with thee.
 Father, guide me, lest I perish,
 Lead me, Jesus, evermore;
 To the living fount of waters,
 For my feet are bruised and sore.

Off the ills of life o'erwhelm me
 As I journey to that rest,
 But sweet service I would render.
 Come, abide within my breast;
 Oh! I hunger for thee daily.
 Cleanse my heart from crimson stain;
 Wash me, and I shall be pure,
 When thou comest soon to reign.

Bring me to those heavenly mansions,
 May my name be there enrolled.
 Let me walk with thee, my Father,
 Just as Enoch walked of old.
 Robe my heart as with a garment
 In thy likeness evermore;
 Lord, I hear thee gently knocking,
 I will open wide the door.

Vernon, Mich. MRS. ALICE M. A. HARPER.

RESTLESS CHILDREN.

Children often become restless and trouble-some because they have nothing to interest them and it needs some tact to keep them employed oftentimes during the last hours of the afternoon. A busy mother, who had bravely dismissed her servant that her husband might spend the amount of her wages on a specialist for his illness, found the hour before tea-time the most trying in the day. She taught the older children to set the tea table while the little one was given the smaller articles to carry. The chairs were placed at the table and all was made ready for tea. The children were thus kept quiet and happy because employed and the weary mother was saved many steps. The boys as well as the girls assisted in the work. Even the mischievous propensity of the two-year-old boy was utilized and the roguish hands that pulled off the clean towels from the frame were made to lay them neatly in the basket. Some mother may think that it would be more care to watch children at work than to do the work herself, and it certainly would be, but a mother should be willing to sacrifice her own feelings for the peace and quiet of the household.

If you look at a dozen common lamp-chimneys, and then at Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," you will see the differences—all but one—they break from heat; these don't; you can't see that.

Common glass is misty, milky, dusty; you can't see through it; Macbeth's is clear.

Tough, clear glass is worth fine work; and a perfect chimney of fine tough glass is worth a hundred such as you hear, pop, clash on the least provocation.

Pittsburgh.

GEO. A. MACBETH CO.

For washing Dishes, there's nothing like Pearline.

Why don't you begin the use of it in that way, if you're one of the timid sisters who still think that Pearline "eats the clothes?" Then you can soak things in it for a year or two, and test it in every way, until you become convinced that Pearline can't do any harm. But it won't eat your dishes, that's sure. It won't clog up the sink pipes, either, as soap does. And that cloudy effect that you've probably noticed on cut glass and china when it's washed with soap—that won't be there if you wash it with Pearline.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back.

No local dealer can compete with us in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.

WALL PAPER Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples.

Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll. We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS, 80-82 W. 13th St., NEW YORK. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

D*E*L*A*V*A*U*S
Whooping Cough
Croup
Violent Coughs

Tested over 40 Years. EFFECTUAL AND HARMLESS. 50c. per bot. at druggists, or expressed from 6th and Wood Sts., Philadelphia, to any address 60c.

R*E*M*E*D*Y

Did You Ever Look Like This?
DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM
STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY
DON'T TAKE IMITATIONS
 Sold by all Druggists, or send 15c to C. S. DENT & CO., Detroit, Mich.
 THIS IS NOT A CHEWING GUM.

FAT PEOPLE can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of Dr. Clarke's Home Treatment. Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no wrinkles or flabbiness. Stout abdomens, difficult breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best references. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.
Dr. F. B. CLARKE, Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS can make $50.00 to $100.00 a week canvassing for the best specialties ever offered. No competition. Write for terms. N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N, 34 East 14th St., New York, or Kansas City, Mo.

TRUSSES on 30 Days Trial. Easy, durable and cheap. A radical cure effected. Send for sealed catalogue. Englestone Truss Co., 69 Dearborn St., Chicago.

EVERY LADY WANTS OUR STOVE-POLISHING MITTEN. Will polish a stove better than anything on earth, and keep your hands clean at the same time. Ladies buy it at sight. They all want it. Big Profits to Agents. Sample Mitten and Dander by mail, 30 cts. BOSTON NOVELTY CO., BOX 1540, BOSTON, MASS.

PILES CURED. Our Book on Piles—Free. Bacon Medicine Co., Richmond, Va., U.S.A.
TAPE-WORM Expelled alive in 60 minutes with head, or no charge. Send 2c stamp for circular. Dr. M. Ney Smith, Specialist, 721 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

THIS IS IT:
 the De Long Hook & Eye
 Richardson &
 DeLong Bros.
 Philadelphia.
 See that hump?

Trade-Mark Reg., April 19-92.

"Almost as Palatable as Milk"

This is a fact with regard to Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil. The difference between the oil, in its plain state, is very apparent. In you detect no fish-oil taste. As it is a help to digestion there is no after effect except good effect. Keep in mind that Scott's Emulsion is the best promoter of flesh and strength known to science.

Scott's Emulsion

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

FREE.

The following remarkable statement to which we direct special attention, is from a Tenn. farmer.

ELI BROWN.

My age is 63. I suffered intensely from catarrh 10 yrs., dry scabs formed in nostrils, one or both sides stopped up continually, dryness and soreness of throat, hoarseness, intense headache, took cold easily, and had continual roaring, cracking, buzzing, and singing in my ears. My hearing began to fail, and for three years I was almost entirely deaf, and continually grew worse. Every thing I had tried, failed. In despair I commenced to use the Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of catarrh. ELI BROWN, Jacksboro, Tenn.

MEDICINES FOR THREE MONTHS' TREATMENT FREE.

To introduce this treatment and prove beyond doubt that it is a positive cure for Deafness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send (by express) Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address, J. H. MOORE, M.D., Cincinnati, O.

RUPTURE CURED

WITH our Improved Elastic Truss. Worn with ease night and day. Retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain. Examination free. Lady in attendance for ladies. Send for pamphlet. IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO., 822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York

That Tired Feeling

Indicates that the blood is impoverished, the circulation poor, the vitality exhausted, the system overworked, poorly nourished, run down, worn out. It is when the body is in this condition that is most liable to make its attacks and most to be feared. An invigorating, vitalizing, blood purifying, building up medicine is needed, and these are just the qualities possessed by

The Grip

HOOD'S Sarsaparilla

"I felt all worn out and ready to go to bed. My brother advised me to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and I got a bottle. When I had taken four bottles I was as sound as ever." CHARLES HARTMAN, Lincoln, Pa.

Hood's Pills cure all Liver Ills, Biliousness, Jaundice, Indigestion, Sick Headache. 25c.

PARSONS PILLS.

Make New Rich Blood.
"Best Liver Pill Made"

Positively cure BILIOUSNESS and SICK HEADACHE, Liver and Bowel Complaints. They expel all impurities from the blood. Delicate women find great benefit from using them. Price 25 cts. five $1.00. Full particulars free. L. B. JOHNSON & CO., 23 Custom House St., Boston, Mass.

Do you know? that

CUDAHY'S REX BRAND EXTRACT OF BEEF.

Is an economical household necessity. Housekeepers, Chefs and Cooks pronounce it invaluable in making Bonillon, Stews and Gravies, and to add zest and flavor to meat dishes. Its concentrated nutritive qualities and delicious flavor secured for it Highest Award at World's Fair. Sample Jar sent free for 6c. to pay postage. THE CUDAHY PHARMACEUTICAL CO., South Omaha, Neb.

Our illustrated booklet, "From Ranch to Table," showing how Rex Brand Beef Extract is made, and recipes for using it, mailed free.

Swiss Lozenges, For curing Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, &c. Price, 25 cts. a Box Mailed. H. EDWARD WENDEL, S. E. cor. 3d and George Streets, Philadelphia

SLOAN'S Liniment
CURES RHEUMATISM
 .. And all ..
Aches & Pains.
25 cts.
 ALL DRUGGISTS & DEALERS.

MONEY REFUNDED IF NOT SATISFACTORY.
DR. E. S. SLOAN CO., - BOSTON, MASS.

FREE COMET PENCILS. As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this Hard Rubber Fountain Pen. Warranted a perfect writer & immense ill. Bargain catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 63 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

AGENTS MAKE $5 a Day Greatest Kitchen Utensil invented. Retail 35 cts. 2 to 6 sold in a house. Sample postage paid, five cents. FORSHEE & CO., Cincinnati, O.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by F. H. Hiscor, 333 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

A LESSON FROM A CHILD.

In one of his sermons the late Pastor Spurgeon told the following anecdote: "A little girl was once asked in a Sunday School about her father, who never went to any place of worship: 'Is your father a Christian?' 'Yes,' she said, 'father's a Christian, but he has not worked at it much lately.' Well, there is a good deal of that about many. They have not worked much at it lately. They are very much like certain tradesmen who hang up a board announcing that that they are of a certain trade; but at the same time there is a little notice hung up on the door to say that they have gone out of town for a fortnight."

Good News for Asthmatics.

We observe that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is now in reach of sufferers from Asthma. As before announced, this new discovery is a positive cure for Asthma. You can make trial of the Kola Compound free, by addressing a postal card to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, who are sending out large trial cases free by mail, to sufferers.

French Dress Goods.

Spring and Summer.

Increased assortment of new Spring woollens opened for this week's trade.

Special shipment, Straight Crinkle Crepon, cross-striped Grenadines, and Novelty Wool Chiffon.

Black Grenadines, with narrow stripes in colors. The greatest range of silk-and-wool Fancy Dress Fabrics obtainable.

New Leghorn Tweeds in solid shades and very neat mixtures.

Shaded Lansdowne for waists and full suits.

Exceptional: 1,200 yards Fancy Colored Chiffon, Crepes, and Gauzes, in lengths from 2 to 16 yards, at less than half price. These are very fine goods.

Shown on special table, dress goods aisle, main floor.

James McCreery & Co.,

BROADWAY & 11th STREET,
NEW YORK.

Arnold Constable & Co.

Cloths

FOR LADIES' WEAR.

English and Scotch Checked Tweeds,
FOR COSTUMES.

Faced Diagonals,
New Coloring Covert Cloths.

PLAID BACK CLOTHS, for Highland Capes.

ITALIAN TWEEDS and ENGLISH TROPICALS.

New and Beautiful Colorings.

LADIES' PLAIN CLOTHS, for Jackets and House Sacks.

Broadway & 19th St.
NEW YORK.

The 1894 Columbia Catalogue, which fully describes our splendid line of seven new wheels, is beautifully printed and illustrated. It will be of interest to every wheelman and wheelwoman. You can obtain it free at our agencies, or we mail it for two two-cent stamps.

Branch Houses—12 Warren St., New York.
291 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Hartford, Conn.

POPE MFG. CO.,

221 Columbus Ave., Boston.

SEND US
A TRIAL ORDER

SATISFACTION
GUARANTEED.

O'NEILL'S

Sixth Ave., 20th to 21st St.,
NEW YORK.

IMPORTERS AND RETAILERS

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods,
Ladies', Misses' and Children's Cloaks and Costumes. House Furnishing Goods,
China and Glassware.

We make a specialty of
MAIL ORDER BUSINESS,
SENDING GOODS TO ALL
PARTS OF THE WORLD.

GUARANTEEING PERFECT SATISFACTION
TO THE CUSTOMER OR REFUNDING
THE MONEY.

SEND FOR OUR CATALOGUE.

We are now booking names for our Spring and Summer Catalogue, which will be issued about April 1st, and mailed FREE to out of town residents. Send us your name early as the demand is always greater than the supply.

6th Ave., 20th to 21st St., N. Y.

FINE GOODS
AT LOW PRICES.

SEND FOR SAMPLES
AND PRICES.

LOOK AT THE CROOK

Can't slip—Can't cut
Metal work covered up

Sold Everywhere—Made by Warner Bros., N. Y. and Chicago.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$10.50 Buy the Oxford Improved RINGER Sewing Machine, with a complete set of attachments and guaranteed for 10 years. Shipped anywhere on 30 days' trial. No money required in advance. 12,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded. Buy from factory, save dealers' and agents' profit. Write today for our FREE CATALOGUE. Oxford Mfg. Co., 312 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MEPHISTO RING 25¢

See a most astonishing optical illusion and a beautiful FINGER RING. Made of two twisted bands of Rolled Gold and Silver. Turn it—the bands appear to part! Lay it down—they seem to fall apart! Inspect it—you have a perfect ring!!! All the same, over 1,000,000 sold in 2 months at 75¢. We send sample with large catalog, for 5¢ postpaid. 1 Box, $2.00. MENTION PAPER. R. H. INOEROLI & BRO. 65 CURTLAND ST., N. Y. City

Gospel Hymns No. 6

By SANKEY, McGRANAHAN and STEBBINS.

GOSPEL HYMNS No. 6 is conceded to be equal in every respect to any of the numbers which have preceded it in the series of Gospel Hymns, which have proved so invaluable in the wonderful meetings held by Mr. D. L. MOODY, Rev. E. FAY MILLS, Major WHITTLE, DR. MUNNALL, and others. 30 cents, if by mail, 35 cents per copy.

THE GREAT POPULARITY of GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5 having made the combination of 5 and 6 a necessity, the two books are now issued as one, without any duplicates and with an index for the whole, under the title Gospel Hymns 5 & 6 Combined.

60 cents; if by mail, 70 cents per copy.

Excelsior Edition,

45 cents, if by mail, 50 cents per copy.

Specify "Large Type" or "Excelsior" in ordering.

Editions of Words Only are also issued. A full list of the different styles and editions of the GOSPEL HYMNS Series sent on request.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO. THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
Cincinnati, O. New York.

"A LITTLE

Higher in Price,

BUT—

High Arm FREE TRIAL in your own home for 30 days without paying one cent in advance; machine to be returned at our expense if unsatisfactory. We take all risks, pay freight, ship anywhere, to anyone, in any quantity at wholesale prices. $95 Kenwood machine, $24.50; $85 Arlington, $20.50; $45 Alling-ton, $17.50; $35 High Arm Gem, $12. We will make and styles, from cheapest $7.50 to best "Kenwood," $24.50. All attachments free. THREE HIGHER WORLD'S FAIR MEDALS AWARDED. Over 100,000 now in use. Buy direct from factory. Save agent's large profits. Catalogue and testimonials free. Write at once. Address (in full) CASH BUYERS' UNION, 114 W. Van Buren St., Dept. A 62, Chicago, Ill.

EXAMINE Sunny Side Songs!

THE NEW AND POPULAR
Sunday School Song Book,

By W. H. DOANE, the latest and best book by this favorite composer. 241 songs: $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 E. 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps.)

THE HUMAN HAIR,

Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy. By PROF. HARRY PARKER, F. R. S., London. B. G. LONG & CO., 1013 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. "Every one should read this little book."—Athenaeum

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW & IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEM OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine MOODY TAILOR SYSTEMS. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address: MOODY & CO., CINCINNATI, O.

Comfort Powder

Is the greatest powder in the world for fleshy people, especially those who perspire and chafe excessively.

Send 4 cents in stamps for liberal sample and book. COMFORT POWDER CO., HARTFORD, CONN.

ANKLE SUPPORTERS FOR CHILDREN AND ADULTS
No child should learn to walk without them. Recommended by physicians as best appliance for weak or deformed ankles. Price 40c. up. Send for circular. R. H. Golden, So. Norwalk, Conn.

Burpee's seeds grow—wherever mails go.

We are deeply impressed with the wonderful confidence bestowed upon our house; North, East, South and West the current of good will flows with increasing force each year. The leading newspapers have been pleased to call our business a remarkable success—upward of one thousand highly complimentary notices being printed last year.

For the purpose of inducing thousands of new customers to give BURPEE'S SEEDS a fair trial, we have for some years annual offered one or two popular collections at a nominal price, and many who are now large planters first made acquaintance with BURPEE'S SEEDS through a 25-cent collection. While we have always given good value, never before have we been able to make such attractive offers as the FOUR FAVORITE FORDHOOK COLLECTIONS here presented. We are prepared for more than one hundred thousand orders for these collections. Knowing as we do that they are composed only of the BEST SEEDS that grow, we can safely count on making permanent friends for BURPEE'S SEEDS of the large majority of even those who may now hesitatingly send us a trial order,—doubting, perhaps, whether such unusual value can really be given for the money. Your interest is our interest; a fair trial, such as these Collections afford, will convince even the most skeptical that BURPEE'S are the BEST SEEDS that grow.

2 Collections of Beautiful Flowers.

FORDHOOK FASHION COLLECTION.

Comprises SIX NOVELTIES in three of the most fashionable flowers of the day, together with a bright booklet, entitled "PANSIES, POPPIES, AND SWEET PEAS." It contains:—
NEW SWEET PEA, AMERICAN BELLE. The floral novelty for 1894. Extremely early, wonderfully free-flowering; bright rose with wings of crystal-white, vividly spotted rich purplish-carmine. See Colored Plate in Catalogue.

ECKFORD'S GILT EDGE, or SURPASSING SWEET PEAS.

This grand strain of New Sweet Peas in mixture is unequalled; new seedlings.
BURPEE'S DEFIANCE PANSIES, FINEST MIXED. Magnificent new giant-flowered Pansies, which measure two and one-half to four inches across.

SUPERB NEW IMPERIAL GERMAN PANSIES. All known colors, including the brightest fancy varieties, blotched, veined, mottled, and margined.

NEW CARDINAL POPPY. Glowing cardinal-scarlet flowers, which are uniformly of enormous size and perfectly double; of great profusion and long duration in bloom.

GOLDEN GATE POPPIES. If you already have this superb strain you can give this packet to a friend, to whom the thousands of beautiful flowers will be a constant source of delight.

We have a beautiful colored plate, painted from nature, of the distinct new PANSIES, POPPIES, and SWEET PEAS, which we will mail enclosed flat with our FARM ANNUAL for 1894.

The Complete Collection—one packet each of the above six varieties—mailed for 25 CENTS. With each collection we include free a copy of the bright new booklet, "PANSIES, POPPIES, AND SWEET PEAS," which is beautifully printed and charmingly illustrated, specially written for us by three well-known authors. We have thus an unique combination of the best literature on the subject, together with the choicest seeds.

FORDHOOK FANCY COLLECTION.

This collection embraces seeds of ten easy-growing annuals of real beauty that should be in every garden,—it contains one full-sized packet each of all the following:—

NEW YELLOW DOLICHOS. Quite unique, not only in color but also in habit of growth. The foliage is very dense, the stems show a hairy growth, and no vine is more quick growing.

ASTERS, CHOICE MIXED. Every color, many distinct types.

BALSAM BURPEE'S SUPERB CAMELLIA-FLOWERED. Magnificent double flowers of unusual perfection; all colors.

MARGUERITE CARNATIONS. Perfect double carnations in full beauty, all colors, in four months after sowing the seed.

CALLIOPSIS CORONATA. Brightest yellow flowers of large size.

DIANTHUS, MIXED. All colors and forms of both double and single Chinese and Japanese Pinks.

NEW ERFURT MIGNONETTE. Flowers of large size, great substance, and delicious fragrance.

FORDHOOK STRAIN OF PHLOX DRUMMONDII GRANDIFLORA. Remarkable not only in brilliancy of colors, but also in extra large size of the flowers.

SALVIA SPLENDENS. The most gorgeous of all plants.

VERBENA HYBRIDA, MIXED. All colors.

The entire collection, one packet each of the above ten varieties, mailed to any address for 25 CTS., which is less than one-third the regular retail price, if purchased separately. Five Collections for $1.00.

2 Collections of Choicest Vegetables.

FORDHOOK FIRST COLLECTION.

Most appropriately named, as this collection comprises the five earliest vegetables, those first to mature, all of which are of Fordhook introduction. Every one in the Spring is especially desirous of getting first fresh vegetables on the table. This collection contains one full size packet each of:—

EARLY BLACK LIMA BEAN. Be great ropes of pods in wonderful profusion, weeks earlier than any other Lima.

NEW TOMATO, FORDHOOK FIRST. Extremely early; the only first early tomato that is always smooth and perfect.

BURPEE'S ALL-HEAD EARLY CARBAGE. Thousands of gardeners testify that this is the most thoroughbred and best Early Cabbage.

COLUMBIA BEET. This distinct new Beet the earliest of all; of surpassingly fine flavor.

BURPEE'S EARLIEST RADISH. Ready pull in only 20 days from the time of sowing the seed.

FORDHOOK FIRST TOMATO.

FORDHOOK FIRST Vegetables mailed for 25 CENTS. Each packet bears an illustration of the variety, our registered trade-mark, and directions for culture. Purchased separately, the five packets would cost 60 cents, but together as a collection they can be had for 25 cents,—less than wholesale price.

FORDHOOK FAMOUS COLLECTION.

This collection is also appropriately named, as it embraces five of the most famous vegetables introduced from Fordhook Farm. It contains one full-size packet each of:—

BURPEE'S BUSH LIMA. The only bush form of the true large Lima Bean, and universally pronounced the most remarkable of new vegetables.

BURPEE'S SURE-HEAD CABBAGE. See page 52 of the FARM ANNUAL for the record of seventeen years' trials of this world-famous Cabbage.

NEW ICEBERG LETTUCE. On our colored plate we show a head painted from nature, and truly tell the decided merits of this rare novelty.

BURPEE'S MELROSE MELON. No other melon is so handsome and none can equal this in delicious flavor. The flesh is quite unique in color, being of a beautiful light green, shading to rich salmon.

WHITE VICTORIA ONION. Famous for the large size it attains, particularly under the new onion culture.

One packet each of the above FIVE FAMOUS FORDHOOK Vegetables would cost 60 cts., if sent at retail, but we include the five packets in our FORDHOOK FAMOUS COLLECTION for 25 Cents postpaid. On each packet is printed an illustration, our registered trade-mark and directions for culture.

NEW ICEBERG LETTUCE.

All Four Favorite Fordhook Collections for ONE DOLLAR

NEATLY BOXED together with

Two New Books, "How to Cook Vegetables," 182 pages, and "Selection in Seed Growing" 112 pages

Every housewife wants Mrs. Rorer's new book, "HOW TO COOK VEGETABLES," and many have written to inquire its price. Although the copyright is owned by us, we are under contract not to sell a single copy, otherwise we could have sold thousands of this book at $1.00 each during the past two years. So suppose there are some seeds in the four Collections which you do not need, why not purchase a complete set for $1.00, and thus get this valuable book FREE as a premium? Surely you can give the extra seeds to some friend. If you live in the city and are so unfortunate as to have no garden of your own, what more acceptable present could you send to a friend in the country than these four Collections of Fordhook Seeds, at the same time instructing us to mail the book separately to your own address?

If you are a customer of ours, and have already secured the Cook Book as a premium, you can instead select any five of the above Collections for $1.00, keep four for yourself, and have one mailed to a separate address for a friend. If requested, we will gladly write your name on the outside of the package, preceded by the word "From," so that your friend may know whom to thank for the present.

Are we mistaken in thinking that out of appreciation many purchasers of this offer will upon receipt write to thank us, stating that they never before realized the full purchasing power of a dollar. Purchased separately at retail, the 26 packets of seed enumerated above would cost $2.90. "Selection in Seed Growing," 112 pages, and "How to Cook Vegetables," 182 pages, are worth as general books, 60 cts.—$3.50 for your dollar. We want you for a customer, and we're willing to meet you more than half way at the start. We guarantee that you will be more than satisfied.

If requested, we will include in each complete box with the seeds and book, a small sample packet also of the valuable new WHITE CAP DENT CORN as described on page 35 of THE FARM ANNUAL. This is really the best Field Corn in cultivation to-day, and we desire to introduce it to every farmer.

ORDER TO-DAY, Burpee's Farm Annual for 1894 and ask for

The leading American Seed Catalogue, a handsome book of 172 pages. It tells all about the best SEEDS that grow. If you desire copy before you order, send a postal card, and it will go forward by return mail. Any seed buyer can have a copy free; if you are not a seed buyer, but merely want a nice book—and it is a nice book, you should send a sealed letter enclosing a silver dime or five two-cent stamp.

When you write mention W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Seed Growers, Philadelphia, Pa.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 17.

COPYRIGHT 1894, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

NUMBER 12.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, MARCH 21, 1894.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

THE CITY OF THE PATRIARCHS.

Hebron and its Illustrious History—The Cave of Machpelah, with its Famous Dead—
One of the Oldest Cities of the World.

FEW places, even in Bible lands, are invested with more tender and beautiful patriarchal memories than Hebron. One of the most ancient cities in the world, it was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt, and is mentioned in Scripture prior to Damascus. Its earliest name appears to have been Mamre, probably so-called from the name of Abraham's Amorite ally, burying-place and they conveyed to him the field and cave of Machpelah for four hundred shekels of silver. The cave is still shown to travelers, and is enclosed within a mosque, whose massive walls are the most prominent object in the whole city. In Hebron, a large part of the lifetime of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob was spent, and there they are entombed with their wives. The body of Jacob, who was embalmed in Israel. The "Castle of Abraham"—as the peculiar-looking structure which encloses the patriarchal tombs is called—was erected many centuries after the death of "El Khalil," ("the Friend of God"), as the Moslems delight to designate the father of the patriarchs. Hebron has remained in Mohammedan hands ever since 1187.

In this season of charity, when so many are suffering from hunger and distress, it will interest the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to learn that Hebron is the scene of one of the oldest and greatest charities in the world. For hundreds of years it was visited by multitudes of pilgrims on their way refreshed. Twelve hundred loaves were distributed each day, besides great quantities of other food, condiments and oil, all who needed help being supplied with equal generosity, regardless of race, age, or creed.

As shown in the illustration on this page, Hebron lies on a slope which leads down to the Valley of Mamre, believed by some to be the "Valley of Eshcol," whence the Hebrew spies brought the grapes. (Numbers 13: 25.) Its orchards, vineyards and olive groves are among the finest in Palestine. Near the city formerly stood a large tree, which tradition declared had stood "from the beginning of the world." The Hebron

THE CITY OF HEBRON, IN PALESTINE.

(From a photograph brought from the Holy Land by Dr. Talmage.)

and it was the scene of not a few of the most tragic passages in the lives of the patriarchs. There Sara died, and there Abraham came to mourn for her, when he stood up before the sons of Heth, a stranger and sojourner, and pleaded with them for a

Egypt by the king's embalmers, may still be in existence. Hebron was David's royal capital when he reigned as King of Judah, and he was there anointed as King over all from Sinai to Jerusalem. The compassionate people of Hebron expended $45,000 annually on an institution or hospital, at which the pilgrims and other wayfarers were fed and of to-day has nine mosques and about 5,000 population. For many generations, devout Hebrews from distant parts of the globe have migrated to Hebron, so that their mortal remains might rest near the sepulchres of their illustrious ancestors.

FROM CONQUEST TO CONQUEST.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday at the Brooklyn Tabernacle. Text: Amos 9: 13: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that the ploughman shall overtake the reaper."

PICTURE of a tropical clime with a season so prosperous that the harvest reaches clear over to the planting time, and the swarthy husbandman swinging the sickle in the thick grain almost feels the breath of the horses on his shoulders, the horses hitched to the plough preparing for a new crop. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that the ploughman shall overtake the reaper." When is that? That is now. That is this day when hardly have you done reaping one harvest before the ploughman is getting ready for another.

I know that many declare that Christianity has collapsed, that the Bible is an obsolete book, that the Christian Church is on the retreat. I will here and now show that the opposite of that is true.

An Arab guide was leading a French infidel across a desert, and ever and anon the Arab guide would get down in the sand and pray to the Lord. It disgusted the French infidel, and after awhile as the Arab got up from one of his prayers the infidel said: "How do you know there is any God?" and the Arab guide said: "How do I know that a man and a camel passed along our tent last night? I know it by the footprints in the sand. And you want to know how I know whether there is any God. Look at that sunset. Is that the footstep of a man?" And by the same process you and I have come to understand that this Book is the footstep of a God.

But now let us see whether the Bible is a last year's almanac. Let us see whether the Church of God is in a Bull Run retreat, muskets, canteens, and haversacks strewn all the way. The great English historian, Sharon Turner, a man of vast learning and of great accuracy, not a clergyman, but an attorney, as well as a historian, gives this overwhelming statistic in regard to Christianity and in regard to the number of Christians in the different centuries. In the first century, 500,000 Christians; in the second century, 2,000,000 Christians; in the third century, 5,000,000 Christians; in the fourth century, 10,000,000 Christians; in the fifth century, 15,000,000 Christians; in the sixth century, 20,000,000 Christians; in the seventh century, 24,000,000 Christians; in the eighth century, 30,000,000 Christians; in the ninth century, 40,000,000 Christians; in the tenth century, 50,000,000 Christians; in the eleventh century, 70,000,000 Christians; in the twelfth century, 80,000,000 Christians; in the thirteenth century, 75,000,000 Christians; in the fourteenth century, 80,000,000 Christians; in the fifteenth century, 100,000,000 Christians; in the sixteenth century, 125,000,000 Christians; in the seventeenth century, 155,000,000 Christians; in the eighteenth century, 200,000,000 Christians—a decadence, as you observe, in only one century, and more than made up in the following centuries, while it is the usual computation that there will be, when the record of the nineteenth century is made up, at least 300,000,000 Christians. Poor Christianity! what a pity it has no friends. How lonesome it must be. Who will take it out of the poor-house? Poor Christianity! Three hundred millions in one century. In a few weeks of the year 1881 2,500,000 copies of the New Testament distributed. Why, the earth is like an old castle with twenty gates and a park of artillery ready to thunder down every gate. Lay aside all Christendom and see how heathendom is being surrounded and honeycombed and attacked by this all-conquering Gospel. At the beginning of this century there were only 150 missionaries; now there are 25,000 missionaries and native helpers and evangelists. At the beginning of this century there were only 50,000 heathen converts; now there are 1,750,000 converts from heathendom. There is not a sea-coast on the planet but the battery of the Gospel is planted and ready to march on, north, south, east, west. You all know that the chief work of an army is to plant the batteries. It may take many days to plant the batteries, and they may do all their work in ten minutes. These batteries are being planted all along the sea-coasts and in all nations. It may take a good while to plant them, and they may do all their work in one day. They will. Nations are to be born in a day.

So Christianity is falling back, and the Bible, they say, is becoming an obsolete book. I go into a court, and wherever I find a judge's bench or a clerk's desk, I find a Bible. Upon what book could there be uttered the solemnity of an oath? What book is apt to be put in the trunk of the young man as he leaves for city life? The Bible. What shall I find in nine out of every ten homes in Brooklyn? The Bible. In nine out of every ten homes in Christendom? The Bible. Voltaire wrote the prophecy that the Bible in the nineteenth century would become extinct. The century is nearly gone and as there have been more Bibles published in the latter part of the century than in the former part of the century, do you think the Bible will become extinct in the next six years? I have to tell you that the room in which Voltaire wrote that prophecy, not long ago was crowded from floor to ceiling with Bibles from Switzerland. Suppose the Congress of the United States should pass a law that there should be no more Bibles printed in America, and no more Bibles read. If there are forty million grown people in the United States, there would be forty million people in an army to put down such a law and defend their right to read the Bible. But suppose the Congress of the United States should make a law against the reading or the publication of any other book, how many people would go out in such a crusade? Could you get forty million people to go out and risk their lives in defence of Shakespeare's tragedies or Gladstone's tracts, or Macaulay's History of England? You know that there are a thousand men who would die in defence of this book, where there is not more than one man who would die in defence of any other book. You try to insult my common-sense by telling me the Bible is fading out from the world. It is the most popular book of the century. How do I know it? I know it just as I know in regard to other books. How many volumes of that book are published? Well, you say, five thousand. How many copies of that book are published? A hundred thousand. Which is the more popular? Why of course the one that has a hundred thousand circulation. And if this book has more copies abroad in the world, if there are five times as many Bibles abroad as any other book, does not that show you that the most popular book on the planet to-day is the Word of God?

"Oh," say people, "the church is a collection of hypocrites, and it is losing its power and it is fading out from the world." Is it? A bishop of the Methodist Church told me that that denomination averages two new churches every day of the year. There are at least fifteen hundred new Christian churches built in America every year. Does that look as though the church were fading out, as though it were a defunct institution? Which institution stands nearest the hearts of the people of America to-day? I do not care in what village or in what city, or what neighborhood you go. Which institution is it? Is it the post-office? Is it the hotel? Is it the lecturing hall? Ah, you know it is not. You know that the institution which stands nearest to the hearts of the American people is the Christian church. If you have ever seen a church burn down, you have seen thousands of people standing and looking at it—people who never go into a church—the tears raining down their cheeks. The whole story is told.

You may talk about the church being a collection of hypocrites, but when the diphtheria sweeps your children off, whom do you send for? The post-master? the attorney-general? the hotel-keeper? the alderman? No, you send for a minister of this Bible-religion. And if you have not a room in your house for the obsequies, what building do you solicit? Do you say: "Give me the finest room in the hotel?" Do you say: "Give me that theatre?" Do you say: "Give me a place in that public building, where can I lay my dead for a little while until we say a prayer over it?" No; you say: "Give us the house of God." And if there is a song to be sung at the obsequies what do you want? What does anybody want? The Marseillaise Hymn? God Save the Queen? Our own grand national air? No. They want the hymn with which they sang their old Christian mother into her last sleep, or they want sung the Sabbath School hymn which their little girl sang the last Sabbath afternoon she was out before she got that awful sickness which broke your heart. I appeal to your common sense. You know the most endearing institution on earth, the most popular institution on earth to-day, is the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The infidels say: "Infidelity shows its successes from the fact that it is everywhere accepted, and it can say what it will." Why, my friends, infidelity is not half so blatant in our day as it was in the days of our fathers. Do you know that in the days of our fathers there were pronounced infidels in public authority and they could get any political position? Let a man to-day declare himself antagonistic to the Christian religion, and what city wants him for mayor, what State wants him for governor, what nation wants him for president or for king? Let a man openly proclaim himself the enemy of our glorious Christianity, and he cannot get a majority of votes in any State, in any city, in any county, in any ward of America.

Do you think that such a scene could be enacted now as was enacted in the days of Robespierre, when a shameless woman was elevated as a goddess, and was carried in a golden chair to a cathedral where incense was burned to her and people bowed down before her as a divine being, she taking the place of the Bible and God Almighty, while in the corridor of that cathedral were enacted such scenes of drunkenness and debauchery and obscenity as have never been witnessed? Do you believe such a thing could possibly occur in Christendom to-day? No, sir. The police, whether of Paris, or New York, would swoop on it.

They say, these men, that science is overcoming religion in our day. They look through the spectacles of the infidel scientists, and they say: "It is impossible that this book can be true; people are finding it out; the Bible has got to go overboard; science is going to throw it overboard." Do you believe that the Bible account of the origin of life will be overthrown by infidel scientists who have fifty different theories about the origin of life? If they should come up solid phalanx, all agreeing on one sentiment and one theory, perhaps Christian might be damaged; but there are not many differences of opinion inside the Church as outside the Church. People used to say, "there are so many different denominations of Christians—that shows there is nothing in religion." I have to tell you that all denominations agree on the two or three or four radical doctrines of the Christian religion. They are unanimous in regard to Jesus Christ, and they are unanimous in regard to the divinity of the Scriptures. How is it on the other side? All split up, you cannot find two of them alike. The men warring with each other: Darwin warring against Lamarck, Wallace warring against Cope, even Herschel denouncing Ferguson. They do not agree about anything. They do not agree on embryology, do not agree on the gradation of the species. What do they agree on? Herschel wrote a whole chapter on the errors of astronomy. La Place declares that the moon was put in the right place. He says that it had been put four times further from the earth than it is, and there would be more harmony in the universe; but Lionville comes up just in time to prove that the moon was put in the right place. How many colors woven into light? Seven, says Isaac Newton. Three, says David Brewster. How high is the Aurora Borealis? Two and a half miles, says Lias. One hundred and sixty-eight miles, says Twining. How far is the sun from the earth? Seventy-six million miles, says Lacalle. Eighty-two million miles, says Humboldt. Ninety million miles, says Henderson. One hundred and four million miles, says Mayer. Only a little difference of twenty-eight million miles! All split among themselves—not agreeing on anything. They come and say that the churches of Jesus Christ are divided on great doctrines. All united they are, Jesus Christ, in the divinity of the Scriptures; while they come up and propose to render their verdict, no two of them agree on that verdict. "Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed on a verdict?" asks the court or the clerk of the jury as they come after having spent the whole night in deliberating. If the jury say, "Yes, we have agreed," the verdict is recorded; but suppose one of the jurymen says, "I think the man was guilty of murder," and another says, "I think he was guilty of manslaughter in the second degree," and another says, "I think he was guilty of assault with a battery with intent to kill," the judge would say, "Go back to your room and bring a verdict; agree on something; that is the verdict."

Here these infidel scientists have empanelled themselves as a jury to decide this case between infidelity, the plaintiff, and Christianity, the defendant, and after being centuries they come in to render their verdict. Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed on a verdict? No, no. Then back for another five hundred years a deliberate and agree on something. This is not a poor miserable wretch in the Tom court to-morrow that could be condemned by a jury that did not agree on the verdict and yet you expect us to give up our glorious Christianity to please these men who cannot agree on anything.

Ah! my friends, the church of Jesus Christ, instead of falling back, is on the advance. I am certain it is on the advance. O Lord God, take thy sword from the thigh and ride forth to the victory.

I am mightily encouraged because I find among other things that while this Christianity has been bombarded for centuries infidelity has not destroyed one church, crippled one minister, or uprooted one verse of one chapter of all the Bible. The church all the time getting the victory, and the shell of its enemies nearly exhausted. I have been examining their ammunition lately; I have looked all through their cartridge-boxes. They have not in the la-we have advanced one new idea. They have utterly exhausted their ammunition in the battle against the church and against the scriptures, while the sword of the Lord Almighty is as keen as it ever was.

Bide that, have you noticed that during the last few years every one of the doctrines of the Bible came under discussion in the secular press? Do you not remember a few years ago—when every paper in the United States had an editorial on the subject—"Is there such a thing as future punishment?" It was the strangest thing that there should be a discussion in the secular papers on that subject, but every paper in the United States and in Christendom discussed: "Is there such a thing as retribution?" I know there were small who made sport of the discussion, but there was not an intelligent man on earth who as the result of that discussion did not ask himself the question: "What is going to be my eternal destiny?" So it was in regard to Tyndal's prayer guage. About five years ago you remember the secular papers discussed that, and with just as much earnestness as the religious papers, and there was not a man in Christendom who did not ask himself the question: "Is there anything in prayer?" "What the creature imprints the Creator?" "Oh what a mighty fact what a glorious fact the secular printing press and the pulpit of the Church of Jesus Christ harnessed the same team."

Then look at the International Series of Sunday School Lessons. Do you know that every Sabbath between three and five o'clock, there are five million children studying the same lesson, a lesson prepared by the leading minds of the country, and printed in the papers, and then the subjects are discussed and given over to the teachers, who give them over to the children: so whereas once—and within our memory—the children nibbled here and there at story in the Bible, now they are taken through from Genesis to Revelation, and we shall have five million children forestalled for Christianity. My soul is full of exultation. I feel as if I could shout—I will shout, "Alleluia, the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!"

When you notice a more significant fact, if you have talked with people on the subject that they are getting dissatisfied with philosophy and science as a matter of comfort. They say it does not amount to anything when you have a dead child in the home. They tell you, when they were sick at the door of the future seemed opening, they found comfort they could find was in the Gospel. People are having demonstrated all over the land that science and philosophy cannot solace the trouble and woes of the world, and they want some other religion, and they are taking Christianity, the only sympathetic religion that ever came into the world. You just take your scientific consolation into that room where a mother has lost her child. Try in that case your splendid doctrine of the "survival of the fittest." Tell her that child died because it was not worth as much as the other children. That is your "survival of the fittest." Go to that dying man and tell him to pluck up courage for the future. Use your transcendental phraseology upon him. Tell him he ought to be confident in "the great to be," and the "everlasting now," and the "eternal what-is-it." Just try your transcendentalism and your philosophy and your science on him. Go to that widowed soul, and tell her it was a geological necessity that her companion should be taken away from her, just as in the course of the world's history the megatherium had to pass out of existence; and then you go on in your scientific consolation until you get to the sublime fact that fifty million years from now we ourselves may be scientific specimens on a geological shelf, petrified specimens of an extinct human race. And after you have got all through with your consolation, if the poor afflicted soul is not crazed by it, I will send forth from this church the plainest Christian we have, and with one half hour of prayer and reading of Scripture promises, the tears will be wiped away, and the house from floor to cupola will be flooded with the calmness of an Indian summer sunset. There is where I see the triumph of Christianity. People are dissatisfied with every-say in time of sickness it is very useful. I deny it. Morphine never puts anybody to sleep, it never alleviates pain. You ask me why I say that. I have never tried it, I never took it. I deny that morphine is any soothing to the nerves, or any quiet in times of sickness. I deny that morphine ever put anybody to sleep; but here are twenty persons who say they have all felt the soothing effects of a physician's prescribing morphine. Whose testimony will you take? Those who took the medicine, or my testimony, I never having taken the medicine. Here is the Gospel of Jesus Christ, an antidote for all trouble, the mightiest medicine that ever came down to earth. Here is a man who says: "I don't believe in it; there is no power in it." Here are other people who say, "We have found out its power and know its soothing influence; it has cured us." Whose testimony will you take in regard to this healing medicine?

I feel that I have convinced every man in this house that it is utter folly to take the testimony of those who have never tried the Gospel of Jesus Christ in their own heart and life. We have tens of thousands of witnesses. I believe you are ready to take their testimony. Young man, do not be ashamed to be a friend of the Bible. Do not put your thumb in your vest, as young men sometimes do, and swagger about, talking of the glorious light of the nineteenth cen-

Convicts Seeking Christ.

The Revival in Sing Sing Prison and the Wonderful Change it has Wrought.

IN a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, mention was made briefly of a revival now in progress in Sing Sing Prison, Sing Sing, N. Y. So many inquiries have been received regarding this work of the Spirit that an effort has been made to secure further and accurate details, which are given below. It is a revival in the real sense of the word: the spiritually dead are brought to life and the lost are found—and yet it is not characterized by any excitement. It is a quiet and remarkably persistent work, having commenced almost a year ago and gradually increased in power until, to-day, more than three score men are striving to lead Christian lives. Besides the Sunday services and personal entreaty, religious literature has aided the work. For some time, each Sunday morning, as the men have gone from the chapel, a copy of some religious paper has been placed in the hands of each man. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and other journals in large numbers have been distributed and are eagerly sought after and afford good and attractive reading for the day.

The present chaplain, Rev. Mr. Weills, came to the chaplaincy recommended and supported by such men as Bishop Potter, Rev. Dr. Brown of St. Thomas Church, N. Y., Dr. Ziegenfuss, the late Archdeacon of Dutchess and others and is devoted to the work. He is thoroughly respected by the prisoners. His preaching is practical, Scriptural and impressive, and he holds the attention of his large audience, although that audience is made up mostly of men who never entered a church outside of prison. He began his labors about Jan. 1st, 1893. One of his first acts was to ascertain who were professing Christians, and after careful inquiry and preparation he invited them to unite in Holy Communion. Thirteen prisoners partook of this communion and one prisoner was baptized. This was on Easter day, April 2d, 1893. It probably is the first time on record where a regular Protestant communion service has been established in a prison.

Next day, April 3d, three men met by appointment at 11:35 A. M., and, in a quiet corner of the shop, organized a Daily Noon Meeting, for prayer and Bible reading. These meetings have been continued daily since. The membership increased to nine. Then came changes which removed some to other shops, but their places were filled by new converts, so that the number is eight again. Others are laboring along the same lines in other shops while others, locked in their cells, have organized a daily prayer-meeting.

The eagerness of these men to learn of Jesus is evidenced by the fact that a number of them, having no friends outside and no money except their scanty earnings here—about three cents a day—have used these earnings to purchase the Teacher's Bibles which have been placed within their reach by the grand offer of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Each one of these young Christians is a worker. Their plan is that of the Brotherhood of St. Andrews: 1st. A daily prayer for the spread of Christ's kingdom. 2d. A personal attempt to bring at least one sinner a week to hear about the Saviour.

How greatly God has blessed the work here is shown by the increasing number who appear for baptism and communion each time the service is held. On the eighth day of October fifty-two men appeared at the Lord's table, and here, in this stronghold of Satan, seven of them were baptized and made their first brave profession of love to Christ. The next communion held Dec. 24th, showed another gain. Over sixty communicants knelt at the altar, and there was another candidate for baptism. The good work is still progressing.

THE SING SING PRISON REVIVAL—A SCENE IN THE PRISON CHAPEL.

thing else. They want God. You tell me that two and two make four. I do not dispute it, but it is not so plain that two and two make four as that the Lord God Almighty made this world and for man, the sinner, he sent his only begotten Son to die.

I put on the witness stand to testify in behalf of Christianity the Church on earth and all the Church in heaven. Not fifty, not a thousand, not a million, but all of the Church on earth and all the redeemed in heaven.

Yonder is an aged Christian after fifty years' experience of the power of godliness in his soul. Ask this man whether, when he buried his dead, the religion of Jesus Christ was not a consolation. Ask him if through the long years of his pilgrimage the Lord ever forsook him. Ask him when he looks forward to the future, if he has not a peace and a joy and a consolation the world cannot take away. Put his testimony of what he has seen and what he has felt opposite to the testimony of a man who says he has not seen anything on the subject or felt anything on the subject. Will you take the testimony of people who have not seen, or people who have seen?

You say morphia puts one to sleep. You tury, and of there being no need of a Bible. They have the light of nature in India and China and in all the dark places on earth. Did you ever hear that the light of nature gave them comfort for their trouble? They have lancets to cut and juggernauts to crush, but no comfort. Ah! my friends, you had better stop your scepticism. Suppose you are put in this crisis. O father! Your child is dying. What are you going to say to her?

Colonel Ethan Allen was a famous infidel in his day. His wife was a very consecrated woman. The mother instructed the daughter in the truths of Christianity. The daughter sickened and was about to die, and she said to her father: "Father, shall I take your instruction? or shall I take mother's instruction? I am going to die now; I must have this matter decided." That man, who had been loud in his infidelity, said to his dying daughter: "My dear, you had better take your mother's religion." My advice is the same to you, O young man, you had better take your mother's religion. You know how it comforted her. You know what she said to you when she was dying. You had better take your mother's religion.

Par, Carrie B	300	Sedgwick, Mr and Mrs C H	200	Turner, Mrs A E	100	Walters, Mrs M	100	F E F, Brushton, N Y	200	C 50c; Jacques, Minnie H 50c; Jones
Presbyterian Congregation,		Stewart, E	100	Thirt, Mrs W	100	Wing, F	100	B, Wm J, Buffalo, N Y	200	C R 50c.
Calder, Fla	840	Sayre, Mrs W E	100	Tippey, Nellie and Mintie	100	Wing, G A	150	W J R, Avery, Kan	100	Kudson, Mrs J, 50c; Kingsbury,
Poonind, Venice Cent	100	Schelling and wife, G T	100	Townsend, Mrs C N	100	Wing, Paul	500	Mr and Mrs A J M, Edinboro,	500	Mr, 50c; King's Daughter, Cincinnati,
Prov, 17, W Scarboro, Me	100	Schenkel, John	100	Toukinds, J A	200	Wise, W F	300	Pa	500	30c; King's Daughter, Cincinnati,
Que, Esther Home Mission		Simonson, C G	200	Thompson, George A D	500	Williams, D M	500	D B L, Portersfield, Pa	200	N Y, 50c; Kito, Emily 25c; Kross,
Que, Mt Upton, N Y	300	Shirley, George	100	Thompson, Mrs A D	100	White, Emily H & husband	200	B, B, Bassville, Mo	200	Hester 50c; Knapp, Mrs G 25c; Ladue,
Quinn, F H	100	Short, Mrs J	100	Tillier, L	100	White, Master Geo N	500	D A, Westminster, Cal	500	Y. Mrs H, 50c; Kearney, E 50c;
Robson, Jennie	100	Shortess, T A	100	Treggiving, Mrs E T	200	Wilson, Mrs A	200	Mrs H B B, Eastford, Conn	200	50c; Kearney, W S 50c; Kingsley, F
RuLo W	100	Scott, H E	100	Timmerman, Mr A L	100	Wiedman, G	100	R, Tilton, N H	100	50c; King's daughter, Pleasant
Rynars, Mrs C	100	Sweet, Mrs J J	100	Thomas, W H	100	Williams, W W	300	A E W, Waitsburg, Wash	100	Grove, Pa 50c.
Royds, Mrs L	100	Sisson, Geo	100	Townsend, H C	100	Wardrop, R	100	H, Wm, Anita, Iowa	100	Lawton, Newton, 75c; Leben-
Redan, S W	100	Speir, A L	500	Turner, Mrs G H	100	Wardwell, Miss Eliza	100	H B N, Brooklyn	100	sperger, Ella A, 50c; Lebensperger,
Robbs, Mrs John H	100	Sanders, J M	100	Turnston, Robert	100	W C T, U. Huron, S D	500	S L G, Chestnut Co, Pa	100	R L, 50c; Lamb, Mrs G 25c; Ladue,
Robt, Pasachina, Cal	500	Strong, Mrs N	100	Tully, Mr and Mrs A	500	Widow's mite	100	F F C, W Bay City	200	Mrs, 25c; Lathrop, Mrs D D 25c;
Rod, Mrs	100	Shedard, Mariett	300	Thompson, M	100	Widow's mite	100	J J, Wis	200	Lathrop, D D 25c; Lobb, Flora 50c;
Ruf, Carrie	150	Smalley, Ida B	100	Tulloch, Merrill	100	Welsh & Eng Congregational	100	J E D B	200	Larson, M P 50c; Linderman A 50c;
Ruf, James	150	Stranahan, G B	100	Tulloch, Mrs A J	100	Church, Charleston	100	A H H, Rock Rapids, Iowa	500	Lech, Dick 25c; Loder, Arthur 25c;
Rovs, Thos	300	Shaw, D	25	Thompson, Miss A	100	Kurkin, E	200	Mrs N C F, Clyde, N Y	100	Lines, Mrs Wm 50c; Limestone, Mrs
Ric, Mrs Margaret	100	Smith, John F	100	Tithe, A	200	York, Abby	100	Mrs E M, Lathrop, Mo	100	S 90c.
Rul, R B	250	Sanders, Miss M H	100	Tipton, Mrs S M	100	Yoder, Mrs W L	100	M J C	100	McKay, R, 60c; Madsen, J, 50c;
Rum, F	100	Scott, D J	100	Tice, Emilie	100	Young, James	100	N M J, Eltherfield, Ind	300	Middleton, Mr Fred 50c; McKenzie,
Rho, S, Jas	100	Smith, Mrs J F	100	Tinning, J	100	Younghauss, Mr M	200	T E K, Wilkesbarre, Pa	100	S, 50c; McKay, E, 60c; McKay, L,
Riso, Mrs J H	100	Stewart, Mrs A	100	Treeman, L P	100	Y P S C E, LaFargeville, N Y	500	J H B, Murray, Iowa	200	60c; McKay, W, 60c; Miller, Mrs H,
Rayer's, H P, S S Class	335	Shires, Mrs B A	100	Tease, S S	200	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	C S, Bunker Hill, Ill	200	200; Moore, J, 25c; May, Mrs S
Rnell, Mrs Geo H	200	Smith, Mrs Geo W	500	The Lord's Money, Ellis, Kan	500	Y P S C E, Woodstock, N H	100	M R and Mrs J H D	500	Caroline, 50c; Milnor, Freddie, 50c;
Roy, John F	500	Scott, J A	100	Thank offering, Easton, Pa	100	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Miss E V, Albany, N Y	100	Mallory, Mrs Ann 50c; Beckea, Mrs
Roy, Mrs W	100	Scott, J A	100	The Judge, Springfield, Mass	100	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	J D W, Kirkville	100	Frederick, Mrs, 50c; Moore, J, 25c;
Rear, Frankline, N Y	100	Schlicher, C	100	Two M E Sunday Schools, W	520	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	G S S F, Fishersville, Va	200	Mr W H, 50c; Meeker, A N, 50c;
Rear, Anburn, Me	100	Schlicher, H	100	Hampton, L I	520	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Flackville, N Y	100	Miller, Inis H 50c; Miller, Lucy 150c;
Rear, Greenleafon, Minn	200	Stalter, Mrs D	350	Teacher, Sandwich, Ill	300	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Orbisnia, Pa	100	Marble, Josia, 50c; Moore, E 50c;
Rear, of the C H, Massilon		Slason, M	100	Two friends, Sandukman, Me	500	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Stockbridge, Mich	100	Merz, Stella and Walter 50c; Mer-
Refn, Glenwood, C H	100	Spackman, Mrs E	200	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Louisville, Ky	300	riell, Bessie 13c; Myers, Mrs H 50c;
Refn, F B	300	Saville, Wm H	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Sycamore, Ill	200	Mcroy, J, 50c; McKay, Ernest
Refn, of the C H, Harper, Ks	125	Secor, Mrs A	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Toby, Pa	200	30c; Myers, Titus M 40c; Morrill,
Refn, Collinsville, Tex	150	Smith, Thos H	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	South Bretler, N Y	100	Frank 20c.
Refn, Mt Clemens, Mich	200	Sub, Prospectville, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Topeka, Kan	300	Nay, F, 25c; Nochtirb, C 25c.
Refn, Mrs W	200	Sub, Colter, Ia	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Perndale, Cal	200	Olsen, Cora, 50c; Osborn, V D, 75c;
Refn, Mrs M, Mary	200	Sub, McDonough, Del	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Westfield, Mass	100	Osborn, Nora, 15c; Osborn, Myron,
Ril, Mrs Rose	100	Sub, Concord, N H	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	Ticonderoga, N Y	100	25c; O'Neil, Miss E, 10c.
Rird, S O	100	Sub, and well wisher, Gap, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Prentwood, J, 50c; Perry,
Rird, Mr and Mrs C C	100	Sub, Sinnamon, Va	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Perry, C, 25c; Potter, Mrs Frank 25c;
Rirdford, Mrs A	100	Sub, Gurnee, Ill	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Pogue, Eumia M, 50c; Palmer,
Rird, Mrs Henry	100	Sub, Tiro, N S	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Emory, 50c; Pritchard, Mrs Jane A,
Rird, Mrs G C	200	Sub, Calver, Md	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	50c; Patterson, Mrs A 50c; Perry,
Ro E	300	Sub, W Dover, Vt	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Mrs H L 50c.
Reae Miss n, Watertown, NY	400	Sub, Yankee, Ia	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Rummel, L, 50c; Rignin, Daga-
Reer, Ashboro, N C	100	Sub, Guilford	200	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	bord, Del, 50c; Robinson, J R, 25c;
Reer, Denver, Colo	100	Sub, Bloomville, N Y	200	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Redfield, J, 50c; Reed, Maggie, 25c;
Reer, Worcester, Mass	100	Sub, Sydney Mines, N S	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Rennie, Mrs G T, 50c; Reader, New
Reer, Harlewood, N Y	100	Sub, Hamburg, Miss	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Vineyard, Me, 25c; Ruic, Allie E
Reer, West Chester, Iowa	100	Sub, Goshen, Conn	500	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	25c; Rule, Mrs E W 25c; Reader of
Reer, Carbondale, Pa	200	Sub, Elizabeth, N Y	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	the C H, Myer's Valley, Kan 50c.
Reer, Cerro Gordo, Ill	100	Sub, to the C H, Paducah, Ky	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Schermer, M T, 30c; Spiny, M L,
Reer, of the C H, N Warren		Sub, Baltimore, Md	300	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	25c; Sherman, Anna 50c; Schelling,
Ruell, Mrs S	100	Sub, Fairfield, Iowa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Miss Mary 25c; Schelling, Miss
Ruell, F B	100	Sub, Greenup, Ill	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Ann, 25c; Schelling, Miss Sadie,
Ruell, Millie	100	Sub, Harpersville, Pa	500	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	25c; Schelling, Miss Edna, 10c;
Ruell, Ada	100	Sub, and friend, Riley, Wis	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Skinner, Miss Millie, 50c; Senter
Ruell, Ad	100	Sub, Princeton, Ill	500	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Family, 50c; Sub, Boulder, Colo, 25c;
Ruand, M	100	Sub, La Grange, Ill	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Sub, Olathe, Kan, 50c; Sub, Fram-
Ruf, Edward	500	Sub, Pomona, Cal	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	ingham, Mass, 20c; Sub, Reading,
Ruf, Mrs S D	500	Sub, Tecumseh, Mich	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Pa, 25c; Smith, Mrs A, 50c; Spier,
Ruf, Miss	500	Sub, San Jose, Cal	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	50c; Stealey, A 25c; Sub, Pa
Ruf, Mrs M	500	Sub, Chesterfield, Ia	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	50c; Sub, Meriden, N H
Ruf, Mr and Mrs J E	100	Sub, Easton, Md	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	20c; Sub, Arapahoe, Neb 20c; Sub,
Ruf, E W	100	Sub, and interested reader,	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Auburn, N H 20c; Sub, Berwick, O
Ruf, H B	100	Sub, Waterloo, Ia	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	50c; Sub, New Market, Ia, 50c; Sub
Ruf, H B	100	Sub, Red Jacket, Mich	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Kan, 50c; Sub, Mills, N Y
Ruf, Hiram	100	Sub, Taylorstown, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	30c; Sub, Trenton, N Y 50c.
Ruf, B P	100	Sub, Steward's Mill, Tex	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Traver, Mrs A R, 50c; Thurston,
Ruf, Battle Creek, Mich	100	Sub, Racine, Wis	500	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Frank, 25c; Tingley, Mrs, 35c;
Ruf, Anora, Ill	150	Sub, Urbana, O	500	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Thompson, Emma, 25c; Thompson,
Ruf, Johnston, N Y	100	Sub, N Bedford, Mass	200	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Clara, 25c; Thompson, Bella, 25c;
Ruf, Linden Hall	100	Sub, Wood Lake, Neb	200	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Thompson, Gerty, 25c; Taylor, Mrs
Ruf, Washington, D C	100	Sub, Valley Stream, N Y	200	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	25c; Taylor, Mrs, 25c; Thervah,
Ruf, Can	200	Sub, Union, N Y	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Robt L 25c; Tabbarrow, Rati P 25c;
Ruf, Madoc, Can	200	Sub, Can	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Tabbarrow, Rose 50c; Timmerman,
Ruf, Malyna, Mo	200	Sub, Elwood, N J	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Baron 25c.
Ruf, Riverside, Cal	100	Sub, Ranson, N Y	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Wood, Albert, 75c; Wall, Frank,
Ruf, Alice	200	Sub, Carroll, O	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	50c; Wyckgram, Miss N, 50c; White,
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Hillsboro, N J	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	E J, 25c; Weaver, Grace, 10c;
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Wainscott, N Y	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Wendy, J, 50c; West, Mrs H A,
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	50c; White, Bob, 10c; Wism, J P,
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	A 60c; Winsom, H, 50c; Warfield,
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Mrs, 50c; Welch, Mrs R, 16c;
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Woody, Gertrude, 10c; Widow,
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Braintree, Vt, 50c; Walter, Laura
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	10c; Wilcox, W R 50c; Wells, H Y
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	50c; When, Y 50c; White, Mrs
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Miss Ella L 50c; Whitcomb, Robt
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	S 25c; Wenwick, Elizabeth 50c; Wil-
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	liams, Priscilla 25c; Widow, Roch-
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	ester, Minn 25c.
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Zimmermann, M 25c.
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	J B, Dumont, Iowa, 10c; H N P,
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Oakland, N Y 50c; B G Kirk-
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	vile, Ia, 50c; C S, Milton, O 10c;
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Hudson, N Y 50c; H M, Waymart,
Ruf, Mrs R M	200	Sub, Altona, Pa	100	Two friends, Pen Arayl, Pa	150	Y P S C E, Loomis, N Y	150	W Randolph, Va	100	Pa, 20c; A H M, Morgantown, Pa, JACOB'S PREVAILING PRAYER.

S. S. Lesson for April 1. Gen. 32. Golden Text, Gen. 32: 26. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

JACOB never arrived at fully understanding God. He believed, and yet his faith had always an "if" in it, which implied some measure of unrest and suspicion. The calm dignity of Abraham's faith, which believed that what God had promised he was able to perform, was altogether lacking in that of Jacob. The tests to which Abraham's faith was put were far greater than any to which Jacob was called, yet Jacob failed, whereas Abraham stood firm. Abraham believed in the Lord and he counted it unto him for righteousness. The very same thing was said in prophecy of the Lord Jesus. "He trusted in the Lord." Abraham's habit was to look at everything from God's standpoint, from what God was, what he said, what he did. Jacob, on the contrary, looked first to the natural and the human; to himself and to other men; what they said and what they did. The majority of God's children are of the Jacob, not of the Abraham type.

The Abraham Type.

Therefore their life is full of unrest, full of disappointment, full of failure; the sad song of their lives is: "All these things are against me." They are under the delusion that circumstances and people cause their failure, and seeing God "through a glass darkly," they are unaware how much in their hearts they blame God, under whose unlimited control is every person on earth, and every circumstance which happens. True sons and daughters of Abraham love God enough to trust him, and they know that to them that love God "all things work together for good," and that in all things which God permits to come upon them, knowing that God is for them, they are "more than conquerors through him that loved them," and therefore nothing, and nobody can be really against them. "Nothing shall, by any means, hurt you."

God had given to Isaac, his father his wife Rebekah, but Jacob, who set his heart on Rachel, Laban's daughter, must himself serve seven years in order to obtain her, and when the seven years were ended, Laban deceived him, and gave him Leah instead of Rachel, and he must serve seven years for Rachel. He served six years also for possessions of flocks and herds and then Laban ten times changed his wages. This is the history of all God's children who are occupied with men and things more than they are occupied with God. God gave to Abraham what Jacob labored hard to obtain. We always reap what we sow. Jacob dealt with Laban instead of divine: he tried to lay Laban under an obligation to him by his hard labor, but after all it amounted to very little, and had no influence upon the selfish heart of Laban. Abraham, wherever he was, was the recognized superior: in Egypt, in Gerar, among the children of Heth, he was honored; but there was no sign that Laban acknowledged such superiority in Jacob, nor have we any reason to suppose that his life had been a power in Laban's as Abraham's had been in his father's house, or as Joseph's afterwards was in Potiphar's.

On Human Lines

And God's purpose—was it abandoned or suspended? No, Jacob was God's child, heaven had been opened to him, he was heir with Abraham and Isaac of the same promise (Heb. 11: 9); and through all his life of failure, God's wondrous faithfulness shines out so that that very failure was made to work together for good in manifesting what God is, and how true he is to his promises. It was twenty years since he had appeared to Jacob at Bethel, and Jacob, who had deceived his father, had served a hard apprenticeship to Laban, who turned out more deceitful than himself. He had not forgotten his God. God was known in Jacob's tents, but idols were known too, and it was a very half-and-half worship which was offered there, just as in many a semi-godly family now. And

God Had Not Forgotten

Jacob. Had it been otherwise, his weak faith would have been early lost in the

Would this throw Jacob wholly upon God? Would he now, at last, really believe that the Lord was with him, and would not leave him, and would he begin at last to live a life of real confidence in his God? Alas! no. Although he had communion with his God as never before, and angels met him on his way, yet he could not trust God to undertake in regard to his relations with Esau, but he must needs make his own plans. First he sent messengers to tell Esau of his return to the land of Canaan (ver. 3), and when the messengers brought word that Esau was marching to meet him with a force four hundred strong, he took for granted that his brother meant mischief, although God had told him at Bethel: "I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whithersoever thou goest, for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee." Even his very fears did not drive him to rely upon God, he was greatly afraid and distressed; but he began with his usual scheming and divided all his family and possessions into two bands, with the avowed intention of saving either one or the other, in case Esau should make an attack.

He had no Confidence which would stand a test in God's care for him. Perhaps he felt unworthy of it; in any case he acted as having all the responsibility on himself, and as though everything must devolve on him; this is the essence of unbelief. "We which have believed do enter into rest." Abraham's life worldly atmosphere of Laban's household. Jacob had attempted to outwit Laban, instead of trusting God to deal with him, and when, after twenty years of hard service, God allowed things to come to a crisis between the two kinsmen, and Laban's countenance was not towards Jacob as before, God took the opportunity to step in and draw Jacob's attention to himself. "Return unto the land of thy fathers and to thy kindred, and I will be with thee." Once before God had said at Bethel: "Behold I am with thee," but Jacob's unbelief had questioned it: "It God will be with me." Now God comes down to his imperfect apprehension of him, and says: "I will be with thee." Yet even this, the chief part of God's communication, was left out by him when he told Leah and Rachel of the vision. And it did not prevent him from his accustomed habit of outwitting Laban; he must needs steal away unawares to Laban. And God did not permit that this plan should answer, and he had the humbling experience of Laban's overtaking him, reproaching him, and of his farewells, leaving their last interview one in which he, Jacob, appeared to little advantage, and left no mark for God behind him.

CONVEYING FLOCKS OF SHEEP ACROSS THE JORDAN NEAR JACOB'S HALTING PLACE.

was a life of rest even in his trials, and so was Joseph's; while poor, doubting Jacob was always in trouble and vexation.

After, not before he had made his plans, Jacob went to prayer,—Jacob first, God second; and yet the long suffering of God held out in his patience towards him. It is now that he is brought to the point of doubting whether even his plans will answer that he recalls the word of God: Thou "saidst unto me Return unto thy country and to thy kindred, and I will deal well with thee. I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies and of all the truth which thou hast showed unto thy servant." Now Jacob is becoming broken and is beginning at last, in some adequate manner, to appreciate his God. "Deliver me, he says, "I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau," for two reasons. 1st, "I fear him." 2nd, "Thou saidst"—now he is looking at God. If God suffers him to be slain with his children, what will become of the promise? After prayer he make a different disposition of his property, sent on a present to Esau and then he sent over the brook Jabbok before him all his family and remaining possessions.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for Use of Sunday School Teachers.

OUR study returns this week to the life of Jacob, whom we left, one morning after his wonderful dream, setting out from Bethel to seek home among his mother's relatives at Padan-aram. We find him after forty years, returning to the place where his father still lived, and which his descendants were to possess. He is rich in flocks and herds, and is the father of twelve children. He is yet in the land of Gilead, some distance east of the Jordan when he hears news that his brother Esau, to whom he had sent a conciliatory message, is coming to meet him with four hundred men. Evidently Esau's purpose is hostile and Jacob's heart sinks. Like a prudent general, Jacob takes the worst course open to him, dividing his company and sending Esau a present. He sends his flocks and the women and children forward and remains behind, alone to pray. All human skill and foresight can do by way of precaution, has been done, and now Jacob looks up to God in whose hand the future lies. Looking back over his past life, he realizes how unworthy he is of God's protection, but he pleads that he is in the line of duty and reminds God of his promise. It is an awful crisis and Jacob spends the whole night in prayer. How earnest a prayer was we can imagine. Writing, afterwards, of that night's spiritual conflict the sacred chronicler compares it to the struggle of a wrestler. Charles Wesley finely embodied the same idea in a famous hymn. The ancient myth of the struggle of Hercules, from which he went away limping, is based on a similar conception. Jacob conceals his victory comes through reliance on God and faith. His own strength fails. Under the figure of the shriveling of the sciatic nerve, his helplessness is imaged. He can no longer contend, but he can plead the promises of God. He clings to him and to them until day breaks, and then he has triumphed. He learned that night was necessary to him. He learned, as we have done since, who have trusted their strength and cunning to gain ends, that the blessing comes when they cease to depend on themselves and lying helpless and faint, trust only in God.

I am not worthy. That confession is the basis of all appeals. The man who approaches God with the thought that he deserves the blessing is unlikely to get it. After a certain defeat the defeated general was brought prisoner into the tent of his successful enemy. Before the war they had fought and the prisoner held out his hands to shake hands. "Give your sword first," said the conqueror. He could hold no relations with the vanquished until an acknowledgment was made of defeat.

Deliver me, I pray thee. A British clergyman relates an incident that he heard from the lips of a judge. The judge was trying a case in which the parties were too poor to employ counsel. He was a very pious man and full confidence in the justice of his cause and his ability to present it clearly, took charge of his own case. But when opposing counsel had made his speech the man's courage failed. It was a very plausible speech and it put him where he was wrong. The judge called on him for his defense and he hesitated and stammered all the power of argument that he thought possessed seemed to desert him. He asked the judge if he might pray. Counsel was given and the man knelt down. "Seest, O Lord," he said, "how this law has misrepresented the facts. I thought I could explain all; but I cannot. De vindicate me." And he went on to tell what he had been unable to tell the judge. To the surprise of all he won his case.

My life is preserved. A Scotch keeper relates that while going through a meadow near Elgin, he became interested in the effort of a lark to escape the pursuit of a hawk. To his astonishment, the lark, in desperation made a sudden dive into the water where it cowered palpitating and quivering. He sheltered it until the hawk was away, when he released it and the lark flew upward with a song of joy.

An illustration of the power of maternal affection is furnished by an incident reported in a journal of Kansas City, Mo. I say that a woman and a boy sixteen years old are there awaiting the arrival of three children from St. John, Kans., before setting out for Detroit, Mich. They lived in the last mentioned city until last September, when the mother, hearing of the opening of the Cherokee Strip, stowed her household goods in a wagon and drove there to take up land. She did not understand the formalities to be observed and was easily outwitted. Her claim passed out of her hands and she was compelled to seek a home elsewhere. She did not know where to go.

THE MUTILATED MESSAGE.

A Sermon Preached last Sunday morning by Rev. R. S. MacArthur, D.D. Text: Jeremiah 36: 23. "And it came to pass when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with a penknife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth."

THE period of Jewish history with which the text stands connected is, even to some intelligent Christians, largely a "terra incognita." Let us strive to get a clear idea of the character of it. The Kingdom of Judah was a kingdom only in name at this time; it was really in a state of alternate vassalage between Egypt and Assyria. The kings of Judah were kings only in name; they were retained or dismissed according to the whims or political exigencies of their masters. It was a time of misrule and imbecility on the part of the king, and of suffering and despair on the part of the people. Enormous taxes were raised from the people to satisfy the demand of foreign powers, and also to gratify the pride and folly of the nominal king. Foreign oppression was matched by home cruelty. The state of the country was indescribably bad, and it was constantly growing worse. The distant mutterings of were heard. The cup of God's wrath was fast filling; and its fearful contents would soon be poured out in fury upon the people. At this crisis one man stands before the people with majestic pose, and utters the voice of authoritative warning. It is none other than Jeremiah, the great, noble and suffering prophet of the most high God. He was very young and timid when the word of the Lord, in the thirteenth year of Josiah, came to him while he lived at Anathoth. Protected in his earlier years by the influence of the pious Josiah, he became under Jehoiakim the object of fierce attack, and his prophetic ministry was opposed alike by the king, the priests, the prophets and the populace. He was brought before the civil authorities and they were urged to inflict capital punishment upon him because of his threatening prophecy. Nevertheless, all through this dark period, he strove to avert, or at least, to lessen the force of the blow, which he saw must soon fall upon the land. That tremendous empire, the Assyrian, was then in great power, splendor and glory; and Babylon was its capital instead of Nineveh. Nebuchadnezzar was associated with his father in ruling over the kingdoms, and he was in command of the forces of Assyria. It was a time when the very earth seemed to tremble beneath the tread of these mighty armies. They were advancing with irresistible power; and carnage and triumph marked every step of their progress. Most clearly did the prophetic eye of Jeremiah see the coming storm. Long had he striven to bring the people back to their allegiance to God; in royal palace and in sacred temple he fearlessly, patriotically and piously lifted up his warning voice. But his words were unheeded by the infatuated people; they were deaf alike to warning and entreaty.

The Coming Storm

The King's Death.

The long threatened storm is now near; the cyclonic destruction is at hand. Long ago would its fury have burst upon the people, but for the virtues of the good King Josiah. But he was wounded by a random arrow in the battle near Megiddo, was removed by his attendants from the war chariot, and was finally borne in sorrow to Jerusalem, where he died after a reign of thirty-one years. Deeply was he lamented by all his subjects. So sad a death had never been known in Jewish history; and Jeremiah composed an elegiac ode on the occasion, an ode which was long preserved in the memory of the minstrels as a national lamentation. But Jehoiakim will learn nothing from the warnings of God's prophet, or the inflictions of God's providence. He hastens blindly and madly to certain destruction; he is given over to every form of vice among men and of impiety toward God.

It is possible for us now to get the immediate surroundings of the story so that its facts and lessons may be the more fully impressed upon our minds. It is now the 4th year of the reign of Jehoiakim, and about the year 605 B. C. God's word came to Jeremiah, commanding him to write a summary of all the sermons which he had preached since the 3rd year of Josiah; and the hope is expressed that the people will hear and the instructions of his prophet. But Jeremiah had not the pen of a ready writer; in this respect Baruch, the scribe, the son of Neriah, excelled; he is, therefore, employed as Jeremiah's amanuensis. There had been confidential relations between these two men previous to this time. It seems likely that Jeremiah was now "shut up" in some such sense that he could not himself go into the house of the Lord. Baruch, therefore, wrote the predictions on pieces of parchment; these pieces were joined together, the top of one to the bottom of the other, thus making a long scroll, which would naturally be rolled on a staff prepared for the purpose. Jeremiah was at this time in some sort a prisoner; perhaps he was not in close confinement, but he was at least forbidden by Jehoiakim the king, from appearing in the temple. By silencing the prophet of God, Jehoiakim thought he could defeat the purpose of God. Jeremiah, therefore, deputed Baruch to go and to read the prediction publicly on the fast day. A year passes, either in preparing the book or in other readings of it, before this great and formal presentation. The government seems to be somewhat alarmed, as a fast day has been appointed. Perhaps the hostile armies are now near, the famine, slavery, and death, with all the other horrors of war, stare the people in the face. It is now, as many suppose, about the year 600 B. C., and Baruch, the amanuensis of Jeremiah, and the sharer of his dungeon, appeared in the chamber of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan, who was friendly to the cause, and standing in the window or balcony, or, as Dean Stanley suggests, on the platform or pillar on which the king stood on solemn occasions, he repeated and fearful prophecies to the people assembled for the national fast. Micaiah descended the Temple hill and informed the princes; they were met in council in the palace, in the apartments of the chief secretary, as was the custom during these troublous times. They summoned the people to the house of the Lord, although they do not seem to have come themselves. Now Baruch is sent for by Jehudi, the descendant of a noble house and a page of the king, and ordered to sit down and read to them the roll. This Baruch readily did, giving an account of the manner in which the prophecy had been composed. The princes were much affected as they patiently listened; they trembled with fear as did Felix. The reproofs were terrible, the threatenings solemn, and the predictions sure. For a time consternation seems to have prevailed over the minds of all the counsellors; and they finally agreed to tell the king what they had heard. But knowing the cruelty of the king they advised Jeremiah and Baruch to leave the roll and to hide themselves. These counsellors were moved by fright, but they were not subdued by faith; they were convinced, but they were not converted.

The Voice of God

The Sad Lamentations

The roll has now been read to the people; it has also been recited to the princes, to whose hearts it strikes terror. Now the fierce and lawless king must hear its fearful contents. The roll is laid up in the chamber of Elishama, the scribe, in the chamber where the princes heard it read, and they tell the king, who sends Jehudi to bring it. Jehudi obeys. The king sits by his fire in his winter parlor on that December day, sits by the charcoal pan or brazier which stood on the hearth. The princes stand around him filled with alarm because of the threatenings of God's wrath, and because of the easily aroused wrath of the king. Jehudi reads the roll; reads it perhaps imperfectly; reads it with comparatively little appreciation of its contents. Better if it had been read by Baruch or Jeremiah. The king, however, soon catches its meaning. Its bitter denunciations fill him with uncontrollable wrath. But three or four of the pages, or rather columns, were recited when the king's patience was exhausted; he seized the penknife, such as scribes usually had for cuttings and erasures, and cut the parchment into strips; and, notwithstanding the remonstrances of his counsellors, threw it into the fire on the hearth, and soon it was consumed. He then ordered Jeremiah and Baruch to be seized, but they had followed the suggestions given them and had hid themselves so that they could not be found. The act of the king was it was an act of daring impiety; it was an awful affront to the God of heaven. The king was impatient of reproof; he was determined to pursue his own course, resolved to persist in sin. He would have cut up and burned the preacher instead of the sermon, if he could have laid his hands on him. No wonder that the memory of his impious act lingered long with the people; no wonder that the Jews, even to this day, commemorate the burning of this roll by an annual fast. Jehoiakim was determined to run against the thick bosses of the Almighty's buckler; he was determined to defy God and to invite the just wrath of the Almighty.

An Abominable Outrage;

This story of the olden time furnishes us with many lessons for modern life. We learn, first, from this story that God has many ways of rebuking and warning men. The method that he uses depends upon the nature of the person to be rebuked, and upon all the circumstances of the case. He rebuked Pharaoh in many ways and by means of varied instrumentalities. He spoke to Nebuchadnezzar in language which he could not fail to understand. He uttered a warning voice to Belshazzar by the writing on the wall which Daniel interpreted. Through the instrumentality of Pilate's wife, a noble Roman woman, he spoke to Pilate's judgment and conscience. God still speaks with varied voices and in the use of manifold arguments.

Men Ought to Listen

in the whirl of business, in the quiet home, on a bed of sickness, and in the House of God, to the voice of the Eternal, speaking in warning and in exhortation, in rebuke and in promise. To-day, O men and women, harden not your hearts, but listen to the voice of God warning you of danger, summoning you to repentance, and proffering you his full and free forgiveness.

We may learn again that men's hearts may become so hardened that they will not heed God's warning. Jehoiakim determined to do what he desired, whatever God's prophet might say. The inevitable result of slighting God's warning is that the heart becomes hard. The boy who blushed when he stole an apple may finally dye his hand in the blood of his fellow men without compunction. The sponge attracts to itself particle of silex until finally it becomes a silicious mass. So the heart changes into stone; so men and women may reach a stage when they literally are "past feeling." This condition is one of the most terrific consequences of persistence in disobedience to God and in the practice of sin. I may here appeal to your own experience. Some of you are distinctly conscious that once your hearts were tender, that once your tears flowed in a penitent flood, that once you were willing that men should know that you were anxious about your soul. But now all such emotions are gone, you have become hardened; you are imitating the example of Pharaoh and that of Jehoiakim. Oh it is terrible to carry in one's bosom a stone instead of a heart! I beseech you that to-day you listen to the voice of warning and of entreaty. Remember that "he that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy."

You are Resisting God;

We learn also that some men think they can avert God's threatenings by destroying or disbelieving God's communication "Abominable parchment!" So Jehoiakim may have said. "How it disturbs my pleasures; away with it; begone miserable old prophet!" So he throws the parchment on the coals in the brazier. See burn! Now it is consumed! Now, the king seems to say, "The judgments of God cannot come." Was ever foolish man foolish, was ever childish petulance so puerile? Did not God know how to execute sentence when the roll was burned? Did the roll cause the approaching disaster? You expect to go on an excursion some summer day; you examine the weather the morning paper; you wish to discover what are the indications for the day. You read, "showers at intervals all morning. Are you so silly as to destroy that paper the hope that it may avert those showers? The doctrines of God's Word are unwelcome to some men; therefore, these doctrines are untrue; of a just and holy God; therefore, they deny that there is a God. Men of this class were known to and characterized by the Psalmist when he said, "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God." It was a fool who was guilty of this atheistic declaration, and even he said it in his heart rather than in his head; for the head of even a fool knows better. He wished that there was no God; therefore, he affirmed that there is no God. Men deny that there is a hell; they deny its existence because they fear its reality. The Bible does not create hell; the Bible only reveals it. In revealing it we have a proof of the love of God to the children of men. Christ gives us the fullest revelation of hell that we ever had; indeed, he uncovered the pit. I gave us this revelation to guard us from destruction, as the brakeman swings his lamp to warn the approaching train of danger. Christ was as loving in his warnings as in his invitations.

They Fear the Judgment

Again we learn from this story that God's Word shall stand whatever men may do or say. God's threatenings shall be fulfilled, and additional ones shall be given and additional dangers incurred. Jeremiah and Baruch had to flee from the wrath of the king; his rage knew no bounds. I was not willing to confess his sins so turned against him for his sin. Baruch was disheartened at the failure of his mission; but Jeremiah knew God better than did his amanuensis, so he commanded Baruch to take his pen and write again the terrible message. He thus came to pass that the counsel of God against the king stood sure; that a fire roll was written with the addition of further and awful denunciation, occasioned by the king's foolish and sacrilegious act. The king and the country are doomed; the cup of God's wrath must be emptied. The cloud charged with fire and brimstone will for a time held over Sodom, but it was removed; its contents at the appointed moment were poured out. The postponement of the affliction upon Jehoiakim was not indefinite. God's Word could not be destroyed. It is like the burning bush—burns but is not consumed. This terrible prediction regarding the king was made "He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David; and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost." But even this terrible threat made but little impression upon him, for he still continued to sin against the Lord his God. The blessed Bible has been often burned; but as it comes forth from its ashes. The written Word is indestructible; the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but not one jot or tittle of the divine Word shall perish. The unbelief of man shall not make the word of the ever-living God of non-effect. You may burn the book, but you cannot destroy the Word; you may break the table of stone but the finger of God shall write the law on other stones. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeeth; but the word of God shall stand for ever." Glorious Bible! Blessed revelation! This book will stand when all its critics are utterly forgotten. Ever threat, as well as every promise, shall be fulfilled. Because you do not read the Bible perhaps do not believe it or its author, you do not by your unbelief blot out perdition or dethrone God. God's Word, like God's three brave witnesses, may be put into the furnace, heated seven times hotter than it want to be heated, but it shall come forth without the smell of fire on its leaves. Disobedience on the part of Judah's king, brought into his own heart more arrows from God's quiver. A worse thing, Christ imitates, might come to the man healed at the pool of Bethesda than his infirmity of thirty and eight years. There are still other arrows in the quiver of the Almighty. O men and women, believe and obey God's word to-day! If you do, it will be well with you in time and blessed with you in eternity.

The Preacher Who Rebuked

A Divine and Sacred Phoenix

We may learn still one other lesson. No man can oppose God and prosper. Hear the conclusion of this story of the olden time. The wrath of God came upon the king and his whole family. The King of kings will not lightly pass over the indignity which the king of Judah put on his law and on his word. Jehoiakim was perhaps especially angry because in the roll it was said that the king of Babylon shall certainly come and all destroy the land. He despised the warning; he heeded none of God's reproofs. A few years pass; he is deluded by the Egyptian party in his court and so he ventures to withhold his tribute and then to throw off the Chaldean yoke. Against this step Jeremiah earnestly remonstrated, but Jehoiakim violated his oath and hastened to his ruin. He would rather lavish his tribute on his own luxury and pride, than pay it to the king of Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar having taken Carchemish, crossed the Euphrates and soon overran the whole of Palestine. Soon he is at the gates of Jerusalem; and Jehoiakim was well-nigh powerless. He admitted Nebuchadnezzar into Jerusalem under certain conditions; and these conditions, with his usual fatuity, he immediately disregarded. Soon he was himself in chains to be carried a prisoner to Babylon. Alike in the history of Josephus and in various books of the Bible, much obscurity hangs over

The Story of His Death.
In I. Kings 24: 6, he is said to have slept with his fathers; and in II. Chron. 36: 6, to have been put in chains to be carried to Babylon; and in Jeremiah he is said to have had the burial of an ass. All the narratives can be grouped so as to show that on his commission he was reinstated on his throne at that three years afterward he endeavored to throw off the yoke of Chaldea; then he was for a time imprisoned, and finally this cruel and weak king was slain; but whether by the hands of his subjects or by foreign foes it is not easy to determine. His body was thrown over the wall and exposed night and day, and after a time it was carried away and "buried with the burial of an ass." The temple was plundered and many noble young men, perhaps among them Daniel and the three well-known captives were carried away into captivity; and he began the seventy years of painful captivity.

Jehoiakim, the son of the godly and noble Jehoiada, died weeping and unsung, and was buried without pomp or lamentation, but with ignominy and detestation. O the folly of opposing God! O the unspeakable guilt of lifting our puny arm against the Almighty! Let men contend with men, but woe unto him who contends with his Maker! Men and women submit today to the pleading of God's love, to the creations of his grace, to the voice of his wrappings. Submit to his gentle authority and rejoice in his fatherly love. Transfer your allegiance from Satan to Christ, thus yielding your hearts to his love, which is greater than a mother's, while his arm is mightier than God's.

CRUCIFIXION IN AFRICA.

Several missionaries in Africa have found, to their surprise, that in preaching of the crucifixion there was a remarkable manifestation of intelligence on the part of the natives. It appears that many tribes are perfectly familiar with this method of execution. Mr. Haupt of Bongandanga, says: "The other day I was talking to one of the natives about crucifixion, which used to be practiced here, and is still among the tribes away from the white men. This man told me that he had seen several crucifixions on a certain well-known tree at Ikau. He also mentioned the horrible fact that some of the victims hung there with broken limbs for five days before death took place. Their cries of anguish and entreaties to be killed were all unheeded. It is the custom to put a slave to this abominable death to seal the covenant, when two parties have concluded a treaty of peace."

Early Seeking.

"Those that seek me early shall find me."—Prov. 8: 17.

EDWARD A. BARNES.

ROBERT LOWRY.

1. Ear-ly will I wake, and heed the call, The day-star to be - hold;
2. Ear-ly will I kneel, and at His feet Ac - cept the bet - ter part;
3. Ear-ly will I think of ho - ly things, And search the Scriptures o'er;

Ear-ly will I take what is for all, The gift of love un - told.
Ear-ly will I take His say-ings sweet, And hide them in my heart.
Ear-ly will I come to liv-ing springs, And drink and thirst no more.

Ear - ly, ear - ly, ear - ly will I seek Him, Ear - ly, ear - ly seek the bless - ed Lord; Ear - ly, ear - ly, ear-ly will I seek Him, Earnestly, joy-ful-ly fol-low His word."

Copyright, 1889, by Biglow & Main.

From SUNNY-SIDE SONGS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS, by per. of the Publishers.

THE VERDICT.

Written for "The Christian Herald."

HASTE, jailor haste! yon pris'ner's chains to loose,
Here's pardon free, for him what joyful news!

"One charged with dark revolt, with guiltless breast, Shall he go free indeed?"

Yea of a truth; from Pilate's judgment hall
Came we, e'en now this verdict there did fall

"The Nazarene must die!" wondrous behest
Barabbas shall be freed.

Withal not strange; of old upon their feast
These clam'rous Jews a pris'ner have released;

'Tis granted now the people's unjust plea.
Despite man's frenzied cry,

Whose passions all on swift revenge are bent—
Spake Pilate (in his judgment more relent):

"In him, whom ye accuse I fail to see A cause why he should die."

Howbeit all the more the tumult reigned,
That Pilate's voice not e'en an hearing gained;

The stigma of another's guilt they will Thrust on their victim's head.

Hearken, the tramp of many feet Without,

There is no longer room for any doubt,
Forthwith toward the brow of yonder hill

To meet his doom he's led.

Ah! thou my soul, view here Heav'n's matchless grace,

That loosed thy bonds, and suffered in thy place;

Thine is a Saviour's spotless righteousness

His is thy guilt and shame,
List! sweetly doth a gracious verdict sound

"In thee no condemnation shall be found Thy pardon's sealed with blood." O, bless,

My soul, his holy name.

—New Brunswick, N. J. MRS. MARY LUTZ.

THE CALLING OF THE BRIDE.

The Identity, Selection and Preparation of the People whom Christ will Make His Bride at His Coming.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE Bride of the Lamb never appears in the Word of God until Rev. 19, after the destruction of Babylon, which is typical of the false church. Then we have these glorious words: "And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." In Rev. 21: 2, we read: "And I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a Bride adorned for her husband." And these words are but the preface of the whole of this wonderful chapter which speaks of the Lord's coming for his bride.

In Matt. 24: 27, we read: "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall the coming of the Son of Man be." And yet, in the very same chapter, and in the very same discourse of our Lord, he speaks thus of another aspect of his coming: "Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken and the other left."

The first wonderful description of a coming which shall be the consummation of a time of trouble greater than the flood itself, for it is "such as was not from the beginning of the world till this time, no, nor ever shall be." Surely in such a time the work in the field will be neglected, and the grinding at the mill will cease; but in verses forty and forty-one he speaks of agricultural pursuits going on as usual as if there were no previous signs of the event.

May it not be that these are two distinct parts of the coming of the Lord, and that the last mentioned shall have priority of the first? How can it come unawares if such terrible catastrophes precede it as shall cause a disruption of the very elements themselves? Where would be the need for the exhortation, "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man," if it did not refer to that selection we have read of where one shall be taken and the other left? Why, then, shall there be such a selection? A man may receive into his house visitors and servants, but he does not put his name upon them; he gives his name to none other but his Bride. The Lamb of God is seeking a Bride who leaves her name for his name, her all for him. He woos her with no promise of dowry, but by the call to self-renunciation like his own. "Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house; so shall the King greatly desire thy beauty: for he is thy Lord; and worship thou him." (Ps. 45: 10, 11). It is her call to "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." (Rev. 14: 4). As Christ pleased not himself, so it is her privilege to deny herself and take up her cross and follow him. (Matt. 16: 24).

Here we see the distinction between the coming of Christ for his servants and the coming for his Bride.

The betrothal takes place down here. In the midst of the frets and the worries of daily life, we can take our Lord for better for worse; here we can learn the suffering with him which brings about the truest unity; here and now we may learn to subject our wills to him.

Who then is the Bride? Until he has formed her none will know who are the members of that company who will make a help answering to him as Eve to Adam (Gen. 2: 18, R. V.). She will never exist until the last member is educated by him in the school of suffering and of patience. She will never be visible until she has "the glory of God." The one chaste virgin; the one "perfect man," perhaps the one Man-child, the fruit of the woman clothed with the Sun whom we take to be the true Church of Christ. His calling to every believer is the same: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."

Let us take heed to ourselves, and see whether we have responded or not, to this call, and whether we can be rightly said to be waiting for the Bridegroom."

PRAYER.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Commencing April 1. Matt. 6: 3-15.

EVERY Christian has probably been troubled, at some period of his life about the mystery of prayer. Will the Almighty Maker of the heavens and the earth listen to the petitions of one among the many millions of his creatures? Will he change his plans at the request of a being so insignificant? Can we reasonably expect his attention to our little troubles and difficulties and count on his interference for our relief? Such questions force themselves on the mind and will not be excluded. Yet the difficulties are of our own making. Jesus, who surely knew whereof he spoke, enjoined prayer and gave assurance of answers. It is not a subject for reasoning but for trust. In this matter we are in the position of children in relation to a father. Jesus used that very illustration. If you, he said, being evil know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will your heavenly Father give good gifts to those who ask him! How then does a wise and loving father deal with his children? However large his business, or public concerns may be, the requests of his children are not matters of indifference to him. Not that he grants them all. He would be neither wise nor loving if he did. In his child's own interest he is obliged to refuse some requests. The little ten-year-old boy who would rather spend his time in the play-ground than in the school, would be injured by having all his requests granted. The time comes when he realizes the fact, when he understands his father better, when he knows that it is his own best good that his father desires and he asks in that larger light very few requests that his father cannot grant. So Jesus said, "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." He who abides in Jesus and in whom Jesus' words abide is not likely to ask anything that God is indisposed to grant. He will not ask for wealth, because he seeks first the kingdom of God; he will not ask for fame or power, because he seeks not his own advancement; he does not ask relief from suffering or trial, but for grace to bear it patiently. Jesus' words abiding in him keep him from vain and foolish desires. He does not worry about how God answers prayer, for Jesus' words satisfy him that he does answer it. Beside the direct result, there is also another reason for prayer in the reflex benefit it confers. He that raises his face Godward is elevated by the act. To be in God's presence is of itself purifying and ennobling. It was no myth that the face of Moses shone after communion with God; something of the ineffable glory is still reflected from the countenance of those who live much in his presence. Carlyle said there could be no religion without prayer, or at best, only a maimed one, and many have proved it so. Power to overcome innate evil, power against temptation and power for service all come through that channel. Light and life and liberty are won there and they are gained as Christ gained them to bless the world, for every such endowment is not for hoarding, but for use among men.

FOR THE CLEVELAND CONVENTION.

Arrangements are being rapidly pushed forward for the great International Christian Endeavor Convention which is to meet at Cleveland, O., on July 11. It is expected that the attendance will not be far short of forty thousand. Applications for accommodation have already been received from ten thousand delegates. The Auditorium will seat nine thousand persons, Music Hall five thousand, and a large tent has been rented which will accommodate ten thousand. These, with the churches which will be placed at the disposal of the Committee, will it is thought, suffice for the Convention. The Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, to whom all applications should be sent, and who will be glad to answer inquiries from societies and delegates is Mr. Norman E. Hills, 372 Sibley St. Cleveland.

EIGHT NOBLE KING'S DAUGHTERS.

Our readers among the King's Daughters will be glad to see the picture which appears on this page of a group of Presidents of Circles. They are taken from the "Silver Cross," by the courteous permission of Mrs. Isabella Charles Davis, the Secretary of the General Council. Unhappily there has been of late in all sections of the country an opportunity all too extensive for the work

PROMINENT LEADERS OF CIRCLES OF KING'S DAUGHTERS.

- | | | | |
|--------------------------|------------------------|----------------------|------------------------|
| 1. Mrs. W. D. Bennett. | 3. Mrs. A. D. Shipley. | 5. Mrs. C. A. Morly. | 7. Miss Nellie Hazen. |
| 2. Mrs. Clara Hilsinger. | 4. Mrs. E. B. Lobdell. | 6. Miss Emma Drew. | 8. Mrs. W. D. Edwards. |

which the Order of King's Daughters was organized to do. Destitution and bitter need have been prevalent, taxing the resources of the various Circles as they have never been taxed before. Right nobly has the call been met. In all our cities the King's Daughters have proved worthy of the name they bear, for they have ministered to the poor in his name and alleviated many a sorrow.

Mrs. W. D. Bennett, whose portrait is No. 1 in the group, is President of the Mizpah Christmas Circle in Brooklyn, under whose auspices the Mizpah Seamen's Home is conducted. The Circle has been active during the period of distress collecting funds which have been expended in coal, clothing and food for the needy. Mrs. Clara Hilsinger, whose portrait is No. 2 in the picture, is President of the W. C. T. U. Circle at Sidney, N. Y., which has also done excellent work in the relief of the destitute. Many members of the Circle are not wealthy, but they have contributed their labor, which after all is a better test of Christian spirit than gifts of money. Mrs. A. D. Shipley (No. 3) is President of Adeline Circle, Baltimore, Md. This Circle also makes the poor and needy its chief concern and has been able in many ways to show its zeal in the Master's cause. Mrs. E. B. Lobdell (No. 4), is President of Tryphena Circle, Brooklyn, N. Y. This is one of the Circles that have adopted the cent a day plan, and has found the benefit of the systematic arrangement. The Home for the Aged, several institutions, and many deserving families have benefited by the help rendered by this circle. Mrs. C. A. Morly (No. 5), is President of Harmony Circle, Jamestown, N. Y. This is a Methodist Circle. It has raised a hundred dollars to repair the church with which it is connected, and its twenty-five members are thoroughly devoted to Sunday School and other church work. Miss Emma Drew (No. 6) organized The King's Messengers' Circle of Burlington, Vt., and still continues its President. None of the members are over fifteen years of age, but they are enthusiastic lovers of the Order and are working in its spirit. They have made caps for poor boys, have collected a basket of toys for a school of poor girls, have sent gifts to the Hospitals, and have in no way fallen behind their elder sisters in the Order in good works. Miss Nellie Hazen presides over the Whatsoever Circle at Leona, Kans. It has the credit of having raised nearly three hundred dollars for the renovation of the one church of the

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Reader, Philadelphia, Pa. Will you inform me who is the author of the following?

"When the stroke of thy flail is upon me, let me not be as the rebellious chaff, that flieeth in the face of the threshers, but rather as the scoured and naked grain, that falleth in submission at his feet."

Probably some reader may be able to supply the information asked.

The Jail and Hospital Committee of Houston, Texas, can use back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and other religious literature that our readers can send to them. They have more calls for good literature from hospitals and prison-cells than they can supply. Address, care of G. W. Gaines, drug store, corner Capital street and Texas avenue, Houston, Tex.

Subscriber, Sedalia, Mo. Should a member of a church leave the church or cling to it, when it insists on doubting in the conversion of its members and in praying for them and no one else?

Possibly the walk and conversation of many of the members are such as to justify a doubt of their conversion, and to make them fit subjects of imploration. Still, it is difficult to conceive of a warm-hearted Christian church in which there are no converts whose Christianity is beyond all question. Why not talk the matter over with your pastor before taking any further steps?

Julius Rauch, Pittsburg, Pa. The proposition of S. M. Beach, Chicago, for the formation of a national relief organization, as he explains it is an excellent one, and eminently practical. Such a project would secure hundreds of supporters in this city, if not thousands. It is high time that Christian philanthropy were organized, so that the really deserving poor would be benefited.

Marie Whitcombe, Dubuque, Ia. Our family and not a few of our acquaintances, were glad to be able to help a little in the Food Fund charity, and we all think highly of the plan mentioned in this week's CHRISTIAN HERALD by a correspondent in Chicago, for a union of Christian people for the purpose of keeping the worthy poor wherever they may be found. We hope that the HERALD will see its way to put the plan into practical operation soon.

Subscriber, Montclair, N. J. What a blessing it would be if such a thing as I read of in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—a national union of Christian hearts and hands for the relief of suffering and affliction among "God's poor"—could be realized! Such an organization is sorely needed and would be widely and generously supported. It is a reproach to our land that, with all our professed Christianity and progress, there should be such a thing as destitution among the honest and industrious poor. The State can take care of the criminal and the lazy, but surely God's children ought themselves to care for their own brothers and sisters when affliction comes.

Other letters in reply to S. M. Beach, Chicago, are necessarily laid over till next week. For lack of space,

A. G. B., Fulton, Ky. Was Ham's color changed or that of his posterity? Genesis, ninth chapter, teaches Ham did the sinning, or displeased his father, but the curse fell upon Canaan, and the curse seems to be servitude, but I wish to know the beginning and cause of their black color. Was Ham himself black? I studied in my Sunday School class that Ham's color was a curse. Please answer speedily, as I have to give an early answer. It was about four weeks ago that I read—Ham's color was a curse, because of disobedience or sin.

The word "Ham" (with its Egyptian equivalent "Ken"), signifies "black," "swarthy," "sunburnt." Commentators assume that the names of the sons of Noah were prophetic in their signification. This is stated in the case of Noah (Gen. 5: 29), and implied as to Japheth (Gen. 9: 27), and was presumably so as to the other sons. It is not assumed that the color of Ham was changed. The complexion of his descendants was the result of climatic influences.

J. E. Holt, Laurel, Mass. When and by whom were the books of the Bible divided into chapters and verses as we now have them?

There are disputes as to both the time and the person. It was formerly supposed that the division into chapters was done about A. D. 1240 by an assemblage of learned divines under the presidency of Cardinal Hugh of St. Cher. Recently, however, a book has been found, dated A. D. 1059, in which there is a reference to the Twelfth Chapter of Exodus, which shows that the Bible was then divided as now. The division into verses appears in no edition earlier than 1545, which was issued by Robert Stephens.

Belle Gregory, Gano, Texas. 1. No, it is positively untrue. 2. Neither tradition nor the Bible state how long he was so occupied.—A. H. F., Harman, O. Write to Rev. A. B. Simpson, 662 8th Ave. N. Y., about opening for missionary work. Sunday labor can only be excused on the ground of necessity. To accept from choice a position involving Sunday labor would be a distinct violation of God's commandment.—Mrs. E. J. Foley, Elmira, Kan. Her name is not recorded. 2. So Christianity and the Bible teach.—Reader, Herman, Ia. 3. 4. 5. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.—J. M. Schab, Ark. Each county is supposed to take care of its own poor, and in ordinary times is probably able to do so.—Reader, Detroit, Mich. 1. No. 2. It would seem to be a work of necessity to both man and beast.—Mrs. C. Coleman, Richmond, Ma. We believe that women should take an active part in all good works.—Elizabeth Roman, Centerville, Ia. In which sermon do you find such a statement?—J. D. Cochran, Ore. It is impossible to answer our inquiries, as no history or tradition furnish any data on the subject.—S. E. Madam, Hartland, Kan. The Bible does not give the time.—J. A. Armstrong, Toronto. Address Mrs. Sankey, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

1. J. B. Dilley, Oregon. The "Helps to the Study of the Bible," which we will mail to you free, are the best. 2. We know of no Executive Committee. Write to the American S. Union, Philadelphia.—Mrs. H. A. Early, Ferndale, Cal. Mr. Vatman's address is Metropolitan Hall, 14th St. N. Y.—G. H. Robertson, Penryn, Cal. There is such a pillar, which tradition declares marks the spot where Lot's wife perished.—Rev. W. D. Cox, Whitesville, Ky. 1. $1,000. 2. Twelve weeks.

The Scottish Associations have placed another soldier at the Cross in the foreign field. The Leith Fellowship Union is to be represented in China by Mr. Alexander Menzies (formerly of Perth), towards whose support in connection with the China Inland Mission $250 a year is subscribed.

Fudda's Betrothal.

An Oriental Woman Describes this most Interesting Ceremony to our Traveler.

IT is something to get fast hold of a woman in this country who does not take fright at the sight of notebook and fountain-pen. It is something more to secure one who knows of herself just what I wish to find out and to report.

Best of all it is to discover that my brave woman, my well-informed woman and the woman who can speak Arabic fluently and English graphically, are one and the same, and cheerfully at my service.

I have seated her in my room and given her due notice that I mean to make use of her to the utmost. Circumstances—not the least formidable of which is the accident of my foreign birth and breeding, have kept me, to some extent, in the outer court when certain ceremonies are performed in the innermost of the home. I may see marriage processions, but as a visitor, not a participant in the festivities and solemnities of the occasion, and when I have sought to "interview" prospective brides and brides' parents, I have been conscious that a meagre outline of history is all that I can obtain.

But here is one who was brought up in Syria, who has used her eyes, ears, tongue, and brain, who has a fine sense of humor and the reportorial faculty of seeing everything, and telling what she has seen. By virtue of some, or all of these advantages, she has assisted at a dozen or more Moslem weddings, and has one fresh in her mind, shall let her tell the story as nearly as possible in her own way. The occasional lapse into native idioms adds flavor to the narrative. I only regret my inability to convey it for my readers as she brightens it for me by gesture and facial play. The nervous action of her strong, supple hands, the flash of eyes and teeth, as she touches the comic feature of the story, would make the language piquante.

She begins apologetically: "You will not mind that I say how strange" rolling the r's richly; "some of the European customs of young men and young women appear to us. I have seen young people who are betrothed walk in the streets, arm-in-arm, and when they do separate, say, for the gentlemen to go into the interior, and the lady to remain here with her mother or friends, he will take her in his arms and kiss her in the sight of others. And these are not common, or vulgar or not educated people. O, but ladies and gentlemen of the best orders in their own land—genteel and religious. The ways of these strangers are wonderful, and may belong to the customs and climate of their countries, but they could not be suffered here—not for one hour. With us, if a girl smile so much as at the man she is to marry, he will not love her—he will cast her off. He will say—and he is wise—if she be light in her behavior to me, she will be light to any other man. She is not to be trusted."

"Yet they must become acquainted with one another, before they are married, and it is natural for a light-hearted girl to smile while talking to a lover."

"She never talks to him!" hands and eyes combining to enforce the declaration. "Usually, she has never seen him unless she catch a glimpse of him through the window, when there is not danger that he will see her peep at him, and despise her for being bold and curious."

"You see it is this way: A man who works, or money from his father or in some way, says to an old woman—perhaps it is his aunt, perhaps it is his cousin, perhaps it is an acquaintance,—'It is time I get married. Do you know any girl that would suit me?'"

"She is always on the outlook, you see, for it is many presents some get in this way, and she has ready an answer:

"O, yes! there is" (we will say) "Fudda, whose father lives near by me. She is a pretty girl, and young and healthy, and of a good family."

"Then she tell him who is her father and her mother, and how respectable they are, and how young and good-looking is the girl. Perhaps she is but ten years old, or she may be fourteen."

"I know," I interrupt, "your girls mature much earlier than ours. A girl of twelve with us is a child, and as for one of ten, she is hardly more than a baby."

My companion is grave enough now: her eyes are dark and moist; she sinks her voice almost to a whisper.

"A girl of ten is a child with us. A child and nothing more."

"Yet I know one who, last week, was married to a man seventy years old! Her father could not give her bread, he was so poor, and this old man gave a good price for her—fifty napoleons, for she is a pretty child."

"A good price! Do fathers sell their children?"

"You shall hear. We do not call it that, but when you have listened, you may say it is what you please. Well! the young man is willing, after what he is told, to marry the girl, and the old woman goes off to see Fudda's mother, just as if she had nothing of importance to say, but was passing by and thought she would make a visit, and presently, when they have had coffee together and smoked a few cigarettes, she says, if Fudda is in the room, 'Will you send your daughter out? I wish to speak with you.' Then she will bring forward the name of the young man, and make many praises of him, and tell how he would wish to marry her daughter. The mother knows, and the old woman who goes between knows, that all depends upon what the father shall say, but they like to talk it over for a long time, maybe two hours, and back the old woman returns to the young man, and says, 'I have made straight the path for you so far as I can. Now, it is for you to act.'"

"I see!" (and I think that I do.) "He must speak to the father and ask permission to address the daughter. That is the custom in some European countries, as well."

It is plain that I am not upon the right line. Her gesture is deprecatory.

"That would not be correct. It would be too much haste—and not at all respectful. The young man goes to his uncle or his brother—if he be an older brother and very sober and—and—degnified, and says—"I want that girl. Will you talk to her father and see what arrangements you can make?" So, the friends—for it is quite usual that he sends two—go to the father and tell what a respectable young man this is, and how respectable and of good family are his parents, and that he wishes to marry his daughter. Perhaps, it may be, that the father is not willing, for some reason, to let the marriage take place. Then, he laughs and puts to scorn all that has been done. He says—"This is some silly gossip of the women. I will give my wife a sound scold for her foolishness. You may go tell your nephew—or your brother, as it may be—that I have no daughter to be married." And there is the end of it all."

"But if the father has no objection?"

"Ah! then it goes on. The father says, 'How much will your friend give for this, my daughter?' Then they bargain and bargain. If she be pretty—very pretty, the father may ask as much as a hundred napoleons. But it is likely that he will not get more than eighty, or maybe, seventy-five. If she be not handsome, maybe he will get but forty. This, when the father is not rich, or when he is greedy and wants the money for himself. You see it is this way: He says, 'I have brought up my girl and had the expense and trouble of her all these years, and she has not earned for me one piastre. Her husband must pay me something for all that.' But the better class of Moslems, and especially of our own people—the Christians" (this includes Roman Catholics, Greeks, and Protestants), "will prefer to have the price paid in jewelry and clothes that will belong to the bride. Then, her father will have to give her nothing from his own house. So—the bargain is made, and the bridegroom and his friends, and the uncle or brother of the bride—and if she have no uncle or brother, perhaps her father, will go to a judge—an advocate—do you call him?"

"A lawyer—do you mean?"

"That is what I would say. They go to a lawyer, and he writes down on a paper how that this man—mentioning his name—desires to have in marriage Fudda, the daughter of such and such a man, and promises to give on such a day, first a ring (the first present must always be a ring), and on another day a silk dress, and again, a gold chain, maybe, or a bracelet, and next another dress, and to this he signs his name, and the witnesses write theirs, and the lawyer signs with his seal, and the paper goes to Fudda's father. This is the 'cere-mo-nee.'"

"I beg your pardon! What did you say?"

"The 'cere-mo-nee.' This is what makes her betrothed to this man. There is no other. No church service. No questions, no answers. No promises. No vows. As soon as what the bridegroom has promised is paid, he can claim his wife. He can go to her father and say, 'I have here your receipts for so much money—or so many dresses and jewelry. Now I will have my wife.' She is his by the law, and if her father did not give her up, the law would take her away from him."

"Once in a great, great while, it happens that the man has promised what he cannot pay, or he is careless, or he is not honest, or he does not care so much for the girl as he did at first. Something like this makes him slow in keeping his engagement. One, two, three, maybe four years are gone, and he has not paid all, and Fudda is living in her father's house, his wife and yet not his wife. By-and-by, the father loses his patience, and he sends word to the man—"This must come to an end. My daughter cannot be married to any other man while she is betrothed to you, and you cannot have her until you have filled your part of the contract. If you can pay what you have promised, do it at once. If you cannot, or do not mean to do it—if you are so disho-no-ra-ble as to wish to put this deesgrace upon me and my daughter—then divorce her, so that I can give her to some better man." If he cannot, or will not keep his engagement, he must divorce her, just as if she were his wife."

"Suppose the poor girl has become attached to him in this time?"

"She could not!" This is said so positively that I am somewhat abashed at having offered the suggestion. "She has never seen him, unless she may have met him, by chance, in the street. Then, it is her duty as a modest woman to turn her head aside"—smiting the action to the sentence—"and hurry by. Of course, he has not once seen her face, for she never stirs out of doors without her veil, and should he come to her father's door on an errand, she must hide in a cupboard, or run behind a curtain, or conceal herself."

"Suppose, though, the young man has kept his word, and all the price is paid, and the lawyer writes his receipt that so many jewelry and dresses, and so much money has passed through his hands to Fudda's father. Sometimes this is done in a few weeks, sometimes in a few days. If the time is short, the girl does not know that she is to be married, or that any man has asked for her until, maybe, two or three days before the wedding. Then, her father will say to her—"On such a day—maybe next Wednesday or Monday—you are to be given in marriage to such a man."

"Whom she has never seen!" I shudder forth.

"It may be that she has never heard his name until that minute."

"What if she refuses to marry him?"

"Ah, then, would not her father give her a good slapping? He would ask her, 'who knows best what is good for you—you, a silly, ignorant child, or your father and your mother? You disobedient, ungrateful girl! And if you would not have your father's curse, and be turned in deesgrace from your father's house, do as you are bid.'"

"And, indeed, madam," interjects my informant, judiciously, "he is in the right of it. What can a girl who has been kept close in-doors when there is any danger of meeting a man, and seen nothing of the world, understand of such things?"

"Are such marriages generally happy?" It is not a query to be dismissed lightly, and she ponders a minute.

"Say there are one hundred marriages made in this way. I should say that ten out of the hundred are not happy. And"—slowly, and again dropping her voice—"I have, myself, known of two girls who threw themselves into a well to escape marrying men chosen by their parents."

A painful pause ensues before I resume the subject: "Now tell me all about Fudda's wedding."

MARION HARLAND.

P. S.—David Jamal has allowed me to read an interesting paper prepared by himself, upon "Marriage Customs in Jerusalem and the adjacent villages." It contains, among other valuable and curious things, a literal translation of an Arabic song sung by the "future bridegroom and his friends and relations" at the betrothal-feast in the house of the bride's father.

At my request, Alcides has written a metrical version, that yet faithfully renders the spirit and almost the language of the original:

O, father of the bride! throw wide each door
To welcome us, the long-robed bridal train.
May Allah, in his mercy evermore
Protect thy home from every grief and pain.
Thy daughter's fame has spread to distant lands,
Men call her graceful, fair and swift of thought,
Her father, prince of gallant desert-bands,
Whose wealth, Aleppo's castle might have bought.
O, father of the bride! be generous.
Ask not a heavy dowry for thy bride:
The gold will perish if his greedier thus
But we, thy friends, remain forever tried.
Then welcome us, thy friends, the wedding guests,
Prepare a feast for us beneath thy dome:
And then, when thou hast granted our behests,
Mount thy swift steed—escort us from thy home.

SYRIAN CHILDREN.

(From a photograph by Marion Harland.)

SYNOPSIS OF EARLIER CHAPTERS.

The opening chapters of the story introduce several Brooklyn families, including the Rev. William C. Barnes and his wife, and Mrs. Alice Paull, an old schoolfellow of the latter. Alice Paull was the daughter of the wealthy Mr. Lanier, now dead, and whose business is in the hands of the son, Mr. Roger Lanier. Mrs. Paull's brother, Her husband, Ernest Paull, whom she married eighteen years before the opening of the story, was an idle, pleasure-loving man, whose neglect and unkindness she had patiently borne. He had lost several business positions and ultimately had embezzled the money of his employers and absconded. He confessed his crime in a letter to his wife's brother, who carried the news to Mrs. Paull. Shocked by the intelligence, she falls sick of brain fever. Her physician, Dr. Bacon, recommends change of air and scene when she becomes convalescent, and accordingly Mrs. Paull, her eldest daughter, Marie, and the other children, with Elspeth, her faithful Scotch servant, remove to Pequod, N. J. Marie, who believes her father to be wrongfully accused and persecuted, secretly corresponds with him, having learned that he is hiding at Nice, France. She specially detests her Uncle Roger, who has generously provided a home for the impoverished family, and opposes her mother's efforts to increase the household resources by jelly-making for the markets.

CHAPTER XI (Continued.)

In nine times out of ten, sinful temporizing with Temper (with a capital T), begins when the offenders are no older than our cherubic would-be tyrant. It is easier, argue mistaken parents and friends, to go around a hill than over it; it is easier to fill up valleys than to tunnel mountains; yet shrewd engineers rive rocks to their adamantine hearts and run their roads right through them. Peace is dear to the mother's soul, but it is dearly bought by the sacrifice of lawful authority and the subversion of the rights of those whose claim to consideration is as worthy of respect as that of the Temper's owner. The chief sufferer, however, from this system of amiable or cowardly truckling to the leashed wolf of the home, is he whose own the beast is. For awhile the creature may follow meekly at heel, or stalk with red eyes and dripping tusks at his master's side, ready to rend at his command. In the end he is sure to spring at his leader's throat.

Mrs. Paull was a good woman, and, as a rule, judicious in the management of her children. That Marie was spoiled to some extent by her father, she had seen from the girl's babyhood, and that certain inherited traits made her spiritual education a more arduous undertaking than that of her brother. In the excess of compassionate tenderness that overflowed her heart in the discovery of the girl's morbid wretchedness and exaggerated loyalty to her absent parent, began the course of treatment which the mother would have characterized as mischievous and short-sighted in another. She had helped nurse discontented fancies and preposterous conceits of sublime self-devotion. In constituting herself her father's champion against his traducers, the daughter had arrayed her powers against the foes in his own household. Refusing blindly to credit one item in her uncle's indictment of the embezzler and bigamist, she virtually accused the wife of weakness, or open want of fealty to her husband. In the creed of the youthful judge, Ernest Paull's lightest word should have outweighed any accumulation of evidence brought by others. The lofty generosity that made Alice Paull submit to censure of herself, and accept the lowered place in her child's esteem sooner than break the idol of gilded clay, which the misguided votary adored as pure gold, told incalculably against her. The patient ingenuity of love that strove to beguile the wilful mourner into healthier lines of thought was misread as the mean-spiritedness of a woman who knew herself to be in fault, and would cast dust in the penetrating eyes of her accuser.

In a word, the whole policy of forbearance with the girl's perverse imaginings was the surest conceivable method of confirming her errors and vitiating what was noble in her nature. She had grown into the habit of viewing Marie Paull as the most important and interesting personage in her small world, which she gradually contracted by this persuasion. A stubborn, fanciful, passionate child, she was elevated into a heroine by self-love and the mother's ill-judged indulgence.

The story is not pleasant in the telling or in the hearing. It would be more tolerable were it not the repetition of the history of hundreds of other homes, in which the eldest daughter green in years and in judgment—is promoted to the dictatorship in family councils. While the mother lives in the possession of a moderate degree of bodily health and such intellect as the Lord has given her, and which was hers when her husband endowed her with all his worldly goods, her abdication in favor of the wisest, discreetest and best of daughters is violence done to natural law. She is queen-regnant until death or disease wrests the sceptre from her nerveless hand.

Marie sat in the chair to which her mother had directed her; the sweet, summer air fluttering the rings of golden hair above her forehead; the goodly panorama of velvet lawn, laughing waters and the wooded heights rising toward the ineffable blue of the June heavens, spread before blank eyes that saw them not. The very fact that appeal was made to her to ratify the scheme sketched by Elspeth and seconded by her mother, settled her belief in the value of her opinion, and predisposed her to dissent. These two women knew themselves to be so far wrong and her so entirely right in the main question at issue between her and themselves that they were afraid of her. Her word was fast becoming law in the household; her adverse vote would have the force of a veto. Her mother had artfully seized upon the moment when the meeting with a sensible man who could appreciate a young woman of parts had, as the elder woman supposed, put her into a sunny humor—to spring the absurd proposition upon her. It was of a piece with the transparent wheedling of which she was continually the disdainful subject when in her nominal home.

She meant that her face should harden as she listened; she did not know that it was likewise supercilious.

"Well?" she said, as her mother ceased, with what she designed as a haughty cadence, and which was provokingly pert.

Elspeth stopped stock-still in the kitchen door, a wrathful glare in her eyes that her petted nursing had never beheld there.

The patient parent made yet another effort to propitiate her auditor.

"You will, I am sure, agree with me, my love, that we ought not to draw further upon—resources that are not our own. Yet our expenses cannot be lessened to any considerable extent for some years to come. Lanier has still three years at college, and you two more at school, and while I can and shall continue to teach the little ones at home for some time to come, the boys must, after a while, go to school. I am thankful for the prospect so unexpectedly opened of adding to a non-elastic income. As to what may be said of our new industry, we can certainly afford to be independent of popular opinion, especially in this out-of-the-way quarter of the world, even if there were any reason why we should be ashamed of honest labor. If I were an artist, or a famous author"—with a sickly attempt at playfulness—"I should glory in exercising my talents for the sake of making money. If I have a taste—'talent' may be too dignified a word—for jellies, pickles and catsups, why not improve it to the same honorable end? You recollect how Miss Dunstable in Framley Parsonage prided herself upon the torture made by the hereditary ointment? We will think up a telling name for our place here, and have some labels lettered with it, or, perhaps, when our reputation is made, may go to the length of having it blown in the glass. Think of it! Who knows but my name may go down to a grateful posterity along with Mrs. Rundle's and Mrs. Glasse's?"

"If that is your ambition, I hope that you will use Lanier and not Paull," retorted Marie, in a tone as offensive as the words. "As my father's representative, I have the right to say that much."

Observing the pale surprise in her mother's face, she went on, inexorably:

"You should not have asked my opinion if you did not want it, mother. I know that this whole enterprise, as you call it, born, you would have me believe, in the brains of Elspeth and her Scotch grocer—would be abominable in his sight. However little we may care about maintaining our position as ladies among those with whom we have been accustomed to associate, I hold that something is due to his reputation as a gentleman. He would feel outraged and disgraced forever were he to hear than a jam-and-pickle factory was established in his house. In his name, and for his honor, I shall fight the detestable plan to the end."

"I aye thocht"—came in grating accents and Elspeth's broadest Scotch from the kitchen door—"I aye thocht, being a fule body who fears God and honors her betters, and is gr-r-ratfu' to them wha hae loaded her wi' benefices—that it wad Meester-r-r Lanier's hoose wha keepit oot th' rain o' heaven an' the heat o' simmer, an' wull shelter their bairnies an' their mither frae th' winter's cauld."

Marie sprang to her feet and wheeled upon her, eyes blazing and face dark with anger.

"How dare you interfere between my mother and myself? How dare you remind me that I am obliged to live under that man's roof and to eat the bread of his charity? The man who, if you two would tell the truth, is at the bottom of this degrading plan for pulling my father's children down to the level of factory-operatives and hucksters. Oh!" wringing her hands and bursting into a storm of passionate tears—"if he were here, we should soon see who is master—he, or Roger Lanier—whose puppets you two are!"

Mrs. Paull arose from her seat deliberately and with calm severity. The likeness to her brother was marked as she confronted the mad creature, putting a firm hand upon each quivering shoulder.

"Elspeth!" to the thunder-stricken servant, "please leave us. Marie! stop crying and listen to me. Your coarse violence has forced me to say what I had not intended to have pass my lips, at this, or any time. But for him of whom you speak, there would be no necessity for the work which I propose to carry on without further consultation with you. And until you can treat your mother with something like the respect due to her age and position, I forbid you to mention him again in this, your uncle's house. Now, go to your room and come down at dinner-time in a more reasonable frame of mind."

"I am not to be treated like a child!" sobbed the insulted heroine.

"Then do not behave like one," said Mrs. Paull, coolly. "Gladys, dear! it is time for your music lesson."

The muffled scales and exercises run by the small fingers under the gentle tuition of her mother, arose through the flooring on which heroic Marie stretched herself to have her cry out. When the baby-sister tapped at her door to say that dinner was on the table, there was no response.

"She may be asleep," remarked the mistress of the house composedly, when this report was made. "We will not disturb her."

The sun had set, and supper was eaten before the young lady of the house appeared below stairs. Mrs. Paull was writing at a table in the shade of the honeysuckles. Marie passed her with level chin and proud step, went out to the barn, thence to the poultry yard, in search of the man-of-all-work, returning presently, unsuccessful.

"Aleck has gone to the village, my dear," her mother remarked pleasantly, glancing at the bulky envelope in her daughter's hand. "Your letter is too late for the evening mail, but Elspeth will take it when she goes to the city to-morrow."

She resumed her writing, which the discomfited heroine could not help seeing was a long memorandum.

Elspeth's errand was then the purchase of machinery for the abhorrent jam-and-jelly manufacture!

Her mother looked up again, seemingly unobservant of the sodden complexion and drooping eyelids that told their tale of the afternoon's experiences.

Elspeth is keeping your supper hot for you, my daughter. You would better get it now."

With the mortifying reminiscence fresh in her mind of Elspeth's summary measures upon the occasion of a former refusal to partake of the food prepared for her, Marie deemed it best to obey the recommendation. After which she betook herself again unchallenged to her locked chamber and tore off the envelopes of two letters to add a postscript to one.

"Will you not let me come to you, darling Papa? I would rather starve at your side than live anywhere else away from you. And I am very, very miserable here! Nobody sympathizes with, or understands me, I feel, as never before, that you are the one being upon earth who ever entered into my finer feelings. How well I recollect hearing you once repeat some lines beginning,

The frigid and unfeeling thrive the best!

Your little 'song bird' has her breast against the thorn, now!"

CHAPTER XII.

"It is not by regretting what is irreparable that true work is to be done, but by making the best of what we are. It is not by complaining that we have no the right tools, but by using well the tools we have!"

F. W. Robertson.

"In just that very place of his Where he hath put and keepeth you, God hath no other thing to do."

Adeline D. T. Whitney.

Lanier Paull did not come home at the close of the college term. He wrote, instead to communicate a proposal made by the wealthy father of a class-mate, that Lanie should accompany his son to the family country-seat, near Keene, N. H., to "coach" the lad in mathematics during the vacation. Young Paull, although not yet nineteen stood high in his classes for scholarship and steadiness, and had gained an influence over the decidedly indolent and somewhat wild boy which the father wished to strengthen. For four hours' work a day and a general supervision of his friend's associations and pursuits, Lanier would receive two hundred and fifty dollars a month, his board and lodgings.

"I cannot afford to let the offer slip through my fingers, mother darling," said the letter. "Uncle Roger, who came up to Commencement, agrees with me, but begs me run down to New Jersey for a peep at you. As Mr. Bradley and his son leave to-morrow for Keene, and would like to have me go with them, this cannot be, even if there were no question of expense in the way—and there is. We are one, you and I (when were we otherwise?) in sentiment as to further drains upon the purse of the noblest, most open-hearted and open-handed man that ever lived. I am thankful for this opportunity to pay my way through college next term, and to relieve your dear, over full hands of the weight."

Until the news came, the mother had no confessed to her own heart how hungrily she longed for the presence of her first-born the tall, broad-shouldered fellow, who was in person and character so much more than man than his years warranted. In the poignancy of her disappointment at Marie's undutiful behavior she turned with fond desire to him, with whom she was ever a one in thought and purpose.

The letter was received just one week after the fruit-preserving industry was resolved upon. With the recollection of the terrible scene with his sister sore in her mind, she had determined to wait until she could explain details, face-to-face, before taking him into her counsel. The necessity of setting it down upon paper, with no opportunity of softening this feature of the work and emphasizing, that was, in itself a tax upon her nerves. By return mail she had a long reply, full of encouragement, an admiration of the "pluckiest of all plucky women," tempered by loving concern lest she should overtax her bodily powers. From her brother she kept the whole matter secret, as yet. Sensible and high-minded as he was, she could not be sure that he might not shrink from the suggestion of manual labor and trading for her, and insist upon increasing her income in some other way. Should he suspect the specific purpose for which she was to work, he would undoubtedly put down the enterprise with the strong hand few could resist.

So, it came to pass that in the initial stage of the task, Elspeth was her only coadjutor. She it was who insisted upon going to the city to buy gallipots, glasses, firkins and bottles, with such groceries as would be needed, driving bargains that opened her mistress's eyes with amazement upon the energetic thrift of the Scotch character, and stirred with amusement the lines of a mould that was forming into pathetic curves sadly unlike the spirited bow of earlier years.

(To be Continued.)

MONEY RECEIVED.
Since our last acknowledgment, the following sums have been received and applied to the various funds indicated by the senders:
From a "Friend," Brooklyn, E. D., 50 cents each for Rev. R. H. Nassau, Gaboon, Africa; Mrs. N. J. Hall, Korea; Rev. H. Morrow of the Baptist Society; and the Nesorian Society, Persia. John Williams $10 for the Salvation Army. Annie Mary Hines 25 cents, and Mary E. Walker 25 cents for Mary Washington Fund. Mrs. Gould and Mrs. White $1 each for the Sailors' Mission. Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Ferguson $2 for the Mulberry St. Rescue Mission.

For The Christian Herald Sunday School Missionary in the Southwest: Subr., Bristol Co., Mass., $1; A. H. V. Jamison, $1; A. L. P., Baltimore, $1; Wm. H. C. Johnson, $1; J. A. P., Florence, Mass., $1; Prev. ack., $187.67; Total, $102.67.
For the Bethesda Home for the Reclamation of Fallen Girls: Emmett Williamson, $1; Mrs. M. B. Burnside, $1; E. Jones, $1; Friend, Dearborn, Mo., $5; Wm. H. C. Johnson, $1; J. D. W., Kirkville, Ia., 25c; V. R. G., Kirkville, Ia., $1; C. S. B., Cassville, Mo., $1.25. Previously acknowledged $323. Total, $334.50.
For the Permanent (Bethany) Lodging House for Homeless Women: Wm. H. C. Johnson, $1; Friend, Cory, Pa., $1; Friend, Dearborn, Mo., $5; C. S. B., Cassville, Mo., $1; J. P., New York, $1; Prev. ack., $1534.15; Total, $1547.15.
For the Door of Hope: Mary Millett, 50c;

After "The Grip"
The weakened and debilitated condition of the body makes it susceptible to relapse and attacks of Pneumonia and Typhoid Fever. The system needs toning up with Hood's Sarsaparilla, which will overcome

That Tired Feeling,
Will make rich, healthy blood, put strength in the limbs, give a good appetite, INDUCE SWEET SLEEP, and fit the body and mind for vigorous action. There is little danger of being stricken down by the grip, pneumonia or typhoid fever when the health tone is kept up by the use of

HOOD'S Sarsaparilla

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, and do not purge, pain or gripe. Sold by all druggists.

EVERY MOTHER SHOULD

Have It in The House.
For the common ills of life liable to occur to anyone. Dropped on Sugar, Children's Lores to take for Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Cramps and Pains. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. For Soothing, Healing and Penetrating. Once used ways wanted, and dealers say "Can't sell any other," pamphlet free. Sold everywhere. Price 3c., six bottles, express paid, $2. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

WORLD'S FAIR VIEWS

TO USERS OF
Cudahy's Rex Brand Beef Extract

We have secured a set of superb photographic reproductions in half-tone of the entire World's Columbian Exposition. This beautiful Art Portfolio is issued in fourteen parts, each part containing sixteen engravings, or 224 in all. The complete set will contain engravings of every Main Building, every State and Territorial Building, every Foreign Building, Interior Views, Lagoons, Statuary, Grounds, Fountains, and about fifty views of the Midway Plaisance. These grand pictures, each one of which is a work of art, are printed on copper plates on the finest quality of cream-colored paper. The original photographs of which these are reproductions were sold for fifty cents each of the Fair Grounds. In order to secure any one of the fourteen parts, it will only be necessary for you to send six cents in postage stamps to cover cost of mailing. Order by number.
We send free our illustrated booklet from "Ranch to table," and interesting write-up of the cattle industry, from the "branding of the Maverick" to the "and-up" of the prime steer into delicious Beef Extract. Sample jar sent free for 6c. to pay postage.
The Cudahy Pharmaceutical Co.,
SO. OMAHA, NEB.

John Fellow, $1; Mrs. M. B. Burnside, $1; Stephen, Walter and Mrs. E. H. Bixton, $2.
For Mrs. Bella Cooke's Work: John Williams, $10; Mrs. T. J. D., Sugar Tree, Mo., $2; Friend, Florence, Mass., $1; Mrs. Gerts, Irving Park, Ill., $1.
For Foreign Missions: In His Name, $1; Friend, Bridgetown, N. J., $1; L. A. L., Barboursville, Va., 50c.

MELLIN'S FOOD
FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS.
TRADE MARK
THE ONLY PERFECT Substitute for Mother's Milk.
Denver, Colo. Gentlemen:—I can attest the good qualities of Mellin's Food, for I have as healthy and strong a baby as one could wish. She has always eaten Mellin's Food.
Yours truly, Mrs. H. R. CLISE.
San Jose, Cal. Sirs:—I am using Mellin's Food, and it agrees with my baby. It is the most satisfactory I have tried, and I am well pleased with it.
Mrs. FRANK WARDHASS.
SEND for our book, "The Care and Feeding of Infants," mailed Free to any address.
Doliver-Goodale Co., Boston, Mass.

To "look their best" is the right of all women.
Face blemishes are unnatural. A smooth skin, free from pimples or oiliness, is a charm and a delight.
Nearly all toilet powders finally destroy the beauty of the skin.

Comfort Powder
is a marvelous skin healer. It removes the irritating causes that roughen and disfigure the face.
It nourishes the skin in a natural way, and before many days your face is free from all blemish.

Sold by druggists.
Price, 50 cents per box, postage paid.
COMFORT POWDER CO., HARTFORD, CONN.
Send 2 two-cent stamps for liberal sample and book.

Use COMFORT SOAP for the Hands, the Face, the Complexion.

No local dealer can compete with us in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.

WALL PAPER
Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy" in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples.
Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.
We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS, 40-52 W. 15th St., NEW YORK. 156-158 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

The Great CHURCH LIGHT
Frank's Patent Reflectors for Gas, Oil, or Electric, give the most powerful, softest, cheapest, and best light known for Churches, Stores, Banks, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A liberal discount to churches & the trade. Don't be deceived by cheap imitations.
L. P. FRANK, 501 Pearl St., N.Y.

MY WIFE
CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.
$10.50 Buy the Oxford Improved SINGER Sewing Machine, with a complete set of attachments and guaranteed for 10 years. Shipped anywhere on 30-day trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded. Buy from factory, save dealers' and agents' profit. Write today for our LARGE FREE CATALOGUE.
Oxford Mfr. Co., 319 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

2c. WALL PAPER.
Get paper 2c. a sq. ft. Embossed gold 10c. a sq. ft. 100 New Samples mailed FREE for 10c. postage. Good Quality. Fair Dealings.
ECLAIR WALL PAPER CO., 193 ELM ST., CINCINNATI, O.

Indisputable Evidence
Of the Successful Treatment of Consumption and Chest Diseases by the English Method as Discovered and Practiced by George Thomas Congreve.

SIXTH INTERVIEW,
By our Special Commissioner,
With MRS. PHILLIPS, of 17 St. Clair Street, Glasgow, relative to the case of her son (which was published in the weekly papers), in February, 1892.

Had Mr. and Mrs. Phillips followed the course adopted by many people, and sat down, with folded hands, when told that there was no hope of saving their only son's life, they would, beyond all question, have had to mourn his loss; but, as a perusal of the following lines will show, they took another course.

This boy had had a severe attack of influenza, which had left him with a harassing cough and offensive expectoration. He had pains at back and front of both lungs. The body was wasting, but the feet were swelling alarmingly. Altogether his position and his prospects of recovery, under ordinary treatment, were very slight indeed. But when ordinary treatment failed, Mr. Phillips, having, as will presently appear, some previous knowledge of Mr. Congreve, applied to him.

In conversation with Mrs. Phillips recently, I asked her what was the condition of her son at this time, and she replied: "He was very ill—very near death. There is no doubt that he was in a deep consumption."

"What was your reason for thinking that, Mrs. Phillips?" I asked.

"I knew the symptoms only too well, for I have lost three sisters in consumption."

"I understand that you had called in medical advice?"

"Oh, yes; but the doctor who was attending him gave him up."

"Well, you didn't give up hope, evidently. Tell me, please, what was the result of his taking the medicine Mr. Congreve sent him?"

"In a few days the expectoration became much less offensive, and gradually both that and the cough disappeared. The swelling of the feet ceased. He made steady progress from the first, and soon gained both flesh and strength."

"Now, Mrs. Phillips, what do you suppose would have happened if your son had not been placed under Mr. Congreve for treatment?"

"He would have died—nothing could have saved him."

"How is your son now?"

"He is keeping well and strong. He has absolutely no weakness. As Mr. Phillips wrote: 'I look back to the time when he was nothing but skin and bone, and thank God for Mr. Congreve's medicine, for now he is strong and hearty, and better than he ever was in his life.' He is at work at a situation in Buchanan Street."

Before I left, Mrs. Phillips told me how it came about that her husband applied to Mr. Congreve. Mr. Phillips' father was a Baptist minister, at Snailbeach, and he had recommended Mr. Rowson, who is now a minister at Welshpool, to try the treatment, and wrote to Mr. Congreve for medicine. "Mr. Rowson could hardly walk," said Mr. Phillips, "but he became a fine stout man; I hardly knew him, such was the change."

That Mr. Phillips' confidence was not misplaced, will be the firm opinion of all who read the brief account of the restoration to health of his son.

Every person suffering from Chest Disease, and all of weak lungs and delicate habit, should read my book on Consumption of the Lungs or Decline, and its successful treatment, showing that formidable disease to be curable in all its stages, with observations on Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, together with accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, to be had post free for 25c., or the book will be sent free with every first order of $1.00 bottle of my Balsamic Elixir.

CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR can be obtained from many drug stores, but it will take some time before it will be introduced into all of them throughout this vast country. If your druggist has not yet put it in stock, it will be sent you, carriage paid, from my own depot, on receipt of 50c., $1.00 $1.75, $3.75 or $7.00, according to the size of the bottle ordered.

CANADIAN BILLS and stamps cannot be received. Send Money Order.
GEO. THOMAS CONGREVE, London, Eng., and 4 Wooster Street, New York.

Druggists supplied by
C. N. CRITTENTON CO., NEW YORK,

John D. Park & Son Co., Cincinnati.
22—Mention this paper.

Ferris' Good Sense Waist

Best for Health, Economy and Beauty. BUTTONS at front instead of CLASPS. RING BUCKLE at hip for Hose supporters. Tape-fastened Buttons—won't pull off. Cord-Edge Button Holes—won't wear out. FIT ALL AGES—Infants to Adults. MARSHALL FIELD & CO., CHICAGO, Western Wholesale Depot. Send for illus. circular.

FERRIS BROS.
Mfrs. and Patentees. For Sale by All Leading Retailers. Principal Office—341 Broadway, New York. Branch Office—531 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

In the Early Days of cod-liver oil its use was limited to easing those far advanced in consumption. Science soon discovered in it the prevention and cure of consumption.

Scott's Emulsion
of cod-liver oil with Hypophosphites of lime and soda has rendered the oil more effective, easy of digestion and pleasant to the taste.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

ONLY 10% ABOVE FACTORY COST

$8.78 buys a $65 Singer
Style Machine. $19.88 buys Highest Grade modern style machine in the world. 25 different styles at intermediate prices. Warranted Ten Years. We are the only manufacturers selling sewing machines direct. Liberal terms for securing a Sewing Machine FREE.

CHICAGO SEWING MACHINE CO. 56 Halsted St., CHICAGO, ILL.

$1.98
CHAIN FREE
CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your name and address, and we will send you this elegant watch by express for examination. You examine it and if you consider it a bargain pay the express agent $1.98 and express charges and it is yours. Fine gold plate Chain and Charm FREE with each watch, also our written Guarantee for 5 years. Write to-day, this may not appear again. THE NATIONAL MFC. & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

$12.00 to $35.00 a week can be made
Parties preferred who can furnish a horse and travel through the country; a team, though, is not necessary. A few vacancies in towns and cities. Men and women of good character will find this an exceptional opportunity for profitable employment. Spare hours may be used to good advantage. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 11th and Main Sts., Richmond, Va.

AGENTS can make $50.00 to $100.00 a week canvassing for the best specialties ever offered. No competition. Write for terms. N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N. 34 East 14th St., New York, or Kansas City, Mo.

FREE
As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this Hard Rubber Fountain Pen. Warranted a perfect writer & impenetrable. Bargain Catalogue for free to cover postage. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BROS., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

JERUSALEM'S CHILDREN.

Director Sandreczky of the Children's Hospital in Jerusalem (whose work was described in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD), writes: "Our hospital is hard at work; we have had, last year, nearly double the number of patients, Mohammedans, Christians and Jews together. We worked through the whole year, without a holiday. God gave us health and strength and blessing on blessing. We got help, small and large, from all quarters of the globe; we had no want, but the large number of patients has caused a deficit. Our dear private and hospital friend and patron, U. S. Consul, Dr. Merrill, is leaving Jerusalem with his wife next week."

For a Nerve Tonic

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. H. M. Harlow, Augusta, Me., says: "I regard it as one of the best remedies in all cases in which the system requires an acid and a nerve tonic. I have used it freely with most excellent results."

A New Cure for Asthma

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending out large trial cases of the Kola Compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send your name and address on postal card and they will send you a trial case by mail free.

Good News for Sufferers—Catarrh and Consumption Cured.

Our readers who are victims of Lung Diseases, Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption, will be glad to know of the wonderful cures made by the new treatment known in Europe as the Andral-Broca Discovery. The New Medical Advance, 67 East 6th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, will send you this new treatment free for trial. Write to them. Give age and all particulars of your disease.

Growth in knowledge is the only cure for self-conceit. Faith in Hood's Sarsaparilla is a sure cure for dyspepsia, indigestion, loss of appetite and that tired feeling so prevalent in the spring.

Unlike the Dutch Process
No Alkalies

—OR—
Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup.
It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

D*E*L*A*V*A*U*S
Whooping Cough
Croup
Violent Coughs

Tested over 40 Years.
EFFECTUAL AND HARMLESS.
50c. per bot., at drugists, or expressed from 6th and Wood Sts., Philadelphia, to any address 60c.

R*E*M*E*D*Y

WE WILL SELL YOU
THE BEST BUGGY
Cart, Harness, Spring Wagon,
Buggy, Roadster, or the latest in horse wholesale prices. Shipped anywhere anyone with privilege to examine without paying one cent in advance. Two years a written warranty. Send for our new illustrated catalogue. Before with testimonials and references. Write to-day and save money.
ESTABLISHED 1848, 154 W. Van Buren St., R. 23, Chicago, Ill.

PRINTING OFFICE 15c
A large list of Type (over 44) with Figures, Holders, Enclaves, Ink, and various other etc., as shown in cut, complete in new case. Best Linen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Regular Price 50c.
Sample postage for list, to introduce, with Calculation of new articles. CAT. FREE.
INCLOSURE A Box 65, Grand St., N. Y. City

Swiss Lozenges.
For curing Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness,
Asthma, Catarrh,
Bronchitis, &c.
Price, 25c. a Box Mailed
Free.
H. EDWARD WENDEL,
8 E. Cor. 31 and George Streets, Philadelphia
A WOMAN of fine abilities is offered dignified work and good pay.
Write I. H. & H., 17 East Tenth Street, New York.

$42.50 BUYS IT NOW.

Think of it! For the next sixty days only, we offer our famous

Good Hope Organ

(regular price $78) complete with stool and instruction book for $12.50, or $15.00 after ten days' trial, or $30.00 On Credit, $10.00 down and $5.00 per month. This Organ is absolutely perfect, containing all the latest improvements. Black walnut case. Fully Warranted for 10 Years. We have Organs from $27.50 up and Pianos from $175 up. Send for beautiful Catalogue showing the latest and best Organs and Pianos, and learn how to save from $50 to $200 by buying directly from the largest manufacturers in the world.
Established
CORNISH & CO., Nearly 30 Years. Washington, New Jersey.

SEND US
A TRIAL ORDER

SATISFACTION
GUARANTEED.

O'NEILL'S

Sixth Ave., 20th to 21st St.,

NEW YORK.

IMPORTERS AND RETAILERS

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods,
Ladies', Misses' and Children's Cloaks and Costumes. House Furnishing Goods,
China and Glassware.

We make a specialty of
MAIL ORDER BUSINESS,
SENDING GOODS TO ALL
PARTS OF THE WORLD.

GUARANTEEING PERFECT SATISFACTION
TO THE CUSTOMER OR REFUNDING
THE MONEY.

SEND FOR OUR CATALOGUE.

We are now booking names for our Spring and Summer Catalogue, which will be issued about April 1st, and mailed FREE to out of town residents. Send us your name early as the demand is always greater than the supply.

6th Ave., 20th to 21st St., N. Y.

FINE GOODS
AT LOW PRICES.

SEND FOR SAMPLES
AND PRICES.

FREE!

to the consumer at wholesale prices, thus saving the profits of the dealer and the commissions of the agents. We furnish a first class Organ, warranted 20 years, with stool and book, for only

Our large 24-page catalogue of Organs, also our new and elegant catalogue of Pianos, containing 16 pages. We have the largest manufacturing in the world from which we sell direct to the consumer at wholesale prices, thus saving the profits of the dealer and the commissions of the agents. We furnish a first class Organ, warranted 20 years, with stool
and book, for only

$27.50

NO MONEY REQUIRED

until instrument has been thoroughly tested in your own house.
Sold on instalments. Easy payment.

We positively guarantee every organ and piano twenty years. Send for catalogue at once if you want to obtain the greatest bargain ever offered on earth. Write your name and address plainly, and we will send by mail same day letter is received.

As an advertisement, we will sell the first Piano of our make in a place for only

$175.00

Stool, Book and Cover Free.
Regular price, $350.00
Beethoven Piano and Organ Co.,
P. O. Box 741 Washington, N. J.

Model 34

COLUMBIA,

Price, $125.

A new machine in many important points of design and construction, retaining also the best features of previous light Columbias. It is regularly fitted with an easily detachable front wheel brake, rat-trap pedals, and either single or double tire as ordered. Weight 30 pounds with, 29 without brake.

Full description in Columbia catalogue, which is furnished free by Columbia agents, or mailed for two two-cent stamps.

POPE MFG. CO.,

Boston. New York. Chicago. Hartford.

Every reason why it should

FIT

For Dr.
Warner's
Coraline
Corsets are made in 25 styles—modelled to fit every variety of form.

Wear the one that fits

YOU

Cotton Dress Fabrics.

Our stock of Cotton Dress Goods is exceedingly handsome, and includes the choicest Novelties for Spring and Summer, in the newest designs; French Organdies, Plumetis, Batistes, Satens
India Dimities, Scotch Zephyrs, Piques
Linen Lawns, Dress Linens, Duck Suitings, Madras and Cheviot Shirtings.

James McCreery & Co.

BROADWAY & 11th STREET,
NEW YORK.

Our New Easter Service

By the REV. R. L. LOWRY.

Will be mailed on receipt of 5 cent

Our New Easter Carols

By Six Popular Composers.

Will be mailed on receipt of 5 cent

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

210 Wabash Ave., Chicago, 76 East 9th St., New York

TYPEWRITERS.

Unprejudiced advice given. All makes half-price Shipped anywhere for examination. Exchange a Specialty. Monthly payments. 62-page cat. free on request.
TYPEWRITERS 145 Liberty St., New York.
HEADQUARTERS, 180 Monroe St., Chicago.

Many Old Worn-Out FARMS

of climate and freedom from cyclones, blizzards, together with good society, churches, etc., make Michigan Farms the best in the world.
Write to me and I will tell you how to get the best farms on long time; low rate of interest.

Won't Produce a Profit.

The rich, loamy soil of Michigan Farms produces a fine crop without this expense. The wear, markets, general healthfulness of Michigan Farms, together with good society, churches, etc., make Michigan Farms the best in the world.
Write to me and I will tell you how to get the best farms on long time; low rate of interest.

O. M. BARNES, Land Commissioner, Lansing, Mich.

Beecham's pills are for biousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, cated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Book free; pills 25c. At drugstores, or write B.F. Allen
Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

The Swiss Referendum

Provides for submitting to the people proposed legislation for their approval or rejection, The

Massachusetts BENEFIT LIFE ASSOCIATION has been submitted to the people, and has been endorsed by them in the most enthusiastic manner.

The Largest and Strongest Natural-Premium Insurance Co. of New England.

$1000.00 a day paid to beneficiaries at 60% of usual cost.

The NEW POLICY of the Massachusetts Benefit Life Association has no superior. It guarantees Cash Dividends, Cash Surrender Values, Paid-Up Insurance, and other valuable options.

Special Openings for Energetic Men to Act as Special, General and State Agents.

G. A. LITCHFIELD, Pres. 53 State St., Boston.

WIRE FENCING
WIRE ROPE SELVAGE.
McMULLEN'S

POULTRY AND RABBIT NETTING
Road, Farm, Garden, Cemetery, Lawn
Fencing. Prices down. Freight paid. Catalog free.
McMullen Woven Wire Fence Co., Chicago.

Self-Regulating
INVISIBLE HATCHER
Does not hatch as well as any Incubator made. Send 4c. for
No. 80 Catalogue to BUCKEYE
INCUBATOR CO., Springfield, O.

Can be Cured
PUPTURE
Send 25cts. for 100-page illubook and learn how.

CURED
FILES
Our Book on Files—Free.
Bacon Medicine Co.,
Richmond, Va., U.S.A.

GRAY HAIR RESTORED to youthful color by Dr.
Hays' Hair Health. Removes dandruff. Don't stain.
See Seed to London Supply Co. 833 Broadway, N.Y.
For Book and Box Hays' Hair Health, Best Hair Cure, both FREE

"WELL BRED, SOON WED." GIRLS WHO USE

SAPOLIO

ARE QUICKLY MARRIED. TRY IT IN YOUR NEXT HOUSE-CLEANING.

MURRAY'S WORLD RENOWNED $5.95 SINGLE BUGGY HARNESS.
World Renowned $55.95 Brewster and End Spring Top Buggies

A FEW SAMPLE BARGAINS FROM OUR CATALOGUE:

MURRAY NO. 2 SINGLE BUGGY HARNESS,	$9.85
MURRAY NO. 3 SINGLE BUGGY HARNESS,	10.95
MURRAY NO. 4 DOUBLE BUGGY HARNESS,	15.70
MURRAY NO. 5 DOUBLE BUGGY HARNESS,	19.95

And a mammoth line of Saddles of all kinds, Write us for Catalogue No. 16 which will be sent FREE.

THE WILBER H. MURRAY MFG. CO., CINCINNATI, OHIO.

THE DYING CHRISTIAN.
The veil is drawn aside. I see
Betwixt eternity and me,
The dear Redeemer whom I love
Is sweetly smiling from above.
Celestial music soft and clear
Now falls on my enraptured ear.
And loved ones from the other side
Do beckon me across the tide.
And God has sent an angel, too,
To guide me through the ether blue.
With him I go, dear ones, adieu!
Be ready when death comes to you.

—J. A. HANDY.

Highest Award
Medal and three diplomas have been given to the New York Condensed Milk Company for the superiority of its Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk, Borden's Extract of Coffee and Unsweetened Condensed Milk, exhibited at the World's Columbian Exposition.

CHOICE 50c. TRIAL SETS.

Set B—16 pkts. Vegetable Seeds, 50c
" E—20 pkts. Flower Seeds, 50c
" F—10 Lovely Carnation Pinks, 50c
" G—10 Prize Chrysanthemums, 50c
" H—1 Superb French Cannas, 50c
" J—10 Elegant Roses, 50c
" M—24 Fine Gladioli Bulbs, 50c
" P—6 Hardy Ornamental Shrubs, 50c
" R—6 Choice Grape Vines, 50c
½ each of any two sets, 50c

No two plants alike in these sets.
Any 3 Sets, $1.25; 5 for $2.

By mail, postpaid. Safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Order by the letters from this advt. NOW as these are introductory sets not in catalogue, an elegant annual of 168 pages, free.
Everything of the best for Orchard, Vineyard, Lawn and Garden. 40th year, 1,000 acres, 25 greenhouses.

STORRS & HARRISON CO.,
PAINESVILLE, OHIO, Box 337

FERRY'S SEEDS

Are just what every sower needs. The merits of Ferry's Seeds form the foundation upon which has been built the largest seed business in the world.
Ferry's Seed Annual for 1894 contains the sum and substance of the latest farming knowledge. Free for the asking.

D. M. FERRY & CO.,
Detroit, Mich.

$5.00 WORTH FOR $1.00
"The Cream of New Chrysanths."
PRES. SMITH, MAUD DEAN, KATE BROWN,
G. W. CHILDS, NIVEUS, MRS. F. L. AMES, MICKS ARNOLD, GOLDEN WEDDING.

This set of 8 Gems $1.00. 6 sets $5.00. By mail. Mention this paper, and we will give you free with each set, two choice Carnations.

Gladioli, 25c. doz. Tuberoses, 35c. doz. One doz. each 50c.
C. O. D.
McMULLEN & PASFIELD, 20 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE WORLD'S FAIR Highest Awards.
MEDAL AND DIPLOMA,
on our INCUBATOR and BROODER Combined. If you are interested in Poultry, it will pay you to send 4 cents in stamp for 72 page catalogue, giving valuable points on Poultry Culture. Address Reliable Incubator Co., Quiner, Ill.

BABY CARRIAGES shipped
D. O. D.
Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal—$18.50 Carriage for $9.25.
ers' profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95.
Illustrated catalog $5.00 " " $2.75.
Free Address Cash Buyers' Union,
164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

TAPE-WORM Expelled alive in 60 minutes with head, or no charge. Send 2c stamp for circular.
Dr. M. Ney Smith, Specialist, 721 Olive, St. Louis, Mo.

AGENTS wanted in every town. Something new. 675 a month. Write quick.
Sherman & Butler, 26W. Lake St. Chicago

"Honesty is the best policy." Nobody contradicts it.
Your dealer can get lamp-chimneys that almost never break from heat, or those that break continually. Which does he get? Which do you get?

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" are tough against heat; not one in a hundred breaks in use. The glass is clear as well as tough.
They are accurate, uniform.
Be willing to pay more for chimneys that last till they rot, unless some accident happens to them.

Pittsburgh. GEO. A. MACBETH CO.

SPRAY
YOUR FRUIT TREES
& VINES

Stahl's
Double Acting
Excelsior Spraying Outfits prevent Leaf Blight & Worry
Fruit. Insures a heavy yield of all Fruit and Vegetable crops. Thousands in use. Send 6cts. for catalogue and full treatise on spraying. Circulars free.
WM. STAHL, Quincy, Ill.

CHOICE ROSES AT 5 Cts.

OUR RAINBOW COLLECTION
OF 20 ROSES FOR $1. PREPAID BY MAIL.

The roses we send are on their own roots, from 10 to 15 inches high, and will bloom freely this summer either in pots or planted in yard. They are hardy, ever bloomers. We send instructions with each order how to plant and care for them.
Please examine the below list of 20 choice fragrant monthly roses, and see if you can duplicate them anywhere for an amount so small as $1. They are nearly all new kinds, and we guarantee them to reach you in good condition, and we also guarantee them to be the best dollar's worth of roses you have ever purchased. THE RAINBOW COLLECTION OF 20
ROSES FOR ONE DOLLAR MUST BE ORDERED COMPLETE.

The List—Bridemaid, the best pink rose by far ever introduced.
Princess of Wales, amber yellow, deepening to orange. Snowflake, pure white, always in bloom. Princess de Radziwill, lovely coral red.
Pearl of the Garden, deep golden yellow. Beauty of Stapleford, bright rosy crimson. Queen of Fragrance, in clusters of six to ten roses, white edged pink. Rhinegold, beautiful shades of saffron and tawny. Sunset, golden amber, resembles an "afterglow." Dr. Grill, coppery yellow and fawn roses. Duchess Marie Immaculate, an intermingling of bronze, orange, yellow, pink and crimson. Lady Castlereagh, soft rosy crimson and yellow. Papa Gontier, lovely dark red. Star of Gold, the queen of all yellow roses. Waban, a great rose in bloom all the time. Lady Stanley, great garden rose. Viscon-tesse Wautier, one of the best roses grown. Cleopatra, soft shell pink, lovely.
Sappho, fawn suffused with red. Letty Cole, very chaste and beautiful.

THE PROOF OF THE PUDDING IS IN THE EATING. This applies to Floral matters as well as to matters culinary.

The Good & Reese Co., Springfield, O. Gentlemen:
The 20 ever blooming roses you sent me for $1 arrived yesterday in the most splendid condition, and allow me to say that I was absolutely surprised at the size of the stalks and the amount, length and thriftiness of the roots. I have wondered many times how you could afford to send out such roses for such a small price. Every home in the land should have their yard full of ever blooming roses at this price.

Yours,
(Judge) C. H. WILLINGHAM.
32 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 20, 1893.

We will also send our Iron Clad Collection of 12 Hardy Roses, all different colors, $1. Try a set.
20 Chrysanthemums, all prize winners, $1. 16 Geraniums, double and single, flowered and scented, $1.
12 choice Begonias, different kinds, $1. 40 packets choice Flower Seeds, all different kinds, $1. Our handsome, illustrated, 152-page Catalogue, describing above Roses, Plants and all Seeds, mailed for 10c. stamps.
Don't place your order before seeing our prices. WE CAN SAVE YOU MONEY. We have large two year old Boscs for immediate effect. Liberal Premiums to our best customers. We have plants free. We are the LARGEST ROSE CROWERS IN THE WORLD. Our sales of Rose Plants alone last season exceeded a million and a half. When you order Roses, Plants and Seeds, you want the very best. Try us. Address GOOD & REESE CO., Box 41, Champion City Greenhouses, Springfield, Ohio.

You must have noticed last week our motto that

Burpee's seeds grow.

The entire outside page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was then devoted to trying to persuade you to prove for yourself the truth of this well-known motto. Your success is our success. If you have not carefully studied this page than please do so now. If you want to know more of the best seeds that grow your address on a postal card, with the statement that you intend to plant seeds this year, will bring you free a copy of Burpee's Farm Annual for 1894,—the leading American Seed Catalogue.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

FREE CURE.
Kidney
Liver & Urinary Diseases.

ALKAVIS is a positive cure for Kidney, Liver and Urinary Diseases. It is from the new Polyneesian shrub, KAVA-KAVA (botanical name, Piper Methy-sticum) described in New York World, Feb. 8, 1893, and Medical Gazette, of Dec., 1892. Endorsed by the Hospitals and Physicians of Europe as a sure Specific Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Brick-Dust deposits, Rheumatism, Liver Disease, Female Complaints, pain in back, etc. Sold at Two Dollars a Bottle. Descriptive Book sent free to all, or if you will send us Ten Cents (postage stamps will do) to pay express charges, we will send you one Bottle by express, prepaid. FREE. We know ALKAVIS is a Positive Cure, and we send it Free to prove its wonderful effects. Give your Post-office and nearest Express Office. Address, THE CHURCH KIDNEY CURE CO., 418 Fourth Avenue, New York.

McALLISTER
M.F.G.
OPTICIAN
49 NASSAU ST.
NEW YORK.

FOR MAGIC LANTERNS, STEREOPTICONS, AND MANY THOUSANDS OF VIEWS, EVERY SUBJECT.
ENTERTAINMENT
HOME INSTRUCTION AMUSEMENT
PUBLIC EXHIBITIONS CHURCH &
SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.
COLLEGES
SECRET SOCIETIES

240 PAGE CATALOGUE FREE.
A PROFITABLE BUSINESS FOR MAN WITH SMALL CAPITAL.

SEEDS. For 10c, I will send 5 pkts of either flower or vegetable seeds and a copy of Twelve's Seed Almanac, or Almanac free.
Best seed book out.

H. E. TWEED, Box 38, Ripley, O.

MUST HAVE AGENTS AT ONCE. Sample Sashlock free by mail for 2c.
Unparalleled. Only good one ever invented. Beats weights. Sales unparalleled. $12 a day. Write quick. BROTHARD, Box 23, Phila.

A LITTLE HIGHER IN PRICE, BUT-

FASHION in Eating? Fantastic Fancy! No mere Fiction, but Founded on Fact. Far and wide the Fad Finds Favor of Furnishing the Ferris Famed Hams and Fancy Bacon For the First Easter meal!

Fortunately these may be used Freely through all the Following months. Fitty and Faultlessly Fired? FAVORED FAMILIES!

Frankly, though Facetiously, F. A. Ferris & Company Fain would Furnish Famous Feasts Frequently to all. Fatal to Fatigue! First rate Factor in Fine health.

Fair Friends, FELICITY! FAREWELL!!

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 17.

COPYRIGHT 1894, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

NUMBER 13.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, MARCH 28, 1894.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

THE REVIVAL IN NEW YORK.

Scenes and Incidents in the Movement Inaugurated by Revs.
A. C. Dixon, Dr. J. Burrell and their Coadjutors.

THE hope expressed in this journal on Nov. 29, last year, that the revival of religion then in progress in Brooklyn might extend to the city of New York, is being remarkably fulfilled. It is many years since so extended a personal interest in religion has been witnessed in the metropolis. In Association Hall, in Twenty-third Street, meetings have been held every noon for more than four weeks and the attendance has averaged nearly a thousand persons. Many remarkable scenes have been witnessed at these meetings, scenes of spiritual conflict, of earnest pleading and triumphant conversion. There has been little excitement, but a deep, earnest desire on the part of thinking men and women to know experimentally the power of the Cross. A large number of those who came belonged to the class most difficult to reach—men and women who knew all about religion, its forms and doctrines, and were familiar with the truths of Christianity, but had never sought for themselves the converting power of the Spirit. Others there were there who were entire strangers to Gospel truth having lived in a land of churches and ministers utterly careless and indifferent to the blessings offered to them. Under the exhortations of the various teachers and evangelists in Association Hall during the noon hour, many rose to ask for prayers and hundreds have been led to Christ. A characteristic sketch of one of these meetings taken by our own artist appears on this page.

On March 1 there was a continuous meeting in the hall which will never be forgotten by those who attended it. At ten o'clock, Rev. A. C. Dixon took the chair and opened the exercises with a reading from the great revival chapter of the Bible—Acts 2, and an earnest prayer for the Spirit's presence. From that hour until four o'clock in afternoon, an impressive scene in a room outside of which the hurrying, eager, bustling business life was in full course. At night the meetings go on in a large number of

REV. A. C. DIXON, D.D.

Rev. Charles W. Millard, of the Washington M. E. Church; Dr. R. S. MacArthur of Calvary Baptist Church, and Dr. Harsha of the Second Collegiate Church. The singing was enlivened by solos from Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Kress, Miss Mary E. Upham and Mr. Bushnell. During the noon hour many business men came in and remained a short time. As one and another departed the vacant seats were quickly filled, and, although the audience was constantly changing, it seemed not to vary in size. Many souls date a new life from that day's meeting. Two weeks ago the experiment was made of holding mass meetings in Cooper Union. They were preceded by an open air song service in the vacant space on Astor Place. This was so successful that similar services were held in front of Dr. Parkhurst's Church in Madison Square. Numbers went from that meeting to Association Hall, as they went from the Astor Place meeting to Cooper Union. In the last mentioned building the services were held at 3:30, and the large hall was crowded. It was churches in various parts of the city. Baptists, Congregationalists, Methodists, Presbyterians, the Reformed Dutch Churches, are uniting cordially in the movement, holding services every evening, and working earnestly for the ingathering of souls. On the past three Sundays several theatres have been brought into use. The Standard Theatre in Sixth Avenue, the Academy of Music on Fourteenth St., and the Thalia Theatre on the Bowery, have been thronged by crowds on Sun-

REV. S. V. ROBINSON.

Among the evangelists who spoke during the day were: Frank Leisinger, the converted minstrel; Dr. Leonard Weaver, the English revivalist; Rev. Edwin S. Holmway, pastor of the Thirty-third St. Baptist Church; Dr. Samuel Alman, Dr. A. W. H. Godder, Rev. Peter Stryker, of the thirty-fourth St. Reformed Dutch Church;

NEW YORK'S GREAT REVIVAL.—RISING FOR PRAYER IN ASSOCIATION HALL.

Continued on page 105.

The TABERNACLE PULPIT

EASTER IN GREENWOOD.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday at the Brooklyn Tabernacle. Text: Gen. 23: 17, 18:

"And the field of Hebron, which was in Machpelah, which was before Mamre, the field, and the cave which was therein, and all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, were made sure unto Abraham."

HERE is the first cemetery ever laid out. Machpelah was its name. It was an arborescent beauty, where the wound of death was bandaged with foliage. Abraham, a rich man, not being able to bribe the King of Terrors, proposes here, as far as possible, to cover up the ravages. He had no doubt previously noticed this region, and now that Sarah his wife had died—that remarkable person who at ninety years of age had born to her the son Isaac, and who now, after she had reached one hundred and twenty-seven years, had expired—Abraham is negotiating for a family plot for her last slumber. Ephron owned this real estate, and after, in mock sympathy for Abraham, refusing to take anything for it, now sticks on a big price—four hundred shekels of silver. The cemetery lot is paid for, and the transfer made, in the presence of witnesses in a public place, for there were no deeds and no halls of record in those early times. Then in a cavern of lime-stone rock Abraham put Sarah, and a few years after, himself followed, and then Isaac and Rebekah, and then Jacob and Leah. Embowered, picturesque and memorable Machpelah! That "God's acre" dedicated by Abraham has been the mother of innumerable mortuary observances. The necropolis of every civilized land has vied with its metropolis.

The most beautiful hills of Europe outside the great cities are covered with obelisk and funeral vase and arched gateways and columns and parterres in honor of the inhumated. The Appian Way of Rome was bordered by sepulchral commemorations. For this purpose Pisa has its arcades of marble sculptured into excellent bas-reliefs, and the features of dear faces that have vanished. Genoa has its terraces cut into tombs; and Constantinople covers with cypress the silent habitations; and Paris has its Pere la Chaise, on whose heights rest Balzac and David and Marshal Ney and Cuvier and La Place and Moliere, and a mighty group of warriors and poets and painters and musicians. In all foreign nations utmost genius on all sides is expended in the work of interment, mummification and incineration.

Our own country consents to be second to none in respect to the lifeless body. Every city and town and neighborhood of any intelligence or virtue has, not many miles away, its sacred inclosure, where affection has engaged sculptor's chisel and florist's spade and artificer in metals. Our own city has shown its religion as well as its art, in the manner which it holds the memory of those who have passed forever away, by its Cypress Hills, and its Evergreens, and its Calvary, and Holy Cross, and Friends' cemeteries. All the world knows of our Greenwood, with now about two hundred and seventy thousand inhabitants sleeping among the hills that overlook the sea, and by lakes embosomed in an Eden of flowers, our American Westminster, Abbey, an Acropolis of mortuary architecture, a Pantheon of mighty ones ascended, elegies in stone, Iliads in marble, whole generations in peace waiting for other generations to join them. No dormitory of breathless sleepers in all the world has so many mighty dead.

Among the preachers of the gospel, Bethune and Thomas DeWitt, and Bishop Janes and Tyng, and Abeel, the missionary, and Beecher and Biddington, and McClintock and Inskip, and Bangs and Chapin, and Noah Schenck and Samuel Hanson Cox. Among musicians, the renowned Gottschalk and the holy Thomas Hastings. Among philanthropists, Peter Cooper and Isaac T. Hopper, and Lucretia Mott and Isabella Graham, and Henry Bergh, the apostle of mercy to the brute creation. Among the literati, the Carys, Alice and Phoebe; James K. Paulding and John G. Saxe. Among journalists, Bennett and Raymond and Greeley. Among scientists, Ormsby Mitchell, warrior as well as astronomer, and lovingly called by his soldiers "Old Stars," Professor Proctor and the Drapers, splendid men, as I well know, one of them my teacher, the other my classmate.

Among inventors, Elias Howe, who through the sewing machine, did more to alleviate the toils of womanhood than any man that ever lived, and Professor Morse, who gave us magnetic telegraphy; the former doing his work with the needle, the latter with the thunderbolt. Among physicians and surgeons, Joseph C. Hutchinson, and Marion Sims, and Dr. Valentine Mott, with the following epitaph which he ordered cut in honor of Christian religion: "My implicit faith and hope is in a merciful Redeemer, who is the resurrection and the life. Amen and Amen." This is our American Machpelah, as sacred to us as the Machpelah in Canaan, of which Jacob uttered that pastoral poem in one verse: "There they buried Abraham, and Sarah, his wife; and there they buried Isaac, and Rebekah, his wife, and there I buried Leah."

At this Easter service I ask and answer what may seem a novel question, but it will be found, before I get through, a practical and useful and tremendous question: What will resurrection day do for the cemeteries? First, I remark, it will be their supernatural beautification. At certain seasons it is customary in all lands to strew flowers over the mounds of the departed. It may have been suggested by the fact that Christ's tomb was in a garden. And when I say garden I do not mean a garden of these latitudes. The late frosts of spring and the early frosts of autumn are so near each other that there are only a few months of flowers in the field. All the flowers we see to-day had to be petted and coaxed and put under shelter, or they would not have bloomed at all. They are the children of the conservatories. But at this season and through the most of the year, the Holy Land is all ablaze with floral opulence.

You find all the royal family of flowers there, some that you supposed indigenous to the far north, and others indigenous to the far south—the daisy and hyacinth, crocus and anemone, tulip and water lily, geranium and ranunculus, mignonette and sweet marjoram. In the college at Beyrout you may see Dr. Post's collection of about eighteen hundred kinds of Holy Land flowers; while among trees are the oaks of frozen climes, and the tamarisk of the tropics, walnut and willow, ivy and hawthorn, ash and elder, pine and sycamore. If such floral and botanical beauties are the wild growths of the field, think of what a garden must be in Palestine! And in such a garden Jesus Christ slept after, on the soldier's spear, his last drop of blood had coagulated. And then see how appropriate that all our cemeteries should be floralized and tree shaded.

"Well, then," you say, "how can you make out that the Resurrection day will beautify the cemeteries? Will it not leave them a plowed up ground? On that day there will be an earthquake, and will not this split the polished Aberdeen granite, as well as the plain slab that can afford but two words, 'Our Mary,' or 'Our Charles?'" Well, I will tell you how Resurrection day will beautify all the cemeteries. It will be by bringing up the faces that were to us once, and in our memories are to us now, more beautiful than any calla lily, and the forms that are to us more graceful than any willow by the waters. Can you think of anything more beautiful than the reappearance of those from whom we have been parted? I do not care which way the tree falls in the blast of the Judgment hurricane, or if the plowshare that day shall turn under the last rose leaf and the last china aster, if out of the broken sod shall come the bodies of our loved ones not damaged, but irradiated.

The idea of the resurrection gets easier to understand as I hear the phonograph unroll some voice that talked into it a year ago, just before our friend's decease. You touch the lever, and then come forth the very tones, the very song of the person that breathed into it once, but is now departed. If a man can do that, cannot Almighty God, without half trying, return the voice of your departed? And if he can return the voice, why not the lips and the tongue and the throat that fashioned the voice? And if the lips and the tongue and the throat, why not the brain that suggested the words? And if the brain, why not the nerves, of which the brain is the headquarters? And if he can return the nerves, why not the muscles, which are less ingenious? And if the muscles, why not the bones, that are less wonderful? And if the voice and the brain and the muscles and the bones, why not the entire body? If man can do the phonograph, God can do the resurrection.

Will it be the same body that in the last day shall be reanimated? Yes, but infinitely improved. Our bodies change every seven years, and yet in one sense, it is the same body. On my wrist and the second finger of my right hand there is a scar. I made that at twelve years of age, when, disgusted at the presence of two warts, I took a red hot iron and burned them off and burned them out. Since then my body has changed at least a half dozen times, but those scars prove it is the same body. We never lose our identity. If God can and does sometimes rebuild a man five, six, ten times, in this world, is it mysterious that he can rebuild him once more, and that in the resurrection? If he can do it ten times, I think he can do it eleven times. Then look at the seventeen-year locusts. For seventeen years gone, at the end of seventeen years they appear, and by rubbing the hind leg against the wing make that rattle at which all the husbandmen and vine dressers tremble as the insectile host takes up the march of devastation. Resurrection every seventeen years, a wonderful fact!

Another consideration makes the idea of resurrection easier. God made Adam. He was not fashioned after any model. There had never been a human organism, and so there was nothing to copy. At the first attempt God made a perfect man. He made him out of the dust of the earth. If out of ordinary dust of the earth and without a model God could make a perfect man, surely ly out of the extraordinary dust of mortal body, and with millions of models, God can make each one of us a perfect being in the resurrection. Surely the last undertaking would not be greater than the first. See the gospel algebra; ordinary dust minus a model equals a perfect man; extraordinary dust and plus a model equals a resurrection body. Mysteries about it? Oh, yes; that is one reason why I believe it. It would not be much of a God who could do things only as far as I can understand. Mysteries, Oh, yes; but no more about the resurrection of your body than about its present existence.

I will explain to you the last mystery of the resurrection, and make it as plain to you as that two and two make four, if you will tell me how your mind, which is entirely independent of your body, can act upon your body so that at your will your eye open, or your foot walks, or your hand is extended. So I find nothing in the Biblical statement concerning the resurrection that staggers me for a moment. All doubts clear from my mind. I say that the cemeteries however beautiful now, will be more beautiful when the bodies of our loved ones come up, in the morning of the resurrection.

They will come in improved condition. They will come up rested. The most of them lay down at the last very tired. How often you have heard them say, "I am so tired!" The fact is, it is a tired world. I should go through this audience, and go round the world, I could not find a person in any style of life ignorant of the sensation of fatigue. I do not believe there are fifty persons in this audience who are not tired. Your head is tired, or your back is tired, or your foot is tired, or your brain is tired, or your nerves are tired. Long journeying, business application, or bereavement, or sickness has put on you heavy weights. So the vast majority of those who went out of this world went out fatigued. About the poorest place to rest in, is this world. Its atmosphere, its surroundings, and even its hilarities are exhausting. So God stops earthly life, and mercifully closes the eye and more especially gives quiescence to the lung and heart, that have not had ten minutes' rest from the first respiration and the first beat.

Under the healthful chemistry of the soil all the wear and tear of nerve and muscle and bone will be subtracted and that bath of good fresh clean soil will wash off the last ache, and then some of the same stuff of dust out of which the body of Adam was constructed may be infused into the resurrection body. How can the bodies of the human race, which have had no replenishment from the dust since the time of Adam in Paradise, get any recuperation from the storehouse from which he was constructed without our going back into the dust? The original, life-giving material having been added to the body as it once was, and the defects left behind, what a body will the resurrection body be! And will not hundreds of thousands of such appearing about the Gowanus heights make Greenwood more beautiful than any June morning after a shower? The dust of the earth being the original material for the fashioning of the first human being, we have to go back the same place to get a perfect body.

Factories are apt to be rough places, and those who toil in them have their garments grimy and their hands smudged. But who cares for that when they turn out for beautiful musical instruments or exquisite upholstery? What though the grave is a rough place, it is a resurrection body manufactory, and from it shall come the radiant and resplendent forms of our friends on the brightest morning the world ever saw. You put into a factory cotton, and it comes out apparel. You put into a factory lumber and lead, and it comes out pianos and organs. And so into the factory of the grave, you put in pneumonias and consumptions and they come out health. You put in groans and they come out hallelujahs. For us, on the final day, the most attractive places will not be the parks or the gardens or the places, but the cemeteries.

We are not told in what season that day will come. If it should be winter, those who come up will be more lustrous than the snow that covered them. If in the autumn, those who come up will be more gorgeous than the woods after the frosts had pined them. If in the spring, the bloom on which they tread will be dull compared with the rubicund of their cheeks. Oh, the perfect resurrection body! Almost everybody has some defective spot in his physical constitution; a dull ear, or a dim eye, or a rheumatic foot, or a neuralgic brow, or a twisted muscle, or a weak side, or an inflamed tongue, or some point at which the east wind or season of overwork assaults him. But the resurrection body shall be without one weak spot, and all that the doctors, and nurses, and apothecaries of earth will therefore have to do, will be to rest without interruption after the broken nights of their earthly existence. Not only will that day be the beautification of well-kept cemeteries, but some of the graveyards that have been neglected and been the pasture ground for cattle, and rooting places for vines, will for the first time have attractiveness when they are seen.

It was a shame that in that place ungrateful generations planted no trees, and twisted no garlands, and sculptured no marble for their Christian ancestors; but on the day of which I speak the resurrected shall make the place their feet glorious. From under the shadow of the church, where they slumbered among nettles, and rattle stalks, and thistles, and slabs aslant, they shall rise with a glory that shall flush the windows of the village church, and by the bell tower that used to call them to worship, and above the old spire beside which their prayers formerly ascended. What triumphal procession never did for a street, what an oratorio never did for an academy, what an orator never did for a brilliant auditory, what obelisk never did for a king, resurrection morn will do for all the cemeteries.

This Easter tells us that Christ's resurrection or resurrection, if we are to have it, and the resurrection of the pious dead, is assured, for he was "the first-fruits of them that slept." John says he did not see him, but five hundred and eighty witnesses, sixty of them Christ's enemies, say he did rise, for they saw him after he had risen. If he did not rise, how did sixty armed soldiers let him get away? Surely sixty living soldiers ought to be able to keep one dead man! Blessed God! He did get away. After his resurrection Mary Magdalene saw him. Cleopas saw him. Ten disciples in an upper room at Jerusalem, saw him. On a mountain the eleven saw him. Five hundred at once saw him. Professor Ernest Renan, who did not see him, will excuse us for asking the testimony of the five hundred and eighty who did see him. Yes, yes; he got away. And that makes me sure that our departed loved ones and we ourselves shall get away.

There will be no door knob on the inside of our family sepulchre, for we cannot get out of ourselves; but there is a door knob on the outside, and that Jesus shall hold of, and, opening, will say: "Good morning! You have slept long enough! Rise! Arise!" And then what flutter of wings, and what flashing of rekindled eyes, and what glad some rushing across the family lot, with cries of "Father, is that you?" "Mother, is that you?" "My darling, is that you?" "How you all have changed! The cough gone, the croup gone, the consumption gone, the paralysis gone, the weariness gone. Come, let us ascend together! The older ones first, the younger ones next! Quick now, get into line! The sky-ward procession has already started! Steer now by that embankment of cloud for the nearest gate!" And, as we ascend, on one side the earth gets smaller until it is no larger than a mountain, and smaller until it is no larger than a palace, and smaller until it is no larger than a ship, and smaller until it is no larger than a wheel, and smaller until it is no larger than a speck.

Farewell, dissolving earth! But on the other side, as we rise, heaven at first appears no larger than your hand. And nearer it looks like a chariot, and nearer it looks like a throne, and nearer it looks like a star, and nearer it looks like a sun, and nearer it looks day as large as those which on week evenings are collected in them to witness stage performances. They are followed by meetings for persons who have been impressed at the general meetings and are anxious to receive spiritual advice and guidance. These the ministers and evangelists are glad to give, and many an anxious soul is led to the Saviour at each meeting.

The Great Revival in New York.

(Continued from first page.)

On March 13, the ministers and evangelists engaged in the work were cheered by the presence and help of the great evangelist, Mr. D. L. Moody, who, although not yet recuperated after his wonderful campaign in Washington, was induced to come to New York and hold two services. The first was to begin at half-past three, but by one o'clock there were more people waiting to enter than the great Broadway Tabernacle would hold. Mr. Moody preached again in the evening to an enormous assemblage. He expressed his deep thankfulness for the religious interest manifested, not only in New York, but in other parts of the coun-received forty and nearly two hundred have gone forward for prayers. At Beekman Hill M. E. Church forty-nine have been received and 270 are candidates for admission. Similar reports are made by pastors of other churches.

The credit of inaugurating this great work which is still going on and seems destined to attain yet greater proportions, belongs to Rev. A. C. Dixon, pastor of Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn, and he has been ably assisted in the executive management by his faithful secretary, Rev. S. V. Robinson, on whom the vast labor of correspondence, arrangements for speakers and hire of buildings has fallen. Portraits of both these earnest and consecrated workers appear on our first page. Mr. Dixon is a Southerner by birth. He was born in Cumberland County, North Carolina, about forty years ago. He had the inestimable privilege of growing up in a Christian home. His father was a man of great force of character, ardent, industrious, unselfish; working hard on his farm and preaching the Gospel far and near, in season and out of season. He was one of those earnest frontier preachers whose courage, perseverance and self-denying labors laid the foundations for the churches where their successors are now building up vigorous communities of consecrated people. Young Dixon often accompanied his father on these preaching journeys, and so far from being discouraged by the difficulties and hardships which he saw and shared, desired nothing better than to labor for the same Divine Master in the same great work. He was only eleven years of age when he was converted and joined his father's church. At fifteen he was a student of Wake College, and at nineteen he had temporary charge of two pastorless congregations to which he ministered for nine months. During that period he had the joy of baptizing no less than one hundred converts.

After completing his academic career, by a course of systematic theology, he accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Chapel Hill Church in the neighborhood of South Carolina University, and during his three years pastorate, he made special efforts to reach the students of that institution. Seventy-five of them were won for Christ by his efforts. Mr. Dixon's next charge was at Asheville, N. C. There the additions to the church during one quarter of a year numbered two hundred and fifty, and during the whole term of his three and-a-half years pastorate, the church grew not only in numbers, but in the aggressive and earnest spirit of its members. A call, very flattering to a young man, reached Mr. Dixon while at Asheville. It came from his own university—Wake Forest—which elected him to the Presidency. Mr. Dixon, however, believing that the success which had attended his pulpit labors was a clear indication of his call to the special work of preaching, declined the dignity offered him and accepted an invitation from a small church at Baltimore, Md. His success there was phenomenal. The church became too small for the congregation, and a large tabernacle was erected for his use. In 1860, Mr. Dixon received a call from the Hanson Place Church in Brooklyn, where he has since labored with many tokens of the Divine blessing. His church has now over a thousand members, ninety-six of whom have united since the present revival. It has a flourishing Society of Christian Endeavor which has an average attendance of from two to three hundred at its weekly meetings, and its members are doing cheerful and efficient service on the usual committees. In so large and active a church there are possibilities of aggressive influence which are fully used.

THE TRADITIONAL TOMBS OF THE PATRIARCHS AT HEBRON.*
(From a photograph brought from Palestine by Rev. Dr. Talmage.)

like a universe. Hail, sceptres that shall always wave! Hail, companionships never again to part! That is what resurrection day will do for all the cemeteries and graveyards, from the Machpelah that was opened by Father Abraham in Hebron to the Machpelah yesterday consecrated. And that makes Lady Huntington's immortal rhythm most apposite:

When thou, my righteous Judge shalt come
To take thy ransomed people home,
Shall I among them stand?
Shall such a worthless worm as I,
Who sometimes am afraid to die,
Be found at thy right hand?
Among thy saints let me be found,
Whene'er th' archangel's trump shall sound;
To see thy smiling face;
Then loudest of the throng I'll sing,
While heaven's resounding arches ring
With shouts of sovereign grace.

*The central crypt is the traditional sepulchre of Abraham while the tombs of Isaac, Jacob, Sara, Rebecca and Leah are ranged on either side.

try. "Never in the last ten years," he said, "has this city been so aroused about the cause of Christ as it is now. All over the country it is the same way. In three States in the West, 54,000 members have been added to the membership of the evangelical churches. Even in the great revival of 1857 people were not so thoroughly aroused as they are now." No one has better opportunities of judging in such matters than Mr. Moody, and his statement gladdened many hearts. As to New York, the fact is obvious to all observers. The movement is spreading from church to church, and is affecting Christians as well as outsiders. Numbers of men and women who have, while maintaining a Christian profession, held aloof from active Christian work, may now be seen speaking to the anxious in the meetings, or addressing loiterers in the parks and inviting them to the services. The number of additions to the churches has been unprecedented. Rev. S. Allman, of Emanuel Baptist Church, has

CLOSING THE FOOD FUND'S WORK.

The Destitution is Decreasing and many of the Idle are Securing Employment—The long Winter of Famine and Suffering Ended at Last.

BETTER days have come at last to the destitute poor of New York. Within the last two weeks, the suffering among the families in the tenement districts has greatly abated, and with the advent of milder weather, trade is improving and many of the idle are securing work. The pressure on the various relief organizations is steadily diminishing, and every day marks a further improvement in the general condition of the many thousands who, less than two months ago, were on the verge of famine. At the stations of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Food Fund, the number of applications for relief is considerably less than at any time since the Fund was started, and, in consequence, it has been considered advisable to concentrate the entire work at the two central stations, No. 210 Eighth Avenue, and No. 12 Stuyvesant Street. At the former, about five hundred families are still being supplied, and three hundred and fifty at the latter; while the supplies for the daily free breakfast at the Travelers' Club, and the afternoon gathering of women and children at the same place, are also reduced to correspond with the decreasing numbers. These, together with one hundred families in Mrs. Bella Cooke's district—on the East Side, where the want and suffering are still very great—represent the present work of the Food Fund. In a little over two months, it has been the means of relieving nearly 12,000 destitute families, or about 60,000 individuals, besides supplying a daily meal to between 1,500 and 1,700 homeless and unemployed workmen and several hundred women and children.

This work, which was begun and carried gloriously forward by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and their friends in every part of the country, and which is now nearing its termination, has been the means, under Divine Providence, of accomplishing much more than those who have so generously supported it could have anticipated.

Not only have they been instrumental in relieving the sufferings of these thousands of afflicted ones, but they have, unknowingly, led very many back to a life of faith, who had become alienated from God. To all such, the hand of Christian helpfulness has held out a double blessing. Our own missionaries, and the city pastors who have co-operated with the Food Fund, have found, in the spiritual part of the relief work, a most blessed and delightful experience. Many of the assisted families, recognizing God's

"HIDDEN AWAY IN THEIR ATTIC ROOM."

the hearts of grateful thousands. In raising the embargo of hunger and wretchedness, they have performed the part of the good Samaritan, binding up the wounds of the strangers, feeding them and caring for them with tender solicitude.

No other motive than love for the Master and zeal in his service could have prompted such an outpouring of gifts in money, clothing and supplies as has come to the Food Fund during the last two months. These offerings have come from people of all classes and conditions and ages. Pastors have forwarded the contributions of their congregations, teachers of their classes, and Leagues, Societies, Circles and organizations without number have united in the good work. From farming communities, a thousand generous gifts have been received, both in money and produce, and a host of good people in villages, towns and cities, have forwarded either money to feed the hungry, or clothing to cover the naked. And everywhere the love of Christ has constrained his children to urge on the work.

Several weeks must yet elapse before the prevailing distress is wholly alleviated, and meanwhile the two stations of the Food Fund will remain open, and its workers will stay in the field. Even yet, there are lingering cases of sad destitution discovered almost daily, such as that shown in our illustration. One of our Westside missionaries found an aged mother and a sick daughter who were famishing, and had not been able to buy food or fuel for many days. They had not even heard of the Food Fund! Confined to their attic room, the general relief work that was being conducted by different organizations seemed to have passed them by. Fortunately, such cases are now rare.

Contributions to the Fund received during the week are acknowledged below. The gifts of clothing, provisions, etc., are acknowledged on page 199 of this issue.

Previously ack'd. $20,748 57	Benedict, Adhe. 1.00	Coleman, Frank. 2.00	Friend, Oakland, Mass. 1.00	Friend, Belle Porte, N.C. 1.00	Friends, W. Sumner, Me. 1.00
Austin, Mrs. H.E. 10.00	Brown, Anna 1.00	Crossman, N. 1.00	" Callaway, Neb. 1.00	" Vernon, Wis. 1.00	" So. China, Me. 10.25
Allen, D.W. 1.00	Brown, Dwight and Marion. 2.00	Clarke, Wm. 2.00	" Wendover, Can. 1.00	" " 1.00	" Still Pond, Md. 2.30
Allen, R.W. 4.00	Bowers, C.W. 10.00	Cleveland, E.C. 1.00	" Davenport, Ia. 2.00	" Beuery, W.J. 2.00	" Stamford, N.Y. 4.00
Arbuckle, H.E. 1.00	Belshaw, James. 2.00	Carr, E.C. 1.00	" Grand Rapids, N.D. 1.00	" Wheeler, S.D. 5.00	" Kanona, N.Y. 2.50
Adams, Ella 1.00	Berton, W. 1.00	Cruikshank, G.H.A.J. 1.00	" Marine, Ill. 1.00	" Ft. Valley, Ga. 1.00	" Belvidere, Tenn. 5.00
Andrus, Mrs. A.W. 1.00	Brown, Mr. H.C. 2.00	Campbell, Frank. 1.00	" Monson, Mass. 1.00	" E. Thedford, Vt. 1.00	" Palatka, Fla. 4.00
Allen, Mrs. C. 1.00	Bach, G.H. 2.00	Cooley, P.P. 1.00	" " 5.00	" Logan, Mont. 1.00	" Merkel, Tex. 3.05
Adams, G.L. 1.00	Bradfield, Mrs. C.A. 3.50	Corn, W.S. 2.00	" Boston 1.00	" Springfield, Iowa 1.00	Friends, Hockley, Ill. 1.50
Atkinson, Mrs. J.E. 1.00	Bailey, L.C. 1.00	Coleman, W.H. 1.00	" Martinsville, Pa. 2.00	" Norridgewood, Me. 2.00	" Tularose, Cal. 1.50
Allen, S.D. 2.00	Burkett, A.S. 5.00	Christian, Geo. 1.00	" Ingersole, Can. 1.00	" Water Valley, Miss. 2.00	" High Bluff, Can. 2.00
Allen, J.L. 1.00	Barcalon, Mrs. T. 1.00	C—family, Baptisttown, N.J. 3.00	" Alma, Me. 1.00	" Dover, Del. 2.00	" Park River, N.C. 3.00
Aber, Mr. and Mrs. Almos. 2.00	Buchanan, J.A. 1.00	Cushman, Mrs. M. 1.20	" Roxbury, Mass. 1.00	" Rockland, Mass. 1.00	" in Miss. 1.00
Anger, Wm. 1.00	Buchanan, M.A. 1.00	Cash, 5.00	" Monmouth, Me. 2.00	" Westfield, N.J. 1.00	" Melrose, Tex. 1.60
Agne, John L. 3.00	Buchanan, Belle 1.00	Craig, D.J. and friends. 12.25	" Dockertown, N.J. 2.00	" Clare, Can. 1.00	" Hoath Head 3.00
Adams, Ellen 1.00	Bowling, Dorand and Kittie. 1.00	Darling, Mrs. J. 1.00	" Wawarsing, N.Y. 1.00	" " 3.50	" Hockley, Mo. 1.04
Anderson, Mrs. S. 1.00	Burns, Michael 2.00	Douglas, H.W. 1.50	" " 2.00	" Newington, Conn. 1.00	" Unadilla, N.Y. 1.55
Baldwin, K.E. and M.R. 2.00	Buckner, Miss Lizzie 2.15	Do Be Noise, Mrs. H.E. 1.00	" Dunsmuir, N.Y. 1.00	" Greenfield Hill, Conn. 10.00	" in B. 10.00
Black, Geo. A. 3.00	Bates, Orytha. 1.00	De Nure, D.D. 2.50	" Garbutt, N.Y. 1.00	" Beemerville, N.J. 2.00	" Marissa, Ill. 4.65
Brigham, W.J. 1.00	Blair, Mrs. M. 5.00	" Mrs. F. 2.50	" Franklin, N.Y. 1.00	" Lincoln Center, Neb. 2.00	" of Louise Brown 1.55
Brigham Mrs. W.J. 1.00	Brill, Mrs. L. 1.00	" C. 2.50	" " 1.00	" " 1.00	" No. Thedford, Vt. 2.00
Brown, C.M. 1.00	Blanchard, Miss A. 1.00	" Degner and wife, W.F. 2.50	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" of the poor, Laporte, 4.25
Bell, S.L. 1.00	Brooklyn, Mrs. J. 1.00	Dorimur, A.E. 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	Friends of Salem Church, Dalton, O. 7.00
Batons, Mrs. E.H. 3.00	Barbour, Mrs. J. 1.00	Dunham, Mrs. E. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	Faith, Hope and Charity, Phila. 1.00
Baptist Church— 6.44	Bernardston, Mass. 1.00	Davis, F. 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bernardston, Mass. 6.44	Baptist Church, Leim Grove, Iowa 15.00	Dever, Era 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Beck, W.H. 1.00	Bulkey's School, Greenfield 3.00	Douglas, K.M. 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Beland, H. 1.00	Hill, Conn. 3.00	Dodge, Miss S. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Barclay, H.M. 1.00	Boulah, Mr. Vernon, N.Y. 2.00	Dick, Mrs. E.M. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Byron Mr. and Mrs. W.T. 1.00	Believe and wife, Conn. 1.00	Dunham's Corner, Union S.S. 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Barford, S.G. 1.00	Brother in the Lord, Bellefontaine, Ohio. 2.50	De Young, Mina, Ida and Ray 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Balch, S.P. 1.00	Chester, Mrs. and Mrs. A.S. 1.00	Duryear, Mrs. E.B. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Brown, Mr. and Mrs. N. 2.00	Creveling, A.M. 1.00	Dennis, L.L. and A.E. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bahn, S. 1.00	Conkey, Mrs. E.C. 1.00	Dutton, Della 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Baltimore friend to the poor of New York. 5.00	Conrad, Miss S.E. 1.00	Dartford, E.W. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Breck, C.E. 3.00	Coon, Mrs. D.H. 2.00	Dean, C. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bignall, J. 1.00	Congregational S.S., N. Dighton, Mass. 11.08	Duncan, W.E. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Boon and family, J.W. 2.00	Christ Church S.S. 1.95	Donation, Colegrove, Cal. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Balwin, Mrs. P.M. 1.00	Christian Endeavor Riverside 4.76	Do Wit, Emma A. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bates, G.R. 2.00	Chapel, Nyack 1.00	Dongan, Thomas P. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Borges, Mrs. Selena 1.00	E.S.L.H., Lock Haven, Pa. 1.00	Davis, J.B. 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bristolfield, J. 1.00	Christ's Endeavor, Azon, Mo. 2.00	Dick, Mrs. E.M. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Brooks, Mrs. K. 1.00	Cash, Newton, Pa. 1.00	Dorothoe, Portsmouth, O. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Butler, Mrs. M.A. 5.00	Cheerful Giver, S.—, Pa. 1.00	Decker, Willard D. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Baley and children, Mrs. H. 1.00	Cash, Mich. 1.00	D.M. & Mrs. Big Springs, Neb. 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bronson, Mrs. 1.00	Collected by Mrs. E.V., Kitchen. 3.00	Donegan, E. 5.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bloomfield, M.E.S.S., N.Y. 1.00	Collected by Mrs. L.G. Vance, N.S. class. 8.50	Dolton, Wm. 4.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Brinking, Miss K. 1.00	Collected by Mrs. M.R. Meeker 2.85	Elliot, G.W. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bates, E. and H.S. 1.00	Cheerful giver, Brooklyn, N.Y. 1.00	Evans, W.W. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bignell, Jas. L. 1.00	Country Church, Federal, O. 3.65	Escher, Mrs. G. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Biker Peter 1.00	Cash, Port Chester, N.Y. 3.00	Elwell, C.O. 4.15	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Ballantine, Mr. and Mrs. 1.00	Cash, Suffern, N.Y. 1.00	Evans, R.H. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Boytton, Mrs. J. 1.00	Collected by Ira Owen 1.30	Eastwood, Susan 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Band of Hope, Bristol, Vt. 1.00	Children 3d and 4th grades, 2d ward school, Seaside, Wis. 1.50	English Lutheran Church— 7.50	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bockmeyer, C. and family 1.00	Caldwell, W.N. 1.00	Finckson, Ill. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Brodin, P. 1.00	Carpeniter H.P. 5.00	Elms, F.G. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bigelow, Mrs. 2.50	Cones, Willis 1.00	Earl, Mrs. O. 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Brother & sister, Neponset, Ill. 2.45	Christian Friend, Brooklyn 1.00	Ellis, L. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bogert, Mrs. A.J. 5.00	Children, H.M. 2.00	Edwards, Mrs. J. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Boring, Ida B. 1.00	Conner, Mrs. C.W. 1.00	Echols, Kate 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bowen, Mrs. E.A. 1.00	Chaffee, Mrs. A. 1.00	Emma, Farmville, Ill. 2.25	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Benson, Mr. and Mrs. I.L. 1.00	Cook, Mrs. C.H. 5.00	Elliot, Jennie 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bless, J.W. 5.00	Clark, John 1.00	Faith, M. Gilead. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Burd, Katie 2.00	Christian Endeavor 3.00	Family, Maxwell City, N. Mex. 5.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Brown, Edith M. 1.00	Union Dale, Pa. 3.00	Friend and co-worker 10.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bradley, Chas. 2.00	Cowles, S.G. 2.00	Friend and self, Bladon, S.C. 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Boyd, Mrs. A.H. 1.00	Cowles, Mrs. E.C. 5.00	Friend to all humanity 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Brewster, A.V. 1.00	Cowles, Miss M.E. 1.00	Mr. Vernon, N.H. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Blackburn, Mrs. N.J. 1.00	Christian, S.S. 4.00	Friend to the cause 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Blackburn, Mr. H.H. 1.00	Cong. S.S., Humdale, N.H. 4.50	Friends of the poor— 12.63	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Baker, R.J. 1.00	Childs, G.M. 5.00	Spartanburg, Pa. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Barber, C.B. 1.00	Crowther, A.M. 1.00	Friend to the poor 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bennett, Mrs. H.W. S.S. class 1.00	Clark 1.00	Friend, Pawnska, Okla. 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bailey, O.W. 1.00	Collins, Mrs. L. 1.00	" China, Mo. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Broth, Mrs. S. 1.00	Collection— Christian Church, South Portland, R.I. 15.00	" Hollister, Cal. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Brown, Mrs. W.T. 1.00	Cong. Church S.S. 3.25	" Grass Valley, Cal. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bryens, Miss Sue 1.00	Island Pond, Vt. 1.00	" Clinton, N.Y. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Ball, Mrs. A. 1.00	Clare, D.P. 1.00	" in Iowa 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Brown, Mrs. I.D. 1.00	Collection, La Fargeville, N.Y. 2.00	" Hochstetler, Pa. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Beedle, G.E. 2.00	Carmichael, B. 2.00	" Ivalde, Tex. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bagshaw, Mrs. E.W. 2.00	Chamberlin, Mrs. M. 1.00	" Grand Haven, Mich. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Batchelder, Geo. E. 2.00	Cook, Mrs. 1.00	" Morrison, Ill. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Brown, Thomas 2.00	Alkin, Mrs. R. 1.00	" Bergen, N.Y. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Baird, Agnes 1.00	Crossen, Mrs. 1.00	" Langsburg, Mich. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bowker, S. 1.00	Clark, Mrs. E.W. 1.00	" Maynard, N.H. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Borgeson, Mrs. Simon 1.00	Cleveland, Miss R.B. 1.00	" Weymouth, Mass. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bradley, Mr. and Mrs. 1.00	C.H. reader, Aurora, Neb. 1.00	" Sequoia, Cal. 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bugelow, Chas. G. 1.00	" " 1.00	" So. Frankfort, Mich. 4.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Bugelow, May J. 1.00	" " 1.00	" D.P. Creek, Md. 20.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Borgeson, Mr. and Mrs. 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00
Burgderfer, J. and children 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 2.00	" " 2.00	" " 1.00	" " 1.00

Jarner, A. C.	200	Jester, Mrs T	200	Morehouse, F R	100	Roberts, E A	100	Y P S C E, Menonite Church,	—	Ipswich, Mass	200
Jarner, Mrs W C	500	Jones, S P	500	Morehouse, Mrs	200	Reinke, Miss C	200	Wash, D C	480	Neodeska, Kan	200
Jarvis, G C	350	Jacob, J	100	Montgomery, Mrs L	100	Ritter, W	100	Atlantic Highlands, N J	500	Danville, Pa	200
Jard, Mary A	100	Keller and friends, B	400	Moffett, Rev E O	400	Rollins, R W	100	Zinn, Rev S A and family	500	Winnebago City, Minn	100
Jarvis, G H	100	King's daughter, La Fargue, N Y	200	Moffett, Mrs Rev E O	200	Rue, Mrs J	100	E F L, Washington, D C	100	Winnipeg, Can	200
Jardman, Mrs	100	King's daughter, North, N Y	200	Moffett, Mrs Rev E O	200	Rosander, Frances	100	A J L, Washington, D C	100	Sidney Crossing, Can	200
Jardman, Mrs H J	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rogers, A	100	M C P, Clayville, N Y	100	3 Mile Bay, N Y	100
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Reed, Mrs C	500	N L, Mathuen, Mass	100	Lich Run Mills, Pa	100
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	I F M, Bridgeton, Me	200	Westfield, Mass	100
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	M F J, Meach, N Y	100	Enosburg Falls, Vt	100
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	A H S, Leyden, N Y	100	Brockton, Mass	300
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	E H S, Junction City, O	100	Lansburg, N Y	100
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	L M B, Oak, C	100	Arnold, Mrs O. 50c. Anderson,	500
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	M M P, E F, Waterbury, Ct	125	Alex, 25c.	—
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	I M L, Petoskey, Mich	100	Burch, Mrs Janet F. 25c. Bliss,	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	M W R C and daughter, Au-	600	Mrs G. 50c; Brown, Mrs C P. 75c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	trim, N H	100	Brown, Orville, 25c; Bower Mrs	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	M Lura, Bristol, Vt	100	James, Mrs. Brewster, Mrs	500
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	A B C, N J	100	Bunce, Mrs. Fannin, 25c; Brown,	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	P. Misses A & C, Montreal, Can	100	O. H. 50c; Bennett, John, 25c; Bay-	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs S A H, N Y	100	rell, E. 45c.	—
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs E E W, N Y	100	Colgrove, Ada, 35c; Colgrove, Mrs	100
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Miss M E S, N Y	250	G. H. 20c; Christy, Mrs G W, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	H M, Pasadena, Cal	100	Countryman, Mr F S, 25c; Crossen,	100
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	H M, Pasadena, Cal	100	John, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs, 50c; Co-	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	E. Rahway, Conn	500	zine, Jamie S. Cozine, 50c; Cozine,	100
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	E S F, Ont, Can	500	E. 50c; Cozine, Alice B. 15c; Cozine,	100
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	M M P, Lakeside, Wis	100	Majorie, 10c; Cramer, Mrs R W, 50c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	R L H, Mineola, Tex	100	Cramer, Madge, 50c; Carver, W, 50c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	B S M, Fairfield, Va	100	Carriek, Mrs D A. 50c; Cliver, J F,	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	C H A, Md	100	25c; Combs, Mrs H A. 50c.	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	D J S B, Hermosa, S D	100	Dennis, Raymond and Glenn, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Gauge, N H	200	Dickman, Mrs. F. D. 25c; Dargnall, J	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	M C P, Sheldon, N D	100	50c; Duncan, Helen, 50c.	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	A E J, Ushers, N J	100	Eugen, La Crosse, Wis, 25c; Eg-	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	H M T, Randolph, Ia	100	bert, Miss L. 10c; Eddie, —, Va, 35c.	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	M C R, Painesville, O	100	Friends of the poor, Elkhart, —	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	H E C, Oakland, Cal	100	25c; Friend and Reader, —, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mr & Mrs H, Drakeville, Ia	100	Friend to the needy, —, 50c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Edgar, Mrs. H. 25c; Fennell, —	200	Friend, Mrs. F. 25c; Fennell, —	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs H S F, Troy Hills, N J	200	Pottsville, Pa, 50c; Friend, —	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs E H B, Troy Hills, N J	200	Friend, Saxton, N Y, 50c; Fuller,	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	A. New Brunswick, N J	100	Mrs E J. 50c; Felzer, Z, 50c; Friend,	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	C L, Jeffersonville, Ind	100	Sherwood, N Y, 25c; Friend, Mont-	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	S B, Westport, Conn	100	rose, P. 50c; Friend, Blyth, Kans,	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	E W, Garden Grove, Cal	100	25c; Friend, Westery, N Y, 50c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	M S N, Scranton, Pa	300	Friend, —, 25c; Friend, —, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	G W P, Winchester, Ill	100	Arroyo Grande, Cal, N. Y. Friend,	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J M, Quincy, Mass	100	Barrington, R. I. 65c; Friend, E	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mr J M, —	500	Guldford, N Y, 50c; Friend, Land	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	S M B, Caldwell, N J	100	Grove, Vt, 35c; Friend, Melrose, 50c.	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	M S N, Scranton, Pa	300	Gibson, Artie, 15c; Goodwin, Mrs	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	G S, Ellsworth, Conn	100	L. I. 50c; Gleicher, Lena, 50c; Grif-	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs P H D, Mocksville, N C	100	fin, —, 25c.	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Geo C M, Owen Sound, Can	100	Hildebrand, Mrs M A. 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs G W S, Brooklyn, N Y	100	Haines, Miss J. 50c; Hamlin, How-	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	A P, Rehoboth, Mass	500	ard, 10c; Hutson, Abbie, 55c; Has-	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	W L W, Portsmouth, Va	100	kell, S. M. 75c.	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	M L S, Tyrone, N Y	100	Holland, Robt, 50c; Harroun, Mrs	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs B S I, Peckville, Pa	100	N. J. 50c; Helping Hand, Passaic, N	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	R F J, Brooklyn, NY	100	J. 25c.	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs S M S, Yaphank	500	Inter, B. M. 25c; Hughes, Mrs	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	B E, Sinton, Vt	100	Leah, 50c; Hughes, A. 15c; Hughes,	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	N K R, Dayton, O	100	A. 15c; Hughes, E. 10c; Hughes, C	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	10c; Hughes, L. 10c; Hulbert, Mrs	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	M. S. 25c.	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	In His Name, Jnction, Ore, 35c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	I. H. N. Bush Hill, Mo, 25c; I. H. N.	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	25c; I. H. N. Blumery, W. A.	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	30c; I. H. N. 40c; I. H. N. Virginia	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	City, Mont, 5c; I. H. N., —, 20c.	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Johnson, Mrs A and F. C. 30c; J S	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	C E, 1st Congreg Church, Branford,	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Conn, 50c; J S C E, Chaffield, Minn.	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	70c; Jordan, Willie, 50c; Jordan,	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	30c; Jordan, Willie, 50c; Jordan,	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Verma, 50c; Jordan, Abbie, 50c; Jord-	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	King's daughters, Belmont, Neb.	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	70c; Kuehnemann, W. S. 50c; Kerr	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	and children, Mrs, 50c; Kellogg,	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Mrs Ida, 25c; Kennedy, Charlie, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Kennedy, Alta, 25c; Kennedy, Jose-	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	phine, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs C S	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200
Jardman, Mrs W B	100	Kellogg and family, M J	100	Mengerhausen, H	100	Rea, Mrs M E	100	Mrs J L, —	100	Phoebe, 25c; Kennedy, Orville, 25c;	200

DISCORD IN JACOB'S FAMILY.

S.S. Lesson for Apr. 8. Gen. 37: 1-11. Golden Text. Gen. 45: 24. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

JACOB'S meeting with his brother was other than he, in his fears and doubts, had anticipated. Esau ran to meet him, embraced him, fell on his neck and kissed him. (Gen. 33: 4.) God had softened his heart and cared for the troubling Jacob. Thus he revealed himself in his faithfulness to Jacob, the only man of his time who could understand him, and he so little! It is with a feeling of pain we read that Jacob, after his meeting with Esau abandoned the pilgrim life of his fathers and

"Built Him a House."

It was because his fathers were sojourners in the land of promise, dwelling in tents, heirs of the promise, looking "for the city which hath the foundations whose Maker and Builder is God"—it was because they "confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth," because "they desired a better country that is a heavenly"—that "God is not ashamed of them to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city." (Heb. 11: 9, 16, R.V.)

Jacob built him a home! And again, (chap. 37: 1, R.V.) Jacob dwelt in the land of his father's sojournings; he had neither the faith nor the pilgrim spirit of Abraham. But God is faithful. Wherever his children, his witnesses manifest a disposition to settle down and make earth their real home, God always uproots them. God said to the man who loved to settle down and be comfortable: "Arise, go up to Bethel, and dwell there, and make there an altar unto the God who appeared unto thee when thou fleddest from the face of Esau thy brother." If thou wilt settle down, let it be Where Thou hast met With God, not where thy children are in danger of contamination from the heathen. Thou fearest man, deal with God and thou shalt be safe." Oh, the tenderness of God to come thus near to one who is broken with sorrow, even though his own deed in settling down without taking counsel with God, was the root of all his trouble! When God comes near to his unsatisfactory, foolish children, he always finds a way out of the trouble. "Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord, for he shall pluck my feet out of the net." (Ps. 23: 15.)

Jacob was more broken at Succoth than he had been at Peniel, and he took a stand for God as never before. Up to this time idolatry had been winked at in his family. Now he is about to dwell in the place where heaven was first opened to him. There was the idols were put away, and God again drew nigh to his feeble child. He appeared unto him and endorsed the promises which he had before made to him on that very spot, and he also repeated his changing of name at Peniel. True sorrow followed, and his beloved Rachel was called away from him. But when we are in communion with God he makes even sorrow to be joy and loss to be gain by revealing his will in it, and making that will to be "good and acceptable and perfect" as soon as we lie upon the altar "living sacrifices."

A Reformation in Jacob's Family,

But Jacob was no true pilgrim; again and again we find him settling down. Oh how many of us in this way get into a net; we have been blest and settled down in the blessing into a kind of jog trot experience from which some great and unexpected shock has to awaken us!

God leads his children on from test to test. Every drawing near of God to us awakens the enmity of Satan, who will do anything to discourage and vex God's children. It was in the family that Jacob was now witnessing for God, and where God had gained a victory. It should be in the family where the poisoned arrows of the wicked one should be shot. In the changed family habits sin became doubly sinful. One young heart in the family had been won very fully on to the Lord's side and it was very natural, but not divine, that Jacob should love Joseph more than all his children. He was the son of his old age, his mother was the beloved Rachel and in his early developed knowledge of God, Joseph could have a fellowship of spirit with his father which could neither be understood nor appreciated by his unconverted brethren. But a father loses his high prerogative as a father after the image of God, when he shows partiality among his children. The sons of Bilhah and Zilpah, when out of their father's sight, and unrestrained by the stricter rules which now prevailed at home, yielded to sin which grieved their young brother Joseph. To be a tale bearer is repugnant, especially to a young man. But God hates sin and to conceal it was to be a party to it. Thus, at the cost of stirring up enmity against himself, Joseph told his father of their misdeeds.

The whole family was in a state of disunion, bitter words and bitter feeling were abroad. The elder brethren were indignant that their younger brother, Joseph, should have a place in their father's confidence which was not given to them, and without considering that they were unworthy of it, they resented it. Joseph naturally had lost his respect for them, because of their sin, and they had jealousy and bitter hatred in their hearts against him. Oh how Satan loves thus to sow strife, envy, malice, in the family of those who love God! Oh how he seeks to make their position as impossible as can be? Joseph's brethren "saw that his father loved him more than all his brethren; and they hated him and could not speak peaceably unto him." And this after all which had seemed so blessed; idols cast out and a terror of God on those which move around them! God works even by utilizing the malice of Satan to further his purposes. It is his brethren felt injured by their father's preference of Joseph, Joseph also felt injured by their unjust and unkind speeches. They took their trouble to one another, and stirred up the enmity in each other's hearts against Joseph. He took his trouble to God, and God comforted him in his own wondrous way by attracting his eyes from the present suffering to the future glory.

"Joseph dreamed a dream;" it was no image of a disordered fancy, but a true revelation from God. Most unwisely he told it to his brethren. It had made a great impression upon him, he had learned something of the value of present suffering in its bearing upon future glory, but the telling of his dream to his brethren was very like casting a reflection upon them. God may shew us things which are

For Ourselves Alone,

and are better told to none else. It looked like spiritual pride when Joseph related the drama in which he was the central figure; his sheaf arising and standing upright, and the sheaves of his brethren bowing down to his sheaf. It was impossible to misunderstand its significance: "Shalt thou indeed reign over us? or shalt thou indeed have dominion over us? And they hated him yet the more for his dreams and for his words." Oh how we need, especially in dealing with those in our own house, the covering of our God and the cleansing of the blood of Christ! If the least bit of personal feeling comes in, it is sure to be detected, and the truth of God which we would convey is lost through contact of ourself with self in others! We need God-given words and deeds, more for those nearest to us, than for any others, for all their self-life is open to be wounded by the least thing which may come from us. They do not forget our past inconsistencies, they remember every wounding word for years back, and are on the lookout whether there should be any repetition of the same thing in us now.

But God had yet great designs for Joseph. He "dreamed yet another dream" All the painful experience in his home-life brought no cloud between him and God. Already he was being educated to let nothing come between him and his Father in heaven, and, seeing him, he could also take from him all the hard looks, and words, and deeds of his brethren, and love them. It must have cost him something to tell his father that he saw in his dream that the sun and moon, and the eleven stars made obeisance to him. And then his father's rebuke: "What is this dream thou hast dreamed? Shall I, and thy mother, and thy brethren indeed come to bow down ourselves to the earth? And his brethren envied him. But his father, who had seen an open heaven, and not forgotten it," observed his saying, fact, which is obvious to the careful reader, that the events recorded are not always set down in the order of their occurrence. It would appear, however, that at this time Joseph was about seventeen years old, Jacob about a hundred, and Isaac, whose death is mentioned in the thirty-fifth chapter, was still alive, but blind and feeble. Jacob had not been a good son, and he did not prove a judicious father. As he had deceived and thwarted his father, so his sons were to deceive and thwart him. Children do not always realize while they are children how much their parents suffer by their misconduct; but they sometimes realize it, by actual experience, when they have children of their own. Jacob seems to have had the intention of making Joseph the head of the family, instead of Reuben, his eldest son. Reuben was a weak and vicious man, and Jacob may have concluded that Joseph, the eldest son of Rachel, had as good a title to the headship as Reuben, the eldest son of Leah. His decking him in the special garment was probably an intimation of this intention. There is some ambiguity in the description of it. Our translators have rendered it "a coat of many colors," but some scholars say, it would be more correctly translated, "a garment with sleeves," or "a garment embroidered and fringed." Whatever it may have been, its object was clearly to give distinction to the wearer. So it was evidently regarded by Joseph and the family, and it was the source of trouble. It probably suggested to Joseph expectations of ascendancy in the family, and when his dreams gave confirmation to his waking thoughts, he was not slow to impart them to those whom they concerned. Jacob was not pleased and the brothers were furious. Envy and hatred took root in their souls. Every one should be on his guard against those passions and they should be uprooted as soon as they show themselves. They poison the whole nature and if they are allowed to remain in the breast and grow, they are liable to lead to the commission of crime, as they did in this case.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

A coat of many colors. It was an unwise gift, harmful to the boy Jacob loved. It aroused jealousy and ill-will. Possibly, if severe discipline had not humbled Joseph, he might have grown up proud and conceited. Dean Swift had a humble friend named Faulkner, a prosperous printer who having been in fashionable society on one occasion began to ape the fashions of the time. He bought an expensive coat of silk brocade and gold lace, and having attired himself in it went to call upon the Dean. Swift pretended not to know him. In vain the printer insisted that he was Faulkner; Swift said he knew Faulkner well to be an honest unassuming man with too much good sense to deck his person in such manner. "Go," said the Dean, "I will not have any fop passing himself off as my worthy friend." Faulkner went home and dressed himself in his customary attire and went back to the Dean's house to convince his patron of his mistake. But before he could say a word, Swift grasped him cordially by the hand, "Ah, George," he exclaimed, "I am glad to see you. There has been an impudent coxcomb here, bedizened in silks and laces trying to pass himself off for you, but I sent the fellow about his business, for I knew you too well to believe you would be guilty of such folly."

His brethren . . . hated him. We are told that whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer. That is, the spirit is there which, if unchecked, may in some moment of provocation cause him to commit murder. In legal phrase he is a potential murderer. Doubtless, at the beginning, these men had no thought of committing the crime they did afterward commit; but when they cherished hatred in their hearts, they were ready for the crime when the opportunity occurred. He who has evil in his heart, has there an explosive force which becomes crime under irritation or temptation. There is a peculiarly dangerous process in the manufacture of certain kinds of gunpowder. The explosive is first compressed into large cakes and then ground into fine grains. This is a very dangerous point in the process, when explosion is liable to occur. Particularly on a windy day is there a possibility, despite extreme caution, of some tiny particles of sand blowing among the powder. Only one such tiny speck falling amidst the grinding plates may flash out an almost imperceptible spark that will instantly ignite the mass and blow the whole establishment into atoms. Such is the terrible power that lies resident in the smallest atom of dust. And such is the destructive force of a slight temptation when evil passions are lying latent in the heart.

His father rebuked him. A remarkable story is told of Oliver Cromwell, the great Protector who drove the Stuarts from England and put the head of the wicked family to death. In Hood's biography of the great statesman, he says that when Oliver was a child in his humble home, he had a dream of a very dignified personage who approached him and bade him study hard and prepare himself for high duties for he would one day be the greatest personage in the realm. Cromwell described this dream to his father who, thinking the boy was cherishing an ungodly ambition, whipped him soundly. Oliver told his teacher of it and the teacher wishing to keep him humble gave him another whipping. Oliver said no more about his dream, but it came true as Joseph's did, in spite of untoward circumstances.

His brethren envied him. Envy is the prolific mother of plots and the plots often recoil on those who make them. The Orientals have a story that a potter became envious of the prosperity of a fuller or bleacher, and devised a scheme to ruin him. He told the king that the fuller could make a black elephant white. The king wanted to be known as the Lord of the White Elephant and eagerly summoned the fuller into his presence. On hearing the demand, the fuller perceived the plot and guessed its author. It was a difficult task, he told the king, but he would do his utmost to fulfill his majesty's wishes. It would be necessary first to have an earthen pan large enough to wash the elephant in. The potter was summoned and ordered to make the pan. The man was in dismay. His kiln was not large enough to bake such a vessel and he did not know any clay strong enough to bear the elephant's weight. But the king would not listen to his excuses and bade him have the pan ready on a certain day at the peril of his life. At great expense and immense labor the pan was finally made, but it was crushed by the first step of the elephant. Many trials were made, and the potter was ruined by the plan he had devised for the fuller's destruction.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

BRAZILIAN REBELS SURRENDER.

DISPATCHES from Rio Janeiro under date of March 13 announce the surrender of the rebel fort and fleet. Admiral da Gama who commanded the rebel forces in the bay of Rio Janeiro, in the absence of Admiral Mello in the South, sent proposals for peace to President Peixoto on March 12. He undertook to surrender fort Villegagnon and all the ships under his command in the harbor, if the President would guarantee immunity for all who had been engaged in the rebellion and release the rebel officers then in prison. These terms the President rejected, on the ground that the government could not treat with rebels in arms against its authority. Preparations were at once made for a simultaneous bombardment of the rebel fleet and fort by the loyal forts and ships and a formal notice was sent to the foreign vessels to get out of the way. At the appointed hour on March 13, the batteries opened and a perfect hail of shot and shell was rained on the rebels. After three hours bombardment, Da Gama's flag was hauled down and Peixoto sent an officer to Fort Villegagnon to receive the surrender. It was found that Da Gama and his chief officers had taken refuge on a French vessel which had transferred them to a Portuguese ship. No reply was made to the government's bombardment, nor any opposition made to the government's officers taking possession of the fort and fleet. The garrison consisted of about eight hundred men. There were very few officers, the majority having gone on the Portuguese ship with Da Gama. There had evidently been a great scarcity of food and water both in the fort and on the ships. This surrender, although a decisive triumph for the government will not, it appears, end the rebellion. Admiral Mello has issued a proclamation declaring his resolve to continue the struggle and already an indecisive battle has been fought on the Southern frontier of Santa Catharina. Peixoto's answer to Da Gama was the answer that would be given by any self-respecting government. Unconditional surrender is the usual demand under the circumstances. It is that fact that prevents many men being reconciled to God. They would be willing to buy salvation by gifts or good works, but are not willing to acknowledge their sinfulness and plead for mercy through Christ. (Rom. 4: 5.)

A Petrified Man.

A singular discovery was made a few days ago at Brownsville, Penn. A family living in that town recently purchased a lot in a new cemetery, and wishing all its members to be interred in the same place, they had the body of an old man, who died eight years ago, exhumed for removal to the new lot. The weight of the coffin astonished them, when they had it drawn up out of the grave so they had it opened to investigate. The clothing was in excellent preservation but the dead man's hair and whiskers presented a curious appearance. The hair resembled fine threads of glass and was quite brittle. It was found, too, that the entire body had turned to stone of exceptional hardness. The grave was near the roadway and it is supposed that water must have percolated through the limestone of which the road is made and have soaked through the coffin. What happened to his body was a matter of no concern to the dead man, but there are some living men who have reason to dread an analogous process. The hardening effect of exposure to the world's influence has been often proved by men who have failed to seek the softening grace of God. (Heb. 3: 13.)

Two Heroes Dead.

A distressing fatality occurred at Hickory Bush, N. Y., on March 9. A cement company doing an extensive business has kilns in that town and employs a large number of men. One of the kilns had been fired up with fresh coal and a thick layer of cement rock was put in to be burned. One of the men went down a ladder to the bottom of the pit, a distance of about fifteen feet, to level the cracked stone. He was stooping over it, when he reeled and fell. The engineer saw him fall, and immediately went to his rescue. There must have been a deadly gas at the bottom of the pit, for, as he stooped down to raise the prostrate man, he too was overcome and fell unconscious by his side. Three other men descended to help the two men, and they also were overcome. Then a man volunteered to go down with a rope around his waist, with which he could be drawn up in case of his losing consciousness. He carried another rope which he tied around the unconscious men, one at a time, and they were drawn up. Two of the men who had gone to the rescue of their companions were dead, and a third is in a critical condition. The others are likely to recover. The incident suggests a lesson to Christian workers among the fallen and depraved. As the last rescuer was careful to provide against falling a victim to the deadly gas by having a rope around him, so the worker who goes amid the miasma of vice to rescue others should take great precautions and ask God's special protection so that his own way of escape may not depend solely on his own powers of resistance. (1. Cor. 9: 27.)

A Burglar's Roadway.

An amateur burglar had a humiliating experience at New London, Conn., a few days ago. He noted that a muddy brook emptied itself into the sea at a place which it could not reach without passing under some of the houses. He traced its course and discovered that it ran at one place through a cellar under a grocery store. The discovery convinced him that it was possible to enter the store through that subterranean channel. Providing himself with a few tools and a dark lantern he crawled into the brick tunnel through which the brook runs, and crept through the mud and filth at the bottom until he was under the wall of the store. There, half-suffocated and soaked to the skin, he felt about until he struck a trap-door. It was not fastened and he cautiously raised it and stepped out into the cellar. A number of rats, whom the man had scared in his wallowing through the mud, rushed out with him and made a noise among the tins and boxes that the grocer kept in his cellar. The burglar waited until the noise had ceased and then made his way to the store. As he opened the door he was confronted by the grocer himself, who being aroused by the strange noises in the cellar, was on his way to investigate. He seized the intruder and would have handed him over to the police, but the man protested that he had stolen nothing and he looked such a miserable object after his wallowing through the mud, that the grocer decided to let him go, but insisted that he should return by the way he came. As the only alternative was imprisonment the burglar acquiesced, and with a sad face and much reluctance entered the tunnel by the trap door, and crawled back to liberty. His profitless experience will probably deter him from repeating the experiment. He made the discovery that is sometimes not made until too late, by men who crawl through moral mire and filth in their effort to win fortune, that, as the prophet warned them, they are fools. (Jer. 17: 11.)

THE BRAZILIAN NAVAL SURRENDER—BOTAFOGO BAY, RIO JANEIRO.

Sailors in Distress.

An urgent appeal for help was made by an officer and four sailors who reached St. John's, Newfoundland, on March 11, in an open boat. They said they came from the steamer "Briscoe" which was lying helpless sixty miles out at sea. She left Hamburg for New York on December 8 with a general cargo. During the first days of her voyage she sustained severe damage from storms, and was compelled to put into Queenstown for repairs. On January 21 she resumed her voyage, but was beaten about by headwinds and buffeted by heavy seas. Masses of ice were hurled against the steamer smashing her bulwarks and crushing in her deck. Finally her masts were broken by the fury of the hurricane and her bridge was carried away bodily. Then the coal gave out and the fires were kept going only by the lumber of the broken parts of the ship. When this was exhausted the steamer lay helpless. She was then about sixty miles off Cape Race, where she lay for a week waiting for some passing steamer to tow her in. At the end of that time, the Captain determined to send a boat ashore. The second mate with four sailors volunteered to go and they were given one biscuit each from the which were the vested rights of the pensioners. Mr. Lochren, in reply, states that the pensions were suspended pending legal action, in some cases because there was good ground for believing that the pensions were obtained by fraud; in others, because the pensioner was drawing two pensions contrary to law, and in others because the pensioner was a widow who had remarried. He also contends that a pension can never be a vested right, but is in the nature of a bounty continued at the will of the donor. It is not in the power of one Congress to control the action of succeeding Congresses and therefore at any time a pension may be suspended or revoked. That fact, the Commissioner holds, is fatal to the contention that a pension can be a vested right. A question based on a similar principle often distresses Christians of weak faith. They fear that they may lose their promised inheritance through some shortcoming. Their fear is without cause. Though their claim is not a vested right, it is based on the love and faithfulness of God who is able to keep them from falling and we are assured that "he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himself." (II. Timothy 2: 13.)

BRIEF NOTES.

There are twenty-five million widows in India, of whom seventy thousand are little girls under ten years of age.

It is reported from Hidalgo, Mexico, that Bishop Montes de Oca has expelled the Jesuits from the college of that city. This was to be followed by their expulsion from San Luis Potosi. The bishop gives no reason for his action.

Dr. Talmage preached at the Princess Theatre, Mobile, Ala., on Sunday evening, March 11, to a vast audience. At the conclusion of the sermon he invited all who desired prayer for their salvation to rise. Over five hundred responded.

The China Inland Mission Sent Out Sixty-three agents to Shanghai last year, and the number will shortly be increased to eighty-six. Meanwhile an appeal is put forward for one hundred young men to volunteer for the difficult and as it may well prove, dangerous work of spreading the Gospel.

Miss Annie R. Taylor, the Famous Missionary to Tibet, whose portrait we published recently, has formed a party of twelve volunteers to labor in that land. She with her twelve companions sailed on Feb. 24 for Tibet where they expect to meet with much opposition, but are trusting God for their protection.

The financial report of the American Board for February shows that the total receipts for that month available for the general use was $48,654 as against $39,085 for the corresponding months of 1893. This increase amid the general depression is due to the change in the policy of the Prudential Committee which has the approval of many churches which for some years past have withheld support.

The Students' Volunteer Conference at Detroit, Mich., shows marked progress in the movement. No less than twelve hundred delegates were present representing Colleges, Educational Institutions of various lands, Missionary Societies and Young Men's Christian Associations. Prof. F. K. Sanders of Yale, Mr. J. Hudson Taylor, Dr. Happer and Miss Geraldine Guinness were among the speakers.

Rev. H. W. Pope, Pastor of the Congregational Church, Sumnerworth, N. H., has resigned the pastorate to become Associate Secretary with Rev. J. C. Collins of the Christian Workers' Association. This is now one of the largest unions of Christians of all denominations in the country. Its next convention will be held in Toronto beginning Nov. 26 and continuing eight days.

The Rev. Dr. Marshall, Field Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, has traveled during the last year 29,300 miles, and delivered 226 addresses, and has sent out 7,000 letters.

Contributions of Clothing for the Relief Fund from the following, are acknowledged:

Home Missionary Society, Presbyterian Church, Farmingdale, N. J.; Guilders' Hollow, Egmont, Mass.; Mrs. Chas. Nichols and daughter, Greenfield Hill, Conn.; Friends in Hinsdale, N.H.; Y.P.S. C. E., Congregational Church, Ludlow, Vt.; Mrs. Fish, Ludlow, Vt.; Mrs. P.K. Feste; Friends, Cambridge, Mass.; Geo. T. Hazen, Congregational Church, Hartford, Vt.; Ladies of Linesville, Pa.; Alice Yeo, Dillon, Montana; Mrs. Chas. Rhoades, Ramsey, N. J.; Neighbors at Grand Valley, Pa.; Baptist Church, Bernardstown, Mass.; W. C. T. U., Knoxville; Mrs. H. T. Hudson, Waymart, Pa.; D. N. B. S. & Co., Ithaca, N. Y.; Miss Babcock; Friends in Fairview, Pa.; Richmondville, N.Y.; Peekskill, N.Y.; Mrs. Jardsburg (no address); Mrs. Wm. Bowen, Manassquan, N. J.; Reader, Peekskill, N. Y.; Mrs. D. McKellar, Killawog, N. Y.; In His Name, Newark, S. D.; Mrs. S. C. Sawyer, Littleton, N. H.; No Name, Thompson, Susque, Co., Pa.; H. C. Babcock, Leonardville, N. Y.; Mrs. J. E. De Revere, York, Liv. Co., N. Y.; No Name, Marksboro, N. J.; Miss Minnie Lamback, Siegfrieds, Bridge Co., Pa.; No Name, Bridgewater, N. Y.; Miss Annie Nelson, Newport; R. I.; Mrs. J. Preston, Rochester, Minn.; No Name, Columbus, Ga.; Mrs. G. Reed, no address; F. E. Storn, Harrison Valley, Pa.; Bessie Green, Winterpock, Va.; No Name, Lake Land, Fla.; No Name, Ancranti Lead Mines; S. W. Don, Lanesboro, Mass.; and three packages of clothing from unknown friends.

Mr. Ridler sent 150 loaves of bread and 2 bags of potatoes to the Food Fund; Friends, Guilders' Hollow, Egmont, Mass., 1 bbl. beans; Mrs. P. K. Feste, box of provisions.

A Pension Dispute.

An exhaustive reply has been sent by Commissioner Lochren to Congress in response to a resolution of inquiry passed by the House recently. The Commissioner was asked what authority he had for withholding the payment of certain pensions

SERMONS WORTH READING

Helpful Discourses for the People.

THE THREE ADMONITIONS.

A Sermon Preached in Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, by Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D. Text: Rev. 22: 20: "Surely I come quickly."

THIS startling warning with which the Apocalypse closes is one that resounds through the entire book. From the "behold he cometh with clouds" in the first chapter to the "Behold I come quickly" in the last, it is the keynote of the entire Revelation and gives solemnity and emphasis to all its exhortations and warnings and hopes. I desire at this time to dwell rather upon the admonitions connected with our Lord's coming than upon the event itself, and to show you what practical duties and attainments are immediately associated with this coming, in the book of Revelation.

Consecration.

1. Our consecration. "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments." Rev. 16: 16.

You will observe that it is not the soul which we are here warned to be anxious about, but the garments of the soul; which is simply saying that it is our sanctification as well as our salvation with which we should be earnestly occupied. "He that keepeth his garments." Wearing clothes is the most serious occupation of a large part the human race. From the Congo savage clad in dazzling Manchester calico, and compassed about with rings of brass, to the fashionable belle of New York, dressed in the most brilliant silks and satins which Paris can furnish, dress-wearing is the chief end and business of innumerable children of men both Christian and pagan. Therefore Christ struck the sharpest blow he ever dealt at human pride when he said, "Take no thought of what ye shall put on."

"But on the other hand I remind you from Scripture that there is a clothes-wearing to which it becomes us to be most seriously attentive. Wonderful word is that of the apostle: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ?" Not simply the righteousness of our Saviour; not simply the beauty of his holiness or the graces of his character are we to put on as a garment. The Lord himself is our vesture. Every Christian is not only a Christ-bearer but a Christ-wearer. We are so to enter into him by communion, to be so endued with his presence, and embued with his Spirit that men shall see him when they behold us, as they see our garments when they look upon our bodies. It is a sad thing to lose the soul, but it is nothing to lose that exhibition and realization of Christ by which we "show forth the virtues of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light?"

A Waif's Prayer.

What parables of divine things we get from common life. Certain slum-sisters in New York are reported to have found a waif with whom they had a singular experience. The little outcast boy had never known the delight of a suit of clean clothes. If he ever possessed such they had probably been pawned from his back by drunken parents. And these angels of mercy brought this lad to their home, washed him and combed his matted hair and then clothed him with a new suit. When bed-time came they attempted to teach him his first prayer: "Now I lay me down to sleep. I pray the Lord my soul to keep." "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord 'my clothes' to keep," was the response. Then followed teaching on the soul—its value and the importance of its salvation—in order to more intelligent praying. But still the little waif held fast to his original petition, "I pray the Lord my clothes to keep." And who can say that he was not right? Alas are we not taken up too much with the salvation of our souls and too little occupied with the sanctification of our lives? The careful spiritual discipline by which we become invested with the holiness of Christ; the daily putting off of the old man and the putting on of the new man who is renewed in knowledge after the image of him who created him—this is so su-premiely important that our daily and constant prayer may well be directed to this end, that so at the last we may "be found in him not having our own righteousness but the righteousness of Christ which is by faith." To our Laodicean age Christ is speaking loudly to-day upon this point. Saved by grace and justified by faith we seem to imagine that this is all. Secular lives, worldly fellowships, conformity to the fashion and show of an evil generation—all this is too easily allowed if only in the end our souls may be saved. But above all this worldly living we hear the voice of Jesus Christ saying: "I counsel thee to buy of me white raiment that thou mayest be clothed and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear." Ah yes! the word of Christ plainly translated is: "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his clothes." And the little lad asked more than he knew when he said, "I pray the Lord my clothes to keep." Oh Christians lulled to sleep by worldly fellowships and associations, stupified by luxury and self-indulgence, answering every appeal to your conscience with "a little more sleep, a little more slumber, a little more folding of the hands in rest," sleep on if you will; but pray as you lie down to sleep, "I pray the Lord 'my clothes' to keep."

Recompense.

2. Our recompense is directly related to the coming of our Lord in glory. "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me," says Jesus, "to give to every man according as his work shall be." Rev. 22: 12.

I think there is a tendency among Protestants to depreciate the preaching of rewards for service as though it gave a commercial character to Christianity and made a gain of grace. But nothing could be farther from the doctrine of Scripture. As universally as the Bible teaches us that we are redeemed for naught, does it teach that we are recompensed according to our works. The school of grace is a common school, but it is the greatest possible mistake to conclude that because its tuition is free, therefore all pupils belong to the same class and will graduate with the same degree. And when I hear Christians testify that they would be satisfied with the lowest place in heaven, if only by the grace of God they are permitted to reach there at all, I reply that their Lord will not be so easily satisfied if they are; he wants them to strive for the highest place, for a seat nearest the throne, and for a crown of the brightest lustre. We must look out that our humility is not indolence with a solemn countenance upon it, the real fact being that we are content with the lowest place in heaven, because we have not energy and self-sacrifice enough to make us strive after the highest. And if they say that it is selfish to seek after rewards in the service of Christ, we urge them to try it and they will find that it is self-sacrificing instead of self-seeking. The martyrs spoken of in the eleventh of Hebrews were not selfish who were "tortured, not accepting deliverance that they might obtain a better resurrection"—that first resurrection wherein they should become sharers with Christ in his deathless life. No! the rewards of heaven are valuable as the credentials of our cross-bearing on earth. Christ delights in those who stand ready to suffer with him now, that they may be glorified with him hereafter. Be a happy Christian here, if that is your principal aim: collect the interest on your spiritual investments every day: cut the coupons from the bonds of the everlasting covenant as fast as they become due and thus realize your hundred-fold in this life, according to the promise, in love, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. But the Christian who foregoes all this for Christ's sake is the one that most pleases his Lord. In a word, the future rewards which our coming Saviour has to bestow, are most precious for what they indicate concerning our present earthly life. The photographer must have a negative, as he calls it, in order to furnish you with a picture. Now the earthly cross is the negative from which the heavenly crown is to be made; the suffering and sorrow of the present time determining the glory, honor and immortality of the life to come. Christ cannot give us the recompense of reward except we have fashioned the counterpart thereof in our patient endurance of the cross for his name's sake. "To give to every man according as his work shall be." There is the measure of our reward. We are saved by grace. Mix in good works and merit, and grace is no more grace. We are rewarded according to our works. Mix in grace and faith, and reward is no more reward. And we should not because it is pleasant for us to attain them, but because it will rejoice our Saviour's heart to bestow them, since they will constitute the crown and credential of our fidelity in his service. The century plant which blooms once in a hundred years, could not have bloomed if the growth and increase of any single year had been wanting. And the "well-done" which Jesus will pronounce upon his faithful servants at the end of the age, will only be possible as the result and consummation of all the years of well-doing and cross-bearing in which we served our Master. Therefore, my brethren, see what a practical subject we have in hand.

Strive For High Rewards.

Rejoice in a free salvation; exult in that doctrine of unmerited grace by which you have been accepted and justified. But remember that work only can grasp reward. Then visit the sick, feed the hungry, bear the burdens of the oppressed, suffer and sacrifice for the poor and preach the Gospel to the perishing, that your Lord when he sits upon the throne of glory may say, "Inasmuch as ye—" believed? No! he is not talking about salvation now but Service.

"Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these ye did it unto me." See Jesus our Brother and Leader standing at the right-hand of God. The nail-pierced hands which he lifted up in prevailing intercession with God, he also stretches out in importunate pleading with us. He pleads for the dark continents for which he died with their thousand millions of yet unevangelized souls; he pleads for the great shivering hungry multitude in our cities who lack bread and shelter; he pleads for the innumerable company of sin-defiled, heart-broken sufferers with which the world is filled. Go to them, sympathize with them, suffer for them, minister to them," he says. And if you with that mercantile spirit so engrained in human nature ask: "And what reward shall I have?" He will answer: "They cannot recompense thee: but thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." That is enough for me. I had rather have Christ's gold than the world's copper. I had rather wait a thousand years for Christ's "well-done good and faithful servant," than to have the immediate felicity of man's "well-done great and successful servant."

Steadfastness.

3. Our steadfastness is to be constantly incited by the imminence of Christ's return. "Behold I come quickly. Hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown." Rev. 3: 11-15.

You remember how earnestly the Apostle exhorts us in the epistle to the Hebrews to "take heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we let them slip." Here is the contrast. Holding fast or letting slip, which shall it be? You have some days of life remaining, you know not how many. Hold fast to them: load them with some blessing for men and some obedience to God before they have gone from you forever.

Hours are golden links, God's token,
Reaching heaven, by one by one,
Seize them lest the chain be broken
Ere thy pilgrimage be done.

Well may the wisdom of the world repeat its maxim in our ears, "time is money." To those that know that they have souls to be saved or to be lost, it is vastly more than this. Time is eternity in the making. Every man carries his own heaven or hell with him into the other world. The hours of this present life are the ages in embryo of the life to come. The blessedness of heaven is not a hot-house plant suddenly bursting into bloom under the light of the New Jerusalem. Neither in time nor in eternity can one be greater than he is, or happier than he is capable of being. Heaven is the summary of earth: all that you are in faith and holiness now, all that you do in service and self-denial now, all that you believe in trust and confidence in God now—this summed up last and re-lived in the presence of God will constitute your glory and crown of rejoicing. Therefore our Lord makes his coming possible every day that he may incite us to use every day as though it were our last, and to fill every day with sterling sacrifice and service. Therefore, spiritual indolence is not only a dreadful sin, but a dreadful loss. It robs God of his service and it robs us of our crown. I know that the best and truest doctrines are likely to be abused.

The doctrine of good works has been perverted by the Catholic Church into salvation by penance and merit alone; but so has the doctrine of justification by faith been perverted by Protestants into salvation by conversion and faith alone. Both are extreme views and therefore to be deplored. Saved by grace, indeed! All praise to God that he has chosen to accept us on such gratuitous terms when we had nothing to pay. But there is such a thing as A Meagre and Stinted Salvation.

Forget it not all you who hear me: you are called to serve as well as to believe, to good works as well as to faith. Every idle hour will be taken out of your wages when the pay-day comes: every not-done will be subtracted from your "well-done" when the books are balanced. If you are trying that nineteenth century scheme of making the best of both worlds, be sure that at the end you will find that all you gained from this has been lost out of that. Therefore be diligent: toil, pray, watch, preach, give and go. The time is short: the Lord is at hand: let no man take thy crown. I long to see more ambitious Christians. And when I say ambitious, I use a word that occurs in Scripture several times. "I exhort you brethren that ye be ambitious to be quiet and to do your own business." (1 Thess. 4: 11-12.) Fitting words considering our high calling! Make your religion a business, not a by-play. Put capital into it instead of seeking only to draw interest out of it: strive for a heavenly crown instead of seeking for earthly comfort. How the Apostle Paul seeks to provoke us to emulation on this point, by pointing to the combatants for earthly prizes. How they deny themselves and endure hardness to toughen their muscles. "They do it for a corruptible crown," he adds, "but we for an incorruptible." Therefore our diligence should be a hundred times greater than theirs. Alas! is it not too often a hundred times less? You have heard the oft-told tale of the artist who had succeeded after long diplomacy in getting an engagement with the queen to sit for a picture. His fortune was considered assured by this lucky stroke. He made all his preparations: had his room all ready. His apparatus all adjusted for his work. But alas, by an unhappy blunder he was out when the queen called. She could not wait and he missed his chance. "Be ye also ready for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." Therefore is in being always prepared. There is a very striking exhortation in that very ancient Greek document which was recently discovered called "The Teaching of the Twelve." It reads thus: "Watch for your life's sake. Let not your lamps go out nor your loins be ungirt, but be ready for ye know not the hour in which your Lord cometh. Assemble oft, seeking the things pertaining to your souls for the whole time of your faith will not avail unless you be perfected in the last time."

Our Only Security

Oh, hearers, for whose souls I cannot be without responsibility, as your minister and guide I beseech you to consider whether you are ready to meet the Lord. No lamps, however elaborate their construction or however burnished and brilliant they are kept polished will suffice to gain you admittance to the marriage-supper unless you have oil in them. The life of God in your soul—have you obtained it by believing on his Son? The Holy Spirit in your heart, have you secured the blessing by a prayerful and watchful waiting upon God? Then I beg you do not trifle. When once the Master of the house has risen up and hath shut to the door it will be too late. You have the Gospel. I have spoken it plainly in your ears. You have the promise, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." You have the gift of eternal life within your reach. Then lay hold on eternal life. Let no man take thy crown.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

H. C., Litchfield, Mich. Was Confucius the author of the "Golden Rule?"

Yes; but not in the form in which we know it from Christ's lips. Confucius' maxim was a negation: "What you would not wish done to yourself, that do not to others," whereas the Christian rule is a positive: "Do to others as you would they should do unto you."

Mrs. John B. Long, Russellville, Ky. In the new church at Jerusalem recently described in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is the worship the same as in Christian churches in our own land?

The new church in Jerusalem is Lutheran—a Christian denomination which differs mainly from other Protestants in the belief that the bread and wine at communion are not symbols, but the real presence of Christ's body and blood.

P. L. P., Denning's Bridge, Tex. To what Church did the Puritans belong?

They were a formidable party who, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, complained that many abuses existed in the worship and discipline of the Church of England, being the corrupt remains of Popery, imperfectly eliminated by the Reformation. These claims gave them the name of "Puritans," but a Puritan party existed in the Church of England for two centuries before the name was fully established.

Friend, Hughsonville, N. Y. Does God leave his people to starve to death, or famish for food, at such a time? If so, how can we reconcile this with his promises?

There is no evidence that he does so leave them. On the contrary, there is abundant proof on every hand that he has stirred up the hearts and sympathies of a multitude of other Christian people to come to their aid. There is no stronger proof of this than the work accomplished by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Food Fund, which has relieved the needs of nearly 12,000 families, a very large proportion of them belonging to "God's Poor."

Abraham Kriebel, West Point, Pa. When, where and how did the worship of idols take its rise?

Although we have no record of antediluvian idolatry, it is supposed that in the general corruption and wickedness before the Flood, idolatry was practiced. Gen. 4: 26, is interpreted by some commentators as indicating that event in the days of Seth, some form of idolatry had been practiced; but the first actual allusion to idols in the Bible is found in Gen. 31: 19. This statement would indicate that the teraphim or family gods of Laban, which Rachel took, were such as had probably been used in that country by previous generations. The condition of the Cities of the Plain, destroyed in Abraham's time, would indicate that they were idolatrous.

Charles F. Coulisson, Keokuk, Ia. Would it be right for a young man to enter the ministry, if, after conscientious self-examination, he feels that his chief motive would be to gratify an ambition to be a great preacher, rather than a good man, in other words, the desire for fame, rather than souls? His father and grandfather have been in the ministry and he himself has some talent, as well as a love of oratory and a taste for letters.

The act of entering the Christian ministry is, in the highest and truest sense, a renunciation of mere personal ambitions, and a dedication of one's talents and energies to the service of the Master, and the bringing of souls to the heavenly kingdom. Wordly ambition has no place in such a career, but is wholly supplanted by a divine zeal in the work of the Gospel, every triumph of which brings joy to the heart of the worker. We are confident that, if you read the lives of any of the grand, consecrated men who have become distinguished in the Church, you will be convinced of this self-renunciation, as an essential to a successful ministry.

Reader, Glens Falls, N. Y., Subscriber, Newport, R. I. and others. Send reading matter to Jail and Hospital Committee, care G. W. Gaines, corner Capital St. and Texas Ave., Houston, Tex.—Alva F. Sides, Camden, N. J. About 5,000.—A. B. Neill, Brooklyn, N. Y. Address Fleming H. Revell Co., publishers, 112 Fifth Ave., N. Y.—G. F. McAdam, Elk City, Kan. Yes; the drink habit has undoubtedly brought many to want.—Wm. B. Rice, Elbridge, N. Y. Tradition declares that the stone upon which Jacob pillowed his head at Luz was afterward carried to Europe and found a resting-place under the coronation-chair at Scone, Scotland, after which it was removed to England and now forms one of the foundation stones in Victoria's throne.—Rev. C. Case, Brodhead, N. Y. Dr. Talmage has already preached on that subject.—Mrs. J. S. Mergel, Greenbrier, Pa. Yes.—R. J. Ferguson, Haran, Va. 1. Anabaptist. 2. He was a dissenter and the cavaliers and the clergy of the established Church oppressed dissenters everywhere.—Constant Reader, Rensselaerville, N. Y. You will have to consult newspaper files to get the accurate history of the matter you mention.—Harmon Crow, Toolesboro, Ia. He will probably be heard from again soon.—Miss M. E. Ewing, Hickory, Pa. He was an Anglican divine, born in 1613. He was at one time chaplain to Charles I. and after the Restoration was consecrated Bishop of Down and Connor and afterward elected Vice-Chancellor of Dublin University. He was a copious author on religious topics.—Mrs. C. M. Frost, Brockton, N. Y. Her son accompanied her. She is the wife of a clergyman and lives in Brooklyn.—F. N. Jenkins, Lock Box 6, Chester, N. J., will forward second-hand library books to any needy Sunday School library desiring them.—George Mickey, New Martinsville, W. Va. Yes; there were negroes in the time of Christ. The Ethiopians and other races were such.—Subscriber, Easton, Pa. Write to Potter & Co., publishers, Philadelphia, for Bibles containing the Apocrypha.—Mrs. Mary Young, The affairs of the Brooklyn Tabernacle have been satisfactorily adjusted and Rev. Dr. Talmage remains as pastor.

Shepherd of Love.

IDA SCOTT TAYLOR.

"The Lord is my Shepherd."—Ps. 23: 1.

W. H. DOANE.

1. Shep-herd of Love, O ten - der - ly lead On ward Thy
2. Shep-herd of Love, in pas - tures of green, Grant that our
3. Shep-herd of Love, en - fold us with peace, Guard us from
4. Shep-herd of Love, to Thee we be - long, Sealed with Thy shel - ter - less flock; Out of the gloom, where sweet flowers bloom, Be-feet may find rest; Grant us re - pose where peace - ful - ly flows, The dan - ger and ill; Stay ev - er near to ban - ish our fear, And heav - en - ly Sign; Let us re - joice when hear - ing Thy voice, And yond in the cleft of the Rock. } Ten - der - ly, lov - ing - ly, stream that is cool - est and best.

bid all our ter - ors be still.
call Thee our Sav - iour Di - vine.

faith - ful - ly guide, Ev - er by night and by day; Dear Shepherd of Love, whose fold is a - bove, O lead us and show us Thy way.

Copyright, 1893, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From SUNNY-SIDE SONGS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS, by per. of the Publishers.

A LETTER TO JESUS.

A POSTMAN stood, with puzzled brow,
And in his hand turned o'er and o'er
A letter with address so strange
He ne'er had seen it's like before.
The writing cramped, the letter small,
And by a boy's rough hand engraven,
The words ran thus: "To Jesus Christ,
And underneath inscribed: "In Heaven!"
The postman paused; full well he knew
No mail on earth this note could take;
And yet 'twas writ in childish faith,
And posted for the dear Lord's sake,
With careful hands he broke the seal,
And rev'rently the letter read;
'Twas short and very simple, too,
For this was all the writer said:
"My Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ
I've lately lost my father dear;
Mother is very, very poor,
And life to her is sad and drear.
Yet thou hast promised in thy Word
That none can ever ask in vain,
For what they need of earthly store,
If only asked in Jesus' name."

"So I am writing in His name,
To ask if thou wilt kindly send
Some money down; what thou canst spare,
And what is right for us to spend.
I want so much to go to school;
While father lived, I always went—
But he had little, Lord, to leave,
And what he left is almost spent.
"I do not know how long 'twill be
Ere this can reach the golden gate;
But I will try and patient be,
And for the answer gladly wait."
The tidings reached the far-off land,
Although the letter did not go,
And straight the King an agent sent
To help the little boy below.
Oft to his mother he would say:
"I knew the Lord would answer make
When he had read my letter through,
Which I had sent for Jesus' sake."
Ah! happy boy, could you but teach
My heart to trust my Father's love,
And to believe where aught's denied
"Tis only done my faith to prove."
La Fayette, Indiana. —ANON

THE BEGINNING OF THE END.

Signs of the Approaching End of the Age.

BY DR. B. O. KINNEAR.*

IT is to-day the profound conviction of a large number of the most earnest and deeply thoughtful prophetic students, that the last seven years of this Christian dispensation will begin by the making of a seven years' compact with the Jews who return to Palestine. This "compact" or agreement is to be entered in to by these Jews and the Personal Antichrist or "little horn" of Daniel, or "Beast."

This week of years is the 70th week of the "Seventy Weeks of Daniel 9, ending the "Age," but not the "World," and terminating in the open manifestation of the Saviour; when, accompanied by "ten thousand times ten thousands" of his saints, he descends on the Mount of Olives to "save the tents of Judah first;" to cast the Beast and the False Prophet into the lake of fire; to bind Satan for a thousand years, and to introduce the millennial reign, when, as "King of kings and Lord of lords," he will sit on the throne of his father David, and rule the world.

The Covenant will be made sometime after the Ten Kingdoms of Daniel appear on the "old Roman earth"—these Ten Kingdoms to result from the "Coming" great European War, which struggle must soon take place, and Antichrist or the Eleventh Horn will be revealed to the watchers, by making the compact for seven years with returning Judah in Palestine.

Signs in the sun, the sea and waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear—the terrible financial distress, the rapid spread of spiritualism, socialism, anarchy, the steady advance of "the Apostasy" (II. Thess. 2), among Christians, shown by increasing formalism, ritualism, and Laodicean self-satisfaction—unusual and violent crimes, the awful storms and railway disasters during the past nine months in particular, denote to the watcher, that not only is the whole creation groaning and travelling in pain, but that as in the days of Noah and Lot the earth is becoming filled with violence, therefore the end of this age is not far distant.

Again, the military situation in Europe and the East is now more strained than ever before, and it is the view, not only of prophetic writers, that a frightful war is threatened on the old Roman earth; but it is the expressed conviction of the leading statesmen and generals in Europe that such a tornado of battle is imminent, as has never before been known. The Saviour called this, "nation rising against nation," etc. (Matt. 24); the "beginning of sorrows," "birth-throes"—according to Rotherham, and thus the beginning of those "birth-pangs," which in Rev. 12 give rise to the birth of the "Man Child;" or 144,000 of Rev. 14.

The future literal fulfilment of the Seals will fully agree with the type of these last days, evidenced to us in the story of the plagues in Egypt.

They were "Ten" in number and the first three covered all Egypt, including the land of Goshen; but afterward the seven last plagues did not affect Goshen; that land being severed and free from them.

The wise virgins similarly will behold the first three awful events of war, famine and pestilence, beginning the end of this dispensation; and yet will escape the seven trumpet plagues, which cover the three and a half shortened years of Antichrist's rule, while the "vials" are poured out, in the seventy-five days, succeeding the sounding of the "last trump" or seventh trumpet; i.e., after the 1,260 days of great tribulation; with seventy-five additional days, to "finish the transgression," and make an "end of sins," and introduce the 1,335th day. "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1,335th day." (Dan. 12.) Our object should be to obtain, and, by the grace of God to present further light in a "dark place." In order to have the "Parousia" come as a "snare," events while fulfilling every jot and tittle of prophecy may be hidden to all but the most prayerful and earnest investigation; hidden to all but the eyes of the wise.

"The wise shall understand!" Ye brethren are not in darkness that "the day" should overtake you unawares. As we see these events happen, we may in truth, ay, verily, "lift up our heads," because we know that our redemption draweth nigh."

*From his article in the Prophetic News which contains also articles on "Daniel's Prophetic Calendar," "The Budding of the Fig-tree," etc.

ENVY AND COVETOUSNESS.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Commencing April 8. 1. John 2: 1-11; 15-17.

JOHN'S idea of the characteristics of a Christian, as defined in the passages selected for the Topic, is not that of our time. He applies a test which has now gone out of fashion. Yet there is no hesitation or qualification in his utterance, and, if we are to be guided by him, we must conclude that a man who is envious or covetous is not really a Christian. More stress is now laid on orthodoxy, on baptism, on church membership, but the Apostle does not here refer to these, but insists that if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his, and that he that hateth his brother is in darkness. He seems to look to our attitude toward our fellow-men and our feeling toward them as an infallible test of our standing before God. This is a solemn fact. We glory in being a Christian nation; how does our national, business and social life stand this authoritative test? What spirit dominates us as a people? There is no town or city in this wide land in which there is any spirit more conspicuous than competition. The race for wealth and power and the good things of life is eager and often fierce. Witness the struggle for the best seat in a car, for a monopoly of trade, for a place in government employ. The struggle to be first, to get ahead of other people, to get and hoard even beyond the capacity to use, characterizes the people of this day beyond any preceding generation. The feeling of the merchant toward his rival, whom he is seeking to undersell and drive out of business; of the capitalist toward his employe, who demands a share of the profits of his business; of the employe toward his employer, whose wealth and luxury are constantly before him; of the leaders and followers of a political party toward their successful opponents at an election—all these are not far removed from the hate which in the Apostle's eyes, brands a man as outside the kingdom of Christ. He that is in the light is he that loveth his brother. It is not difficult to understand that rule. We know what love is, in the family. We should have no difficulty in estimating the character of a big burly boy, who elbowed his sisters and younger brothers away from the table, seized all the dainties for himself, occupied the most comfortable chair in the room and grugged any member of the family the good things of the household. The rule of Christ only enlarged the circle. Yet what we would deplore in a boy, in the family, we commend and respect in the man dealing with his brother man. That we do so, and that professing Christians are eager in this struggle for the prizes of the world, is the main reason why the Church is still only a minority in the world. We have lost sight of the vital and cardinal principle of Christ's teaching and of his life. The love for man and the unselfishness on which he insisted have not been the characteristics of those who called themselves his followers. The worldings have been unable to see any difference between the attitude of professing Christians and themselves, and there is reason to fear that Christ sees no difference. Envy and covetousness are not trivial faults, as we are apt to regard them, but indications of condition. They show that where they are Christ does not reign.

EPWORTH LEAGUE PLANS.

The General Cabinet has held its spring meeting and has arranged several matters of vital interest to the League. The meeting took place at Springfield, O. Rev. W. I. Haven presided in the unavoidable absence of Bishop Fitzgerald. The treasurer's accounts of the Cleveland Convention and the general finances of the League were eminently satisfactory. The following summary of the business done is taken from Mr. Jennings' report to "Zion's Herald."

The general secretary and the four vice presidents were made a committee to prepare and publish an official Epworth League Hymnal. It is desired that this hymnal shall be a complete and comprehensive volume and sufficient time will be taken to make it every way worthy of its great constituency. The next meeting of the Board of Control is to be held in Boston some time during the last two weeks in October.

The Reading Course for next year was

This will answer a troublesome question in some quarters, though it will be a disappointment to some who hoped for a more cordial and general endorsement.

LINCOLN'S Y. M. C. A. BUILDING.

The handsome edifice of which a picture appears on this page is the property of the Young Men's Christian Association of Lincoln. It is the finest building owned by any Association in that section. It cost $95,000, a large sum for a city which at the time of its erection had little more than 60,000 population. It is the habit of Western cities, however, to provide for future development, and the young men are not likely to be less enterprising than their fellow citizens. The Association was organized fourteen years ago, and has now over five hundred members. The new building is planned on the best models, and has an excellent gymnasium, library and reading rooms. The religious meetings are well attended, and in all respects the Association is in a thriving and vigorous condition.

THE CLEVELAND C. E. CONVENTION.

The following suggestions from the Committee in charge of the arrangements for the Cleveland, designating the Convention meeting places, the State headquarters, the hotels and points of interest.

AMONG THE ORDERS.

A great Christian Endeavor Convention is to be held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, (Pastor C. H. Spurgeon's), on May 14 and 15.

The Epworth League of the Sands St. M. E. Church, Brooklyn, entertained four chapters on March 15th. Invitations were sent to the Leagues at Fleet St., York St., St. Paul's and Flatlands and cordially and numerously accepted. A collation was served in the basement of the church and with speeches and music the evening passed most enjoyably.

A general Convention of the Baptist Young People's Societies of New York and Brooklyn is to be held on April 3, in Calvary Baptist Church, New York. Dr. R. S. MacArthur will preside and Mr. Frank Harvey Field will speak on the local situation. The Convention will be in session all day and several distinguished clergymen will attend and take part in the proceedings.

The King's Daughters of Chicago have decided to form several City Unions. On Jan. 31, the Mary W. Goodwin Union was formed, including the Circles of Englewood, a suburb of Chicago. The Mary Lowe Dickinson Union was formed a short time previously.

The Japanese paper, the "Kiristokyo Shimbun," commenting upon the first Japanese C. E. Convention, says that such gatherings show the practical unity of Christian sects. "Creeds, rituals and church politics tend to division, but the C. E. movement binds all together in brotherly love."

At Salielunge, India, a little Young Women's Christian Association is beginning. The members meet on Sunday mornings, and this is the only service in the place of any kind. In six months they have only twice had a clergyman for service, so it is one of the needy places. There is a sister of a guard there, who had been praying for months that some evangelist might come and hold meetings.

Glowing reports come from San Francisco of the success of the Epworth League Alliance. At the quarterly meeting held recently in Trinity Church three hundred and seventy-five leaguers were present, including delegates from all the Methodist churches in San Francisco, and from three churches in Oakland, and from Alameda and Berkeley. The meeting was enthusiastic from beginning to end.

Mr. John H. Chapman has returned from his Western tour and reports a most encouraging condition of the Young People's Baptist Unions in that section. He found the existing Unions enthusiastic in their work, and a general disposition in churches where none exist to organize them. President Chapman received a very hearty welcome on his return to Chicago, at the Quarterly Meeting in the Western Avenue Church.

The Christian Endeavor Society is taking hold in France, under the title of Societe d'Activite Chretienne. The subject was recently discussed at the Southern Pastoral Conference, after an enthusiastic paper by M. J. Sequestra, who called upon the churches to spare no pains or sacrifice to introduce this means of blessing among the young people. Pasteur S. Gout has advocated the claims of the Society before the Pastoral Union of Versailles.

An English clergyman writes that one Christian Endeavor Convention, of which he knew, had these results: "Three volunteers for missionary service; at least six young Christians, who were in the habit of dancing and theatre-going, voluntarily took their stand against these things; the Sunday School committee in one of these local churches was so awakened that the following Sunday morning in that church there were nearly fifty new scholars; much interest was awakened about soul-winning, and about personal consecration."

THE NEW BUILDING OF THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF LINCOLN, NEB.

the subject of much earnest discussion, and resulted in the selection of the following books: "The New Generation," by Edwin A. Schell, D.D.; "Christian Evidences," by B. P. Raymond, D.D.; "Imago Christi," by James Stalker; "Beneath Two Flags," by Maud Ballington Booth; "Life of Lincoln," by D. D. Thompson. As a supplemental course the following were recommended: "Methodism: a Retrospect and an Outlook," by Prof. C. W. Pearson. "History of Christianity," by Dr. Rishell; "The Hallam Succession," by Amelia Barr; "The Galilean Gospel," by Dr. A. B. Bruce.

The general editor was instructed to arrange for a "League at Work" series of booklets of uniform style, which, it is expected, will be direct practical help to work in all the departments. Another matter of interest is the planning of a general course in Bible study somewhat on the plan of the American Institute of Sacred Literature. This work is placed in the hands of Secretary Schell and Dr. R. R. Doherty, the third vice-president. It was thought, also, that the time has come for a Junior League Song Book to meet a rapidly growing demand, and Secretary Schell and Mr. C. E. Piper were made the committee to arrange for its preparation.

On the burning question of the Epworth Guards the Board took a conservative stand. A resolution was passed that companies of Epworth Guards may be organized in connection with Sunday Schools where no Chapters of the League exist.

Christian Endeavor Convention at Cleveland, will be of use to many of our readers who are inquiring as to rates, etc. The hotels of Cleveland will accommodate about 2,500 delegates. All others will be placed in private houses. Hotel rates will be from $1.50 to $4.00 per day, according to accommodations furnished, two or more persons to occupy each room, according to its capacity. Delegation or state transportation managers are requested to make all arrangements for hotel accommodation through the Entertainment Committee. There is no necessity for their visiting Cleveland, as the Entertainment Committee has made all arrangements with the hotels; can furnish all information required, and get better hotel rates than strangers can in dealing with the hotels direct. All managers desiring space reserved must accompany application with written guarantee that space so reserved will be paid for, in case it is not used. Otherwise no hotel accommodation will be reserved for them.

Owing to the limited number the hotels can accommodate, the Entertainment Committee requests those applying for hotel accommodations to be as moderate in their demands as possible. Unless each is restricted it will be impossible to supply all who may desire some hotel accommodations. Rates in homes will be from $1.00 to $1.50 per day for room and board. Individuals wishing accommodations should write their State, manager or transportation agent.

Delegates are to be supplied with a map of Fudda's Wedding.

The Little, Scared, Pink-Robed Child-Bride, who Cried Till all was Over—Those Queer Eastern Divorce Laws.

ND I must tell you, at the first, madam, that her father is a rich man and much respected, and the man she was to marry is also rich. You must know that the better the class of people, the more strictly they follow all the rules I have spoken of, regarding betrothing and marrying. So I was very anxious to go to Fudda's wedding, for I had heard much of the beautiful presents she had received from her bridegroom, and the great company that was to be, and the feasting, and all that.

"When the mother of the bridegroom heard what I wished, she was very kind. She said to me, 'You shall come with me, and see all at my side.'

"She was as good as her word. When the night of the wedding came I was beside her in the procession that left the house of the bridegroom's father. Such a procession! The women in white 'izzars,' and veiled, some with crowns of flowers on their heads, and the men in their best clothes: the friends of the bridegroom, and the near relations of the bride in wedding-garments that were presents from him. But oh! it is an expensive matter to be married here!

"I have heard sometimes, when the uncles and cousins or brothers of the bride are not well-satisfied with such gifts as he has sent to them, they will stop his way to the bride's house, and cry, 'You shall not have her until you give me a coat,' or maybe trousers, or something else.

"No such thing happened the night I am telling you of. We marched—the women all together, and the men together, and many carrying torches, and a band of music playing merry tunes at the head of the procession, until we came to the house of the bride's father. There the men stopped, at the gate and in the court-yard, and we women went on up to the chambers. One of them was locked, and inside of it was the bride, and no one had a right to open that door until such time as the bridegroom's mother should come. Everybody made way for her, and you may be sure that I kept close beside her. She unlocked the door and threw it open, and oh, dear! what a rush there was!

"The first thing I saw was Fudda, seated up high in a chair, and the chair set upon a sofa at the back of the room. She was covered all over with a white izzar, like mine,"—pointing to the sheet-like drapery she had laid aside at my invitation—"and a veil, like this, over her face,"—holding up the square of flowered tissue edged with hand-made silk lace, always worn by Syrian women in the street—"and over all was a long veil of pink muslin, reaching down to her feet. There she sat, straight and never moving, her hands in her lap, and her eyes closed under the two veils. You know that the bride must go to her husband in pink?"

"I thought white the bridal garment all over the world."

"Not with us. Pink she must wear, or the marriage will not be fortunate. On the floor, directly in front of Fudda, was a stand, and upon the stand a great brass tray, as big as this"—extending her arms to indicate a wide circle—"with ever and ever so many candles lighted upon it. I thought there must be one hundred. All the married women rushed for a candle, and there was screaming and laughing, and scrambling such as I had never heard before. I was afraid I should be knocked down and trampled upon.

"And what do you think it was all for? Every married woman who got a candle would see her own children married in her lifetime and in her husband's lifetime as well. Of course, that is all superstition, but the Mohammedans are very, very superstitious."

"What was the bride doing all this time?" Teeth and eyes made arch play over the comely face. "Sitting still, and her eyes shut. It is not good fortune to open them. Presently, when the candles were all taken, in came her father and her brother, and helped her down, and put on her two swords, one belt crossing her breast—over the veil so, the other so!" designating the right and left sides. "Next, they led her down stairs and out-of-doors, she sobbing behind her veils. You could see her tremble and shake all over with grief at leaving her home forever. At the door, up stepped four men carrying—what do you name a cover fastened up high on four sticks?"

"A canopy." "That is it. And under this canopy she walked in the procession back to the house of the bridegroom's father. She walked, oh, so slow, about one inch to each step—so!"

She rises and folding her hands and closing her eyes, marches stiffly and laboriously deliberately across the floor. We both laugh heartily, as she resumes her natural gait and manner.

"She must have looked like a jointed doll," I say.

"That was what she did look like—and the joints were not easy. I thought we would never, never get to the end of our walk, and the band played all the time. At last, we were there, and again the men were to wait outside, while the women went in. The bride was taken with us.

She did not seem to go in of herself. They sat her down flat upon a rug on the floor, and took off the swords, and the pink veil, and the short veil, and the white 'izzar,' and we could see that she had on only her little girl's dress of clean print, made like a child's. She did not look to be more than eleven at most, and like a baby that is scared, her eyes shut, and her face wet with tears, and biting her lips to keep from crying aloud. She kept very still, however, while they stripped off her print gown and stockings (her sandals were left at the door with all the rest), and put on her finery. Silk stockings and silk trousers and a fine—very fine—pink silk frock. And the women crowded and talked, and were busy all around her. One would put on her stockings, and one braided her hair into two long braids that hung down behind, and were tied with pink ribbons. Another put her dress over her head, and one fastened it, and one stuck flowers in her hair, and this one pulled a pair of long gloves on her hands. All would take a share in decking her out in her jewelry. I never saw so many bracelets and chains and brooches upon one person before—diamonds and rubies and emeralds and turquoises. When her gloves were on, the rings were slipped upon her fingers over them. I could not help laughing to myself to see her—always keeping her eyes shut—stick out her fingers, so, to have the rings put on, just like your doll with joints. When she was all dressed, the women pulled her upon her feet, and a pink veil was fastened to her head and came to the floor in front. Then, they brought again the two swords. Now they were crossed—in this way—"making a St. Andrew's cross with her forefinger—"and tied with ribbons. Two women held them over her head, an old woman who is a sort of doctor and wise woman, you know, and another as old and much looked up to. These swords signified her father and her brother. You see, should her husband not be kind to her, he must recollect that she had somebodies to protect her.

"Now, the door was opened and the bridegroom was waiting on the outside, and he came up to her when she stood between the two women, with the swords crossed over her head, and the pink veil down to her feet, and the jewelry shining through it, and on her arms and hands. Then, he lifted the veil and saw her face-to-face for the first time in all their lives. It was plain to be seen that he was pleased, and he took her by the hand and led her to his own room.

"It is not what you call the etiquette for him to stay there more than a few minutes. He came out soon and took his part in the feasting and dancing and making merry that lasted all night long. The next day there was more feasting in the house of the bridegroom's father, and the third day yet more, all at the expense of the bridegroom. I have known weddings that cost so dear, that the bridegroom had to sell some of the jewelry he had given his wife to pay his debts. The bride is not seen at any of the feasts. From the minute she is a wife, she must not speak to another man except her father and brothers. Not so much as her husband's brother, unless he permits it. And he does not often allow his brother to see her, for fear she should like him better than she likes her husband. He would divorce her in one minute if he found her talking to any man, even through a window very high from the ground.

"Could he divorce her legally upon such a pretext?"

"He can divorce her for anything he likes. If she has not his supper ready in time; if she is not respectful to him; if she does not come quick, on the minute, when he calls her; if he would like to marry a younger woman, he can say the three sentences that mean: 'Go! I am divorced from you!' and she is no more his wife.

"When he speaks these three sentences, she will drop whatever she is doing—sewing, washing, cooking, nursing her baby—and draw her 'izzar' over her face, and go straight out of his house. She must not look at or speak to him any more than to a strange man. Perhaps he has been angry and said more than he meant, and is sorry in a minute, and tries to speak to her, or would follow her. 'No!' she says, keeping her face hidden and putting out her hand to warn him back—in this way—(a dramatic gesture). 'You are not my husband. I do not know you!'"

"Where can the poor creature go?"

"To her father, if she has one. If he is dead, to her brother, or if she has no brother, to her uncle. He says to the man who was her husband: 'Give my daughter, or my sister, or my niece, the clothes and the jewelry that belong to her. My house is her home until she can get another husband.'"

"And her children? What becomes of them?"

"If she has a nursing-baby, it goes with her, and the father must support it until it can do without her. Then, it belongs to him, like the other children."

"Cannot the mother visit them, or have them with her at times?"

"No. They are not hers any longer. They must go with the father."

"Does he often marry again?"

"Always! always! A man must marry, you know."

"I hope the new wife is kind to the children," I say, sighingly.

The narrator smiles roguishly, the look that makes her face very attractive. Such a look, I may remark, as I have never yet seen upon the visage of a Moslem woman. These carry in every lineament the stamp of inferiority to the other sex; are mere mindless machines to minister to the pleasure and comfort of their masters.

CHILDREN OF JERUSALEM.
(Photographed by Marion Harland.)

"It happens, once in a while, that she is so cross to them, and keeps her husband's house so badly that he sees plainly what a great mistake he made in divorcing their mother. Ah! but what would he not give if he had never said those three sentences! So he says to himself, 'I have made a poor bargain this time. I will have my first wife back again.' Now, what does he do but send word that she must be married to another man, and then be divorced, and marry her first husband again!

"Yes, it is true that I tell you. He cannot take back the woman he divorced, you see, but he can marry the woman another man has put away. Of course, it would not be a sensible man who would marry somebody he knew would be taken from him next day. So the woman's friends look about for a man who was born silly—what do you name him?"

"You cannot mean an idiot!"

"Yes! yes! that is it—or a crazy man. They pay him to take this woman as his wife, and to-morrow to divorce her, that her first husband may have his wish. It seems horrible to you, and we native Christians cry out upon it as a sin and a shame, but it is thought nothing of by Mohammedans. It is quite usual for a man to marry one, two, three, four wives, and divorce them all. I know a man who had six, one after the other. He divorced four, one died, and the last one is now his widow."

"And the divorced wives were not disgraced in the eyes of acquaintances?"

"But, surely not! If they are young and pretty, or very good housekeepers, or if they have some money, it is as easy for them, as for girls, to marry."

MARION HARLAND.

CONFIDENCE.

IF across thy earthly pathway,
God shall fling the veil of night,
And the faces of thy loved ones,
Fade away from mortal sight—
His dear face will shine the clearer,
Making all thy pathway bright.

If he lays his hand upon thee,
Lean thou closer on his breast;
For it may be that he seeketh
Thy love and faith to test;
Lean thou closer; 'tis thy Father,
And he knoweth what is best.

Storm and sunshine both are needed,
For the quick'ning of the seed;
So the Father seeks to teach us,
If the lesson we will heed,
That he sends us joy or sorrow,
As he seeth we have need.

Though he lead through shine or shadow,
Thorny path or flowery way,
Let his will be wrought within thee,
Teach thy heart to humbly say:
"Not my will;" so shall the Father,
Bless and guide thee day by day.

—LILLA M. ALEXANDER.

CHAPTER XII. (Continued.)

WITH wise decision, for which Elspeth was not prepared, Mrs. Paull assigned to Marie a stated round of domestic cares in order that her mother and the tireless maid-of-all-work might have more time for the duties of the season. While careful that the girl should not become a household drudge, the mother gave her to understand that she was responsible for the condition of her own and Gladys' clothing, for the cleanliness and order of her bed-room and the parlor, and for the tasteful array of the table at each meal. If the girl's performance of the allotted duties were lifeless and perfunctory, the service of a slave who could not gainsay her task-mistress, Mrs. Paull gave no sign of perceiving it. Nor did she wince visibly in the sight of daughter or servant, at the distant respect with which the former addressed her, and the studious literalness of her obedience to orders.

The little boys threw themselves eagerly into fruit-gathering, each dropping daily into his savings-bank the pennies paid over for so many quarts of strawberries, currants and raspberries measured by Elspeth. Even the baby had her harvest and her hoard.

"They say that bairnies' work is more plague than profit," said the serving woman, one hot July day, as she extracted from the heap of "black caps" upon a broad platter, green caps and fragments of stems and leaves, indicative of juvenile industry. "I dare say that's true if all that the work is worth is what grown people gain from it."

Her eyes strayed affectionately to the trio, who were having an afternoon tea-party of bread-and-butter, berries and milk upon a flat rock in the shadow of a bushy lilac.

"I'm thinking 'though, that they are mair content for believing that they are helping along the wark o' the world. I'm minded, in watching them, o' th' laddie who, when the men could not get the vessel off the stocks, ran and pushed with all his we might against the hull. 'For,' says he, 'I can push a pound.' The tale goes that the great ship slipped right down into the water. All the force of the men who were straining to launch her, happened to fall short of just that one p'und. I have me doubts o' that pair o' th' tale, but that does 'nt alter the moral. It's the old parable o' th' talents all the way through. The main thing for all is the good the helping does to him that gives it. If its only going through th' motions, it's somehow healthy for the soul. I mind when I first cam' to this country, and lived for a year in Quebec, I used to see the garrison drilling night and morning as careful as it the enemy was in sight of the walls. 'Twas the drill made soldiers of them mair than the fighting, which, it's likely, some o' them never gat. I've known lads to enlist, and live to be old men and never smell power that had a ball at the front of it."

Mrs. Paull's eyes followed Elspeth to the sturdy urchins and their pretty little sister, the queen of the feast, all as brown as buns from the country breezes and glowing with health.

"Our children are certainly happier for thinking that we cannot do without them—which is true. Now that they are out of hearing and are quiet for a little while, I wish to consult you, Elspeth, about a letter Mr. Morse brought to me from the post-office this forenoon. He very thoughtfully stopped at the store on his way up, supposing, as he said, that I should not like to send Marie down the hill on such a warm day. He is a kind, good neighbor and friend."

She was unfolding a double sheet, closely written.

"Mrs. Barnes would like to find a boarding-place for a month, for herself and Harry. He is just Gladys' age, you know. Elizabeth has gone abroad with her father, and Will is at his grandmother's in the neighborhood of Newburyport, Massachusetts.

Mrs. Barnes thinks the mountain air will be better for her, as a change from the seashore. She wishes to live very quietly, somewhere near us.

"She says: 'I should be willing to take care of my own room, and as to fare, with good country bread and butter, fresh milk and eggs and vegetables, we shall be satisfied, even if meats are indifferent and deserts uneatable.'

"I know little of farm-fare hereabouts, but that little makes me doubt if she will not find more soda-biscuit than good homemade bread, or if any vegetables except potatoes and cabbages are frequent visitors to our neighbors' tables. Yet it would be an unspeakable comfort to have my dear old friend near me, just now, for a few weeks."

"The sight o' her bonnie face would be gude for sair een," responded Scotch Elspeth, briefly. "We must speir around a bit for a comfortable nest for her."

The subject was not brought up again until the berries were boiled into jam of jelly-like consistency; sealed up in the gallipots which Elspeth had been at great pains to procure because they "minded" her of those in which the Dundee marmalade is preserved, and the jars had joined the hundred-and-fifty glasses of currant jelly gleaming redly upon the long shelves of the store-room.

"Ten dozen of the marmalade," said Elspeth, shutting the door of the treasure-chamber. "An warranted to keep 'till the Day o' Judgment, when, as I tak' it—'though there'll be neither jelly nor jelly-making—the deeds o' all men and women will be made known, whether they've done good or whether they've done evil. There's religion in jam-making, as well as in preaching and praying. To scant the sugar and th' time o' b'iling is eenequity according to the Auld Testament and to th' New."

The jars had not been packed away until they were perfectly cold. It was now nearly eight o'clock. The children were in their beds; Mrs. Morse had come by in the afternoon to invite Marie to go home with her, her young sister and her brother from Philadelphia having arrived unexpectedly the preceding day. Mrs. Paull gave her consent with grateful alacrity. Ungracious as Marie had proved herself of late, the mother heart yearned over her in unspoken pity. A week before she had proposed to the lonely girl to invite Carrie Storrs to spend a month with them, a suggestion contemptuously negatived:

"I should be ashamed to invite her, or any of the other girls to visit me here," her nostrils curling as the odor of boiling sweets saluted them. "No! tradespeople should associate with tradespeople. I do not complain of my solitude."

Nevertheless, she had gone off blithely with the clergyman's wife, with whom she was always friendly. The ring of the happy laugh borne back to the house from the receding carriage, had wandered drearily through the listener's memory ever since. It was the echo of a departed joy, music once as familiar as the sight of the radiant face, and the strain about the mother's neck of arms that never rested there now.

This thought it was, and not physical weariness that moved her to sigh with which she sank into her accustomed seat on the piazza, and looked out toward the fading glories of the late sunset.

Pink and gold were changing into the purple bloom of the June twilight that does not grow cold until an hour before the morrow's dawn. In the heart of the grove beyond the orchard, the thrushes prolonged their evening service, the mountains were stretching themselves out to sleep, wrapped in robes that had the rich blue of a ripe plum; the rising dew was freighted with the perfume of honeysuckle and cinnamon roses, thyme, bergamot and lavender. Elspeth's kitchen was "redd up," so thoroughly that all traces of the day's business were purged from the air. Her range shone blackly; the sweet dampness of newly-scrubbed boards softened the dry heat; brasses and tins glimmered through the duskiness of the side most remote from the door. Comfort, cleanliness and rest abode within-doors; without, beauty and peace. As the twilight spread and mounted, the young moon, a frail sickle of tender light, with one brilliant planet so near and so directly under the lower tip, that one could have fancied it pendant from it by a viewless chain, appeared above the broad band of vapor, brownish-dun below, dull crimson on the upper edge, that lay behind the hills.

Elspeth had another simile for the crescent and the star.

"A foolish body that knew naught o' the ways o' the heavenly bodies might think the moon had melted a bit, and a drop had caught on summat, instead o' coming all the way to the earth."

She had donned a clean gingham (she was fond of pronounced plaids) and a white apron; a starched kerchief was crossed stiffly over her flat chest. Her sleeves were buttoned at the wrist in token that her day's work was accomplished. Except while she waited at table, they had been pinned up to her shoulders ever since she arose with the sun, and revealed arms as muscular as a prize-fighter's. She had taken up her stand against one of the small numerous pillars upbearing the far-projecting roof, her knitting in hand. She never needed to look at her needles while shaping a stocking. She wore none but those of her own fashioning, and kept the chubby legs of the boys similarly clad up to the hems of their knickerbockers.

Giving a nervous pull to the ball in her apron pocket, she continued:

"I dare say, now, ma'am, that Mrs. Barnes could paint all that into a braw picture?"

"Hardly, I think, Elspeth. Nor could any artist. Colors such as those are not to be bought."

"I'm thinking that ye may be right, ma'am. But she could, no doot, come as nigh to it as any of them. She's a clever one, is Mrs. Barnes, and that knows how to use her fingers as well as her tongue, and, ye might say, her head better than either hands or tongue. I wish she war here, the night, ma'am, to help ye enjoy what ye are seeing this minute."

"You enjoy it with me, Elspeth."

"Not with the liking ye, and the likes o' ye, have for it, ma'am. It's no good for ye to have none o' yer kind about ye. Blood is blood (she pronounced it like good), and education aye opens the door o' the lips, the one to the other, and the understanding, also. If Mrs. Barnes were sitting there beside ye, there wad, mayhap, less be said than is spake now. But ye'd feel in yersel' what she war thinking, and she the same with you. It isn't just now that the thought has taken tent o' me. Mony's the time when I'm fair daft wi' wondering how to clear some o' the thorns out o' yer road."

Tears seldom seen there, welled to Mrs. Paull's eyes.

In no external manifestation of inward discipline is the difference between vulgarity and refinement more apparent than in the habit of restraining or of giving way to watery grief. The weak woman yields to the selfish tide if she break a tea-cup, or tear a gown; the underbred hireling wails aloud if she has a tooth drawn, or cuts her finger. She, who has studied from her cradle to be mistress of herself, smiles under the knife that separates bone from flesh, and joint from marrow.

The spray she saw her mistress brush furtively from her lashes before she smiled up at her, was a token to the servant of how deep was the hold her heroic fidelity had taken upon the lady's heart.

"No one has removed more thorns and stones than yourself, my dear, faithful friend. God has given me no stronger arm than yours to lean upon. If I do not tell you this oftener, it is not that I do not feel it continually and do not thank Him upon every remembrance of you. You have continued with me in my temptation, Elspeth. He who knows the bitterness of my trial, will reward you. I never can."

Across the charmed silence of the summer night, that lay between them—solemnly placid now that the thrushes had ceased their hymning, such a queer muffled sound like the whirr of a snapping clock-spring. In another minute Elspeth had cleared her throat, spoke as usual—even a little more drily:

"I'm aye awkward at threshing about the bush, ma'am, as ye know fu' well. What I've had in me mind to say since ye tell me of Mrs. Barnes' letter was to ask ye why we can't give her and the wee laddie the north chamber yon"—jerking her head sideways and backwards at the same time—"and let this be the farm house where she'll get board. She'll not be lacking bread and the milk, the butter and vegetables, and all the rest of it, in peace and plenty. The laddie will be content wi' ours, and there's no sweeter air this side o' the New Jerusalem. Of that she may be sure. And for the two of ye, ma'am, it wad be going back to the lang syne, she spake o' when she first sent you the box of bonnie roses—d'ye mind?"

She had her reward in part for the new proof of unselfish devotion to her idolized mistress in the animation with which the plan was discussed and finally adopted.

A letter went off to Brooklyn next day. In four days thereafter the old school-fellows slept under the farmstead roof, and Harry was joyfully adopted into the family of lesser folk.

From the moment she alighted from the carriage that had brought her from the market-town of Pedlington, nine miles away, and where was the nearest railway station to Pequod,—Mrs. Barnes was an integral part of the modest establishment; her light, swift touches infused new spirit into everything. She made the boys happy by sketching them in their berrying-clothes; clever portraits that anybody would have known at a glance or two. Each boy rapturously identified his own berry-basket and broad-brimmed straw hat, although these last were exactly alike when bought at the store week before last, and Tom had only since then, lost the band from his, while Edwin had left his on the lawn one day where a hungry calf had found it and chewed a great piece out of the brim.

She was the inspiring genius of the famous picnic to the Big Patch, four miles away, a common of forty acres, claimed by nobody since it had settled down bodily, thirty years ago, into some subterranean cave or bog, and now lay six feet below the level of the surrounding country, overrun with "high bush" blackberries. The Morses and Paulls joined forces in the expedition, Dr. and Miss Lyell, Mrs. Morse's brother and sister, being still the guests of the parsonage household. Two big open wagons, each one drawn by a pair of horses, were packed with people and baskets, great and small. Nobody was left at home by the Paull party except the big mastiff, "Duke," who kept house all day upon the lakeward porch. The whole affair was an immense success; the abundant luncheon was eaten in the shade beside a running stream from which Dr. Lyell and Mr. Morse drew a dozen beautiful trout just before they left the big patch for home, and the harvesting was six bushel baskets of great ripe berries, the finest any of the party had ever seen.

Mrs. Barnes it was who furnished the incomparable recipe for spiced blackberry cordial which, in the hands of a druggist, recommended by her, took rank with the medical profession as a specific in a certain class of disorders, and had a large sale throughout New York and New Jersey. She it was who triumphed over Elspeth's prejudice against attempting to put up blackberry jelly, because, as she alleged, "it was like many folk, ower dead-sweet ever to set into any shape whatever." Under Mrs. Barnes' directions juice and sugar were put together after the former came, boiling hot and clear, from the fire, then were poured into glasses and set daily in the hottest glare of the sun until firm, and luscious with the aromatic spiciness brought by the fruit from the wilderness where it had companioned with juniper, angelica and sweet fern.

As for blackberry vinegar and jam, and the blackberries canned for pies, and blackberry sweet pickles—and all the other ways she propounded of carrying the wholesome dainty over into the winter—is not their fame perpetuated in many a farmstead in the Pequod Valley?

I saw the other day in a catalogue of small fruits, the "Barnes Blackberry" in a place of honor, and smiled to think how direct was its lineage from the roots brought that same autumn from the Big Patch and set out by Mr. Morse in the very shadow of the century-old church. The Dominie was a skilful horticulturist, and in a few seasons brought the wild fruit to a size and flavor that did honor to her for whom it was named.

(To Be Continued.)

THE USES OF THE BIBLE.*

If any one is in search of accurate information regarding the age of this earth, or its relation to the sun, moon and stars, or regarding the order in which men and animals appeared upon it, he is referred to recent text books in astronomy, geology and paleontology. No one for a moment dreams of referring a serious student of these subjects to the Bible as a source of information. It is not the object of the writers of Scripture to impart physical instruction, or to enlarge the bounds of scientific knowledge. But if any one wishes to know what connection the world has with God, if he seeks to trace back all that now is to the very fountain-head of life, if he desires to discover some unifying principle, some illuminating purpose in the history of this earth, then we confidently refer him to these and the subsequent chapters of Scripture as his safest, and indeed his only, guide to the information he seeks. Every writing must be judged by the object the writer has in view. If the object of the writer of these chapters was to convey physical information, then certainly it is imperfectly fulfilled. But if his object was to give an intelligible account of God's relation to the world and to man, then it must be owned that he has been successful in the highest degree. It is therefore unreasonable to allow our reverence for this writing to be lessened because it does not anticipate the discoveries of physical science;

*From The Book of Genesis, by Prof. Marcus Dods, D.D. This volume belongs to the "Expositor's Bible" series and is one of the most useful in the collection. As the attack on the Bible from the standpoint of the discoveries of modern science is directed chiefly against Genesis the light shed upon the book by the able and learned professor is especially valuable. Sunday School teachers who find that the present lessons give rise to difficult questions, will know how to appreciate the help given by this volume. Pp 445. Price $1.50. Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, 51 East Tenth St., New York.

Save the Children

By Purifying Their Blood

Hood's Sarsaparilla Makes Pure Blood, Cures Scrofula, Etc.

"My experience with Hood's Sarsaparilla has been very effective. My little girl, five years old, had for four years a bad skin disease. Her arms and limbs would break out in a mass of sores, discharging yellow matter. She would scratch the eruptions as though it gave relief, and tear open the sores.

Two Bottles of Hood's

Sarsaparilla caused the eruptions to heal and the scabs peeled off, after which the skin became soft and smooth. As a family medicine we believe

Hood's Cures

Hood's Sarsaparilla has no equal and I recommend it." W. L. KING, Bluff Dale, Tex.

Hood's Pills are the best family cathartic, gentle and effective. Try a Box. 25 cents.

PARSONS PILLS.

Make New Rich Blood.
"Best Liver Pill Made"

Positively cure BILIOUSNESS and SICK HEADACHE, Liver and Bowel Complaints. They expel all impurities from the blood. Delicate women find great benefit from using them. Price 25 cts. five $1.00. Full particulars free. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., 22 Custom House St. Boston Mass.

At Dinner
your guests are pleased with the soup because your cook used in making it Cudahy's Rex Brand Extract of Beef, and the verdict was, "The best soup I ever tasted." The concentrated nutritive qualities and delicious flavor of Rex Brand Extract of Beef secured for it the Highest Award at World's Fair.

Sample Jar sent free for 6c. to cover postage.
THE CUDAHY PHARMACEUTICAL CO.,
South Omaha, Neb.

Our illustrated booklet, "From Ranch to Table," showing how Rex Brand Beef Extract is made, and recipes for using it, mailed free.

or to repudiate its authority in its own department of truth, because it does not give us information which it formed no part of the writer's real object to give. The writer of Genesis describes the process of creation, but he describes it only for the sake of ideas regarding man's relation to God and God's relation to the world which he can thereby convey. Indeed, what we mean by scientific knowledge was not in the thoughts of the people for whom this book was written. The subject of creation, of the beginning of man upon earth was not approached from that side at all; and if we are to understand what is here written we must burst the trammels of our own modes of thought and read these chapters, not as a chronological, astronomical, geological biological statement, but as a moral or spiritual conception . . .

John Stuart Mill says: "It must be allowed that in the present state of our knowledge the adaptations in nature afford a large balance of probability in favor of creation by intelligence."

Dollars or Kicks

for women, according to whether they do, or don't do, their washing in a sensible way. If they use Pearline, it means good, hard dollars saved. Pearline is economy. All that ruinous rubbing that makes you buy linens and flannels twice as often as you need to, is spared, to say nothing of your time and labor.

See the troubles that women have to endure with other ways of washing. There's that hard, wearing-out rub, rub, rub, or the danger of ruining things with acids if you try to make it easy. Washing with Pearline is absolutely safe.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 418 JAMES PYLE, New York

D*E*L*A*V*A*U*S Whooping Cough Croup Violent Coughs

Tested over 40 Years. EFFECTUAL AND HARMLESS. 50c. per bot. at druggists, or expressed from 6th and Wood Sts., Philadelphia, to any address 60c.

R*E*M*E*D*Y

U. S. Census for one year, 1880, reports 35,607 Deaths from Cancer.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium,

An institution for the thoroughly effective and perfectly scientific treatment of Cancer, Tumors, and all malignant growths, without the use of the knife. We have never failed to effect a permanent cure where we have had a reasonable opportunity for treatment.

Book giving a description of our Sanatorium and treatment, with terms and references, free. Address DRS. W. E. BROWN & SON, North Adams, Mass.

No local dealer can compete with us in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.

WALL PAPER

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples. Beautiful Gold Paper, 50c. per Roll. We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS, 50-52 W. 13th St., NEW YORK. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

FREE COMET FOUNTAIN PEN

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this Hard Rubber Fountain Pen. Warranted a perfect writer & immense Ill. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BROS., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Tubular Ear Catheters. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold only by F. HISCOP, 553 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

Get a COLUMBIA

IT IS ECONOMY TO BUY THE BEST.

Columbias are built to last. Riders know this; they see the honest old Columbias about and do the good service year after year.

Columbias are built to look as every one knows who saw a Columbia. The standard Columbia price of must prove attractive to every intending purchaser of a wheel.

Our catalogue for 1894 shows a line of wheels all newly designed, which for attractiveness excel any bicycle ever offered. It is free at our agencies, or we mail it for two two-cent stamps.

POPE MFG. CO.,
Boston, New York, Chicago, Hartford.

If he asks why you want the DE LONG PATENT HOOK AND EYE, tell him:

See that hump?

TRADE-MARK REG. APR. 19-92.

Richardson & DeLong Bros., Philadelphia.

Friendly Regard

is never entertained by the children for a medicine that tastes bad. This explains the popularity among little ones of Scott's Emulsion, a preparation of cod-liver oil almost as palatable as milk. Many mothers have grateful knowledge of its benefits to weak, sickly children.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

Comfort Powder

Insures perfect complexion. It is the only powder that combines healing with the ordinary qualities of a face powder. It removes pimples, blackheads, oiliness, and roughness of the skin. Send 4 cents in stamps for liberal sample and book. COMFORT POWDER CO., HARTFORD, CONN.

Did You Ever Look Like This?

DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY DON'T TAKE IMITATIONS Sold by all Druggists, or send 15c to C. S. DENT & CO., Detroit, Mich. THIS IS NOT A CHEWING GUM.

FAT PEOPLE YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of Dr. Clarke's Home Treatment. Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no wrinkles or flabbiness. Stout abdomens, difficult breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best references. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free. DR. F. B. CLARKE, Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

PILES CURED

Our Book on Piles—Free. Bacon Medicine Co., Richmond, Va., U.S.A.

TAPE-WORM

Expelled alive in 60 minutes with head, or no charge. Send 2c stamp for circular. Dr. M. Ney Smith, Specialist, 721 Olive, St. Louis, Mo.

FREE! DEAF A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.

MAIZE, KAS., Jan. 28, '94. For many years I suffered from Catarrh of the head and throat, which destroyed my hearing, and for twenty-five years I was so deaf that I could not understand conversation at all. Could not hear a clock strike by holding my ear against it. I had tried every known remedy, and nothing had ever given me the slightest relief. Last summer I obtained Dr. Moore's treatment, and had not used it three weeks until my hearing began to improve, and has steadily improved ever since, and now I can hear common conversation across a room without difficulty; can hear a clock strike in an adjoining room, 30 feet away, with the door closed, and I think I am entirely cured and my hearing permanently restored. I urge all who are afflicted as I was, to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment. EDWIN COLEMAN.

MEDICINES FOR THREE MONTHS' TREATMENT FREE.

To introduce this treatment and prove beyond doubt that it is a positive cure for Deafness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address, J. H. MOORE, M.D., Cincinnati, O.

Modern Science versus PILES.

A Heated Medicinal Vapor. KOMCHACIN Caloric, a scientific cure for Piles, Hemorrhoids, Fissures, and kindred complaints. It is not a salve, ointment, or suppository. It is a scientific application of curative properties that have been used for generations in all afflictions of the Mucous Membrane, applied through that vehicle, the greatest of all disease germ exterminators, HEAT.—Think a moment! Is there any disease germ that heat cannot destroy? A treatment by Komchacin Caloric is painless. No discomforts. Price, $1.00, postpaid.—Send for testimonials and circulars explaining this Science. KOMCHACIN CALORIC CO., Office No. 4, 130 and 132 Lincoln St., BOSTON, Mass.

TRUSSES on 30 Days Trial Easy, durable and cheap. A radical cure effected. Send for sealed catalogue. Eggleston Truss Co., 69 Dearborn St., Chicago.

THE BIBLE IN NEW YORK.

THE report of the New York Bible Society for this year, which has just been issued, contains an account of a very important work which has been and still is being quietly done in this city. It might be supposed that here, where magnificent churches and noble charities abound, but few persons would be found without a Bible; but the results of this work show a very different and lamentable condition.

The city has been divided into one hundred districts, extending from the Battery to Yonkers. Every house to which access could be had was carefully canvassed, the greater part of the work being done in the "Tenement House" districts. Ten months were required to complete this canvass. The record shows the following results: 35,790 houses were visited; the number of families actually seen and spoken to in these houses was 171,570; of these, 81,638 were Roman Catholic, 29,029 were Jewish, and 60,903 Protestant. Of the latter, 5,410 were found to be without a copy of the Scriptures in their homes, and have been furnished with them in the language needed. Seven hundred and ninety-five families were nominally Protestant, but so great was their antagonism to the Bible that they would not accept it on any condition.

The greatest lack of Bibles was found, strange to say, on the edge of the great Jewish district, in a section bounded by the Bowery, East Houston, Eldridge, and Grand streets, where a great number of German and American families still reside. The number of families there without a Bible was found to average 37 per cent. of those visited. In another district on the East Side the average without a Bible was found to be 30 per cent. In this district was a German woman who had been thirty years without a Bible. On the West Side as well there were found to be many who had never owned a copy of God's word. These cases, however, are exceptional, as the average below the Harlem River was found to be only 10 per cent., and in the Annexed District but 3½ per cent.

While the Society is willing to give a Bible to any who cannot afford to pay for it, they always endeavor to get cost or half cost for all they distribute, making the recipients of the books value them more.

Besides the work done in the city, the shipping in the harbor is visited by an agent of the Society. During the year 3,046 vessels, sailing under ten different flags, were supplied with 6,789 volumes. At Ellis Island an agent of the Society meets all immigrants who arrive at this port, extending to them a friendly greeting in the language of their "Fatherland," and gives to all who will accept it a copy of the Word of God, which is and must ever be the bulwark of our national life. During the year 48,825 volumes, in nineteen different languages, were given to immigrants, a much smaller number than in some previous years owing to the decrease of immigration.

Although much of the results of this Bible distribution are out of human sight, surely we may expect that these widely-scattered pages of inspiration will prove to be leaves of the tree of life for the healing of the nations; for He has said, "My word shall not return unto me void."

The Society gratefully acknowledges the help rendered in the work of the American Bible Society which has cheerfully furnished the Bibles and Testaments needed. Mr. J. H. Burnside, the President of the New York Society in closing his report reminds the New York Churches from which the Society derives its support that an increased income will be necessary to defray the cost of this thorough house to house visitation.

HEATHEN CIRCLETES TO THE SICK.

Mrs. Bishop, a returned missionary in describing heathen practices in the East, recently said: "Throughout the East sickness is believed to be the work of demons. The sick person, in some countries, at once becomes an object of loathing and terror, is put out of the house, is taken to an out-house, is poorly fed, and rarely visited; or the astrologers, or priests, or medicine-men, or wizards assemble, bearing big drums and gongs, blowing horns, and making the most fearful noises. They light gigantic fires, and dance round them with their unholy incantations. They beat the sick person with clubs to drive out the demon. They lay him before a roasting fire till his skin is blistered, and then throw him into cold water. They stuff the nostrils of the dying with aromatic mixtures, or mud, and in some regions they carry the chronic sufferer to a mountain-top, placing barley balls and water beside him, and leave him to die alone." These facts emphasize the urgent need of medical missionary to the heathen.

REDEEMED FROM HEATHENISM.

Mr. Crawford, a missionary in Africa, had a little boy named Sankuru, whom he had redeemed from another tribe, and with him and his other companions he arrived at the village of M'bayo, a friendly chief. He writes: "It turned out to be little Sankuru's home and his mother wept for joy on seeing him again. The people had been swooped down upon by Msidi's war parties and scattered; some were killed, and the little boy was taken. The relatives offer to redeem him, but Sankuru clings to me and refuses. So be it, for he is free, and knows best where he will be happy. A small boy's life in a native village, if he is other than a chief's son, is pretty much that of a kick-about, at the call of everybody. On the contrary, the young men who are with me are quite proud of my little boys, and devise lots of things to make them happy, apart from stuffing them with food, honey, and other good things." Sankuru will be trained in the Gospel and may yet be an evangelist and teacher among his own people.

Cleveland's baking powder does not contain a particle of ammonia, alum or any adulteration.

Everything used in making it is plainly printed on the label.

Food raised with it retains its natural moisture and flavor.

Cleveland Baking Powder Co., New York, Successor to Cleveland Brothers.

EXAMINE Sunny Side Songs!

THE NEW AND POPULAR Sunday School Song Book, By W. H. DOANE, the latest and best book by this favorite composer. 241 songs: $30 per 100. THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO. 76 E. 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

STATIONERY Beautiful, Dainty Designs.

Send 10c. for sketch of your monogram or address etc., with samples of the latest styles of stationery prepared by New York society. EDWIN W. DAYTON, 60 Madison Ave., N. Y. City.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps.) THE HUMAN HAIR, Why it Falls Out, Turns Grey, and the Remedy. By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F.R.S., London. D. G. LONG & CO., 103 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. "Every man should read this little book." Athenaeum

PRINTING OFFICE 15c. A large font of type (over 44 with figures, italics, leaded ink, etc., Teacups, etc., as shown in cut, complete in 1894. See 1st Union Maker Card Printer, etc. Regular Price for Sample postpaid for 15c. to introduce with Catalogue of 1894 new articles. CAT. FREE. THE JOHNSON & LEO, 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City

A WOMAN of fine abilities is offered diligent work and good pay. Write F. H. & H., 47 East Tenth Street, New York.

$42.50 BUYS IT NOW.

Think of it! For the next sixty days only, we offer our famous

Good Hope Organ

(regular price $78) complete with stool and instruction book for $42.50, or $15.00 after ten days' trial, or $50.00 On Credit, $10.00 down and $5.00 per month. This Organ is absolutely perfect, containing all the latest improvements. Black walnut case. Fully Warranted for 10 Years. We have Organs from $27.50 up and Pianos from $175 up. Send for beautiful Catalogue showing the latest and best Organs and Pianos, and learn how to save from $50 to $200 by buying directly from the largest manufacturers in the world. CORNISH & CO., Established Nearly 30 Years Washington, New Jersey.

THE CALIFORNIA "GRAPE CURE."

Delicious as a Bunch of FRESH GRAPES.

The Purest Medicinal Fruit-Food and the finest non-alcoholic beverage ever placed before the people.

SANITAS GRAPE JUICE.—Concentrated, Unfermented and Pure.

A valuable DIETETIC and CURATIVE agent in cases of Consumption, Gastric Fever, nervous debility, dyspepsia, constipation, and kindred complaints. FORMS a superior food tonic for NURSING WOMEN, WITHOUT an equal as a system-builder for WEAK and PALID CHILDREN. A safe and successful re-constructor for FEVER PATIENTS during the convalescent period.

Sanitas Concentrated, Unfermented Grape Juice, is bottled only by the CALIFORNIA GRAPE FOOD CO., at Los Gatos, Cal., in pint bottles containing a half gallon of juice, and is for sale by leading DRUGGISTS and GROCERS at sixty-five cents per bottle. Send your address to Los Gatos, Cal., and receive, postpaid, a booklet telling all about Grape Juice. NEW YORK—145 Broadway. SAN FRANCISCO—408 Sutter St. NORMAN BARBOUR, Selling Agent, 77 Warren St., N. Y.

LOOK AT THE CROOK
Can't slip—Can't cut
Metal work covered up
SECURITY HOSE SUPPORTER Sold Everywhere—Made by Warner Bros., N. Y. and Chicago.

Arnold Constable & Co.
Upholstery Coverings
AND DRAPERIES

At greatly reduced prices.

FINEST QUALITY

Wool Tapestries,

Silk and Wool,

Silk and Cotton Fabrics,

Brocatelle and Satin Damask.

Broadway & 19th St.

NEW YORK.

"A dollar saved is a dollar earned." This Ladies' Solid French Dongola Kid Button Boot delivered free anywhere in the U.S., on receipt of Cash, Money Order, or Postal Note, for $1.50. (Excludes to date.) These only, are the stores for $2.50. We make this boot ourselves, therefore we guarantee the fit, style and wear, and if any one is not satisfied we will refund the money or send another pair. Opera Toe or Common Sense, widths C, D, E, & EE, sizes 1 to 8, and half sizes. Send your size; we will fit you. Illustrated Catalogue FREE. (Theop'd. Capital, $1,000,000.) DEXTER SHOE CO., 143 Federal St., Boston, Mass.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW & IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEM OF DRESS CUTTING. (Excludes to date.) These only, are the genuine MOODY TAILOR SYSTEMS. Beware of imitations. Any body of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address, MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

Swiss Lozenges, for curing Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, &c. Price 25 cts. a Box Mailed. H. EDWARD WENDEL, S. E. cor. 3d and George Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

Spring Garments.

Now ready, our display of Tailor-Made Gowns, rarely, if ever, equaled; carefully chosen styles, rich materials, and perfect finish.

Spring Coats, in Cloth, Camel's Hair, Moire, or in Cloth trimmed with Moire.

Capes in Silk, Grenadine, and Moire with and without Lace combinations.

In Silk Waists, a great variety, to meet every demand of taste, style, and price.

Suit and Cloak Department—Second Floor.

James McCreery & Co.,

BROADWAY & 11th STREET, NEW YORK.

THE "B & H" Lamp

Has the Double Centre Draught.

IS AS EASY TO LIGHT AS GAS.

ALL FIRST-CLASS DEALERS SELL IT.

Send for our Little Book.

BRADLEY & HUBBARD MFG. CO.,

NEW YORK—BOSTON—CHICAGO.

FACTORIES: MERIDEN, CONN.

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS. OPERA AND ASSEMBLY CHAIRS. THE GRAND RAPIDS SCHOOL FURNITURE CO. GRAND RAPIDS MICH.

DOOR-PLATES, 35 cts. It is work, good, durable stamps. 17 Ringfield Door plate Co., 18 Gray's av., Springfield, Mass

A New Cooking School has been started, which recognizes the importance of having plenty of milk on hand for cooking purposes, has found its requirements fully met by Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream, prepared by New York Condensed Milk Co. It highly endorses it

AGENTS can make $50.00 to $100.00 a week canvassing for the best specialties ever offered. No competition. Write for terms, N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N. 34 East 14th St., New York, or Kansas City, Mo.

SCOTT'S ROSES 45th YEAR

FOR OTHER FLOWERING PLANTS AND FLOWER SEEDS, SEE CHRISTIAN HERALD OF FEBRUARY 28TH.

SIX WINTER BLOOMING ROSES

FOR 50 Cents

Our collection of winter-flowering Roses is one of the most popular in our Catalogue. We select six of the best varieties in cultivation for that purpose, grow them in immense quantities, and offer them to our customers at a popular price. These Roses require special care to prepare them for winter flowering, and with each order we send practical directions for growing, which, if carefully followed, will lead to success. The varieties are:

Marion Dinglee, deep crimson; Perle des Jardins, canary yellow; Mad. de Watteville, the Tulip Rose, creamy white with crimson border; Safrano, bright apricot; The Queen, pure white; Papa Contier, dark crimson changing to light rose.

SCOTT'S PENROSE COLLECTION OF FIVE CHOICE ROSES

FOR 50 Cts.

We will send Dinsmore, the freest-flowering crimson Hybrid; J. B. Varonne, salmon-yellow and rich crimson; Mad. Cecil Bruner, an exquisite rosy-pink Polyantha; The Bride, pure white, with extra large flowers and beautiful buds; Wootton, a Hybrid Tea Rose, grand flowers of rich crimson, always in bloom and very fragrant.

All the above Roses are remarkable for beautiful buds and flowers, and represent the best varieties of Tea, Hybrid Tea, Polyantha, and Hybrid Perpetual Roses. Full description will be found in our Catalogue.

THE ROSES in this advertisement are offered at OUR LOWEST WHOLESALE PRICES TO ADVERTISE THE SUPERIOR QUALITY OF OUR PLANTS. TRY THEM!

A ROSE OFFER.

Scott's Quality and Quantity Collections.

For 50 Cents we will send, postpaid, SCOTT'S QUALITY COLLECTION, embracing one strong plant each of MAD. ELIE LAMBERT, carnation-rose of a delicate freshness; CLOTILDE SOUPERT, pearly-white; COMTESSERIZA DU PARC, bright coppery-rose; METEOR, dark velvety-crimson; MARIE GUILLOT, pure white; CHAMPION OF THE WORLD, bright coral-pink; WHITE LA FRANCE.

The 7 ROSES as above are all "THOROUGHbred," and are remarkable for beautiful buds and well-formed flowers.

For $1.00 we will send SCOTT'S QUANTITY COLLECTION, 20 FREE FLOWERING ROSES, FOR $1.00, POSTPAID, embracing SNOWFLAKE, pure white; J. B. VARONNE, bright crimson; MAD. PERNET DUCHER, a new yellow; DUCHESS DE BRABANT, soft rosy-pink; ETOILE DE LYON, rich golden-yellow, and 15 other choice sorts, our selection.

For $1.00 we will send postpaid one strong plant each of MAMAN COCHET (see illustration) CLIMBING LA FRANCE, COMTESSE DE BRETEUIL, AUGUSTA VICTORIA, LEO XIII, and SOUVENIR DE MAD. HENNEVEU. SIX NEW ROSES in all for $1.00. This collection embraces the very best of the New Roses for 1894. Full descriptions are in our catalogue for 1894.

For $1.00 we will send EIGHT OF THE BEST HARDY ROSES in cultivation, embracing Margaret Dickson (new), pure white; Rodocanachi (new), soft transparent pink shaded with carmine, immense flowers; Dinsmore, dazzling scarlet crimson, always in bloom; Magna Charta, clear rosy color; Clorie de Margotten, clear dazzling red; Ulrich Bruner, rich glowing crimson; Gen. Jacqueminot, velvety crimson; Prince Arthur, deep crimson, one of the darkest roses.

If you want to plant a bed of Hardy Hybrid Roses that will live and bloom year after year with very little care and attention, include this collection in your order, for it is the best and cheapest offer of Hardy Roses ever made.

TWELVE TWO YEAR OLD ROSES

For $3.00. This collection is sent by express only, as they are too large to mail, purchaser paying charges. The varieties are Coquette de Lyon, Clotilde Soupert, Etoile de Lyon, H. Plantaganet, J. B. Varonne, Mad. Elie Lambert, Marion Dinglee, Marie Guillot, Marie Lambert, Pierre Guillot, The Queen, White La France. This is the cheapest and best offer of two year old roses ever made.

Order Now as this advertisement will not appear again, and ask for SCOTT'S CATALOGUE OF BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS. It fully describes the grandest novelties in Plants, Seeds and Bulbs, and is mailed free.

ROBERT SCOTT & SON, Philadelphia, Penn.

FOR $5.50

we will send by express

(At Purchaser's expense) everything on this page: 52 mailing

Roses and 12 two-year old Roses.

Purchased separately at our low prices they would cost $11.50.

MAMAN COCHET.

19th & Catherine Sts.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 17.

COPYRIGHT 1894, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

NUMBER 14.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, APRIL 4, 1894.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

OUR ARMY'S SPIRITUAL SHEPHERDS.

A Corps of Chaplains, both White and Black, Who Represent all the Leading Christian Denominations — Their Labors Among the Soldiers in Camp and Garrison.

THE life of a soldier, whether in field or in garrison, is by no means one that tends to the development of spiritual character. Full of temptations and inducements to indulgence that are strengthened by repression, the career of the enlisted man is peculiarly beset by the snares of sin. At different times, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has drawn the attention of the religious people of the country to the spiritual needs of the regular army, and its columns have occasionally furnished glimpses of Christian work, "within the lines," as conducted by the noble and faithful band of army Chaplains who are the spiritual shepherds of the 25,000 "boys in blue." Considerable progress has been made in recent years in providing for the moral welfare of the soldiers stationed at the one hundred garrison posts in different parts of the country; but the Chaplains' corps might be materially increased, and the present facilities for spiritual work also augmented with the greatest advantage. It has been the effort of the Chaplains, wherever possible, to furnish their posts with appliances similar to those of Young Men's Christian Associations. Some of the posts, as the result mainly of these efforts, are furnished with neat chapels, attractive libraries and reading rooms; but in many garrisons the need of better facilities is sorely felt. Yet, even with all its drawbacks, the work is fruitful of the most valuable and encouraging spiritual results, and many hundreds of soldiers have been led to better and nobler lives through the instrumentality of these faithful laborers in the field of the Gospel. Others, formerly addicted to the besetting vices of the camp and garrison, drunkenness and gambling, have been weaned from those indulgences and set on the path of manhood and spiritual improvement. The demoralizing influence of the canteen system, which is still countenanced in the army, has been counteracted, wherever possible, by the establishment of temperance organizations, and a purer and healthier tone has been imparted to the whole military service.

An analysis of the corps of Chaplains of the United States Army, according to communion, reveals the fact that all the leading Christian denominations of the country have representatives among the thirty clergymen officially charged with the spiritual care of the "boys in blue." Even colored clergymen have not been overlooked; for three of the four regiments, whose enlisted men are Afro-Americans, have colored chaplains assigned to them permanently.

We place before our readers in this number, a group of portraits of representative army chaplains. Rev. Orville J. Nave, D.D., served as a private soldier during the Rebellion from August, 1862, to June, 1865. He is a native of Ohio. In civil life he ties which distinguished him, in the immediate work of his own church, have characterized his labors as instructor and spiritual guide in the army. He was appointed to the Chaplains' corps from Ohio, in 1882. Chaplain Nave has been active in many movements calculated to improve the mental and moral condition of enlisted men. He is said to be indifferent to public opinion when he believes his duty lies in a given direction. Rev. Charles C. Pierce, A.M., was born in New Jersey. He was appointed to the army as regimental Chaplain and assigned to the Ninth Cavalry in 1882. Two years thereafter he resigned his commission and returned to the work of the pastorate. He was, however, reappointed to a post Chaplaincy in 1888, and accepted the position. His first appointment was credited to Illinois, his second to Pennsylvania. He has served for some years as Chaplain of the Military Prison at Fort Leavenworth, where his work is highly appreciated. On more than one oc-dant of men who served in the wars of the Revolution of 1812, and of the Rebellion. He was born in Ionia County, Michigan, and removed with his parents to California when a boy, where he was educated and where he resided for many years.

His appointment to the Army was made by President Benjamin Harrison, and was credited to Oregon, in which state he was at the time a pastor. Upon the nomination of Hon. John H. Mitchell, U. S. Senator, Chaplain Bateman was made a delegate to the World's Congress of Temperance and the World's Parliament of Religions. A paper from his pen appears in the published proceedings of the first-named Congress. For more than a decade he has been a constant contributor to newspapers and magazines.

Rev. Isaac Newton Ritner, A. M., entered the volunteer service in 1861 from his native state, Pennsylvania. He served less than a year as a sergeant, when he was commissioned a second lieutenant of the Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry. He was honorably mustered out in November 1863, and received a brevet Captaincy for faithful and meritorious service in March 1865. Subsequent to the war he was in charge of one congregation in Philadelphia for a period of nearly twenty years. He became a Chaplain in the regular army in 1891. He has had two stations since his appointment, at both of which he has won high regard by zeal and efficiency.

The Chaplains Corps have found in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, a staunch and valuable aid in their Gospel and Temperance work among the troops. It is widely read at many of the posts, and the men themselves have displayed a keen interest in its advocacy of their spiritual needs, no less than in its efforts to improve the present system of paying pensions to the veterans, and to guard the old soldiers from the contaminating influence of the saloons on "pension day." For nearly a year, the checks issued at the Pension office in New York were cashed without charge at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Bureau in the Grand Army Mission, Canal street, saving many thousands of dollars every "quarter day" to the veterans, which would otherwise have gone into the hands of the saloon-keepers. But the men of the active army, as well as the old retired heroes, need the helpful influence of moral safeguards to a greater extent than they enjoy at present. These the members of the Chaplains' Corps are endeavoring, by every means at their command, to establish. May their numbers multiply until every post and garrison, every station and barrack, has a consecrated chaplain, a commodious chapel, and a reading-room well equipped with sound, religious literature.

THE GOSPEL IN THE ARMY — FOUR FAITHFUL POST-CHAPLAINS.

1. Rev. Isaac N. Ritner, D.D. 2. Rev. Charles C. Pierce. 3. Rev. C. C. Bateman, A.M. 4. Rev. Orville J. Nave, D.D.

held many positions of responsibility. As a pastor he was energetic, and as an organizer his ability was acknowledged. He is a forcible and effective preacher. The quali-cation, Chaplain Pierce has been commended by his superiors for his devotion to duty in the face of hardship and danger.

Rev. C. C. Bateman, A. M., is a descen-

OUT OF THE BRICK-KILNS.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday at the Brooklyn Tabernacle. Text: Psalms 68: 13, "Though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver and her feathers with yellow gold."

I SUPPOSE you know what the Israelites did down in Egyptian slavery. They made bricks. Amid the utensils of the brick-kiln there were also other utensils of cookery—the kettles, the pots, the pans, with which they prepared their daily food; and when these poor slaves, tired of the day's work, lay down to rest, they lay down among the implements of cookery and the implements of hard work. When they arose in the morning they found their garments covered with the clay and the smoke and the dust, and besmirched and begrimed with the utensils of cookery. But after a while the Lord broke up that slavery, and he took these poor slaves into a land where they had better garb, bright and clean and beautiful apparel. No more bricks for them to make. Let Pharaoh make his own bricks. When David, in my text, comes to describe the transition of these poor Israelites from their bondage amid the brick-kilns into the glorious emancipation for which God had prepared them, he says: "Though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."

Miss Whately, the author of a celebrated book, "Life in Egypt," said she sometimes saw people in the East cooking their food on the tops of houses, and that she had often seen, just before sundown, pigeons and doves which had, during the heat of the day, been hiding among the kettles and the pans, with which the food was prepared, picking up the crumbs that they might find; just about the hour of sunset they would spread their wings and fly heavenward, entirely unsoiled by the region in which they had moved, for the pigeon is a very cleanly bird. And as the pigeons flew away, the setting sun would throw silver on their wings and gold on their breasts. So you see it is not a far-fetched simile, or an unnatural comparison, when David in my text says to these emancipated Israelites, and says to all those who are brought out of any kind of trouble into any kind of spiritual joy: "Though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."

Sin is the hardest of all taskmasters. Worse than Pharaoh, it keeps us drudging in a most degrading service; but after a while Christ comes and he says: "Let my people go," and we pass out from among the brick-kilns of sin into the glorious liberty of the Gospel: we put on the clean robes of a Christian profession, and when, at last, we soar away to the warm nest which God has provided for us in heaven, we shall go fairer than a dove, its wings covered with silver, and its feathers with yellow gold.

I am going to preach something which some of you do not believe, and that is, that the grandest possible adornment is the religion of Jesus Christ. There are a great many people who suppose that religion is a very different thing from what it really is. The reason men condemn the Bible is because they do not understand the Bible; they have not properly examined it. Dr. Johnson said that Hume told a minister in the Bishopric of Durham, that he had never particularly examined the New Testament, yet all his life warring against it. Halley the astronomer, announced his scepticism to Sir Isaac Newton, and Sir Isaac Newton said: "Now, sir, I have examined the subject and you have not; and I am ashamed that you, professing to be a philosopher, consent to condemn a thing you never have examined." And so men reject the religion of Jesus Christ because they really have never investigated it. They think it something undesirable, something that will not work, something Pecksniffian, something hypocritical, something repulsive, when it is so bright and so beautiful you might compare it to a chaffinch, you might compare it to a robin-redbreast, you might compare it to a dove, its wings covered with silver, and its feathers with yellow gold.

But how is it if a young man becomes a Christian? All through the club-rooms, where he associates, all through the business circles where he is known, there is commiseration. They say: "What a pity that a young man who had such bright prospects should so have been despoiled by those Christians, giving up all his worldly prospects for something which is of no particular present worth!" Here is a young woman who becomes a Christian; her voice, her face, her manners the charm of the drawing-room. Now all through the fashionable circles the whisper goes: "What a pity that such a bright light should have been extinguished, that such a graceful gait should be crippled, that such worldly prospects should be obliterated!" Ah, my friends, it can be shown that religion's ways are ways of pleasantness, and that all her paths are peace; that religion, instead of being dark and doleful and lachrymose and repulsive is bright and beautiful, fairer than a dove, its wings covered with silver and its feathers with yellow gold.

See, in the first place, what religion will do for a man's heart. I care not how cheerful a man may naturally be before conversion, conversion brings him up to a higher standard of cheerfulness. I do not say he will laugh any louder; I do not say but he may stand back from some forms of hilarity in which he once indulged; but there comes into his soul an immense satisfaction. A young man not a Christian depends upon worldly successes to keep his spirits up. Now he is prospered, now he has a large salary, now he has a beautiful wardrobe, now he has pleasant friends, now he has more money than he knows how to spend; everything goes bright and well with him. But trouble comes—there are many young men in the house this morning who can testify out of their own experience that sometimes to young men trouble does come—his friends are gone, his salary is gone, his health is gone; he goes down, down. He becomes sour, cross, queer, misanthropic, blames the world, blames society, blames the Church, blames everything, rushes perhaps to the intoxicating cup to drown his trouble, but instead of drowning his trouble, he drowns his body and drowns his soul.

But here is a Christian young man. Trouble comes to him. Does he give up? No! He throws himself back on the resources of heaven. He says: "God is my Father. Out of all these disasters I shall pluck advantage for my soul. All the promises are mine, Christ is mine, Christian companionship is mine, heaven is mine. What though my apparel be worn out? Christ gives me a robe of righteousness. What though my money be gone? I have a title deed to the whole universe in the promise, 'All are yours.' What though my worldly friends fall away? Ministering angels are my bodyguard. What though my fare be poor, and my bread be scant? I sit at the King's banquet!"

Oh, what a poor, shallow stream is worldly enjoyment compared with the deep, broad, overflowing river of God's peace, rolling midway in the Christian heart! Sometimes you have gone out on the iron-bound beach of the sea when there has been a storm on the ocean, and you have seen the waves dash into white foam at your feet. They did not do you any harm. While there you thought of the chapter written by the Psalmist, and perhaps you recited it to yourself while the storm was making commentary upon the passage: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble. Therefore will I not fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea, though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." Oh, how independent the religion of Christ makes a man of worldly success and worldly circumstances! Nelson, the night before his last battle, said: "Tomorrow I shall win either a peerage or a grave in Westminster Abbey." And it does not make much difference to the Christian whether he rises or falls in worldly matters; he has everlasting renown anyway. Other plumage may be torn in the blast, but that soul adorned with Christian grace is fairer than the dove, its wings covered with silver, and its feathers with gold.

You and I have found out that people who pretend to be happy are not always happy. Look at that young man caricaturing the Christian religion, scoffing at everything good, going into roistering drunkenness, dashing the champagne bottle to the floor, rolling the glasses from the bar-room counter, laughing, shouting, stamping the floor. Is he happy? I will go to his midnight pillow. I will see him turn the gas off. I will ask myself if the pillow on which he sleeps is as soft as the pillow on which that pure young man sleeps. Ah! no. When he opens his eyes in the morning, will the world be as bright to him as to that young man who retired at night saying his prayers, invoking God's blessing upon his own soul and the souls of his comrades, and father and mother and brothers and sisters far away? No, no! His laugh will ring out from the saloon so that you hear it as you pass by, but it is hollow laughter; in it is the snapping of heart-strings and the rattle of prison gates. Happy! that young man happy?

Let him fill high the bowl; he cannot drown an upbraiding conscience. Let the balls roll through the bowling alley; the deep rumble and the sharp crack cannot overpower the voices of condemnation. Let him whirl in the dance of sin and temptation and death. All the brilliancy of the scene cannot make him forget the last look of his mother when he left home, when she said to him: "Now, my son, you will do right; I am sure you will do right; you will, won't you?" That young man happy? Why, across every night there flit shadows of eternal darkness; there are adders coiled up in every cup; there are vultures of despair striking their iron beak into his heart; there are skeleton fingers of grief pinching at the throat.

I come in amid the clicking of the glasses and under the flashing of the chandeliers, and I cry: "Woe! woe! The way of the ungodly shall perish. There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked. The way of transgressors is hard." Oh, my friends, there is more joy in one drop of Christian satisfaction than in whole rivers of sinful delight. Other wings may be drenched of the storm and splashed of the tempest, but the dove that comes in through the window of this heavenly ark has wings like the dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold.

Again I remark, religion is an adornment in the style of usefulness into which it induces a man. Here are two young men. The one has fine culture, exquisite wardrobe, plenty of friends, great worldly success, but he lives for himself. His chief care is for his own comfort. He lives uselessly. He dies unregretted. Here is another young man. His apparel may not be so good, his education may not be so thorough. He lives for others. His happiness is to make others happy. He is as self-denying as that dying soldier falling in the ranks, when he said: "Colonel, there is no need of those boys' tiring themselves by carrying me to the hospital; let me die just where I am." So this young man of whom I speak loves God, wants all the world to love him, is not ashamed to carry a bundle of clothes up that dark alley to the poor. Which of those young men do you admire the better? The one a sham, the other a prince imperial.

Oh, do you know of anything, my hearer, that is more beautiful than to see a young man start out for Christ? Here is some one falling; he lifts him up. Here is a vagabond boy; he introduces him to a mission school. Here is a family freezing to death; he carries them a scuttle of coal. There are eight hundred millions perishing in midnight heathen darkness; by all possible means he tries to send them the Gospel. He may be laughed at, and he may be sneered at, and he may be caricatured, but he is not ashamed to go everywhere, saying: "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ. It is the power of God and the wisdom of God unto salvation." Such a young man can go through everything. There is no force on earth or in hell that can resist him. I show you three spectacles. Spectacle the first: Napoleon passes by with the host that went down with him to Egypt, and up with him through Russia, and crossed the continent on the bleeding heart of which he set his iron heel, and across the quivering flesh of which he went grinding the wheels of his gun-carriages—in his dying moment asking his attendants to put on his military boots for him.

Spectacle the second: Voltaire, bright and learned and witty and eloquent, with tongue and voice and stratagem infernal, warring against God and poisoning whole kingdoms with his infidelity, yet applauded by the clapping hands of thrones and empires and continents—his last words, in delirium supposing Christ standing by the bedside—his last words: "Crush that wretch!"

Spectacle the third: Paul—Paul, insignificant in person, thrust out from all refined association, scourged, spat on, hounded like a wild beast from city to city, yet trying to make the world good and heaven full; announcing resurrection to those who mourned at the barred gates of the dead; speaking consolations which light up the eyes of widowhood and orphanage and want with glow of certain and eternal release; undaunted before those who could take his life, his cheek flushed with transport and his eye on heaven; with one hand shaking defiance at all the foes of earth and all the principalities of hell, and with the other hand beckoning messenger angels to come and bear him away, as he says: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand; I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me."

Which of the three spectacles do you most admire? When the wind of death struck the conqueror and the infidel, they were tossed like sea-gulls in a tempest, drenched of the wave and torn of the hurricane, their dismal voices heard through the everlasting storm; but when the wave and the wind of death struck Paul, like an patross he made a throne of the tempest, and one day floated away into the calm, clear summer of heaven, brighter than the dove, wings covered with silver, and its feathers with yellow gold. Oh, are you not in love with such a religion—a religion that does so much for a man while he lives, and so much for a man when he comes to die?

I suppose you may have noticed the contrast between the departure of a Christian and the departure of an infidel. Diodorus, lying in chagrin because he could not compose a joke equal to the joke uttered at the other end of his table; Zeuxis, dying in a fit of laughter at the sketch of an aged woman—sketch made by his own hand; Mazarin, lying playing cards, his friend holding his hands because he was unable to hold them himself. All that on one side, compared with the departure of the Scotch minister, who said to his friends: "I have no interest in whether I live or die; if I die, I shall be with the Lord; and if I live, the Lord will be with me." Or the last words of Washington: "It is well." Or the last words of McIntosh, the learned and the great: "Happy!" Or the last words of Hannah More, the Christian poetess: "Joy!" Or those thousands of Christians who have gone, saying: "Lord Jesus receive my spirit! Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

Behold the contrast. Behold the charm of the one, behold the darkness of the other. Now, I know it is very popular in this day for young men to think there is something more charming in scepticism than in religion. They are ashamed of the old-fashioned religion of the Cross, and they pride themselves on their free-thinking on all these subjects. My young friends, I want to tell you what I know from observation: that while scepticism is a beautiful land at the start, it is the great Sahara Desert at the last.

Years ago a minister's son went off from home to college. At college he formed the acquaintance of a young man whom I shall call Ellison. Ellison was an infidel. Ellison scoffed at religion, and the minister's son soon learned from him the infidelity, and when he went home on his vacation broke his father's heart by his denunciations of Christianity. Time passed on and vacation came, and the minister's son went off to spend the vacation, and was on a journey, and came to a hotel. The hotel-keeper said: "I am sorry that to-night I shall have to put you in a room adjoining one where there is a very sick and dying man. I can give you no other accommodation." "Oh," said the young college student and minister's son, "that will make no difference to me except the matter of sympathy with anybody that is suffering." The young man retired to his room, but could not sleep. All night long he heard the groaning of the sick man, or the step of the watchers, and his soul trembled. He thought to himself: "Now, there is only a thin wall between me and a departing spirit. How if Ellison should know how I feel? How if Ellison should find out how my heart flutters? What if Ellison knew my scepticism gave way?" He slept not. In the morning, coming down, he said to the hotel-keeper: "How is the sick man?" "Oh," said the hotel-keeper, "he is dead, poor fellow! The doctors told us he could not last through the night." "Well," said the young man, "what was the sick one's name? Where is he from?" "Well," said the hotel-keeper, "he is from Providence College." "Providence College! what is his name?" "Ellison." "Ellison!" Oh, how the young man was stunned! It was his old college-mate—dead without any hope.

It was many hours before the young man could leave that hotel. He got on his horse and started homeward, and all the way he heard something saying to him: "Dead! Lost! Dead! Lost!" He came to no satisfaction until he entered the Christian life, until he entered the Christian ministry, until he became one of the most eminent missionaries of the Cross, the greatest Baptist missionary the world has ever seen since the days of Paul—no superior to Adoniram Judson. Mighty on earth, mighty in heaven—Adoniram Judson. Which do you like the best, Judson's scepticism or Judson's Christian life, Judson's suffering for Christ's sake, Judson's almost martyrdom? Oh, young man, take your choice between these two kinds of lives. Your own heart tells you this morning the Christian life is more admirable, more peaceful, more comfortable, and more beautiful.

Oh, if religion does so much for a man on earth, what will it do for him in heaven? That is the thought that comes to me now. If a soldier can afford to shout "Huzza!" when he goes into battle, how much more jubilantly he can afford to shout "Huzza!" when he has gained the victory! If religion is so good a thing to have here, how bright a thing it will be in heaven! I want to see that young man when the glories of heaven have robed and crowned him. I want to hear him sing when all huskiness of earthly colds is gone, and he rises up with the great doxology. I want to know what standard he will carry when marching under arches of pearl in the army of banners. I want to know what company he will keep in the land where they are all kings and queens forever and ever. If I have induced one of you this morning to begin a better life, then I want to know it. I may not in this world clasp hands with you in friendship, I may not hear from your own lips the story of temptation and sorrow, but I will clasp hands with you when the sea is passed and the gates are entered. That I might woo you to a better life, and that I might show you the glories with which God clothes his dear children in heaven, I wish I could this morning swing back one of the twelve gates, that there might dash upon your ear one shout of the triumph, that there might flame upon your eyes one blaze of the splendor. Oh, when I speak of that good land, you involuntarily think of some one there that you loved—father, mother, brother, sister, or dear little child garnered already. You want to know what they are doing this morning. I will tell you what they are doing. Singing! You want to know what they wear. I will tell you what they wear. Coronets of triumph! You wonder why oft they look to the gate of the temple, and watch and wait. I will tell why they watch and wait and look to the gate of the temple. For your coming! I shout upward the news to-day, for I am sure some of you will repent and start for heaven: "Oh, ye bright ones before the throne, your earthly friends are coming. Angels poising mid-air, cry up the name! Gatekeeper of heaven, send forward the tidings! Watchman on the battlements celestial, throw the signal!"

"Oh," you say, "religion I am going to have; it is only only a question of time." My brother, I am afraid that you may lose heaven the way Louis Philippe lost his empire. The Parisian mob came around the Tuileries. The National Guard stood in defence of the palace, and the commander said to Louis Philippe: "Shall I fire now? Shall I order the troops to fire? With one volley we can clear the place." "No," said Louis Philippe, "not yet." A few minutes passed on, and then Louis Philippe, seeing the case was hopeless, said to the general: "Now is the time to fire." "No," said the general, "it is too late now; don't you see that the soldiers are exchanging arms with the citizens? It is too late." Down went the throne of Louis Philippe. Away from the earth went the House of Orleans, and all because the king said: "Not yet! not yet!" May God forbid that any of you should adjourn this great subject of religion, and should postpone assailing your spiritual foes until it is too late, too late—you losing a throne in heaven the way that Louis Philippe lost a throne on earth.

When the Judge descends in might,
Clothed in majesty and light;
When the earth shall quake with fear,
Where, oh where, wilt thou appear?

HELPING HOMELESS WOMEN.

An unostentatious, but Christian work, is now being conducted in New York by the Lodging House for Friendless Women, to establish which many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have contributed. The

THE LATE LOUIS KOSSUTH, THE HUNGARIAN PATRIOT-STATESMAN.

From his Latest Photograph, taken recently in Turin.

Home, which is called "The Bethany," is located at No. 19 East Second street, and is a house of sixteen rooms. Since it was opened on Dec. 30 last, shelter has been provided for 672 women and free meals have been given to 207. The number of inmates averages twenty each night. Religious services are held every morning under the conduct of Mrs. Catharine Edwards, matron. Applicants who are not employed in outside positions are expected to perform such work in the Home as the matron may assign them. At the same time, an effort is made to procure positions for the idle and many have already been placed in good situations.

Mrs. Josephine Williamson, the founder of the Bethany, has associated with her in her work a number of godly men and women devoted to soul-saving, and together they have organized a "Jesus' Friends' Praying Band." Among them are several local preachers. The Band makes frequent visits at night to the slums, and in one of the worst localities in the city, among a medley of all nationalities, Chinese included, it has organized a prayer-meeting. A number of young girls have been rescued from lives of shame and started on the Christian path, through the efforts of these faithful and persistent workers.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN INDIA.

A writer in the "India Watchman" says the greatest need in India is, not so much money, as sanctified workers who can trust for every need in their work, and will not fear self-denial and suffering.

A Patriot-Statesman Gone.

Death of Louis Kossuth, the Famous Hungarian—His Eventful Career.

CT the patriarchal age of ninety-two, Louis Kossuth, the Hungarian patriot and one of the grandest figures of the closing century, recently passed away at his home in Turin. He was born at Monok, in Hungary, in 1802, of Protestant parents who belonged to the nobility, but who had been reduced to poverty. After studying law at Sarospatak and a brief practice at Pesh, he began his political career. The Hungarian nation was smarting under the ingratitude and oppression of Austria, whom it had served faithfully, and was gradually arousing to the necessity of demanding the restoration of the rights of which it had been arbitrarily deprived, and especially the equality of the various Christian confessions, the rights of the peasantry and the official use of the Magyar tongue. In common with other advanced liberals, Kossuth openly advocated the new movement. In the hope of intimidating the liberals, the government imprisoned Kossuth and one of his associates, in 1830, but they were shortly afterward released, the government having amnestied all the offenders. Kossuth again came into prominence as the editor of the Pesh "Gazette," a publication directly opposed to the government. He began the work of organizing the Hungarians for municipal independence and disseminated views that were too extreme even for many among the liberal party, advocating peasant emancipation, a free press, and the elevation of the citizen. At last he became the recognized leader of the opposition which openly demanded an independent government for Hungary, and to his speeches and writings was due in great measure the re-awakening of the Hungarian people as a nation. A "protective union" which he had formed in conjunction with other leaders, had hundreds of thousands of members, its object being the revival of Hungarian industries and the unification of the liberal party.

Immediately after the outbreak of the French revolution in the year 1848, Kossuth and his compatriots prepared an address to the Emperor Ferdinand calling for the restoration of Hungarian independence, and the granting of a charter of liberty to the Austrian people. Soon afterward the people of Vienna rose in insurrection; the government was for the moment appalled, and when Kossuth visited the capital, he was hailed by the citizens as a liberator. Emperor Ferdinand consented to the formation of an independent Hungarian ministry and the Diet of Presburg passed several measures of reform. But unforeseen troubles soon arose to disturb the new Hungarian government. The people of Croatia and Slavonia proclaimed their independence, and an army was sent to invade Hungary, which was totally unprepared for war. Austria sent a force to Pesh and the Hungarian Diet was forcibly disbanded. Kossuth then assumed the absolute leadership, formed a Committee of Defense and the war of revolution was begun.

Kossuth's heroic part in the events that followed, the betrayal and surrender of the Hungarian cause by Georgei, Kossuth's exile in Asia Minor, his subsequent liberation and his visit to England and America, are all matters of history. In this country he was received, in 1851, as the guest of the nation, and was universally feted and honored. Public receptions were accorded him in many leading cities. He returned home in 1852, but found all his plans for a new agitation in behalf of Hungarian independence abortive. His life since then has been largely passed in retirement at Turin, where he has lived thirty-two years, many times enduring great poverty. In 1880, he published his "Memoirs" which attracted attention throughout Europe. As an orator, he was graceful, dignified and magnetic; he was a master of many languages, an ardent admirer of American institutions, and a man of pure and unblemished character, high moral principle, and strong religious feeling. His life is a record of unselfish patriotism and noble example rarely paralleled.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people

JOSEPH SOLD INTO EGYPT.

S.S. Lesson for Apr. 15, Gen. 37:23-36. Golden Text, Gen. 50:20. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

JACOB'S life was full of petty annoyances, but his faith was not honored by being put to the great tests to which God called his servant Abraham. The glory of God was shown, and his purpose was accomplished in the life of Jacob, more in the manifestation of his own patience and longsuffering towards his weak and doubting servant than in the revelation of his likeness in Jacob, or by his servant understanding him. With Joseph it was otherwise. From his earliest years, Joseph must learn to bear the cross, he was chosen "in the furnace of affliction," just as Saul of Tarsus in his time was.

"A Chosen Vessel,"

for I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake." Joseph's first test had been in the family; there he had begun to learn how to "endure grief, suffering wrongfully;" that great lesson of Christ likeness in which our Lord has left us an "example that we should follow his steps." In this Joseph was in his measure a forerunner of Christ. Being in his own life the best of Jacob's sons, he was treated as though he were the worst, and he had to learn in those early days to take everything from the hand of God, and like Abraham to "walk by faith, not by sight." His communion with God was ridiculed and despised, his faithfulness to his brothers, which cost him much, resented. Now his father puts him to a severer test than before. His brethren are absent seeking pasture for their flocks. His father calls him to go and seek them that he may bring tidings of them and of the flocks to his father.

A more unpleasant mission, under the circumstances, could hardly have been offered him; but Joseph without hesitation says: "Here am I;" and when an opportunity presented itself for his return without executing his commission, because his brethren were not in Shechem where his father sent him, Joseph proves himself to be no shuffler; he takes pains to find his brethren and he overtook them in Dothan. But he was hardly prepared for the reception which he met with at their hands. Thoughts of murder were in their hearts and their first terrible design when they saw him was to slay their brother! Reuben and Judah, however, prevailed on them, first to cast him into a dry pit, and subsequently to sell him to traveling merchants as a slave.

This man of God was passing his standards in God's school. To the flesh it would look as though God were on the side of the wicked and as though wrong prospered more than right. These may have been awful when his soul was in anguish and he besought his brethren and they "would not hear." But God conquered, and when he entered Egypt as a slave, he was not alone: "The Lord was with Joseph." Until the time when his word came, the Word of the Lord tried him. He had from the Word of the Lord in his dreams that in the future he should rule, but his word, i.e., God's promise to him, was not yet come to pass; could he trust his God, and take patiently with God at his side, the position of a slave? Nature would rebel, and say: "I have not deserved this; why should I, of all others, thus suffer?" Faith in God would say: "God makes all things to work together for good to them that love him, I will trust, I cannot understand; but I know my God will do the right thing."

Moments of Conflict

Thus we find Joseph established as in Egypt; not a self-pitying, sullen, morose youth; but one whose faith in the living

Joseph's Slave

God said to all around him that God is, and that he is a Rewarder of them that diligently seek him. The heathen Potiphar, an officer, well-known at the court of Pharaoh, saw in Joseph something unlike his other slaves; he saw that the Lord was with Joseph, and that the Lord made all that he did to prosper in his hand." Potiphar knew there was a true God because of this blessing upon Joseph. Already the slave was beginning to rule although he knew it not. Potiphar saw in him the superiority which his brethren obstinately shut their eyes to, and the heathen made the faithful man of God, overseer in his house, and over all that he had, for he saw that God's blessing was on all with which Joseph had to do. Whether it was in the field or in the house, the same thing was noticeable; it prospered and blessing was upon it.

What lessons of God's faithfulness was Joseph learning in this renowned and powerful country of Egypt, with the language customs literature, religion, etc., of which he was unacquainted; but where his God remained true to him! How real, how intense, must have been his communion with God, when he had to depend on him for every common, ordinary thing; he must have prayed and received guidance and wisdom for them all. And when his master asked him what was the secret that one who was a stranger succeeded so remarkably, even in things which he had formerly been so little familiar, he would eagerly take the opportunity to tell out the truth and faithfulness of his God.

Thus passed by eleven years, and God's faithfulness to his servant did not wear out, nor yet the faith of Joseph in his God. His father had long ago taken for granted that he was dead; his brethren neither sought nor cared for tidings of him; they only wanted to be rid of him, and for the time, they had their desire. Things were ripening in the purposes of God. Yet who would think that the destiny of nations, instrumentally, lay in the hands of a poor slave in Egypt.

Joseph should certainly rule; but before he could be trusted with so high a position he must pass in the school. He had already graduated in family trial and persecution, and in the accepting from God the humbling position of a slave, but nothing had occurred to sully his pure and spotless reputation; he was respected wherever he was known; his master placed in him the most implicit, the most unlimited confidence, he left all in Joseph's hand, and "he knew not ought he had, save the bread which he did eat." Now Joseph must be proved whether he would suffer the loss of his reputation, and in a much deeper degree "endure grief, suffering wrongfully;" and yet trust God.

Another Standard

Joseph Suffered but Submitted, not to man but to God. True a rude interruption in the apparent drawing near of the fulfillment of his dreams had taken place; but God had permitted it. He suffered, but endured; and the striking characteristic of his life in prison as of his time of slavery was: "The Lord was with Joseph and showed him mercy, and gave him favor in the sight of the keeper of the prison. And the keeper of the prison looked not to anything that was under his hands, because the Lord was with him, and that which he did the Lord made it to prosper. God had found a heart which trusted him, even in the dark, a man in whom he would show before hand some of the features of the Son of man who should afterward come into the world, and one through whom he could execute his designs of mercy without the fear that the instrument should be marred in the execution of them.

Who knows how many of God's truest children are shut up in some prison whence they cannot escape, but where the living God can unfold to them his purposes? How many in circumstances where they have no free movement! Little did Pharaoh know that in the court of heaven a recent slave, and now accounted criminal, was of more importance than he, or any other reigning monarch because he understood his God! Paul was the prisoner of the Lord." (Eph. 4:1.) Let us not be afraid of God's dispensations which bind, and hinder, and humble us. Thus may be the way to a place of rule.

But Joseph must be proved true in the prison, he must endure wrong still; he had not yet left school; God had measured how much he could bear, Joseph had passed standard after standard and had not failed to trust under the severest tests, and the time was at hand when he should indeed rule, and men of many nations should be blest through him.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

THE evil passions of envy and hatred, which, as we noticed last week, were taking root in the minds of Joseph's brothers, quickly developed into action. They were looking after their father's flocks at Dothan when the opportunity came of manifesting their dislike of Joseph. Jacob was then living at Hebron, which is about seventy miles from Dothan. He appears to have kept Joseph at home with him, which may have been another cause of ill-will. He sends

Joseph to visit the brothers and to report, and the lad, arrayed in his fine coat, sets out. The prejudice of the brothers shows itself when he comes in sight. They speak of him as "this dreamer." They showed the common characteristic of the envious and prejudiced mind—the disposition to keep prominent any weakness, or disagreeable trait of character. A person may have many good points of character, but if he have one weakness, or one ridiculous feature, it is by the latter that he is identified. Let a great preacher do something indiscreet, and whenever his name is mentioned, it is associated not with his eloquence or piety, but with the foolish thing he once did. Many a man who knew nothing of the public services of a prominent citizen, knew that he was afflicted with a pronounced squint. So when Joseph appeared, it was not their brother that the men recognized, but "the dreamer." They decide to kill him. A distinguished writer points out how common in history is this method of getting rid of people who say unpopular things. The angry multitude have the idea that by killing the preacher they can get rid of his message. These men thought that if they killed the dreamer they would falsify his dream. The Jews killed Christ for saying he was their King, but they have not prevented his being King over the greatest kingdom that ever king ruled over. The brothers did eventually see, as they said, what would become of his dreams. Reuben is the first to interfere. He was vicious, but he was not cruel. He has not the courage to oppose them and denounce projected crime. Like his father, he was a believer in tricks. He persuades them to throw Joseph into a pit and leave him to starve, meaning to liberate him secretly. The brothers consent. The end was the same and the process not so brutal. Many a bad son who would shrink from killing his father, will do a more cruel thing by breaking that father's heart and bringing him to a dishonored grave. Then Judah interposes. Why not sell him, he suggests. A company of slave traders is at hand, and the thing is practicable. There is some profit in the transaction while there would be none in murder. The plan is adopted and the bargain is made. The regular price of a slave was thirty shekels, but Joseph, being under age is sold for twenty, which is believed to be about the equivalent of eleven dollars. Then a plan is concocted to deceive their father. The brothers do not propose to tell a lie, but they dip the famous coat in blood and send it home, leaving Jacob to draw his own inference. Many such lies are set in circulation still. Their moral guilt is not less than the spoken lie, and those who think they escape the guilt of lying by their cunning device, are mistaken. The old man is not slow to draw the inference he was intended to draw, and is prostrated with grief. Then the hypocritical men comfort him.

Reuben returned unto the pit. He had tried to avoid the difficult position of opposing his brothers and making a brave stand for the right. Like many people who profess to be Christians, but conceal their colors when in worldly society, where they are liable to be ridiculed, Reuben hoped to accomplish the purpose of saving his brother by a compromise. Courage and decision are the only basis of action when wrong is to be opposed. At the outbreak of the Sepoy war in India in 1875, a certain general was warned that the men in his regiment were preparing to join in the mutiny, and he was urged to disarm them before they had a chance to use their arms against the white people. He dreaded giving the order, as he knew what a storm it would raise. At last he thought of a compromise. He determined to issue no percussion caps. In this way he thought the men could do no harm as they could not fire their muskets without caps. But the men easily secured a supply of caps for a small expenditure, and proved to be a most destructive division of the army. They murdered a large number of defenceless women and children, and fought desperately before they could be subdued.

What profit is it? With some people that is the chief question. Natural relationship and family ties count for nothing when there is a possibility of making money. There are some railroad companies who are so anxious to turn in good dividends that they keep their men at work an unreasonable time, so that they get tired and sleepy and make mistakes through which trains are wrecked. One case which shows a still more unscrupulous disposition is reported from Indiana. A man broke into a county pest-house and stole the clothing which was taken from the two hundred patients treated there, and sold it to the men working for the Natural Gas Company in Wisconsin. They were mostly Italians and Swedes, and a large number of them left shortly afterwards, carrying the pest-house clothes with them. Of course, wherever they went they carried with them the infection lurking in these garments of death.

Know thou whether it is thy son's coat. It ought to be made clear to every child that intentional deception is as vile in the sight of God as direct lying. It often involves in its detection even greater humiliation. Some time ago a young man in Illinois was arrested and placed in jail, charged with stealing. He was convicted and sent to the penitentiary. While there he corresponded with his mother in Michigan, using the letter heads of the sheriff, and telling her that he was employed at the prison, which was true, but deceived her as it was intended to do. In a few weeks an elderly, finely-dressed lady came, and called on the sheriff and introduced herself as the mother and inquired for her son, whom she supposed was deputy sheriff. The sheriff was compelled to inform her that her son was an inmate of the penitentiary. Her grief at this information was heart-breaking, and bowed with sorrow she returned to her Michigan home too much distressed to see her son.

Thy son's coat. The words of Joseph's brothers were once applied with telling effect. When Richard I. was fighting in France, one of his most persistent foes was the Bishop of Beauvais who, unmindful of his clerical calling, appeared in the field at the head of a regiment, and fought like any other general. He was taken prisoner, and Richard treated him like his other prisoners. Indeed, he was treated somewhat more rigorously, as when Richard was himself a prisoner the Bishop had made himself busy in keeping him in durance. The Bishop appealed to the Pope, who sent a remonstrance to Richard and asked him indignantly how he dared imprison a son of the church. Richard took the Bishop's helmet and military doublet and sent them to the Pope with the remark, "Know thou whether this is thy son's coat or no." By this he intimated that if a bishop appeared as a soldier he must not expect the immunity due to the sacred calling.

5c; Cnahan, Flora, 5c; Carson,
Bertie, 2c; Campbell, Freddie, 50c;
Cayot, W. H., 30c; Carpenter, Harris,
10c; Clark, Mrs. W., 35c; Carson, Helen, 25c; Craig, Miss Jennie, 25c; Cushman, Miss M. J., 10c; Cushman, Master
F. L., 25c; Martin, John, 50c;
Cummings, Mr. C. K., 50c; Cummings, N. H., 50c; Cummings, A., 50c;
10 Cocking, Ethel, 15c; Cocking, Eddie, 15c; Cowles, Mrs. 50c; Carr, Geo.
50c; Clark, Mollie E., 25c; Clark,
Catherine, 25c; Clark, Ruth, G., 25c;
Clark, Levi E., 25c; Clark, Thos., 50c;
10 Dillenbeck, Mr. F., 50c; Dixon, W.
F., 50c; Dickson, M. L., 25c; De Witt,
Ida M., 10c; Doyle, Clara, 50c;
Down, S., 50c; Down, Mrs., 25c.
30 Eckels, Mrs. E. R., 50c; Ewing, Mrs.
E. B., 50c; Evans, F. A., 50c;
Everett, Annie, 8c; Enlow, Claude and Grace, 15c; Ernst, Chas. W., 30c;
Edith, W., 10c.
Fisher, Mellie M., 25c; Forman,
Lulu, 10c; Finch, Charlie, 10c; Foley,
Johnnie, 25c; Fife, Arthur, 50c;
120 Fink, Mrs. M., 25c; Fink, ————,
10c; Friends, ————, Tex., 75c; Friend,
50c Morely, N. Y., 25c; Friend, Hyde Park, Vt., 50c; Friend, Round Lake,
N. Y., 50c; Friend, Brooklyn, E. D. N.
Y., 50c; Friend, New Castle, Pa., 50c;
Friend, Chicgo, Kan., 25c; Friend,
50c Friend and Subr, Marcus, La., 50c;
Foster, Jennie, 50c; Foster, Lulu,
100 50c; Few Friends, Bristol, Conn., 50c;
Friend, Southport, Conn., 35c; Friend,
50c ————, Ohio, 90c; Friend, Arroyo
Grande, Cal., 50c; Friend, Lowell,
Mass., 50c; Friend, ————, Mich., 50c;
Gardner, Mrs. Hettie, 25c; Gosnell,
J. 50c; Gaunt, Harold, 50c; Gaunt,
Ethel, 25c; Gaunt, Howard, 50c;
440 Gaunt, Ora, 25c; Gbering, Miss E.,
50c; Grant, Mrs. C., 25c; Garlinger,
Mrs. L., 25c; Garlinger, Mrs. M., 25c;
500 Garling, Mrs. J. E., 50c; Garling,
J. F., 50c; Harver, Mary A., 50c; Hickman, Harry, 10c; Hitch, Mrs. A., 40c;
Hildebrand, Mrs. MA 25c; Haskell,
S. M. 75c; Hntson, Abbie 55c; Haines
Miss J. 50c; Hamlin, Howard 10c.
1 In His Name, Bowmansdale, Pa.,
50c; In His Name, ————, Pa., 50c;
N. Eau Claire, Mich., 35c; I. H. N.,
500 30c; I. H. N., Richmond, Mass., 50c;
In Jesus' Name, Vera, Ill., 50c; I. H.
N., Emoy, Va., 25c; I. H. N., 62c; I. H.
N. S. Berwick, Me., 30c; I. H. N., Delaware, Ark., 25c; I. H. N., Scuyler, N.
Y., 50c; I. H. N., ————, Neb., 50c;
210 Johnson, Harvey, 25c; Johnson, F.
E., 75c; Jenking, W. P., 50c; Jones,
M. P., 6c; Johnson, Bell and Mnson,
50c.
Knapp, Ida C., 10c; Knapp, Allen
G., 10c; Kuhn, Mrs. Julia, 25c; Kellogg, ————, E. York, old, 25c; Kellogg, Ruby S., 25c; Kellor, ————, R. B.
R. 5 years old, 25c; Kelly, Rev. Geo.
F., 50c.
Lombard, Eugene, 50c; Little
Louise and Paul Renn, 50c; Little Lizzie, Johnsonville, Cal., 10c; Little 100 Louisa, C. Hill, 10c; Little, Mary
Friend, Corralis, Mon., 35c;
100 John C., 25c; Livingston, Mrs. AH, 50c.
Mitchell, Mrs. Isa M., 20c; Milbury,
May, 50c; Mickell, C. E., 50c; Mickle,
J. E., 50c; McGregor, Miss Eva, 25c;
200 Mack, Mrs. John, 25c; Munro, Mary,
25c; Mack, Mrs. M., 50c; Mallette,
Stella, 50c; Mallette, ————, 50c;
Mallette, Rufus, 50c; Mallette, Marcus, 50c; Meyer, N., 30c; McCabe,
100 Floyd, 10c; McCabe, Cora, 40c;
200 Nelson, Walter, 10c; Nelson, Annie,
50c; Neely, Arthur, 25c; Neely, Lilly,
10c; Neely, Bertie, 10c; Neely, John,
100 10c; Neely, S. T., 7c; Nikark, Mr. D., 25c.
Omwig, Mrs., 25c.
500 Payne, Bessie, 25c; Payne, Belle,
25c; Payne, Estelle, 25c; Payne,
Daisy, 25c; Packard, Mrs. N. B., 50c;
Parrott, Edith, 50c; Potter, Maude,
900 10c; Palmer, Mrs. I., 50c; Parker,
30c; M. M. Patisley, Grt., 50c; Parke,
10 Miss Lizzie, 75c; Parlett, Mary, 10c;
125 Rogers, Annie, 20c; Rogers, Mrs.,
10c; Reader, Richmond, Va., 18c;
Rodgers, Ralph and Clarence, 10c;
Roberts, Mrs., 50c; Risley, Mrs. G.
V., 75c; Robinson, Miss Lily, 75c;
130 Robinson, F. D., 25c; Rita, 50c;
100 S., 25c; Reader, Franklin Co., Pa., 50c;
Reader, Warsaw, N. Y., 50c; Reader, 200 Warweshurg, Ill., 50c; Reader, Chan-ante, Kan., 50c.
Shaw, Stella, 25c; Spear, Mrs. M.
200 25c; Shaver, Tracy, 25c; Snow,
100 Mrs. N. M., 50c; Smith, Wm., 50c;
Pa., 25c; Smith, Mrs. 50c; Subr, Lynn,
Mass., 50c; Sloar, Jno., 50c; Streeter,
E., 50c; Subr, Evanston, Ind., 40c;
515 Steward, J. L., 50c; Smith, C. F., 30c;
100 Sawdon, Mrs. Ella, 50c; Scribner,
Port Townsend, 50c; Sympathizer,
100 Robert, F. D., 25c; Rice, Steverson,
100 Mrs. L., 20c; Swift, Mrs. Z. S., 50c;
100 Speecher, Martha, 25c; Selbie, Nellie, 50c; Subr, Barnes, Kan., 50c.
Tingley, Mrs. H. D., 50c; Tingley,
Mr. H. D., 50c; Tomlin, Mr. A., 50c;
500 Tomlin, L. G., Thomson, Wm., 30c;
Thompson, F. D., 25c; Tucker, ————,
100 50c; Thrall, Mrs. E. R., 10c; Thompson, Hettie, 50c.
20 Vincent, Rev. P., 20c.
Whitehead, Mrs., 75c; Wolgast, Mr. and Mrs., 50c; Whitred, Max., 10c;
500 Whitehead, Mrs. John, 25c; White,
T. M., 10c; Wright, Arthur, Walker,
20 Mrs. A., 50c; Ward, S. M., 50c; Walker,
A., 50c; Winklepleck, Almema, Kan.,
250 50c; Wood, Miss Lizzie, 50c; Wood,
Lizzie, Samuel and Taylor, 25c;
Watins, Mrs. John, 50c; Winans, M.
500 50c; Wilson, ————, S. L., 20c; Williams, Florence, 10c.
J. W. McG. Rialto, Cal., 25c; Mrs.
500 ————, W. Springfield, H. N., 25c; S. H.
N. Allentown, La., 25c; H. R. Fair-bury, Ill., 13c; T. K. Fairbury, Ill., 50c;
O. K. Fairbury, Ill., 10c; E. C. Fair-bury, Ill., 25c; E. M., 25c; Stevens,
Va., 30c; Three little ones, ————, Ore.,
25c; Sherman, Morris, Winkie, and Edgar, 50c; Little Ida, 50c; Pupils of blind school, Salem, Ore., 93c;
50c Hughes, Elsie, Bessie, and Jessie,
30c; Mother, ————, 30c;
420 Photo, Ohio, 30c; A member of the Friend's Church, Glens Falls, N. Y.,
A., 50c; A sympathizer, Camden, Ark.,
30c; A cheerful giver, Milford, Pa.,
20c; Be who are Christs, Fair Haven,
Mo., 25c; E. H. Wash., 25c; A thank-offering, R.—, Mich., 50c; A little Christian boy, 25c.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

To be With Talmage
EDITOR.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $3.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash or postal notes.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

SAVE THE CHILDREN.

It has got to be a question of stupendous import what is to be done with the destitute children of our streets or the ragamuffins, as society contemptuously calls them. We must act upon them or they will act upon us. We must Christianize them or they will heathenize us. All over this land what multitudes of the homeless and houseless and the godless! Could you gather them all together, what a scene of rags and filth and hunger and desolation. If you could see those little feet on the broad way to death which, through Christian charity, ought to be pressing the narrow path of life; if you could hear the words of cursing blistering those lips which ought to be singing the praises of God; if you could see those hearts which at that age ought not to have been soiled by one vile thought, already become the sewer of iniquity, through which floats the most disgusting depravity; if you could see those suffering little ones sacrificed on the altar of every iniquitous passion, and scalded with a baptism of fire from the very lava of the pit—your soul would recoil from the scene crying: "Begone, thou dream of hell!" The Spartans who threw their sickly children to the wild beasts were merciful compared with the stolid indifference which, in this age, would give up the destitute youth of our country to be eaten up of their own depravity.

These so-called ragamuffins are coming up to be the men and women. That spark of iniquity which you might put out with one drop of the water of life will flame into a conflagration of every green thing that God planted in the soul, and that which was intended to be a temple of the Holy Ghost will be a charred and blasted ruin, every light quenched and every altar in the dust. The petty thief who slipped into your store and took a yard of cloth from your counter will be the highwayman of the forest, or the burglar at midnight picking the lock of your money safe and blowing up your store to hide the villainy. A great army, with staggering step and bloodshot eye and drunken hoot, they will come on, gathering recruits from every grogshop and den of iniquity, to take the ballot box and hurrah at the elections. The great, hard-knotted fist of ruffianism will have more power than the gentle hand of sobriety and intelligence. Men bloated and with the signature of crime burned in from the top of their head to the bottom of their chin, will look honest men out of countenance. Moral corpses which ought to be buried too deep to keep them from poisoning the air will rot in the face of the sun at midday. In lusty, in her plain frock, with her hand at the spindle, will be unappreciated, while multitudes of able-bodied men will wander about in utter idleness, with their hands on their hips, saying: "The world owes us a living." Oh, what a terrible force there is in iniquity when, uneducated, unrestrained and unblanched, it goes on concentrating, and deepening, and widening, and gathering momentum, until it swings ahead with a very triumph of desolation, drowning like surges, scorching like flame, crushing like rocks! Cold indifference meets these desperate ones and says: "What a pity! but it cannot be helped." The law meets them and says: "The house of correction and the prison are the places for you." Fashionable fastidiousness meets them, and gathering up its robes, says: "They are so dirty I cannot bear to have them touch me."

Reader, these unfortunates are all about us. When they got up from their hands and knees to walk, their first step was on the road to ruin, and ever since they have been plunging down to lower depths, and wilder despair, and deeper darkness. There are many about us in boyhood and girlhood in comfortable circumstances that are going to be something very good or very bad—very bright or very ignorant; and they will yet make their parents glad with an infinite gladness or pain them with an infinite sorrow. They go bounding through the hall; they shout in the yard; they sing in the school. This activity that now strikes the ball, and runs the race, and rolls the hoop, and flies the kite, will soon be ready for the higher game of life, where fortunes are to be made, and reputations achieved, and temptations combated, and immortal souls jeopardized, and kingdoms of glory won. Call up that child; push back his hair. Shall this face be ever brightening up with benevolence, or scarr-ed, and pinched, and blasted with low excesses? Shall those eyes become more and more intelligent, or shall they acquire the dishonest glance and the servile downcast? Put your hand on that child's heart. Shall it always beat with noble impulses or will it be a thief's heart, a coward's heart, a traitor's heart?

My soul stands back abashed and overwhelmed in the presence of these young princes of God, these sons and daughters of immortality, these voyagers eternity bound. They have started out on a journey that will never end. I have so much faith in the advancement of our race under the Gospel that I suppose the rising generation are to have in their number more noble men than their predecessors. I suppose that every day we are walking unconsciously among Enochs and Augustines and Wilberforces and Clarksons and Moffats. There they are! on the back seat of the mission school. There they are! playing marbles in the low alley, their knees out, their elbows out, their toes out, their hats rimless and their souls Christless, and in double columns there is printed on their countenance a tragedy of unutterable pain. But they shall be gathered in. Sunday Schools will do their work. Tract and Bible societies will do their work. A Christian printing-press will do its work. And they who are now scoffed at as ragamuffins will pass on to be the men of might and the men of God in future years.

BE CHEERFUL.

ENJOIN upon all those whom these times find in comfortable circumstances, two things: First, helpfulness to the helpless—and the next, cheerful talk. If you want to prostrate business and keep it prostrated, talk in dolorous tone and keep on talking. Let all the merchants sigh, and all the editors prognosticate hard times, and all the ministers groan in the pulpit. In the great orchestra of complaint those who play the loudest trombones are often those who have the fullest salaries and the completest wardrobe. They are only made because they have to fall back on the surplus resources of other years, or because they cannot make as large investments as they would like to make. Did you have your breakfast? Yes. Did you have your supper last night? Yes. Did you have a pillow to sleep on? Yes. What are you complaining about? The genuine sufferers, those who are really in destitution, for the most part suffer in silence; but the loudest cries against hard times are by the men to whom the times are not hard. Artists tell us it is almost impossible to sing well on a full stomach, but it has been demonstrated over and over again that it is possible for men to groan well on a full stomach!

OUR MAIL-BAG.

B. E. Orr, Cascade, Minn. 1. When and where was Lot born? 2. Who was Lot's wife?

1. Presumably in Ur of the Chaldees. 2. Her name is nowhere mentioned.

Mrs. Hattie M. Elmore, Gainesville, Ga. Where can I find the hymn commencing: "Through Tribulations Deep"? L. Ellis, Franklindale, Pa. Can you tell me where to find the hymn: "Religion, 'tis a Glorious Treasure"?

Both hymns can be found in old hymnals like the "Zion Songster," (1829) or Hymn's "Revivalist," (1868 and later.) The latter can be procured at the Methodist Book Concern, New York.

Mrs. E. S. Thomas, Lynn, Mass. Truly I think the Spirit of Christ prompted the suggestion offered by S. M. Beach, Chicago, in "The Mail-Bag" of Mar. 14. I send my name to be enrolled, if you decide to organize any method of work along the lines suggested. I am only too glad to help with my influence, name, prayer, sympathy, and means wherever I can.

Seth Hoagland, Mercer Co., Pa. Do you expect that Christ will come the second time before the Millennium?

Yes, he will come to introduce the millennium. That will be the thousand years of peace when he will reign personally on the earth. His question in Luke 18: 8 and the parable of the Virgins (Matt. 25), as well as all his teaching in the preceding chapter, show that the world will not be at his coming in the condition that it will be in at the close of the millennium.

Subscriber, Georgetown, Cal. Is it consistent with a Christian life to read the works of such writers as E. P. Roe, Walter Scott, Dinah Muloch Craik, Charles Dickens, Charlotte Yonge, Hawthorne, or Donald G. Mitchell?

Entirely consistent. These authors can be read with profit by everybody, without detriment to spiritual growth. Their writings are noble and elevating, and should not be confused with the vicious literature which is hurtful alike to soul and body.

J. B. Harmon, Pittsburg, Pa. An acquaintance lately, in conversation, asserted that the hard times were due to the drinking habits of American workmen, and that more of their money went into the rum shops than would pay the national debt. What is the total consumption in gallons?

There are nearly 250,000 licensed retail liquor dealers of all sorts in the United States, and probably many thousands more unlicensed. A comparatively small revenue for each would soon amount to many millions. The total estimated annual consumption of liquors, as recent statistics show, is considerably over a thousand million gallons.

Subscriber, Elizabeth, N. J. 1. What authority is there for using the words "trespasses" instead of "debts" in the Lord's Prayer? 2. How is Easter fixed?

1. None except such as is found in Matt. 6: 14, 15, where Christ explaining the prayer uses the word. Its adoption was probably due to the fact that it expresses the meaning intended more clearly than the word "debts." 2. Easter Sunday is the first Sunday, after the first full moon, after March 21. It is so fixed to correspond with the Jewish Passover which is regulated by the moon.

P. M. Barrow, Ringtown, Pa. How many temples were there? Was the one in Christ's time the second or third?

The temple built by Solomon was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. The second temple was built by Zerubbabel seventy-two years afterward. Herod wished to destroy this temple and rebuild it. The Jews would not consent to the destruction, lest he should die or be removed before he rebuilt it. It was therefore taken down piecemeal and each part was rebuilt before another part was taken down. It was thus practically the third temple, although the Jews regarded it as the second one restored. It was destroyed A.D. 70.

Rev. E. Stone, Fitchville, O. 1. Is there any mention, outside of the Bible, of the Ten Plagues? 2. How is Ex. 9: 21, explained after reading in verse 6 that all the cattle died? 4. How can the act in Ex. 3: 22, be regarded as right?

1 and 2. Josephus, the famous Jewish historian in the 14th chapter of the Antiquities, describes the plagues fully. The reading of this chapter will help to reconcile any apparent inconsistency in the passages noted. 3. Panic-stricken by the wrath of the Lord, as shown in the plagues that had afflicted them, the Egyptians heaped presents and favors upon the Israelites and urged them to hasten their departure. Compare with Ex. 12: 35, 36. These gifts were evidences of the remorse of the Egyptians at having treated their captives so cruelly as to offend Jehovah.

Wilson Brockenborough, Wilkesville, Miss. Were there any negro believers in the time of Christ?

Although we have no published record of such a fact, it is not improbable, since, in the course of his public ministry and travels, Jesus may at different times have had negroes among those who "heard him gladly." That there were negroes in Jerusalem we learn from many circumstances. Simon, of Cyrene, who carried the Cross, is claimed by several commentators to have been a negro. The episode of Philip and the Ethiopian, some time afterward, showed that negroes were not indifferent to the Gospel. Onesimus, one of Paul's most devoted converts, was probably a negro, and there were not a few negroes holding exalted positions in the Christian Church in Africa, the whole northern countries of which, in the early ages, was Christian.

Reader, Addison, W. Va. To whom can I write for information concerning D. L. Moody's Bible Schools?

Write to Rev. E. B. Hartzler, Northfield Institute, Northfield, Mass.

H. P. Andrews, Strasburg, Pa. Who were the sons of Bethrah, and what was their mission?

The Bethrah was an eminent school of theology in which some of the most distinguished priests and scholars of the time were trained. Their mission was that of religious teachers of the Jewish people, but they frequently differed on matters of belief.

D. G. Reinhold, Lansdale, Pa. In "Our Mail Bag" of March 21, "Reader, Philadelphia, Pa." asks for the author of a certain passage quoted. Philip Henry is the author of the following, which is probably the original:

"When the flail of affliction is upon me, let me not be the chaff that flies in thy face, but the corn that lies low at thy feet."

Mrs. P. Brooks, Baraboo, Wis. What proportion of the world has had the Gospel preached to it?

With the exception of the greater part of Thibet, parts of Central Asia, certain sections of Central Africa, portions of Central South America, and probably parts of Northern Greenland and the Arctic regions beyond, the whole world has heard the Gospel message.

Inquirer, New York. What does the Bible mean when it says that it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven?

The expression was proverbial in Palestine, denoting, literally, something that was impossible, and figuratively, an act that was exceedingly difficult. It was applied in the latter sense in the passage quoted.

Miss Sarah Burns, Pekin, Ills. We have just read Marion Harland's article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on "The Native Girl," of Syria, and we hasten to reply to her call for aid to continue the industrial school of Mrs. Jamal. Mrs. Rebecca La Roth and I will pledge ourselves to ten dollars each, per year, for that purpose. Please inform us in our "Mail Bag," when and where to send the money for that pressing need.

Remit to "Mrs. Jamal, Care David Jamal, Jerusalem, Turkey."

J. M. Delme, Norfolk, Cal. 1. How far distant was Babylon from Jerusalem? 2. How many Jews were taken captive? 3. In what country was Babylon located?

1. In a straight line probably, not over 600 miles; but the great Syrian desert lay between, and the route taken by the exiles may have been very much longer. 2. At different times during Nebuchadnezzar's reign in Babylon, his troops carried off large numbers of Jews as captives. In II. Kings 24: 8 and 16, it is stated that 10,000 were exiled at once, and in Zedekiah's reign, all the population except the peasants were carried off. The number cannot be definitely stated, but it must have been very large. 3. It was the capital of the province of the same name, and the seat of government of the Babylonian-Chaldean Empire. The city was on the banks of the river Euphrates.

Mrs. A. H. Livingston, Missouri Valley, Ia., asks some readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to furnish her with the hymn beginning: "Sinners will you go to the Highlands of Heaven."—C. D. L., Wyoming Pa. It is not true that there are no tides in the Mediterranean. The water rises and falls there as elsewhere, and regular tide tables are published.—M. F. Gordin, Dover, Del. Bella Cooke's address is 402 Second Ave., N. Y. City.—John V. Mountjoy, Elkhardt, Ind. Jamieson, Faussett and Browne's Commentaries, published by Revell & Co., Publishers, N. Y., will help you materially.—Bible Student, Denver, Col. Any good book dealer ought to do it for a reasonable charge.—Anxious One, N. J. We have not the information wanted.—J. A. Kinison, N. C., makes an appeal for Christian literature, second-hand books, etc., for a mission Sunday School. Some of our readers may be able to help.—Mrs. L. B. Schneider, Omaha. The word is a perfectly proper one to use.—Admirer, South Hamblin, N. V. Yes, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a year and a copy of the large emerald Bible will be sent to your address on receipt of $3.00.—Geo. W. Warner, Amsteritz, Mich. Write to Rev. A. Ben Olief, care U. S. Consul, Jerusalem.—C. C. Thomas, Floyd, Ia. Any reputable lawyer can tell you where to apply.—E. D. Cribbs, Buttersville, Mich. Write to the American Engineering Journal, New York City.—Frank W. Moore, Bloomingdale, Ind. Nowhere in the Bible is such a passage to be found.—A. J. E. The editors were probably not fully informed. Investigation, however, will not hurt the innocent.—Forrest Cullins, Ripon, Wis. Write to the Missionary Training Institute, LaSalle Ave., Chicago.—Mrs. Sarah J. Lauderback, Thompson, Neb. Your question was answered in a recent issue of this paper.—Harry A. Hartman, Meadville, Pa. These amusements are unquestionably detrimental to spiritual growth. They lead to frivolity, and the formation of vicious companionships when indulged in immoderately. The earnest Christian will do wisely to leave them alone.—Richard Gwinn, Huron, Mich. 1. See Matt. 25: 41, 46; Rev. 20: 10; II. Thess. 1: 8, 9, and like passages. 2. No. 3. No. It was broadly Catholic, which means universal.—J. A. Haines, Alpena, S. D. For a full discussion of the subject mentioned in your letter write for a little book, price 50¢, on "Church Entertainments," published by A. W. Hall, Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

THE RUINS OF PHILÆ.

INDIGNANT protests are being made by antiquarians and archaeologists against an engineering project which the English are about to undertake in Egypt. Plans have been prepared for a huge dam across the Nile at Assouan, which will form a gigantic reservoir in which the flood water will be stored for time of need. At present there is great need of water after the annual flood has subsided until the time of flood the next year. The proposed reservoir will retain the superabundance of water at the flood, for irrigating purposes during the dry season. Its construction would, moreover, provide work for a long time for an enormous number of people. But the construction of the reservoir would submerge from May to September every year, the little island of Philæ, on which are some extremely interesting ruins, a picture of which appears on this page. Of these ruins Sir James Ferguson says: "No two of the buildings, scarcely any two of the walls, are on the same axis or parallel to one another. No Gothic architect, in his wildest moments, ever played so freely with his lines and dimensions, and none, it must be added, ever produced anything so beautifully picturesque as this. It contains all the play of light and shade, all the variety of Gothic art, with the massiveness and grandeur of the Egyptian style; and as it is still tolerably entire, and retains much of its color, there is no building out of Thebes that gives so favorable an impression as this." The ruins are also rich in associations. The chief building was erected in 377 B. C., and dedicated to the worship of Isis; but in 452 A. D., it was transformed into a Christian church. Other buildings were used as Christian chapels as early as the second century, and bear some remarkable inscriptions. It is contended that the reservoir would lead to the destruction of these beautiful buildings, and is therefore an act of vandalism. The advocates of the project, on the other hand, urge that sentimental considerations ought not to hinder plans for the welfare and development of the country. The government is consequently in a dilemma, out of which there seems to be no way but by offending one or the other class of disputants. An attempt has been made to make the church the subject of a similar dilemma. Infidels and scientists have represented it as an obstruction to the world's progress. But the Christian has no cause for alarm as to its safety. It is founded on a rock, and the gates of hell cannot prevail against it. (Matt. 16: 18.)

Saved by a Badge.

A remarkable escape from death is reported by the "Republican" of Denver, Colo. It says that a shooting affray took place in a dry goods store in that city on the previous evening. The proprietor and his wife were alone in the store when two men entered and made a small purchase. The proprietor opened his money-drawer to give them change, when one of the men pointed a revolver at him and ordered him to hand over the drawer. He hesitated and the man declared that he would fire, if the money was not instantly given up. In less than a minute he executed his threat and the store-keeper fell with a groan and the robber made a clutch at the drawer. The store-keeper's wife sheltered herself behind a pile of goods and gave several piercing screams. Passers-by rushed in and the robbers made a rapid exit without securing the booty. A doctor was summoned and found the store-keeper still alive, but there was a hole in his clothing just over his heart where the bullet had penetrated. But the man could not have been shot there or he would be dead. His clothing was removed and a large ragged wound was disclosed. The doctor applied his probe and extracted a circular piece of metal, about the size of a quarter dollar deeply indented in the centre. The store-keeper said it was the badge of a benevolent society of which he was a member and he wore it outside his vest. The bullet had struck the badge, driving it through the clothing into the flesh and had then fallen to the ground where it was afterwards found.

The robber had aimed at his heart and but for the badge intercepting the bullet he would have been killed. It is much to be wished that Satan's darts which he aims at the heart were always similarly intercepted. That they are not, is due to the fact that men do not commit the keeping of their hearts to God, who has promised that lest any hurt them he will keep them night and day. (Isa. 27: 3.)

Fraudulent Naturalization.

An accusation was made in a police court in Brooklyn last week against an Italian immigration agent which is to be made the ground of a criminal prosecution. A detective said that he had suspected the accused for some time of issuing bogus naturalization papers. He went to the man, accompanied by an Italian, who arrived in this country about six months ago, and asked him what it would cost to get the Italian naturalized at once without waiting the five years required by the statute. Fifteen dollars was the sum asked for and it was paid. In a few days the detective called again and received the first and second papers for the Italian, drawn up and certified in due form but with forged signatures and seals. The detective, perceiving that they were fraudulent and secured a warrant for the arrest the astonished man was put behind the bars. It is safe to predict that if that man wants any more documents read to him, he will not apply to a policeman, especially if his conscience reminds him of any wrongdoing. Like other people who break the law, he will carefully avoid an officer of the law. It may be hoped, however, that if by the grace of God he comes under conviction of sin he will not pursue those tactics. He cannot do better than go to one of Christ's servants, who will assure him that the way to peace and safety lies, not in concealment, but in confession and surrender. (1 John 1: 9.)

An Unpleasant Record.

A gentleman now living in Missouri had a disagreeable surprise in the course of some recent antiquarian researches. He is very proud of his ancestry, as he comes of an old and distinguished family, the history of which he has been at great pains to investigate. His studies took him a few weeks ago to New Hampshire, where his great-grandfather settled, about a hundred and fifty years ago. In searching for traces of his ancestor, he found mention of him in the records of a certain town. At a formal meeting of the citizens, a resolution had been passed explicitly warning him not to settle in the town. Another record showed that he had settled there in spite of the warning. As he understood that his ancestor was a very worthy, respectable man, the record was mysterious as well as annoying to him. It cast a slur on the family name. On making inquiries of one of the town officials, who had studied the history of the State, he received an explanation which soothed his wounded pride. He was told that in early days, no one could settle in the town without giving notice of his intention. It was the custom to consider the notice at the next town-meeting and to pass a formal resolution warning the intending citizen not to enter the town. If he settled there after this warning, the town was relieved by a law of the State from the duty of supporting him if he became a pauper. By warning the new-comer off, the citizens protected themselves from the burden of providing for the poor. As this precautionary measure was invariably taken in the town, the gentleman concluded that there was nothing invidious in the treatment of his ancestor. However religious this New England town may have been in that day, its citizens could not be congratulated on its resemblance to the kingdom of heaven. The Founder of that kingdom gave special instructions that the poor were to be invited into it and it was the rich who found it difficult to enter. (Mark 10: 23.)

A Modern Esau.

A curious appeal has been made to the courts by a citizen of Catskill, N. Y. He asked that a deed which he executed fourteen years ago be cancelled. It appears that for some years prior to his signing the deed he had been addicted to intemperance and gambling and gradually became in urgent need of money. He had a considerable estate which was his share of his father's property and which was valuable, but he had exceeded his income and was being pressed by his creditors. He applied to his sister for a loan to satisfy the men who were suing him. She did not accede to his request at first, but when he became more urgent, she told him to call on a certain day and she

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. B. Fay Mills has Begun a Series of union meetings in Providence, R. I., among a group of churches on the west side of the city, including Congregational and Baptist, and the First Presbyterian Church. The first meeting was held on Sunday, March 11, in the Pilgrim Congregational Church.

The Evangelical Missionary Society of Paris, has opened a new mission at the mouth of the Ogowe River, Western Africa, with several stations towards the interior. The mission is in the French territory. They have already twenty-six boys and six girls, who have been freely given to them by their parents, to be trained for Christian life and work.

Mrs. M. Baxter and Pastor, and Mrs. Stockmayer have held meetings in Philadelphia, Lancaster, Pa., and Nashville, Tenn., which have been largely attended and have proved to be seasons of rich spiritual profit and enjoyment.

Major Geo. A. Hilton has been holding successful meetings at Indiana, Pa. Library hall was crowded every evening during his stay and on Sunday it was necessary to hold overflow meetings. Major Hilton's tour through Pennsylvania has been a great blessing to the churches.

The Question of a Successor to the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon was settled on March 21, by his church. At a formal meeting called for the purpose, an invitation to the pastorate was given to Mr. Spurgeon's son Thomas, who has been preaching in the Tabernacle for several months. The vote for the invitation was 2,027, and against it, 649.

The Revival Services in New York were continued last week. On Monday and Tuesday the afternoon meetings were held in Niblo's Theatre and on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday in Cooper Union. The noon meetings were held in Association Hall as usual. In the evening beside the services in the various churches, union meetings were held in the Washington Square M. E. Church in which the University Place Presbyterian and the Judson Memorial Baptist Church joined.

An All Around the World Tour in the Interests of Temperance and Social Purity has been arranged by Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances E. Willard. Those two ladies accompanied by about a hundred others are to sail in a special steamer for a trip around the world. They will carry with them a monster petition signed by over two million persons against the evils of alcohol, opium, and legalized vice. Copies of the petition are to be left with the rulers of various lands which the ladies expect to visit. The first copy is to be presented to President Cleveland.

Special Meetings have been held in several of the Presbyterian churches of St. Paul and Minneapolis. At Bethlehem Church, Minneapolis, the pastor, Rev. D. S. McCaslin, D.D., conducted meetings in the afternoon for children, in which there are lasting spiritual results. At Stewart Memorial Church, the Rev. A. E. Nichols, pastor, held special services for a week and has received considerable additions to his church. Daily services have also been held at Westminster Church, by the Rev. Pleasant Hunter, pastor, thirty-one were received at the last communion.

Contributions of Clothing for the Relief Fund from the following, are acknowledged:

"In His Name,"—C. K. Weaver, Brumfield, Pa.; W. K. Meadell, Ellenville, N. Y.; Friends, Massapequa, L. I.; Women's Christian Temperance Union, Knoxville, Pa.; Bridgeport, Conn.; Mrs. W. W. Norton, Gt. Barrington, Mass.; Friends, Oak Summit, N. Y.; Montgomery, Ohio; Unknown, Washington, D. C.; Miss Maines, Liberty Falls, Sullivan Co., N. Y.; South Millbrook, N. Y.; Little Delaware, Mrs. Mary Rhinehardt, Grantport, Ia.; Parkersburg, Iowa; Princeton, N. Y.; Celarosa, Fla.; Craig, New York; Strat Falls, N. H.; Ulysses, Pa.; Friends at D. Orselle, N. Y.; two barrels and one box clothing.

Contributions of provisions are acknowledged as follows:

Mrs. M. B. Townsend, Paterson, N. Y., one barrel potatoes and onions. Mr. H. F. Padlock, Brewster, N. Y., ten bags potatoes. Unknown Friend, Ica, Mrs. F. W. Pars, Springs, L. I., pumpkins. Mrs. E. W. Martin, W. Freehold, N. Y., potatoes. Friend, Durhamville, one barrel corn, two crates eggs, one bag onions.

THE TEMPLES OF PHILÆ, ON THE NILE.

THE CALVARY BAPTIST PULPIT

CONDITIONS OF DISCIPLESHIP.

Sermon preached in Calvary Baptist Church, New York City, by Rev. R. S. MacArthur, D.D. Text: Matt. 16: 24, "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."

WITH the 21st verse of this chapter, our Lord enters a new epoch in his earthly life; and the altered tone in his teaching, which is now observable, antedated his crucifixion about nine months. Up to this time he had spoken but little to his disciples regarding his approaching death. When he had spoken of that event, the allusion was made in vague terms, rather than in plain and definite statements. Our Lord was a wise teacher; he gave instruction to his disciples only as they were able to receive it. He himself told them, that he had many things to say unto them, but they were not able to bear them; and they were not able early in his ministry to bear full, free, and definite statements regarding the death which he was to suffer on the ignominious cross. All their thoughts of the Messiah were thoughts of triumph and glory; thoughts of national honor and of universal fame. All their thoughts of the cross were associated with darkness, gloom, excruciating agony, and unspeakable shame. It was not a Jewish but a Roman method of punishment, and the idea that the Messiah of ancient hope and of national glory, should die upon the cross was utterly unthinkable by a patriotic and devout Jew. Can it be that the long-expected Messiah, who is to rule the world, is to die a shameful death? Such a thought is too astounding to be believed or even conceived. Our Lord, therefore, did not fully reveal the facts regarding that death until toward the close of his ministry.

A Painful Disclosure.

In the verses which precede the text, we see that he made a partial revelation of himself as the Messiah, and he received from the apostles, with Peter as their spokesman, a frank avowal of their faith in him as the Christ, the Son of the living God. That avowal encouraged him to make himself known to them more fully than ever before. He wished them to understand what was before him and them; but they were like men stunned by what was to them a dreadful and incredible disclosure. The apostle Peter is startled by the statement made by his Lord; no doubt this disciple was somewhat flattered by the commendation that Christ had given him, and he now assumes a position of superiority toward the Lord Jesus. He now acts the part of an older brother, or of a confidential friend; perhaps the part of a trusted inferior who presumes to expostulate with his superior. Peter could not bear the thought that his Lord should suffer and die, so he seems to have drawn him aside to make a personal remonstrance, and to rebuke him, practically saying: "God be gracious unto thee; he is far from thee Lord; this thing shall not be unto thee." He had probably been so elated by the honors given him by Christ, that his ardor and self-confidence led him to attempt thus to control his Lord's conduct. Jesus saw that all the disciples were unfavorably impressed by this patronizing familiarity on the part of Peter; and so with keen sensitiveness, he quickly turns and gives Peter a cutting rebuke. Just before Peter had been spoken of as the Rock; now the rock becomes a stone of stumbling; it becomes an offence to the Lord. We are reminded of the language that our Lord used toward Satan, in the 4th chapter and the 10th verse of this Gospel, when he said, "Get thee hence, Satan;" so when Peter tempted him, he said, using the same language of repulsion and abhorrence, "Get thee behind me, Satan." It was a terrible rebuke to be called Satan. It was a wonder that Peter did not shrink before such a rebuke. The believing confessor is suddenly changed into a presumptuous rebuker. I wonder that those who put Peter above all the disciples, are not impressed by the thought, that he alone of all the disciples was called by Christ, Satan. He was acting the part of Satan in coming between Jesus and the cross; and there are many men to-day acting the part of Peter. They practically deny that Christ ever went to the cross as a sacrifice for men; they are willing to honor him as a loving Saviour, and as the ideal man, but they deny him as the atoning sacrifice. It seems to me that to each one of such preachers and laymen, Christ might turn and say, as he did to Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art an offence unto me: for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." Peter would have Christ to be merely a worldly Messiah. So men still judge regarding Christ's work; but not so does God judge regarding his cross of shame. Oh, blessed thought! The crown of thorns was a crown of glory; the reed, given in mockery, was a sceptre of immeasurable dominion.

The Conditions Stated.

So now standing beside Christ and his disciples, listening to the rebuke given him by Peter, and to his rebuke given in turn to Peter, we see that this private remonstrance with Peter led to the public declaration before the people, as we learn from Mark, of the conditions of discipleship. We are extremely fortunate in having these conditions given in Christ's own words. It was the prerogative of Jesus Christ, as King in Zion, to state the conditions on which men may enter into that kingdom. Nothing is more impressive in the Gospels than the absolute honesty of the Master. He would never inveigle a man into his kingdom by letting down its high standard of admission. If you look at the text you will discover that it gives us four conditions of discipleship, complying with which, and only by complying with which, can we be Christ's disciples. The first is a willingness to enter Christ's service—"If any man will." Bear in mind the word "will" is not the future tense of the verb to be, but is an entirely different word; it might be translated if any man "is willing," or "desires" to come after me. We have, then, as the first condition, clearly implied if not formally stated, that a man must willingly enter the service of the Lord Jesus. Christ will not force men, except by the drawing of his love, to enter into that kingdom. There must be a deliberate choice. The young man who ran toward Christ was rich, was earnest, was enthusiastic, and was beautiful in many elements of character. Christ laid down the conditions to him; and this young man was Not Willing to Comply.

But Christ did not make the standard lower to accommodate that rich young man. Millionaires certainly were rare among the followers of Christ. Could he not lower the standard a little to have a man who could pay all the bills? to secure a man who could write his check for a large amount? a man who could command the respect, and influence the conduct of wealthy business men? No doubt Christ would have been glad to have such a man, but to win even him, Christ would not lower the standard. Christ will not exalt the standard in order to shut out a poor fisherman, it remains the same for the rich young man and the poor fisherman. In the very nature of the case men cannot be forced by physical authority into the service of the Lord Jesus. Involuntary obedience is not obedience. The man who cannot but obey, does not really obey. We must be free to choose, else we are not responsible for the choice we make. If men are not free to choose, they are mere machines; and this view of the relation between them and God throws the responsibility for their eternal perdition upon God. Such hyper-Calvanism is a welcome doctrine in hades. I would relieve God from such responsibility and throw it upon you. You are free to choose, and you know it; you are free to reject, and you must assume this exalted but terrible responsibility. If this element of free-will be not recognized, then there is no good on the one side and no bad on the other. God made Adam free. He had every inducement to obey God; but in the exercise of his freedom, without which he would not have been man, he disobeyed God. Suppose God had made him physically unable to take the apple; he would then outwardly have obeyed God, but if he had desired to take it, he would still spiritually have disobeyed God. There would have been no merit in his refusal to take it, if it had been physically impossible for him to take it. All the deliverances of our own consciousness, and all the commandments of the inspired Word teach us that we are free, and that God is a Sovereign. Reconcile these two truths we cannot; believe them we must. Here then are the conditions. Comply with them and you are saved; refuse and you are lost; and for that loss is your own. The bitterest drop in the cup of remorse is that each man throughout eternity must say, "I alone am to blame. God put before me life, and I took death; God put before me Christ, and I chose Satan; God put before me heaven, and I chose hell." O, the bitter pangs of remorse when men are conscious of their own sins in this regard! God is dogmatic; but God is never reasonless, never arbitrary, never capricious. God always is and must be a dogmatist. God never hesitates; should he hesitate, he would cease to be God. Did you ever notice that Christ never said, "I think so," "I trust so," "I hope so?" Profoundly impressed were those who heard Christ with the idea that "he taught as one having authority, and not as the scribes." Christ was never in doubt. He spoke instantly; he spoke decisively; he spoke affirmatively; he spoke authoritatively. Christ does not quote authorities, as did the scribes. They quoted other scribes. They and the Pharisees quoted laws and traditions; but Christ was his own authority; he did not speak merely as an authoritative expounder of the law, but as himself the divine Lawgiver and final Judge. Christ spoke of the other world as if he were as familiar with it as with this world; he spoke of God as familiarly as your son speaks of you, his father. Christ was dogmatic. Marvellous was his conception of his authority as expressed in his "I say unto you." The last word is spoken when Jesus speaks. Not so when any earthly philosopher speaks; not so when Bacon spoke; not so when the scientists of our day, dogmatic as some are, speak. They quote other authorities. Here stands a Galilean peasant as Lord of all worlds and King in every realm.

The Responsibility

He Never Hesitates;

he never doubts; he never questions. O, blessed, O divine dogmatist? Jesus was God, or he was not a good man; he was God, or he was a hopeless lunatic or an unpardonable egotist. There is no logical middle ground between these extremes. I love to feel the authority in the words of the Lord Jesus Christ. I repeat, if God would hesitate, he would cease to be God. He is always dogmatic. Here is one condition, "if any man is willing." Are you willing? Will you enter now? Will you take Christ, just now and just as you are? Will you march with me now to the music of Christ's name, and be inspired by the glory of Christ's presence?

The second condition is in the renunciation of self and all selfish interests. "Let him deny himself." Christ's hearers were to learn what was required of them; they were to renounce self and to follow their Lord. Such a renunciation was sometimes known by the Gentile proselyte as "the new birth;" the Jews used such language when any person came out of heathenism into Judaism. But Christ gave it a nobler meaning. Peter wished Christ to spare himself, but Christ virtually said, "I cannot spare myself. No man can spare himself, if he is to serve God and his fellowmen." Christ said, "He that loveth his life shall lose it; but he that loseth his life for my sake, shall find it." No man can serve himself and serve Christ; no man can be a self-seeker and be a follower of the Lord Jesus. There is a self-love which is right, but the moment that it passes over into selfishness it is wrong. Selfishness in Cain makes him ask, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Selfishness in Satan led him to exalt himself above all that is called God. Christ had no self-life; from his cradle to his cross he lived for others. His life was a continual death; he died daily that he might live divinely. We must die daily if we are to live Christly. Would to God that my self-life were crucified with Christ upon his cross! Would that the Christ-life might be in every act, in every word, and in every thought! This self-crucifixion is one of the great indispensable fundamental laws of all noble beings; the servant cannot be above his master. This element is not characteristic of the Christian life alone, but it is in every truly noble life. If Wendell Phillips is to be the leader of the hosts of liberty, he must die to self, to ambition, to honor, as he did die on the afternoon of October 21, 1835, when he left his office on Court Street, Boston, and going out saw the crowd on Washington Street, and in the midst of the mob Garrison, bare-headed and bedraggled, but with head erect, face calm and eyes flashing, and with a rope around his waist, as he is dragged toward the City Hall while the mob is shouting for his life; then Phillips devoted himself to the destruction of American slavery. We must die as did Wilberforce, when he dedicated himself to God and to the abolition of the slave trade in England's colonies. Every man must die to self if he is to live to God and to men. Every college student must die to indolence, to indulgence and to laziness if he is to live for study, for triumph, for honor. Every business man must die to lower things if he is to live for higher things in his business. The same law applies to the Christian life; we are to die to our lower self that we may live to our nobler self, that we may live for Jesus Christ. We are to renounce our sinfulness. You all know that every tree has a great tap-root, and that in proportion as the trunk shoots into God's sunshine, the tap-root strikes down into God's deep earth; cut off many of the branches and rootlets of the tree, and it will still grow; but cut off and you destroy the tree, for it stands in such close relations to the trunk. So self is the tap-root of the Judas tree in life, and until that tap-root is cut off by the grace of God, the Judas tree will bring forth its deadly fruit. O, may God help you to cut off the tap-root of sin and make you live for him and for all about you. Love for even little sins, as men judge, will destroy the noblest ideals of life. In the late war a Federal warship had what was thought to be only a trifling superficial leakage; and, although observed, it was not deemed necessary to countermand the order that she take part in the battle. The fight began; this ship is in the midst of the conflict. The crisis of the battle has come; and it was then found that through this leak the sea water had oozed into the powder magazine. On that leak turned the fortunes of the day, and the battle was lost. There really are no little sins; only as sin is confessed and forgiven is its terrible danger removed.

A Fundamental Element

The Tap-root

A little flaw in a ruby prevented England from buying it at a fabulous price: the crown-jeweller discovered the fracture, and the value was reduced by thousands of pounds, and the ruby was rejected from the regalia of Great Britain. We are told that Canova, when, about to begin his statue of the great Napoleon, having carefully examined a splendid block of marble which had been secured at great cost, discovered a tiny red line running through its upper portion, and he refused to put his chisel further upon it. That red line vitiated the block. So God, the great Sculptor, in carving out the statue of an ideal man, must caused by sin. A slight streak of selfishness in a man's life will color all his acts, all his words, all his thoughts. O, men, I would have you to-day kings and princes unto God! O, women, I would have you princesses and queens unto God! I would have you lay your old selfish life at Jesus' feet; I would have you nail it to the tree; I would have you bury it in Joseph's tomb. Then I would see in the glad Easter morning of your spiritual life, a personal faith and a Christly love, as you walk forth in newness of life.

Reject Every Stain

And now let us hurriedly glance at the third condition: it is a willingness to bear the cross; "and take up his cross." The Jews, as Dr. Broadus has shown, were familiar with the punishment of crucifixion. It was long common in Italy, in Egypt, and in Western Asia. At least one hundred years previous to the time of our Lord, King Alexander Jannæus crucified 800 rebels at Jerusalem. It is also said that under Antiochus Epiphanes many Jews were crucified; and that two thousand were crucified during the proconsulate of Varus, because of a revolt which followed the death of Herod the Great. It was customary that a condemned person should carry his cross to the place of execution. The disciples could not, therefore, misunderstand our Lord's allusion; they understood that he was like one who was marching to crucifixion. They would learn also that they likewise must be ready for suffering and death. Not only could he not avoid the cross, but they also must bear it if they are to be his disciples.

Now, I am not going to fall into the error into which many Christians fall, when they represent the Christian life as a psalm-singing, cross-bearing, crying, sighing life. The Word of God represents the Christian life as a life of triumph and of glory: a life whose symbol is the up-soaring eagle; a life that runs without weariness; a life that walks without faintness. Men speak of a life of sin as a life of pleasure, but so to speak is a mistake: it is it is a life to be pitied by men, a life to be pitied and almost despised by angels and God. "Take up his cross." I want you to notice the language here used. I often see many young Christians standing beside the Cross and looking at it wearily: I see other young Christians taking hold of one end of the cross and dragging it along. But Jesus did not say, "Let him deny himself, and drag his cross." He said, "Let him deny himself, and take up his cross." The cross, when taken up by the alchemy of divine grace, is transformed into a ladder up which we may climb into the sunshine of God's presence and into the enjoyment of God's love. Sweetly did Rutherford say of Christ's yoke: "It is burden such as wings are to a bird, or as sails are to a ship." A blessed burden are wings to a bird: a joyous burden are sails to a ship, and such a burden is Christ's yoke to all who put it on.

A Life of Slavery;

The cross is the symbol of all the forms of suffering which we have to bear in our Christian life. I would not ask you to go out to find a cross; I would not ask you to bring down crosses on your head and shoulders. But I dare not permit you by any cowardly, unmanly, unchristian conduct to run away from your cross. My rule is never to go out of my way to meet a cross, and never to go aside to miss a cross; but just to move on in the Christian life, which God in his providence has marked out, taking the crosses which he sees best to send. O, beloved, take up your cross, and it will be light! The Christian life was never so much to me as it is now. Jesus was never so precious as how. Jesus, blessed Jesus! Would that now we all would open our hearts to receive him, giving them up to him as his throne!

The Follower's Place.

And this leads me to say just a word about the last condition: we are to follow Christ; we are not to go before him, but to follow him. Going behind God is obediently following him. "Follow Me:" this is the divine command. Obedience is the proof of love; Christ in his baptism fulfilled all righteousness. Righteousness is thought of as a cup: the cup was held out to Christ, and if he had not been baptized it would not have been full: to fulfill is to "fill full." Rightly he said, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." Let us do God's will to-day, by following Christ. If we do, we shall at last follow him into Glory. In paths of duty on earth Christ always precedes his people: in heaven we shall follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. I want to see the print of my Saviour's feet, and there I want to put my feet. "Follow Me." Yes, but there are great difficulties in the way." Still Christ says, "Follow Me." Yes, but there are inconsistent Christians. "Follow thou Me." Yes, but I may not hold out. "What is that to thee, follow thou Me." Yes, but there are parts of the Bible which I do not understand. Christ again replies, "Follow Me." Enter Christ's school and you will learn the obscure lesson. All who do his will soon come to know his doctrine. That is the eternal law; that is the blessed experience. Follow me to the cross, to the tomb, to the resurrection; follow me up the shining heights of glory; follow me through the gates of pearl and along the streets of gold. O, Christ, draw us by the chords of thy love, and we will run after thee!

Conducted by Ira D. Sankey

My Heart is in the Homeland.

FANNY J. CROSBY.

W. H. DOANE.

1. My heart is in the Homeland, Where every storm shall cease,
2. My heart is in the Homeland, That realm of end-less day,
3. My heart is in the Homeland, And there I soon shall be;

Where blooms e-ter-nal sum-mer, And all is love and peace;
Where He, my Lord and Sav-iour, Will wipe all tears a-way;
My friends are in the Home-land, They wait and watch for me;

There dwell the tried and faith-ful, No more with care op-pressed,
My thoughts are in the Home-land A-mong the pure and blest,
O joy-ful, joy-ful meet-ing, With those for-ev-er blest,

For sor-row can-not en-ter The gold-en land of rest,
No sin nor night can en-ter The gold-en land of rest,
No part-ing in the Home-land, The gold-en land of rest,

For sor-row can-not en-ter The gold-en land of rest.
No sin nor night can en-ter The gold-en land of rest.
No part-ing in the Home-land, The gold-en land of rest.

Copyright, 1893, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From SUNNY-SIDE SONGS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS, by per. of the Publishers.

CHRISTIAN HELPFULNESS.

41st Psalm and Proverbs 10: 17.

"CHRISTIAN, hark!" a sweet voice whispers,
"Who hath pity on the poor.
Lendeth to the Lord of glory.
Who will all love's gifts restore."

Child of God, canst thou not trust him
With a little from thy store;
Since thou knowest, if 'tis empty,
He can fill with thousands more?

God will make thy bed in sickness,
And deliver in distress.
Trust him, Christian, he will keep thee,
With his choicest blessings bless.

Jesus says it is more blessed
Far to give, than to receive;
To relieve and cheer the wretched—
What a blessed life to live!

— S. W.

Nanticoke, Ont. Can.

HAIL TO THE RISEN JESUS.

HAIL to the Risen Jesus!
He lives to die no more.
Let glad hosannas echo,
O'er earth from shore to shore.

Hail to the Risen Jesus!
His praise let nations sing.
Now Joseph's tomb is empty,
It could not hold our King.

Hail to the Risen Jesus!
The first-fruits of the dead.
For we shall rise as surely,
As Christ our living Head.

Hail to the Risen Jesus!
His praise let anthems swell.
Now at his girdle hanging,
The keys of death and hell.

Hail to the Risen Jesus!
Hosanna to his name.
Our gentle, loving Saviour,
Forevermore the same.

Stayner, Ont.

MRS. W. J. KENNEDY.

THE LAST GREAT WAR.

Characteristics of the War and its Leader at the Close of this Dispensation.

THE rise of a formidable chief and warrior, who shall subdue and rule over all other great kings some time prior to the close of the present dispensation, is the subject of several prophecies, both in the Old Testament and the New. The most remarkable are those of the Little Horn of Daniel 7: the King of Fierce Countenance of Daniel 8: the Wilful King of Daniel 11: the Man of Sin and Son of Perdition of St. Paul (II. Thess. 2: 3-9); and the Wild Beast of St. John (Rev. 13: 1-17: 1, etc.).

As will be seen by reference to these passages the terms in which the evil chief is described are very explicit and striking. Scripture repeatedly testifies, in these and other prophecies, that in the latter days an evil ruler shall arise, who shall concentrate in himself all earthly power. This testimony is also conclusive upon the point that the last war and the last battle must necessarily be a conflict between evil per se and good per se. Reason shows that this is a necessity: Scripture describes it in prophetic vision as a fact. Notice the connection of the two:—

The Little Horn shall wear out the saints of the Most High—make war with them, and prevail against them. The King of Fierce Countenance shall destroy the mighty and the holy people, and stand up against the Prince of princes. The Wilful King shall "speak" against God, and "prosper" till he comes to the glorious holy land, destroying and taking away many. The Man of Sin "opposeth" all that is called God or that is worshipped, "with all power and signs and lying wonders." The Wild Beast makes war with the witnesses and saints, and overcomes and kills them: then he gathers the whole world to the battle of the great day of God Almighty, and makes war with the Lamb.

Nothing more than these citations is needed to establish on Scripture grounds the proposition which reason lays down, that the last war must be "a conflict between powers representing more perfectly than can be imagined in merely human affairs, as at present conducted, the simple original principles of good and evil." With the elements of all evil so marvellously and so antagonistically at work as they are in the present disjointed world, such a conflict as that which is thus proved to be inevitable will, with great probability, be an outcome from a contest of a totally different character. This appears from several considerations. Goodness, per se, can hardly become an object of tyrannous repression, except as an obstacle to the designs and purposes of evil and wicked rulers. It is intrinsically too unobtrusive, and too little prominent in human affairs to become an object of attention, unless the circumstances of the times render it obnoxious and hateful. It is not an earthly power, having dominion, and using physical force, and is not likely, therefore, to assume such a substantive form as to be an obvious object of attack by an earthly power, having dominion, and using physical force.

It may be assumed, without contradiction, that in a struggle for supremacy of power, goodness, either in the abstract, or in the persons of those who truly represent it, will not be the first object of attack. The development of an ambition that grasps the empire of the world, would first arouse the enmity of those worldly powers that would have everything to lose by the success of so vast a scheme. Hence would arise the pretexts for an opposition that, in its results must fill the world with strife and war, until, through combined might and policy, the purpose of ambition should prosper, and all nations and kings be compelled to submit to the supreme potentate.

The evil chieftain, whosoever he may be, that shall arrive at this "bad eminence," will then be in the position to begin a war of extermination against the "good." These, living in the world, while not of the world, will take no part in the fiery contests around them: nor, when the wicked supremacy is established, will they be forward to profess an allegiance to it that will render questionable their loyalty to Christ. This negation of his authority and supremacy will be intolerable to the king, and hence persecution and extermination will be proclaimed. This, no doubt, is the rationale of these events; and it is in various ways confirmed by Scripture.

To be Continued.

Missions in the "Black Belt."

The Industrial Missionary Association of Alabama and its Good Work.

THE Black Belt of Alabama embraces seventeen counties running across the State from east to west near the center. It is naturally a lovely country of magnificent natural resources. It has a delightful climate, rich, black soil, generally rolling and well drained, producing abundantly a great variety of crops. Although cotton is the great staple, corn, rice, sugar-cane, Irish potatoes in the spring and sweet potatoes in summer and fall, oats, barley, rye, hay, peanuts and other products yield abundantly when attention is paid to them. It is often said that grass will not grow in the South. In this section thousands of tons of hay are raised and baled and shipped every year, and the extensive Johnson grass pastures are famed for fattening the best of beef. There are a variety of native grasses, some flourishing only in summer, others grow all winter and ripening early in spring, while the wild cane that grows luxuriantly all through these once called "canebrake lands" even on the hillsides, makes the best of winter pasture for all stock except fattening cattle, which need Johnson grass to give the final touch of flavor and color for the finest beef. These rich lands held at $50 an acre before the war can be bought for from $5 to $15 according to quality, location and improvements and would be a grand country for farmers from the overcrowded East to move to, if only they would go in numbers sufficient to take their own society, schools and churches with them.

These black lands now swarm with a dense colored population. The last census shows that there are 350,000 colored people on the plantations of this Black Belt of Alabama alone, and only about 50,000 white people who generally prefer to live in the cities where they find good society, schools and churches. Heretofore nearly all the mission and school work among the colored people has been confined to the cities leaving the great masses of people on the plantations forming nine-tenths of the whole colored population comparatively untouched. Being left to themselves for spiritual guidance and instruction, with but little understanding of the Word of God, and with nothing but the very defective and inadequate common school system for the education of their children (which provides only seventy-five dollars a year for a school with actual enrollment of 170 pupils), it is no wonder that there is much of the blackness of ignorance and superstition prevailing throughout this region of such magnificent natural resources. Better schools and better churches with intelligent leaders are imperatively needed.

The Industrial Missionary Association of Alabama is an organization formed for the purpose of reaching these masses of plantation people with the Bible, the spelling book and wisely directed industrial help. In this agricultural section, its industrial work is mainly agricultural. It is incorporated and has purchased 4,000 acres of land which it divides into small holdings, and rents to the people with contract to sell on favorable terms, giving them as far as possible instruction in improved methods of agriculture and the use of improved implements and holding out the stimulus of "home-getting" as an inducement to economy and faithful industry. It also has a saw-mill, grist mill, cotton gin, blacksmith shop, store, post-office, and two railroad stations on its lands. It supports two churches, three schools and a night school. All the profits arising from the sale or rental of its lands must, according to its charter, be spent in mission or school work. Thus the plan is to form self-supporting missions, with at the same time the view of helping the material condition of the people. Without homes, home comforts, and some feeling of self-help and independence, how can moral or intellectual improvement be looked for?

President Curtis, now in the North to look after the interests of the Association, states that the financial condition of the Association is quite strengthened, although the mission and school work is prospering greatly. Two bad crop years in succession have interfered greatly with the self-supporting feature while the financial stringency in the North has cut off the usual contributions. In this emergency, the Association has asked the wider co-operation of all who are interested in uplifting these masses of plantation people. Six a year will support a teacher, $20 a preacher. The treasurer is M. V. Curtis, Beloit, Ala.

SELF-CONTROL.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Commencing April 15. Col. 3: 1-17.

MISTAKEN ideas of what salvation really is, and means, are so prevalent that even at the risk of repetition the true idea has to be reiterated and emphasized. How prevalent and how serious the mistaken ideas are any one can perceive in any ordinary revival service, or in the testimonies given at holiness meetings. It is actually pathetic to hear persons who have turned their faces in the heavenward direction and are enjoying the inward satisfaction that comes from peace with God, using language implying that they have attained the goal of spiritual life. It is the language of rest and contentment, when it should be the language of ardent aspiration and desire. It is as if some poor, oppressed, down-trodden slave had been emancipated, brought into some free and fertile land and given tools for cultivating it with the promise of a rich harvest to reward his efforts; yet instead of setting to work, spent his time in rejoicing over his bettered condition and the favor of his benefactor, making no attempt to do the work he is expected to do. Justification is only the beginning of the Christian life. In Bunyan's inimitable allegory, the pilgrim's journey was not ended when his burden rolled off his shoulders into the sepulchre. Many conflicts had to be fought and many a victory won before the end was reached. Jesus came into the world to save his people from their sins. That is something more than saving them from the punishment of them. He would save them from the power and the taint of sin, from the dominion of the evil within them and around them. The Christian life is, as a great teacher has said, a growing and a becoming, more than a having and a resting. The conception of it as a thing accomplished and perfected at conversion is a mischievous error that has worked and is still working havoc in the church. Numbers of its members, after making profession of faith, have found the old passions and appetites, which they supposed were eradicated, still working within them and leading them into sin, and have concluded that they were mistaken in supposing that conversion was the power it was represented to be. Such people often become backsliders or remain in the church barren and unfruitful members. This evil would be avoided if they realized at the out-

YOUNGSTOWN'S NEW BUILDING.

The building, a picture of which appears on this page, is the new home of the Young Men's Christian Association of Youngstown, Ohio. It is a large and substantially built edifice in one of the most accessible districts of the city. The building and lot cost ninety thousand dollars, and is considered by experts to be worth considerably more than that sum. It is matter for congratulation that so young an association—it is only twelve years old—should have been able to secure so handsome a building for its own. It has over seven hundred members, of whom about one-third are on the active list. It is gratifying to learn that the average attendance at the religious meetings is over one hundred, and that the Bible-classes flourish. A thriving boys' auxiliary is connected with the Association to which a convenient room is assigned. The new home has a small well-selected library, and a gymnasium with all the modern appliances.

THE NEW BUILDING OF THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

A NOVEL SOCIAL.

The Social Committee is perhaps the department of all others most in need of suggestions. The following account of a social recently held by the Epworth League, of Los Angeles, Cal., may therefore be welcome in other quarters: It appears from the report sent to the "Epworth Herald" by a Los Angeles correspondent that the Reception Committee of the First Church organized the social with special regard to the literary classes. To each class a corner in the meeting room was assigned and each class took a pride in making its corner emblematic of its work. The Bible Topics Class converted its corner into an Oriental booth, with a trellis covered with ivy vines; and two members in Eastern garb, received visitors offering the Oriental beverages of coffee and sherbet. Palestine curiosities were arranged on a long table with various emblematic devices. The Reading Circle had been engaged with Indian Topics during the season, and it made its corner as much of an Indian bungalow as possible. Tea and wafers were offered there and the attendants were attired in Hindoo garb. The class in American authors held court in a New England kitchen with open fireplace, crane and settle, and provided popped corn for the guests. The C. L. and S. Circle constructed a model of the famous Hall of Philosophy on Chautauqua Lake. White pillars gleaming through bamboo trees, festooned draperies, tall palm trees, busts of Julius Caesar and other classic heroes made this corner attractive to all comers. The room was crowded with guests all the evening and much admiration was expressed at the tasteful arrangements.

AMONG THE ORDERS.

The Baptist Boys' Brigade is prospering in Chicago. At a meeting of the workers, held recently in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, plans were discussed for organizing and extending the work still further.

A new statistical statement has been issued by the Secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. From this it appears that there are now 30,610 local societies, with a total membership of 1,836,600. The number of Junior Societies is now 5,438. The largest number of Societies are Presbyterian; next come Congregationalists and Baptists with the Disciples fourth on the list. Australia is running England close in the number of Societies. Both countries have over twelve hundred.

The Young Women's Christian Association at Lille, France, which was founded three years ago, has twenty-six members, and by the kindness of a friend of the work, has been provided with a hall in which to hold meetings. The Associations at Nancy and Saint Quentin have nearly twice as many members, and are doing work which is highly appreciated in the Protestant community.

The Tennessee Epworth League is to hold a great convention at Bellbuckle, Tenn., April 10-21. One delegate for every fifteen members is the basis of representation and all pastors are ex-officio members. Notable platform speakers from other Southern States are expected in addition to the home talent, and a large choir has been organized and drilled.

Several Epworth League chapters in Chicago and vicinity are pledging $10 a year toward the endowment of an Epworth bed in Wesley hospital for the special use of students, Epworthians, and other young people with Methodist affiliations.

DEATH INVADERS A C. E. SOCIETY.

A bereavement which affects one of the New York Societies of Christian Endeavor and has caused deep sorrow among a large circle of friends in other Societies has desolated a Christian home in this city. A promising young man on the threshold of manhood, with grand opportunities of usefulness before him, which he had already demonstrated his power and will to use for the glory of God, has been called up higher. He was the son of Mr. Hugh O'Neill, the famous dry-goods merchant of New York. The young man was a student of the University Grammar School, and was looking forward to his graduation in June next, when he would enter upon his business career. These hopes, however, were doomed to disappointment. He was prostrated early last month with severe illness which in a few days terminated fatally. At his funeral on March 22, there were many touching evidences of the affection in which he was held by his many friends and associates. His pastor, Dr. Kennedy, his relative, Dr. H. Smyth and other ministers testified to his exemplary Christian character and to the regret that is felt by his many friends at the loss sustained in his death.

A Mashona Household.

Happy and Contented Once More, now that Lobengula, the Oppressor, is Gone.

DURING the last twenty years or more, a large part of Africa, contiguous to the Zambesi river, has been kept in a continual state of terrorism by the inroads of marauding tribes, of which the Matabele, lately subdued by the British South African Company, was a typical example. Mashonaland, a fertile country, popular and prosperous, and inhabited by a peaceful agricultural people, was peculiarly subjected to these raids, and its inhabitants were ruthlessly slaughtered or dragged off to slavery, while their pretty villages and well-kept gardens and orchards were swept bare or burned to the ground. Since the expulsion of the Matabele from the territory, and the death of the tyrant, Lobengula, the Mashonas have once more begun to enjoy the freedom and security of which they were so long deprived by the invaders.

An interesting photograph—one of a series forwarded by Rev. E. H. Richards, Superintendent of Foreign Missions of the M. E. Church of America in Eastern Africa—which is reproduced on this page, represents a group of brothers and sisters from Eastern Mashonaland. They are of Zulu descent, and are the subjects of Gungunyama, King of the Gaza country—the only monarch of Zulu blood now left in all East and South Africa. Their attire, as shown in the photograph, may be accurately described as native "full dress" or gala costume. Both sexes wear heavily beaded waist-belts, and the women, like their sisters in more civilized communities, indulge in not a few feminine trinkets, which would seem to indicate that, even in tropical Africa, vanity is a prevalent weakness. The bead-work is something of which the native African is very proud, and if the average feminine wearer had sufficient means, or beads enough, she would probably cover herself from head to foot with it. Contact with white settlers has helped not a little to develop this passion for personal adornment, although it is somewhat absurd to recognize, in the walking canes of the two Mashona men in front and the carelessly-held handkerchief of the one who is kneeling, a deft native imitation of European manners. In the same imitative category is the square piece of white cloth depending from the neck, which is meant to represent the linen bosom of civilized masculinity. These square pieces, as the picture shows, are worn indiscriminately by both sexes and no doubt constitute the very climax of "imported fashion" in that part of the globe.

The three women in this domestic group are single. When a Mashona maid becomes a wife, she attains to the dignity of a cow-skin quilt, instead of the fringed garment shown in the picture. In Natal the price of a native African woman is reckoned at ten beaves; at Tanganyika and in the Upper Congo, the slave tariff places her at about $1.68 per head; and in Masailand she is sold still more cheaply. Wherever Christianity has been introduced in Africa the lot of woman has improved.

Mr. Richards, who has a large experience in missionary work in East Africa, is now laboring among the Gazas and the Tongas, with great success. He has already established a strong and successful mission at Inhambane, and is preparing to extend the work to Mashonaland proper and the Shire country. His present headquarters are at Mapumulo, Natal.

Children and Money.

Let children know something of the worth of money, by earning it. Over-pay them if you will, but let them get some idea perb satisfaction with five thousand dollars as you bought with your first five cents. Children need enough money, but not a superfluity. Freshets wash away more cornfields than they culture.

Don't Whine.

One of the most objectionable as well as intolerable traits is that of continuously whining, and it is a common habit into which any one is very apt to fall. There are many otherwise happy homes rendered hideous and unendurable by their whining occupants, who seem to forget that other people have any sensibilities whatever, or a desire for peaceful surroundings. Children should be trained at an early age to avoid the habit of unnecessary whining over real or imaginary grievances. If fault is to be found with anybody or anything, let it be done quietly, persuasively, and on the instant, and not keep up a constant sulky air and whining repetition of the grievance. Some whine over work they have to do a week or more in advance of its performance and others worry themselves and every one about them over their taitque when their work is done. Whining mars both face and character.

Louisa Alcott's Girlhood.

When it was necessary to chide or praise her children Mrs. Alcott wrote them little notes; many of these were answered by Louisa. These letters, writes E. H. Mackey in "The Literary Bulletin," undoubtedly tended to form that tender love which ex-

IN BEULAH LAND.

THE sin-taint of earth is still clinging,
And the spirit, till purified grown,
Could not bear heaven's rapturous singing,
The ineffable light of God's throne.

But in Beulah's fair precincts reposing—
It sojourns where angels serene
Are as ministering spirits, disclosing
The glories of heaven yet unseen.

They remember their song—the star shining,
Of peace and good will towards men,
And their love is forever inclining,
To bring fullness of joy unto them.

Here in Beulah are fruits, flowers, immortal,
By the fourfold still waters they bloom,
Their fragrance e'en reaching the portal
Of yon brighter, more permanent home.

O'er its sky shadows gather, ah! never,
And the ambient air echoes no sigh,
For life's heart-aches are banished forever,
Sin nor sorrow no more cometh nigh.

In near sight of the gates now unfolding,
As the shining ones pass and return,
See the radiant crowns they are holding,
For the brows that will nevermore yearn.

Oh! the home-bringing must be so glorious
When the entrance abundant is given,
As the angels lead on the victorious—
The purified spirits to heaven.

January, 1894. —SOPHIA MIDDLETON.*

THE SERVANT'S SUNDAY.

The tendency of to-day, especially in comfortably well-to-do families, is to make Sunday anything rather than a day of rest and spiritual rejuvenation. In many homes, the difference between the first day of the week and the other six is marked only by a cessation from business pursuits, and the Sunday is spent in alternate indolence and festivity by the family. To this rule, however, the servants are an exception. These have hard times in consequence, and the danger of losing one of their most precious privileges—that of resting to a reasonable extent from labor on the Sabbath day, and of dedicating a portion of it at least to the special service of the Gracious Giver.

To girls who have been brought up in quiet homes by God-fearing parents, the change must be a great trial to be employed in a place where God's name is never mentioned with reverence, and where Sunday is wholly given up to selfish indulgence. To some girls, a place of this kind would be simply ruinous. It would foster every giddy inclination that had already begun to spring in the young mind. When indoors, she would have no good example to imitate; when out of doors, she would fear neither oversight nor restraint, except as to the time of her return. There would be no questioning as to her resorts or companions; no concern about her spiritual welfare. So long as the work was done the mistress would be satisfied, and probably think herself most fortunate in being fairly well served. Would it be likely that a mistress who never troubled herself about the true welfare of her children, or asked herself to what road their habits were hurrying them, would concern herself about the poor girl who was under her roof merely to do certain work in return for certain wages? Would she not rather think it natural for her servants to seek, when out of her sight, amusements as nearly as possible akin to those which satisfied her and her family?

Mistresses have responsibilities beyond the mere payment of wages. They are accountable for the moral influences that surround their servants and may be the potent agent for good or ill throughout their lives.

* The gifted writer, a lady of eminent piety and long a reader of this journal, passed away recently at Bowling Green, Ky. This poem was her last production and is forwarded by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by Miss Blankinship, of Wintepock, Va.

A FAMILY GROUP OF MASHONA NATIVES, EAST AFRICA.

From a photograph forwarded to "The Christian Herald" by Rev. E. H. Richards, Missionary.

of equivalents. If they get distorted notions of values at the start, they will never be righted. Daniel Webster knew everything except how to use money. From boyhood he had things mixed up. His mother gave him and Ezekiel money for Fourth of July. As the boys came back from the village, the mother said, "Daniel, what did you buy with your money?" and he answered: "I bought a cake and a candy, and some soda, and some fire-crackers." Then turning to Ezekiel she said, "What did you buy with your money?" "Oh," said Ezekiel, "Daniel borrowed mine."

On the other hand, it is a ruinous policy to be parsimonious with children. If a boy find that a parent has plenty of money, and he, the boy, has none, the temptation will be to steal the first cent he can lay his hand on. Oh, the joy that five pennies can buy for a boy! They seem to open before him a Paradise of liquorice-drops and cream-candy. You cannot in after-life buy so much superb satisfaction with five thousand dollars, and which is so exquisitely described in Miss Alcott's journal. At a very early age Louisa revealed traces of strong affection and literary tastes. These characteristics were developed by this correspondence with her mother, who in every way tried to teach her that which was most worthy. The strength of this influence may be seen in her personal life and writings. One of her amusements in girlhood-days was the writing and impersonation of dialogues in company with her playmates—the children of Emerson and Hawthorne. Of Ralph Waldo Emerson, she speaks thus in her diary: "I can never tell all he has been to me, from the time I sang Mignon's song under his window a little girl and wrote letters to him at fifteen, up through my hard years, when his essays on Self-Reliance, Character, Compensation, Love and Friendship helped me to understand myself, and life, and God, and Nature."

CHAPTER XII. Continued.

THE Paull purse was the heavier by many dollars for Mrs. Barnes' visit, and the Paull hearts lighter for the everyday ministrations of the practical "all-around woman." So far from pitying her friend for the fall in her fortunes, and bewailing the necessity of engaging in "business," she bade her "God speed" in the cheeriest of tones; wished that every woman in the land had a profession, the independence to engage in the actual duties of the same, and the skill to make her handiwork excellent in itself.

"Not appealing to the public because she chanced to be born a woman, and therefore an object of charity!" protested the latter-day prophetess. "When the world acknowledges that it is more honorable to make capital pickles than to paint pictures which are only tolerable because a woman 'executed' them; better worthy of an intelligent creature to bring bread-making to perfection than to hawk poor prose and worse verse from publisher to publisher; nobler to cultivate strawberries well than to go into the teacher's office for a piece of bread—the real Woman's Age will be here."

For Marie, Mrs. Barnes had several new books and half a dozen pieces of music—among them three duets which the donor and her daughter Elizabeth had practiced together. They liked them so well that Marie, who was a far better performer than either of them, must learn them. She could play them with Mrs. Barnes while the latter was at Pinehurst. (At Mrs. Paull's request the guest found a name for the place before she had been there three hours.) After her return to Brooklyn, Marie could practice with her mother. Incited by her praise and bright-heartedness, Marie aroused herself into a passable show of interest in passing events and her present.

She actually opened the piano of her own accord and played, alone and in the dark, passages from oratorios and other sacred compositions on the second Sunday evening of Mrs. Barnes's stay at Pinehurst. Her touch was exquisite, and her rendering of the numbers full of taste and feeling.

"I cannot thank you as I would for the good work you have begun in her," said her mother to her friend. "I have been sadly disheartened about her for a long time. I seem to have lost touch with her since my illness last winter. Until then, we were every whit as intimate as you and Elizabeth. My heart sinks in looking forward to what may be the outcome of the estrangement. Estrangement! Annie! can you conceive what pain it costs a mother to use that word with reference to her very own child?"

CHAPTER XIII.

Build a little fence of trust
Around to-day.
Fill the space with loving work,
And therein stay.
Look not through the sheltering bars
Upon to-morrow,
God will help thee bear what comes
Of joy or sorrow.

—M. F. Butts.

The two women were sitting upon the honeysuckle porch; Elspeth had drawn her chair to the kitchen-floor; her hands were folded in Sabbath quiet upon her snowy apron.

"Why do you look forward?" said Mrs. Barnes, quietly.

Mrs. Paull gave a surprised little laugh. "Because I cannot help it. My tendency has always been to borrow trouble."

"Yet I don't know an honest woman. You would be wretched if you had to live upon borrowed capital."

"This is altogether different."

"Yes; you would borrow money from your fellow-men. You try to negotiate a loan of to-morrow, and next year from Him who has made you an ample allowance for to-day, and forbidden you to anticipate supplies."

"Ah-h-h!" a light breaking in upon the speaker's mind. "I had forgotten that you belong to Nurse Williams' school of what the dear old soul calls 'The Royal Roaders.' She began once to explain their creed, but we were interrupted, and other things pressed it out of my mind. As nearly as I can recall it, her system of belief is predestination, simple and severe; the persuasion that 'what is to be will be,' no matter what we do or say. I call that downright fatalism, the blind faith of the Mussulman, not the rational belief of the Christian."

"At its baldest, it is more rational than the other extreme of 'what is to be may not come to pass.' Mrs. Williams got the phrase, 'The Royal Road,' from Mr. Stevens, the New York evangelist of whom you have heard me speak so often. I went with her to his church on the evening set by him for telling his congregation how to find and to keep in 'The Royal Road to Happiness.'

"What a congregation that was!" she resumed, musingly. "I had been a pastor's wife for fifteen years, and thought myself fairly well versed in varieties of human nature, but I was in a different sphere from the law-and-order orbit in which I had previously revolved. There were men and women in good clothes about me, most of them evidently belonging to the laboring classes, but there were men who were ragged and dirty. Shop-girls were there in cheap finery and imitation jewelry, and close beside them women in black stuff gowns and black shawls pinned bias across their bosoms, and bonnets that were meant for mourning, and cotton mitts upon hands that were hardened by the wash-board. There are unsuspected saints among working women of that type, and their Sunday clothes are always mourning suits. Mixed in with these respectable folk were others with handkerchiefs tied over their heads and knotted under their chins, and gowns stiff with dirt that were falling apart by their own weight, and faces that seemed never to have known soap, or even a 'dry-wash.' Faces seamed by sin and trouble and weary waiting for the good time which they were sure, by now, would never come to them. Men skulked in corners who, you could not help thinking, would skulk into corners in Paradise from the force of habit, if they ever got there; a species of human fungi that shuns the light, and fattens in the dark, and upon rotten things;—and bolder-faced men who stood conspicuously in the aisles and crowded up near the pulpit, at sight of whom you couldn't help feeling for your pocket-book, and were surprised that it was still there.

"Such a 'mix' of all classes and conditions of humanity I had never beheld before, yet there wasn't a policeman to be seen, and there was no confusion beyond what was inseparable from the massing of so many and such various sorts of people in a limited space. There was, it is true, the buzzing of whispering and the indescribable sound of clothing, rubbing against the seats and against other clothing, but it stopped all at once when the preacher walked upon the platform. He is not tall, and he is somewhat thick-set in figure, what a kind, honest face. It beamed with benignity in looking over the motley audience. Without invocation or preface he began somewhat in this fashion:

"There must be five,—maybe there are six kinds of politics represented here to-night. Democrats, and Republicans and Mugwumps, and Prohibitionists, and Anarchists, and Home Rulists, and the great party of Look-out-for-Number-Oneists. I am not here to find fault with any one of these parties. St. Paul once preached in a town where they worshipped thirty thousand gods. In fact there were so many that a law had been passed against inventing any more idols. But in case any of the heathen gods should have been overlooked, they had put up an altar with this inscription on it: 'To the Unknown God.'

"That was something like what you ward politicians would call 'hedging'—eh?"

Of course everybody laughed, and there was some clapping, and a cheer from one corner. He got them quiet with one gesture of his uplifted hand. Then he went on:

"St. Paul was a long-headed man who had been a lawyer before he was a preacher. Yes! and a tent-maker to boot. He paid his own salary in one town by working at his trade. So he preached to this idol-ridden people that this Unknown God 'whom,' he said, 'ye ignorantly worship,' was the Lord whom they were feeling after, and had not found.

"This brings me to what I am here to say to you this evening. God that made the world and all things that are therein, he is the Lord of Heaven and earth, the Lord of lords and King of kings. And he so loved the world,—this sinful, fallen, soiled and sorrowing world of which you, my brother, and you, my sister, and I who speak to you are a part—that he came, himself, in the person of his Son, to die for us! I want all of you—each one here present—whether he has any ear or not, any voice or none—whether he ever sang before in his life, or not—to join me now in singing—

All hail the power of Jesus' name!

"Alice! you never heard such singing! How they kept the tune and time I do not know, but they did, and carried the hymn clear through with a rush and a shout. When the old woman on my left—who must have been a rag-picker, if one might judge by the dirt on her worsted hood, and the grime on her hooked fingers—joined her cracked screech to the rounded sweetness of dear Nurse Williams on my right in—

O, that with yonder sacred throng
We at his feet may fall!
Join in the everlasting song
And crown him Lord of all!

I just got my face between my two hands and cried harder than I ever let any baby of mine cry. It was wonderful."

She was excited in the telling. Into the eloquent interval dividing the two parts of the narrative, Mrs. Paull's voice stole, sweet and thrilling:

"And I heard, as it were, the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying: 'Hallelujah! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! and let us be glad and rejoice and give honor to him!'"

"Nurse Williams thought of that, for she whispered to me before I dared show my face again:

"Ain't it, for all the world, like a chapter right out of the Book of Revelations?"

"The prayer came next. I had been afraid of something approximating irreverence, but I need not have feared it. It was not like other people's prayers, of course, but his tone and language showed that he knew in whose presence he stood. He told the Lord that all of us, small and great, were seeking one and the same thing—happiness, here and hereafter, and entreated him to help 'the weak, unworthy speaker' to direct us into the right way—the plain path—the Royal Road.

"There was another hymn, 'Come thou Fount of every blessing,' and then he took his text:

"Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things."

"Yes!" he blurted out, 'knows as much better what things we need and how much we need them, that we may well be ashamed of ourselves, fretful babyish fools that we are, for presuming to give him any information. It's sillier and more impudent than if the boy who peddles peanuts on Water street, should stop Jay Gould's carriage as he is hurrying up-town to deposit a cool million in the bank, and give him his opinion as to the best way of making money. It is not in any mortal to be as disrespectful and officious to another mortal, not even to king or president, as it would be for the wisest saint in earth or in heaven to dictate to the Almighty. Ask him what you like, but put it in spirit, if not in speech, into four words—"thy will be done!"

"That is to say: 'if what I want isn't good for me, please, O, Lord, read my foolish prayer backwards and don't give it to me!'"

"He gave incident after incident, proving what mistakes we make in praying for what God in his wisdom and mercy refuses to let us have, and how we blunder into wrong and dangerous ways, screaming and kicking at this bolted door, and trying to pick the lock of that, and to blow the door of another off the hinges, and the tolly of it all, and the love 'that saves us from the consequences of ourselves' (that was his phrase, and at last he got to the sure prescription for securing peace of mind here and blessedness hereafter. It was to throw ourselves upon Christ for salvation, and let him have us entirely for his own, and to leave our time, as God means and commands us to do, for one day only, and to recollect that it is a lease and that the Landlord holds the insurance, pays the taxes and keeps the premises in repair.

"Trust him with your soul, and then with the life that now is. The smartest man in the world cannot manage more than one day at a time, and the man who lived a hundred years, never owned two days at once.

"You may say, 'Since I cannot help myself, I'll make a virtue of necessity and not worry about to-morrow.' That was the trick of fools who lived three thousand years ago. 'Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.' They didn't know how much that day was worth. Just as your baby would as lief chuck a five-dollar gold piece into the gutter as a cent.

"A day! oh, my brother! take the beautiful, new thing into your hand and look at it! Fresh from God's mint, stamped with his image and superscription, his present to you and to you alone, made expressly for you, and not another like it in all the universe, or in Eternity, past or present. Hold it with both hands and get all the good you can out of it. You may never have another day. Another thing! Every day that is counted out to you is registered in his Book of Remembrance, and when you have had the last one, the ledger will be shown to you. 'Thomas Smith. One New Day,' with the date set opposite to it and a memorandum of the condition it was in when it got back to the Book. For, it's bound to go back! You can't melt it down, nor tear it up, nor 'sweat' it, nor burn it. Whatever God makes and stamps is immortal."

"He gave us thirty minutes of such talk, and nobody moved to go out. I can convey a very faint idea of his style and none of his manner of saying these things. He concluded by asking each one of us to begin to walk in the Royal Road, the very next morning.

"Monday is a tough day for I, know," he said. "It does seem sometimes as if the devil were bound for a season over Sunday, and got out of limbo with a leap and a howl, like a giant maddened by Jersey lightning before honest folks are out of bed Monday morning. There's all the more reason why you should choke him off at the start. Now, listen! as soon as you, my sister,—and his eyes seemed to take in Mrs. Williams, my rag-picker and myself—wake up to-morrow, say your prayers. They need not be long. A great English preacher, Rowland Hill by name, used to say that he liked very short prayers—such as are jerked out of a man when sorrow or temptation grabs him all of a sudden. He said they reached heaven before the devil got a chance at them. You can get yours over in a minute or less. 'Give me this day my daily bread!' will do if you mean all you say. Food for the soul, food for the heart, food for the mind, and, last and least, food for the body. Don't sit down to cry over the mistakes you made yesterday. Don't pipe your eye over what you are afraid is coming to-morrow. You may never see to-morrow, and if you do, it will be To-day by the time it gets here, and God, who has never broken a promise and never will break one,—promises that you shall have strength given for that day. A man told me when I was a little shaver, that all the fortune he cared to have was one little pocket in which he could always find a sixpence. All the fortune of time that you need—and this your heavenly Father knows—is just one little day.

"Trim your day clean at both ends, and don't waste a scrap of it. If you are a house-keeper, Monday is washing-day. You wouldn't mind washing-day so much if it wasn't for the thought of how much longer it takes to iron, than to wash clothes. You've got nothing to do with Tuesday until Tuesday comes. Put it out of your mind. Say 'I won't think of it!' and keep your word. You'll be surprised to find how much more strength you'll have for to-day if you don't fritter it away worrying over to-morrow. When Tuesday comes, take hold of it, too, with a brave heart and clean, empty hands, that have none of Monday's mud sticking to them."

"But, Alice, I am talking you into the Land of Nod! I, who have struples against evening services in hot weather! You know my tongue of old, and that you have the magic art of drawing me out and on."

(To be Continued.)

"WHERE HAST THOU GLEANED TO-DAY."

THE fields are white for the harvest;
Say, brother, what will you do?
There comes a cry for the reapers,
And the laborers are few.

The fields are white for the harvest;
The beautiful golden grain,
Lies waiting to be garnered,
Ere comes the wind and rain.

The fields are white for the harvest;
Behold! there comes the cry:
Come hither and join the reapers,
Why stand ye idly by?

If you cannot toil with the reapers,
In the heat of the harvest sun,
Then why not work with the gleaners
As the beautiful Ruth has done?

Then in the gathering twilight,
Having folded your hands for the day,
When you hear the words of the Master:
"Where hast thou gleaned to-day?"

Though others may stand beside you,
With beautiful golden sheaves,
Remember your simple gleanings,
May please him as much as these.

Not with the strength of the reapers,
You toiled in the summer sun;
But for the sake of the Master,
Your work with love was done.

When the reapers meet together,
In the beautiful bye and bye;
With them will come the gleaners
To the Harvest Home on high.

Wil. Del. —ANNIE E. MICHENER.

*The above poem was suggested on reading the touching accounts of want and suffering in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Agonizing Headaches.

Indigestion — Distress in the Stomach.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Accomplishes Desired Results.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has done wonders for me. For years I have been a great sufferer from agonizing headaches and

Distress in the Stomach

after eating and at other times, accompanied by sour stomach. I was very bad with indigestion also. I noticed in different papers mention of the cures

Hood's Cures

Hood's Sarsaparilla had wrought and thought I would try it. It has Accomplished the Desired Results.

The pain and distress in the stomach and the severe headache spells have been overcome as well as my indigestion. I can now enjoy a meal without any distress and can recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as one of the best of medicines." ELIZA E. HILLS, Fenner, New York.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, always reliable, and efficient.

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT

For Internal and External Use.
Stops Pain, Cures Cramps, Inflammation in body or limb, like malaric, Croup, Asthma, Colds, Catarrh, Cholera Morbus, Diarrhea, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Lambeback, Stiff Joints and Strains. Full particulars free. Price 35 cts. post-paid. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

CUDAHY'S REX BRAND EXTRACT OF BEEF.

What equals it for a Soup, a Roast, an Entree?

Our illustrated booklet, "From Ranch to Table," an interesting write-up of the cattle industry, from the "branding" of the yearling to the "round-up" of the steer into savory Beef Extract, sent free; also enough "Rex" brand to give it a good trial, on receipt of 6c. for postage.

THE CUDAHY PHARMACEUTICAL CO. SOUTH OMAHA, NEB.

Indisputable Evidence

Of the Successful Treatment of Consumption and Chest Diseases by the English Method, as Discovered and Practiced by George Thomas Congreve.

NOTES FROM HIS CASE BOOK.

By our Special Commissioner.

CASE LXXVIII.

PHTHISIS — CASE OF MR. ROBERT BURNET, AGENT OF THE NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.

This case was referred to in the Christian Herald, London, of March 5th, 1884, as one "raised from the gates of death."

The patient visited Coombe Lodge on the 15th of May, 1883. Consumption in the family, the mother having died of phthisis. Had been five years in China. Had pneumonia first, four years ago; had pleurisy since, followed by signs of consumption, which became developed so far that on examination he was found to have the "Upper lobes of the lungs diseased, and congestion at the base of each."

Through June, July, and August, there was gradual improvement. In September he writes that Dr. Alexander had given him a certificate that he might resume his duties. Advised not to leave off the medicine or use of prescribed liniment until thoroughly well, especially as winter was approaching. Wisely he continued up to the commencement of the year, gradually diminishing the dose.

In February, 1884, I saw him again in London, and found him perfectly well.

Being about to return to China he wrote the following letter:—

"Dear Sir.—Considering the great change that has taken place since I began to use your 'Elixir,' I cannot leave this country without bearing testimony to its good effects. I feel as one who has been raised up from the gates of death, and have cause to bless God, who led me to you for advice and cure."

"What a difference between my prospects when I landed in London, in May, 1883, and my prospects now! Then, compelled to leave my field of labour, with the sentence of death in me; and now in good health returning to my missionary work in China."

"My acquaintances, looking upon me, have learned to know that the incurable disease has been conquered; for seeing me, they can no longer doubt that CONSUMPTION IS CURABLE."

"After using three bottles of 'Elixir' I was conscious of a change. My strength increased, and flesh came again on my bones. Moreover, I have been able to address many public meetings without feeling any strain or suffering from the exertion necessary. Now and again I caught cold from exposure, but a few doses of the medicine soon drove every trace of it away."

"Still more, I am glad to say that after being examined by medical men in Edinburgh, they stated that now there was no disease, and certified my fitness for resuming work in a foreign land."

"Earnestly hoping that the above testimony will lead many sufferers to you for relief.—I am, ever yours gratefully, ROBERT BURNET."

NOTE.—Mr. Burnet is using my medicine with good results in China. I have just sent a large supply to Hankoo by his request (dated Jan. 15th, 1887).

Owing to numerous orders for Mr. Congreve's remedies, sent to London, Eng., which it was impossible to execute from there on account of the difficulties and cost of sending small packages through the Custom House, he has lately opened a depot at 11 Wootter St., New York, and now wishes it to be known that henceforth all sufferers in America can promptly obtain, by addressing him there.

A CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, which even in advanced stages of that terrible disease may be used with certainty of relief.

Every person suffering from Chest Disease, and all of weak lungs and delicate habit, should read his book on Consumption of the lungs or decline, and its successful treatment, showing that formidable disease to be curable in all its stages, with observations on Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, together with accounts of nearly 400 perfectly cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, to be had post free for 25 cents, or it will be sent gratis with every first order of $1.00 trial bottle of Congreve's Balsamic Elixir.

GEO. THOMAS CONGREGRE, London, Eng., and 4 Wootter Street, New York.

D*E*L*A*V*A*U*S Whooping Cough Croup

Violent Coughs

Tested over 40 Years. EFFECTUAL AND HARMLESS. 50c. per bot., at druggists, or expressed from 6th and Wood Sts., Philadelphia, to any address 50c.

R*E*M*E*D*Y

Model 35 COLUMBIA.

Price, $125.

A wheel designed for the special use of lady riders only, and equipped more fully and satisfactorily in point of guards, etc., than any other of its class. While in this particular it is brought to the standard of the splendid Columbia Model 36, it can be stripped to correspond with the lighter Model 34.

The artistic and beautiful Columbia catalogue appeals to the good taste of every woman in the land. It is free at our agencies, or mailed for two two-cent stamps.

POPE MFG. CO.,

Boston. New York. Chicago. Hartford.

FREE—A Grand Offer—FREE.

Mme. A. RUPPERT'S FACE BLEACH.

Mme. A. Ruppert

Mme. A. RUPPERT says: "I appreciate the fact that there are thousands and thousands of ladies in the United States that would like to try my World-Renowned FACE BLEACH; but have been kept from doing so on account of the price, which is $2 per bottle, or 3 bottles taken together, $5. In order that all of these may have an opportunity, I will give to every caller, absolutely free, a sample bottle, and in order to supply those living outside of city, or in any part of the world, I will send it safely packed, plain wrapper, all charges prepaid, on receipt of 25c. silver or stamps."

In every case of freckles, pimples, moth, sallowness, blackheads, acne, eczema, oiliness or roughness or any discoloration or disease of the skin, and wrinkles (not caused by facial expression) FACE BLEACH removes absolutely. It does not cover up, as cosmetics do, but is a cure. Address all communications or call on MADAME A. RUPPERT (Dept. V), No. 6 E 14th St., New York.

No local dealer can compete with us

WALL PAPER

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration" mailed free with samples

Beautiful Cold Paper, 5c. per Roll. We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS, 50-52 W. 13th St., NEW YORK. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

AGENTS can make $50.00 to $100.00 a week canvassing for the best specialties ever offered. No competition. Write for terms. N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N, 34 East 14th St., New York, or Kansas City, Mo.

TRUSS The BEST

25c. for 100-pp. illustrated book, and learn Which is BEST—and WHY. B. SEELEY & CO., 25 S. 11th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

AGENTS wanted in every town. Something new. $75 a month. Write quick. Sherman & Butler, 26 W. Lake St., Chicago.

Many Old Farms

Worn-Out Farms

Require so much fertilizing that farms and gardens without this expense. The rich, loamy soil of Michigan Farms produces a fine crop of climate and freedom from cyclones, hizzards, together with good society, churches, etc., make Michigan Farms the best in the world. Write to me and I will tell you how to get the best farms on long time; low rate of interest. O. M. BARNES, Land Commissioner, Lansing, Mich.

"WELL BRED, SOON WED." GIRLS WHO USE

SAPOLIO

ARE QUICKLY MARRIED. TRY IT IN YOUR NEXT HOUSE-CLEANING.

FREE CURE.

Kidney

Liver & Urinary Diseases.

or if you will send us Ten Cents (postage stamps will do) to pay express charges, we will send you One Bottle by express, prepaid, FREE. We know ALKAVIS is a Positive Cure, and we send it FREE to prove its wonderful effects. Give your Post-office and nearest Express Office. Address, THE CHURCH KIDNEY CURE CO., 418 Fourth Avenue, New York.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE Corset Waists.

Worn by over a million mothers, misses and children. Clamp buckle at hip for hose supporters. Tape-fastened buttons. Cord-edge lutton holes. Various shapes—long, short or medium. For sale by all Leading Retailers. Marshall Field & Co. Chicago. Western Wholesale Depot. Send for illustrated circular to FERRIS BROS., Manufacturers, 341 Broadway, N. Y., Branch Office: 537 Market St., San Francisco.

EXAMINE Sunny Side Songs!

THE NEW AND POPULAR Sunday School Song Book,

By W. H. DOANE, the latest and best book by this favorite composer. 241 songs; $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., 76 E. 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

GRAND COMBINATION OFFER.

For only 15 CENTS, stamps or coin, STAMPING

OUTFIT, latest and best designs, no hot iron needed for them. SILK REMNANTS, 2 packages of brilliant GREAT STORY PAPER, for three months. OUR COUNTRY HOME, New York City.

TYPEWRITERS.

Unprejudiced advice given. All makes half-price. Shipped anywhere for examination. Exchanging a Specialty. Monthly payments. 52-page cat. free.

TYPEWRITERS, 45 Liberty St., New York. HEADQUARTERS, 186 Monroe St., Chicago.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$10.50 Buy the Oxford Improved SINGER Sewing Machine, with a complete set of attachments and guaranteed for 10 years. Shipped anywhere on 30 days' trial. No money required in advance. 15,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded. Buy from factory, save dealers' and agents' profit. Write today for our LARGE FREE CATALOGUE. Oxford Mfr. Co., 342 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

BABY CARRIAGES C. O. D.

Anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save dealer's profit. $18.50 carriage for $9.25. $12.00 carriage for $6.00. $5.95. Illustrated catalogue $5.00. $2.75. free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B29, Chicago, Ill.

Swiss Lozenges, For curing Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, &c.

Price, 25 cts. a Box Mailed. H. EDWARD WENDEL, S. E. cor. 3d and George Streets, Philadelphia

FREE

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this Hard Rubber Fountain Pen. Warranted a perfect writer & immense list. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

PIMPLES AND FRECKLES

A TRIAL BOTTLE of treatment for pimples, blackheads, oily skin, moth, freckles, tan, unnatural redness of the nose or face, hair and scalp; rough and scaly skin, sent by mail for 60c. Dr. Atkins' Complexion Soap at dealers or postpaid 25c., or three cakes, 65c. N. Y. Dermatological Institute. L. R. ATKINS, M. D., President, 142 West 23d st., New York.

Thoughts at the Lord's Table.*

The Supper and Departed Saints.

It is not true that the saints in glory care nothing for the affairs of this earth or for us who are still upon it. Christ stands in the same relation to them as he stands to us. The divine care and protection which we daily need and for which we pray, are theirs, are now bearing in them the full fruitage of glorification. And Christ stands in the same relation to us as he stands to them. He is our Saviour as he is their Saviour. The tie between them and us is still binding because we all are in Christ. They recognize this tie. They know us now far better than when they were bodily with us. They have a deeper interest in watching Christ's work advance in our hearts, for now they have the interest of heaven added to the interest they felt on earth. And they are looking forward to the day of reunion with us with an eagerness of anticipation which we cannot even imagine, for they know what heavenly joy is, and long with unspeakable longing for our participation in its blessed fullness.

The Memory-time.

Certainly each one of us wishes to possess the greatest amount of spiritual comfort and peace and joy. Well, one way to obtain these is indicated by the Lord's Supper and its keynote, "Remember Jesus;" not only remember him at his table, but remember him in every place throughout the daily life. I am sure it would be highly promotive of our spiritual growth, if we should set aside a certain portion of each day to think over what Jesus has done for us; to think of what we were before he found us and gave us life; to think of what we now are, of what we shall one day be; and to remember that all this is the work of Jesus for us. Let it be entirely apart from our time for Bible study, our time for prayer, our time for meditation upon God's truth. Let it be a memory-time, a time to remember our dear Lord. Our love will surely be made more glowing by such an exercise; and when our love is strong and ardent, and then comes our obedience, and then the abiding of Christ with us, then our spiritual comfort and peace and joy are gained.

Everlasting Consolations.

God in his love for us has granted us everlasting consolation against every form of earthly distress, of earthly opposition, of earthly trial. He has taken away all fear of the future, and he tells us that all is beautiful in our heavenly home. He has taken away all dread of death, and shows us that death is a mere form for us. Because of these wonderful gifts, these high privileges which we possess as saints of the Lord, he expects us to be established in every good word and work. He has a right to expect this from those to whom he has given everlasting consolations. If we did not have these, if we were always trembling before trials, if we were always fearing the future, if we were always dreading death and all that follows death, we should be in no condition to do good work. But God has freed us from all these, and our freedom enables us to do good work and to speak good words for our Lord. Let us remember that we cannot separate our privileges, our responsibilities and our duties.

The Space between.

On this happy and solemn occasion we are joined by the dear ones who once sat beside us, but who have gone before us into the other world. They have not forgotten us. There is no division between us except the little division caused by the flesh. There is no great gulf fixed between us, but only a little space over which their love and our faith can reach. There is no such thing as death for the sons of God. God is the God of the living, not of the dead. The Abrahams and Isaacs and Jacobs did not die; they could not die. "He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die." We may not see these departed ones,—we do not see them,—but that does not alter the fact. Our dear ones are living, are present with us, are now joining with us in praising God for his great work of salvation. It will not be long before we shall be with them and see plainly what we now see through signs, enjoying to the full the knowledge of the divine love and grace which we begun to know here.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

FROM A. C. ARMSTRONG & SON, NEW YORK.
The Pauline, by Rev. Alexander MacLaren, D.D., (Vol. II). Uniform with "The Expositor's Bible" Series. Pp. 503; cloth covers; price $1.50.
The Sermon Bible, by J. P. Peter to Revelation: This is the twelfth and last volume of the series, embracing the whole Scriptures. (Each volume, complete in itself, contains upward of 400 sermon outlines, and thousands of references.) Pp. 391; half-backram cloth binding; price $1.50.

The Gospel of St. Matthew: Two Volumes of Bible Class Expositions, by Alexander MacLaren, D.D. Pp. 493; cloth; price $1 each.

The Epistles of St. Peter: by James Rawson Lumby, D.D. Uniform with the "Expositor's Bible" Series; pp. 354; cloth binding; price $1.50.

FROM FLEMING H. REVELL CO., NEW YORK, CHICAGO AND TORONTO.

The Conversion of India from Paganism to the Present Time; by George Smith, C. I. E., LL.D.; cloth; price $1.50.

Paul, Evangelist and our Lord's Friend: A book for the American people; by John McDonald Leavitt, D.D., LL.D., the story of a clergyman who was converted from Roman Catholicism to Protestantism; pp. 286; price $1.

Heavenly Pearls Set in a Life, a Record of Experiences and Labors in India, America and Australia; by Lucy D. Osborn. A remarkable record of a spiritual life experience; pp. 364; cloth covers; illustrated; price $1.50.
Death and Afterwards: the nature and duration of the punishment of the wicked, considered by Henry Varley. 64 pp; paper covers; price, 25 cents.

The Christ; by James H. Brooks: a compendium of the testimony of the Holy Spirit on the inspired Word, concerning the person and work of the Saviour; pp. 287; cloth covers; price, $1.25.

FROM THOMAS WHITTAKER, 1 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

Living, Though Our Dead: A Timely Pamphlet by Rev. W. Gilman, D.D., Corresponding Secretary American Bible Society.

Aschubraedel, a Child Sketch; by Mrs. George A. Paull; 63 pp; illustrated; price, 50 cents.

The Theology of the New Testament, by Walter F. Adeney, M. A., Professor of New Testament Introduction, History and Exegesis, New College, London; pp. 248; cloth covers; price 75 cents. A compact and instructive work, valuable as an aid to Theological education.

FROM W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., PHILADELPHIA.
The Beautiful Flower Garden, by F. Schuyler Matthews; A Handy Manual for Floriculturists; copiously illustrated; paper covers; pp. 191; price 50 cents.
All About Street Trees: A Handy little Illustrated Book for Gardeners; paper covers; pp. 131; price 20 cents.

"My Fig Cake is splendid; in fact," says a young housekeeper, "it is almost too good. It seems as though I were making cake all the time for donations or church fairs or some committee. I tell them if they will follow the recipe in your cook book and use Cleveland's Baking Powder they can make cake just as nice as mine. I am sure I never made such cake before. Thanks both to Cleveland's baking powder and the cook book."

The recipe book is sent free on receipt of stamp and address.

CLEVELAND BAKING POWDER CO.,
81 & 83 Fulton St., N. Y.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

TALKS WITH MOTHERS.—No. 2.

FEEDING THE BABY.

Much is written at the present day about the care and feeding of infants by people whose only capability for dealing with the subject is a fertile brain, and whose only aim is to appear in print; every mother knows how unsatisfactory and fallacious such advice is when she attempts to follow it. How to feed the baby is the greatest problem met with in the happy state of motherhood, and upon its solution depends the health, the happiness and the life of the child. If the mother is able to nurse her child, the question of feeding is practically settled; if she is not, she should be guided by those who have had successful experience in feeding babies and not allow herself to experiment with different foods. There are scores of artificial foods offered for sale, but the best is none too good for the baby. Eminent authorities who have thoroughly investigated the subject of infant feeding, and scientists who have analyzed infant foods, unite in pronouncing Mellin's Food to be the only perfect substitute for mother's milk. It is palatable, nourishing and strengthening; the weakest stomach will retain and digest it, and the puniest child will thrive upon it beyond the mother's fondest expectations. For convalescents, consumptives, dyspeptics and the aged, Mellin's Food is also of incalculable value. It is a food, not a medicine, and the system receives the nourishment it demands for its daily needs. For those severely ill Mellin's Food will sustain the failing strength and promote a speedy recovery when convalescence has been established.

◆ GIVE THE BABY ◆

Perfect Substitute for Mother's Milk.
SEND for our book "The Care and Feeding of Infants," mailed free to any address.
DOLIBER-GOODALE CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Ladies' Shirt Waists.

Fine Figured Percale, gathered front, Yoke back, very large sleeve—specially good value for $1.00 each.

Fine Figured Percale, in Stripes and Small Figures, tucked front, Yoke back—very popular style for $1.25 each.

Other styles of Dotted Swiss, White and Colored Linens, Cheviots, Grass Cloth, in a wide variety at moderate prices.

James McCreery & Co.,

BROADWAY & 11th STREET,
NEW YORK.

WORN By All Women and Children

This is to Certify that there is only one hose supporter which cannot cut the stocking, the

WARREN HOSE SUPPORTER, with Rounded Rib on Holding Edges, and name of Warren stamped on end of fastener. All others are imitations and cannot help cutting the stocking. Made by George Frost Co., Boston.

For Sale Everywhere.

IT IS WORTH KNOWING

It is Interesting to Read what

Comfort Powder

will do for you.

It will cure

Eczema, Itching, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Bed Sores, Irritation under Truss, Burns, a Chafing Baby, Tender Feet.

It ensures a clear complexion. Sold by druggists, 50 cents per box, postage paid. COMFORT POWDER CO., HARTFORD, CONN. Send 2 two-cent stamps for liberal sample and book.

Use COMFORT SOAP, the Finest Medicated Toilet Soap for the Hands, the Face, and the Complexion.

PRINTING OFFICE 15¢
A large font of Type (over 4A) with Figures, Holder, Indelible Ink, Pad, Tweezers, Corkscrew, etc., as shown in cut, complete in neat case. Best Allen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Regular Price 50¢. Sample postpaid for 15¢. To introduce, with Catalogue of 1000 new articles. CAT. FREE. INGERSOLL & Bro. 65 Cortlandt St. N.Y. City

2c. WALL PAPER.
Gilt paper 3 1/2 cts. up. Embossed gold 10 cts. to 12 1/2 cts. per roll. 100 New Samples mailed FREE for 2 cents postage. Good Quality. Fair Dealings. KRIN WALL PAPER CO., 183 ELM ST., CINCINNATI, O.

DOOR-PLATES, 35 cts. 11 in. wide; gold; durable stamps. Springfield Door-plate Co., 18 Grays av., Springfield, Mass.

FREE!

Our large 24-page catalogue of Organs, also our new and elegant catalogue of Pianos, containing 16 pages. We have the largest manufacturing plant in the world, from which we sell direct to the consumer at wholesale prices, thus saving the profits of the dealer and the commissions of the agents. We furnish a first-class Organ, warranted 20 years, with stool and book, for $27.50 only.

NO MONEY REQUIRED

until instrument has been thoroughly tested in your own house. Sold on instalments. Easy payment.

We positively guarantee every organ and Piano twenty years. Send for catalogue at once if you want to obtain the greatest bargain ever offered on earth. Write your name and address plainly, and we will send by mail same day letter is received.

As an advertisement, we will sell the first Piano of our make in a place for only $175.00. Stool, Book and Cover Free. Regular price, $350.00.

Beethoven Piano and Organ Co.,
P. O. Box 741 Washington, N. J.

AN ACCIDENT STARTS A REVIVAL.
One evening last summer, in the town of helby, O., a young man and woman set out in a wagon to attend a lecture, to be delivered by Col. Copeland before the Young people's Christian League. Warren Blackman was the young man, and his companion was the daughter of a neighbor. Both were children of Christian parents, and had been companions from youth. While crossing the B. & O. track on East Main Street, they were struck by the fast mail and both were instantly killed. The stricken parents, although stunned by their affliction, resigned themselves to God's love and wisdom. Hundreds of their neighbors were soon praying for and with them. The accident which deprived them of their loving children, was the starting point of a great revival.

For Indigestion
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
Dr. W. W. GARNER, Springfield, Mass., says: "I value it as an excellent preventative of indigestion and a pleasant acidulated drink when properly diluted with water, and sweetened."

Do You Have Asthma?
If you do, you will be glad to hear that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is reported a positive cure for the disease. The Kola importing Co., 164 Broadway, New York, have such faith in this new discovery, that they are sending out free by mail, large trial cases of Kola Compound to all sufferers from Asthma, who send their name and address on a postal card. Write to them.

Wonderful Cures of Catarrh and Consumption by a New Discovery.
Wonderful cures of Lung Diseases, Catarrh of the Throat, and Consumption, are made by the new treatment known in Europe as the Andralbroca Discovery. If you are a sufferer you should write to the New Medical Advance, 67 East 6th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and they will send you this new treatment free for trial. State age and all particulars of your disease.

Good Times Ahead.
No doubt about it, we are rapidly leaving "hard times" in the rear, and those who are working for good times and expecting them are already enjoying a fair degree of prosperity. If, however, things are not moving satisfactorily, write to B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., and they will give you a business opportunity that will prove a surprise and delight.

You know a man by the company he keeps. If he is taking Hood's Sarsaparilla you can rest assured that his blood is pure, his appetite keen and his health the best. Try it yourself.

Rubifoam
Removes all uncleanness from the teeth, prevents decay, is deliciously flavored, free from acid. The friend of men, women, and children.
Sample vial free. E. W. Hoyt & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price 25 cents.
A Perfect Liquid Dentifrice

$31.75.

Page 15. Price $31.75. Spindle Body Wagon.

WE WILL SELL YOU THE BEST BUGGY
Cart, Harness, Phaeton, Spring Wagon, Surrey or Saddle in the world at lowest wholesale prices. Shipped anywhere without paying one cent in advance. Two years written warranty. Send for our new illustrated catalogue. Its free with testimonials and references. Write to-day and save money.
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 155 W. Van Buren St., B X 3, Chicago, Ill.

THE WORLD'S FAIR HIGHEST AWARDS, MEDAL AND DIPLOMA.
on our INCUBATOR and BROODER combined. If you are interested in Poultry, it will pay you to send 4 cents in stamps for 72 page catalogue, giving valuable points on Poultry Culture. Address Reliable Incubator Co., Quincy, Ill.

MONEY IN SPRING CHICKENS.
The Hen Is Not In It.
The invincible egg hatcher does the business. Price, $1.00. Big money. Send 4 cents for Catalogue No. 2. It tells all. 2600 sold in 1923.
BUCKEYE INCUBATOR CO., Springfield, Ohio.

TAPE-WORM
Expelled alive in 60 minutes with head, or no charge. Send 2c stamp for circular.
Dr. M. Ney Smith, Specialist, 721 Olive, St. Louis, Mo.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Book free; pills 25c. At drugstores, or write B.F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

WANTED.—A position on a farm or near a suburban residence as an ornament, and to pump water, sprinkle lawns, carry water up stairs, cut wood, cut feed, run a dynamo for electric light purposes, and do a great variety of odd jobs. For a week I have been a galvanizing-plant after completed Aermotor; previous to that I was only Steel, Zinc and Aluminum, unalloyed and unmade up. My services can be had very cheap, if taken now, during the slack season. Apply to my parents, the Aermotor Company, 12th, Rockwell and Fillmore streets, Chicago, N.E.—I am always at home and steady. Ours is the largest family of its kind in the world, and never has one of us gone wrong. We are also a most powerful family, with marvelous endurance. We have iron constitutions for rather Steel ones! but are very sensitive, being visibly affected by a breath of air. We stand high and have great influence, being able to persuade water to run uphill. In fact, we are superior beings, having been placed by our creator between the earth and heavens. Our Steel has been tried in many a tilt and towers above everything everywhere. We are industrious beyond anything ever known, since we work 24 hours a day and more than 365 days in the year. We are untiring in our vigilance—we stand over you day and night. We are economical beyond anything on the earth or in the heavens, as we take into our systems absolutely nothing but thin air. Write quick, we are going fast.

SUBURBAN JOBS
Like this which delight the eye and add innumerable comforts to any home, are furnished at prices within reach of all. Cypress, Pine or Galvanized Steel Tanks, with graceful galvanized steel substructures a specialty. We furnish galvanized steel stock tanks that do not leak and make mud holes at less than wooden ones cost.
The Aermotor Co. proposes to distribute $500 CASH IN PRIZES, for the best essay written by the wife, son or daughter of a farmer or user of a windmill answering the question—WHY SHOULD I USE AN AERMOTOR? For conditions of competition and amounts and number of prizes send for particulars to the Aermotor Co., Chicago, or to its branches, at San Francisco, Kansas City, Lincoln, Neb., Sioux City, Iowa, Minneapolis, Buffalo, or 65 Park Place, N. Y. City.

WIRE FENCING
WIRE ROPE SELVAGE.
McMULLEN'S
POULTRY AND RABBIT NETTING
Railroad, Farm, Garden, Cemetery, Lawn Fencing. Prices down. Freight paid. Catalog free. McMullen Woven Wire Fence Co., Chicago.

MURRAY'S WORLD RENOWNED $5.95 SINGLE BUGGY HARNESS.
World Renowned $55.95 Brewster and End Spring Top Buggies
A FEW SAMPLE BARGAINS FROM OUR CATALOGUE:
MURRAY NO. 2 SINGLE BUGGY HARNESS, $9.85
MURRAY NO. 3 SINGLE BUGGY HARNESS, 10.95
MURRAY NO. 4 DOUBLE BUGGY HARNESS, 15.70
MURRAY NO. 5 DOUBLE BUGGY HARNESS, 19.95
And a mammoth line of Saddles of all kinds.
Write us for Catalogue No. 16 which will be sent FREE.

FREE A fine 14k gold plated watch to every reader of this paper. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you one of these elegant, richly jeweled, gold finished watches by express free examination, and if you think it is equal in appearance to any $25.00 gold watch pay our sample price $5.00, and it is yours. We send with the watch our guarantee that you can return it at any time within one year if not satisfactory, and if you sell or cause the sale of six watches we will give you one free. Write at once, as we shall send out samples for 60 days only. Address
THE NATIONAL M.F.C. & IMPORTING CO.,
334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES, if you have superfluous HAIR ON THE FACE send for new information how to remove it easily and effectively without chemicals or instruments.
Correspondence confidential in plain, sealed envelope.
Mrs. M. N. PERRY, box 93, Oak Park, Ill.
Say you saw this in Christian Herald.

STOUT PERSONS by sending one dollar will receive the Recipe of a London (Eng.) physician, from one who has tried it with positive success. It is infallible and costs little.
WM. C. FREEMAN, box 6, 408 Myrtle ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

... THE ... HARTFORD SAFETIES.
Have You Seen Them?

These Bicycles are made for MEN and LADIES at $100.00, for BOYS and MISSES at $75.00, with choice of the Columbia Single Tube Tire or Hartford Inner Tube Tire. Examine these before you buy.
Our CATALOGUE is sent free to anyone sending their address to
THE HARTFORD CYCLE CO.,
HARTFORD, CONN.

CHOICE 50c. TRIAL SETS.
Set B—16 pkts. Vegetable Seeds, 50c
" E—20 pkts. Flower Seeds, 50c
" F—10 Lovely Carnation Pinks, 50c
" G—10 Prize Chrysanthemums, 50c
" H—4 Superb French Cannas, 50c
" I—10 Elegant Roses, 50c
" M—24 Fine Gladioli Bulbs, 50c
" P—6 Hardy Ornamental Shrubs, 50c
" R—6 Choice Grape Vines, 50c
1/2 each of any two sets, 50c
No two plants alike in these sets.
Any 3 Sets, $1.25; 5 for $2.
By mail, postpaid. Safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Order by the letters from this advt. NOW as these are introductory sets not in catalogue, an elegant annual of 168 pages, free. Everything of the best for Orchard, Vineyard, Lawn and Garden. 40th year, 1,000 acres, 28 greenhouses.
STORRS & HARRISON CO.,
PAINESVILLE, OHIO, Box 338

The sower has no second chance. If you would at first succeed, be sure and start with
FERRY'S SEEDS.
Ferry's Seed Annual for 1894 contains the sum and substance of the latest farming knowledge. Every planter should have it. Sent free.
D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich.

SEEDS. For 10c, I will send 5 pkts. of either flower or vegetable seeds and a copy of Two's Seed Almanac, or Almanac free. Best seed book out.
H. E. TWEED, Box 33, Ripley, O.

THE WILBER H. MURRAY MFG. CO., CINCINNATI, OHIO.

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION
MODENE
AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.
Discovered by Accident.—In COMPOUNDING, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CAN NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. MODENE SUPERCEDES ELECTROLYSIS.
Recommended by all who have tested its merits.—Use of people of refinement.
Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in Modene, which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail to safety mailing cases, postage paid, (securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. Correspondence sacredly private. Postage stamps received the same as cash. (ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTRY AND THIS PAPER.) Cut this advertisement out.
LOCAL AND GENERAL AGENTS
MODENE MANUFACTURING CO., CINCINNATI, O., U. S. A.
Manufacturers of the Highest Grade Hair Preparations.
You can register your letter at any Post-office to insure its safe delivery.
We Offer $1,000 FOR FAILURE OF THE SLIGHTEST INJURY. EVERY BOTTLE GUARANTEED.
MUST HAVE AGENTS AT ONCE. Sample Sashlock free by mail for 2c. stamp. Immense Unrivaled. Only good one ever invented. Beats weights. Sales unparalleled. $12 a day. Write quick.
BROADHARD, Box 23, Phila.

MILLIONS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR SAW AND ADMIRE THE MAGNIFICENT LAWNS PRODUCED BY SOWING THE
HENDERSON LAWN GRASS SEED.
You can duplicate these in any size by following the simple directions which we send, without charge, with every order.
The Henderson Lawn Grass Seed can be obtained from druggists, dealers or us direct, for 25 cents per qt., $1.50 per peck, $5.00 per bushel. If by mail, add 5 cents per qt. for postage.
A quart will sow an area 15 x 20 feet=300 square feet; for an acre 5 bushels are required.
Our 1894 Catalogue of "EVERYTHING for the GARDEN" will be sent FREE with every order if you will name paper and date of issue of this advertisement.
Every copy, with postage, costs us 25 cts., and should be in the hands of every one interested in garden matters—Its 160 pages contain nearly 500 engravings and six colored plates of flowers and vegetables. Postage stamps accepted as cash.
PETER HENDERSON & CO., 35 & 37 Cortlandt St., New York.

SPRAY YOUR FRUIT TREES & VINES
Stahl's Double Acting Excelsior Spraying Outlets prevent Leaf Blight & Wormy Fruit. Insures a heavy yield of all Fruit and Vegetable crops. Thousands in use. Send 6 cts. for catalogue and full treatise on spraying. Circulars free.
WM. STAHL, Quincy, Ill.

PILES CURED
Our Book on Piles—Free.
Bacon Medicine Co.,
Richmond, Va., U.S.A.

Page 46. Price $59. Open Pleasure Wagon.

GRAY HAIR RESTORED to youthful color by Dr. Gray's Hair Health, Remover and Dressing. Don't stain. 50c. Send to London Supply Co., 100 Broadway, N. Y. FREE for Hair Book and box Gray's Hair Cream, Best Corn Cure, both FREE

These four women, and four million others, are to-day wearing Dr. Warner's Coraline Corsets. Made in 25 different patterns, to fit every variety of figure—tall, short, slender, stout, either long, short, or medium waisted. The right one fits like custom-made. $1 to $12. Highest grade Parisian styles. Sold everywhere. Warner Bros., Makers, New York and Chicago.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 17.

COPYRIGHT 1894. BY LOU S. KLOPSCH.

NUMBER 15.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, APRIL 11, 1894.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

A Royal City's Ruin.

Beautiful Jezreel, the Scene of Wicked Ahab's Punishment—The fate of a City of Palaces and Sinful Pleasures.

On the brow of a rocky declivity that leads to the broad and fertile Valley of Jezreel, which lies between the mountains of Gilboa and Hermon, in Palestine, is the little town of Zer-in. From its eminence the eye ranges over the valley as far east as the Jordan, and west to the ranges of Carmel that rise between it and the horizon. The whole territory, as far as the eye can reach, is intensely historic. In Zer-in itself, with its twenty odd dilapidated, dwellings and its handful of inhabitants, we find the ancient and once powerful royal city of Jezreel, where the kings of Israel had a palace, and held court, and where Ahab, probably the most wicked of the Israelitish monarchs, built his house, and flaunted his wickedness before the Lord. His vain, idol-worshipping queen, Jezebel, supported an establishment of four hundred heathen priests, who had a temple dedicated to the goddess, Astarte, in a grove within the city walls. Jezebel's house, in which dwelt all the women of Ahab's court, was on the city wall, and nearby was a watch-tower, on which stood sentinels to give notice in front of the gateway and under the city wall was an open space, such as is found in many eastern cities, where the dogs prowled in search of offal. Here, doubtless, occurred the tragedy which closed in the death of Jezebel, in startling fulfilment of prophecy. (II. Kings 9: 33-37.)

A little to the east of the traditional site of the royal palace of Ahab in Jezreel, is a smooth tract of land, that is still pointed out as the vineyard of Naboth which the wicked king coveted to enlarge his palace grounds. Here the prophet Elijah met and rebuked Ahab for consenting to the death of Naboth, and passed the Divine condemnation upon him and all his house—a sentence that was terribly fulfilled when, at Jehu's order, the seventy sons of Ahab were slain and their heads put in baskets and sent to Jehu at Jezreel. (II. Kings 10: 7, 8.) These ghastly episodes doubtless made the city distasteful to the Kings of Israel, for it never again became prominent Jezreel," beside which Saul encamped before his fatal battle on Gilboa, is a perennial spring near Zer-in, which spreads out into a clear, sparkling pool, forty or fifty feet in width. At this pool also, as tradition affirms, Gideon and his warriors rested before their night attack on the Amalekites. Crusaders, Saracens and Arabs have all camped in turn beside this limpid and refreshing stream, and many battles have been fought in its neighborhood. Josephus, the celebrated Jewish historian, affirms that beside this spring Naboth and his sons were executed, but others hold a different opinion. The valley of Jezreel, now called by the Arabs, "Jebel-ed-Duh," is a branch or offshoot of the vaster Valley of Esdraelon. Almost every foot of it marks some old battle-ground of Philistines, Midianites, Amalekites, Egyptians, Syrians, Assyrians, Israelites, Romans, Maccabees, Moslems, and Christians—all mighty in the warlike panorama of the past. Once the scene of the Armageddon, Rev. 16: 16), extends about thirty miles from east to west and is probably eighteen miles in breadth. To the north lie the blue mountains of Galilee and the hills of Samaria to the south; Tabor, Little Hermon and Gilboa loom up on the east and gray Carmel, the scene of Elijah's sacrifice, lies opposite. In and around Esdraelon is the most fertile portion of the land of Canaan. It was the heritage of the tribe of Issachar, and from the very dawn of Hebrew history, has been the place specially chosen for encampment and battle. Across its grassy levels Napoleon led his troops on the march from Egypt into Syria. As one historian eloquently writes: "Warriors out of every nation which is under heaven have here pitched their tents, and beheld the various banners of their nations wet with the dew of Tabor and Hermon." Esdraelon, like all the desirable tracts of land in Palestine, is in the control of the Turkish Government and is only partially in their history. Its palaces, towers and splendid buildings were permitted to fall into decay, and its very site was in doubt for several centuries, until Turner, Buckingham and other travelers conclusively identified it with the Arab village of Zer-in.

THE TOWER OF JEZREEL, PALESTINE, AS IT NOW APPEARS.

(From a photograph brought from the Holy Land by Rev. Dr. Talmage.)

Round about the ancient royal city are many historic places. "The "Fountain of greatest military evolutions in Palestine, it is now one of the most neglected localities of that country, and little known to the outside world, as it is seldom visited by travelers.

The plain of Esdraelon (which is also known in Scripture as the plain of Megiddo, II. Chron. 35: 22 and in the Apocalypse as leys, since, though still rich in pasturage and natural advantages, they are almost as unoccupied as the "Kara Koum" or the Sahara. Palestine abounds in waste places, once populous, but now little better than mere heaps of debris; but in few localities has the Divine displeasure been more permanently illustrated than in Jezreel, now so completely desolated that a single broken wall is all that remains as a landmark to indicate where it once stood.

cultivated. Its desolation is all the more remarkable in view of its wonderful richness, for, except at its eastern extremity, there is not a single inhabited village on its whole surface. Both Esdraelon and the Valley of Jezreel are the home of the wandering Bedouin. Yet there was a time when these valleys, both of which take their names from the royal city of Jezreel, (Esdraelon merely being the Greek form), were occupied by a great pastoral people, with flocks and herds and "camels without number." Surely the sentence of judgment against the house of Ahab for its sins, and which caused Jezreel to be depopulated, has extended to these once beautiful val-

STRANGERS IN TOWN.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday at the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Text: Matt. 25: 35, "I was a stranger and ye took me in."

IT is a moral disaster that jocosity has despoiled so many passages of Scripture, and my text is one that has suffered from irreverent and misapplied quotation. It shows great poverty of wit and humor when people take the Sword of divine truth for a game at fencing, or chip off from the Kohinoor diamond of Inspiration a sparkle to decorate a fool's cap. My text is the salutation in the last Judgment to be given to those who have shown hospitality, and kindness, and Christian helpfulness to strangers. By railroad and steamboat the population of the earth is all the time in motion, and from one year's end to another, our cities are crowded with visitors. Every morning on the tracks of the Hudson River, the Pennsylvania, the Erie, the Long Island railroads there come passenger trains more than I can number; so that all the depots and the wharves are a-rumble and a-clang with the coming in of a great immigration of strangers. Some of them come for purposes of barter, some for mechanism, some for artistic gratification, some for sight-seeing. A great many of them go out on the evening trains, and consequently the city makes but little impression upon them; but there are multitudes who, in the hotels and boarding-houses, make temporary residence. They tarry here for three or four days, or as many weeks. They spend the days in the stores and the evenings in sight-seeing. Their temporary stay will make or break them, not only financially but morally, for this world and the world that is to come. Multitudes of them come into our morning and evening services. I am conscious that I stand in the presence of many this moment. I desire more especially to speak to them. May God give me the right word and help me to utter it in the right way.

There have glided into this house those unknown to others, whose history, if told, would be more thrilling than the deepest tragedy, more exciting than Patti's song, more bright than a spring morning, more awful than a wintry midnight. If they could stand up here and tell the story of their escapes, and their temptations, and their bereavements, and their disasters, and their victories, and their defeats, there would be in this house such a commingling of groans and acclamations as would make the place unendurable.

There is a man, who, in infancy, lay in a cradle satin-lined. Out yonder is a man who was picked up, a foundling, on Boston Common. Here is a man who is coolly observing this religious service, expecting no advantage, and caring for no advantage for himself; while yonder is a man who has been for ten years in an awful conflagration of evil habits, and he is a mere cinder of a destroyed nature, and he is wondering if there shall be in this service any escape or help for his immortal soul. Meeting you only once, perhaps, face to face, I strike hands with you in an earnest talk about your present condition, and your eternal well-being. St. Paul's ship at Melita went to pieces where two seas meet; but we stand to-day at a point where a thousand seas converge, and eternity alone can tell the issue of the hour.

The hotels of this country, for beauty and elegance, are not surpassed by the hotels in any other land; but those that are most celebrated for brilliancy of tapestry and mirror cannot give to the guest any costly apartment, unless he can afford a parlor in addition to his lodging. The stranger, therefore, will generally find assigned to him a room without any pictures, and perhaps any rocking chair! He will find a box of matches on a bureau, and an old newspaper left by the previous occupant, and that will be about all the ornamentation. At seven o'clock in the evening, after having taken his repast, he will look over his memorandum-book of the day's work; he will write a letter to his home, and then a desperation will seize upon him to get out. You hear the great city thundering under your windows, and you say: "I must join that procession," and in ten minutes you have joined it. Where are you going? "Oh," you say, "I haven't made up my mind yet." Better make up your mind before you start. Perhaps the very way you go now you will always go. Twenty years ago, there were two young men who came down the Astor House steps, and started out in a wrong direction, where they have been going ever since.

"Well, where are you going?" says one man. "I am going to the Academy to hear some music." Good. I would like to join you at the door. At the tap of the orchestral baton, all the gates of harmony and beauty will open before your soul. I congratulate you. Where are you going? "Well," you say, "I am going up to see some advertised pictures." Good. I should like to go along with you and look over the same catalogue, and study with you Ken-sett, and Bierstadt, and Church, and Moran. Nothing more elevating than good pictures. Where are you going? "Well," you say, "I am going up to the Young Men's Christian Association rooms." Good. You will find there gymnastics to strengthen the muscles, and books to improve the mind, and Christian influence to save the soul. I wish every city in the United States had as fine a palace for its Young Men's Christian Association as New York has. Where are you going? "Well," you say, "I am going to take a long walk up Broadway, and so turn around into the Bowery. I am going to study human life." Good. A walk through Broadway at eight o'clock at night is interesting, educating, fascinating, appalling, exhilarating to the last degree. Stop in front of that theatre, and see who goes in. Stop at that saloon and see who come out. See the great tides of life surging backward and forward, and beating against the marble of the curbstone, and eddying down into the saloons. What is that mark on the face of that debauchee? It is the hectic flesh of eternal death. What is that woman's laughter? It is the shriek of a lost soul. Who is that Christian man going along with a vial of anodyne to the dying pauper on Elm street? Who is that belated man on the way to a prayer-meeting? Who is that city missionary going to take a box in which to bury a child? Who are all these clusters of bright and beautiful faces? They are going to some interesting place of amusement. Who is that man going into the drug-store? That is the man who yesterday lost all his fortune on Wall street. He is going in for a dose of bella-donna, and before morning it will make no difference to him whether stocks are up or down. I tell you that Broadway, between seven and twelve o'clock at night, between the Battery and Central Park is an Austerlitz, a Gettysburg, a Waterloo, where kingdoms are lost or won, and three worlds mingle in the strife.

I meet another coming down off the hotel steps, and I say: "Where are you going?" You say: "I am going with a merchant of New York who has promised to show me the underground life of the city. I am his customer, and he is going to oblige me very much." Stop! A business house that tries to get or keep your custom through such a process as that is not worthy of you. There are business establishments in our cities which have for years been sending to destruction hundreds and thousands of merchants. They have a secret drawer in the counter, where money is kept, and the clerk goes and get it when he wants to take these visitors to the city through the low slums and haunts of vice. I care not how high-sounding the name of a commercial establishment if it proposes to get customers or to keep them by such a process as that; drop their acquaintance. They have robbed you of something for which dollars and cents can never give you compensation. When one of these Western merchants has been dragged by one of those commercial agents through the slums of the city, he is not fit to go home. The mere memory of what he has seen will be moral pollution. I think you had better let the city missionary and the police attend to the exploration of New York and underground life. You do not go to a small-pox hospital for the purpose of exploration. You do not go there, because you are afraid of contagion. And yet, you go into the presence of a moral leprosy that is as much more dangerous to you, as the death of the soul is worse than the death of the body. I will undertake to say that nine-tenths of the men who have been ruined in our cities have been ruined by simply going to observe without any idea of participating. The fact is that underground city life is a filthy, fuming, reeking, pestiferous depth which blasts the eye that looks at it. In the Reign of Terror, in 1792, in Paris, people, escaping from the officers of the law, got into the sewers of the city, and crawled and walked through miles of that awful labyrinth, stifled with the atmosphere and almost dead, some of them, when they came out to the river Seine, where they washed themselves and again breathed the fresh air. But I have to tell you that a great many of the men who go on the work of exploration through the underground gutters of New York life never come out at any Seine river where they can wash off the pollution of the moral sewage. Stranger, if one of the representatives of a commercial establishment proposes to take you and show you the "sights" of the town and underground New York, say to him: "Please, sir, what part do you propose to show me?"

About sixteen years ago as a minister of religion I felt I had a divine commission to explore the iniquities of our cities. I did not ask counsel of my session, or my Presbytery, or of the newspapers, but asking the companionship of three prominent police officials and two of the elders of my church, I unrolled my commission and it said: "Son of man, dig into the wall; and when I had digged into the wall, behold a door; and he said, go in and see the wicked abominations that are done here; and I went in, and saw, and behold!" Brought up in the country, and surrounded by much parental care, I had not until that time seen the haunts of iniquity. By the grace of God defended, I had never sowed my "wild oats." I had somehow been able to tell from various sources something about the iniquities of the great cities, and to preach against them; but I saw, in the destruction of a great multitude of the people, that there must be an infatuation and a temptation that had never been spoken about, and I said: "I will explore." I saw thousands of men going down, and if there had been a spiritual percussion answering to the physical percussion, the whole air would have been full of the rumble, and roar, and crack, and thunder of the demolition, and this moment, if we should pause in our service, we should hear the crash, crash! Just as in the sickly season you sometimes hear the bell at the gate of the cemetery ringing almost incessantly, so I found that the bell at the gate of the cemetery where ruined souls are buried was tolling by day and tolling by night. I said, "I will explore." I went as a physician goes into a fever lazaretto, to see what practical and useful information I might get. That would be a foolish doctor who would stand outside the door of an invalid writing a Latin prescription. When the lecturer in a medical college is done with his lecture, he takes the students into the dissecting room, and he shows them the reality. I went and saw, and came forth to my pulpit to report a plague, and to tell how sin dissects the body, and dissects the mind, and dissects the soul. "Oh!" say you, "are you not afraid that in consequence of such exploration of the iniquities of the city other persons might make exploration, and do themselves damage?" I reply: "If, in company with the Commissioner of Police, and the Captain of Police, and the Inspector of Police, and the company of two Christian gentlemen, and not with the spirit of curiosity but that you may see sin in order the better to combat it, then, in the name of the eternal God, go? But, if not, then stay away." Wellington, standing in the battle of Waterloo when the bullets were buzzing around his head, saw a civilian on the field. He said to him, "Sir, what are you doing here? Be off!" "Why," replied the civilian, "there is no more danger here for me than there is for you." Then Wellington flushed up and said, "God and my country demand that I be here, but you have no errand here." Now I, as an officer in the army of Jesus Christ, went on that exploration, and on to that battlefield. If you bear a like commission, go; if not, stay away. But you say, "Don't you think that somehow the description of those places induces people to go and see for themselves?" I answer, yes, just as much as the description of yellow fever in some scourged city would induce people to go down there and get the pestilence. But I may be addressing some stranger already destroyed. Where is he that I may pointedly yet kindly address him. Come back! and wash in the deep fountain of a Saviour's mercy. I do not give you a cup, or a chalice, or a pitcher with a limited supply to effect your ablutions. I point you to the five oceans of God's mercy. Oh! that the Atlantic and Pacific surges of divine forgiveness might roll over your soul. As the glorious sun of God's forgiveness rides on toward the mid heavens, ready to submerge you in warmth and light and love, I bid you good morning! Morning of peace for all your troubles. Morning of liberation for all your incarcerations. Morning of resurrection for your soul buried in sin. Good morning! Morning for the resuscitated household that has been waiting for your return. Morning for the cradle and the crib already disgraced with being that of a drunkard's child. Morning for the daughter that has trudged off to hard work because you did not take care of home. Morning for the wife who at forty or fifty years has the wrinkled face, and the stooped shoulder, and the white hair. Morning for one. Morning for all. Good morning! In God's name, good morning!

In our last dreadful war the Federals and the Confederates were encamped on opposite sides of the Rappahannock, and one morning the brass band of the Northern troops played the national air, and all the Northern troops cheered and cheered. Then on the opposite side of the Rappahannock the brass band of the Confederates played "My Maryland" and "Dixie," and then all the Southern troops cheered and cheered. But after awhile one of the bands struck up "Home, Sweet Home," and the band on the opposite side of the river took up the gain, and when the tune was done the Confederates and the Federals all together lifted, as the tears rolled down their cheeks, "one great huzza! huzza! Well, my friends, heaven comes very near to-day." It is only a stream that divides us—the narrow stream of death—and the voices there and the voices here seem to commingle, and we in trumpets, and hosannahs, and hallelujahs, and the chorus of the united song "earth and heaven is, 'Home, Sweet Home.' Home of bright domestic circle on earth. Home of forgiveness in the great part of God. Home of eternal rest in heaven. Home! Home! Home!"

But suppose you are standing on a crag of a mountain, and on the edge of a precipice, and all unguarded, and some one either in love or hate shall run up behind you and push you off. It is easy enough to push you off. But who would do so dastardly a deed? Why, that is done every hour of every day and every hour of every night. Men come to the verge of city life and say, "Now we will just look off. Come, young man, do not be afraid. Come near, let us look off." He comes to the edge and looks, and looks until, after awhile, Satan sneaks up behind him, and puts a hand on each of his shoulders, and pushes him off. Society says it is evil proclivity on the part of that young man. Oh, no! He was simply an explorer, and sacrificed his life in discovery. A young man comes in from the country bragging that nothing can do him any harm. He knows about all the tricks of city life. "Why," he says, "did not I receive a circular in the country telling me that somehow they found out I was a sharp business man, and if I would only send a certain amount of money by mail or express, charges prepaid, they would send a package with which I could make a fortune in two months; but I did not believe it. My neighbors did, but I did not. Why, no man could take my money. I carry it in a pocket inside my vest. Oh they can't cheat me. I know what I am about." While at the same time, that very moment, such men are succumbing to the worst Satanic influences, in the simple fact that they are going to observe.

Now, if a man or woman shall go down into a haunt of iniquity for the purpose of reforming men and women, or for the sake of being able intelligently to warn people against such perils, if as did John Howard or Elizabeth Fry or Thomas Chalmers, they go down among the abandoned for the sake of saving them, then such explorers shall be God-protected and they will come out better than when they went in. But if you go on this work of exploration merely for the purpose of satisfying a morbid curiosity, I will take twenty per cent off your moral character.

Sabbath morning comes. You wake up in the hotel. You have had a longer sleep than usual. You say: "Where am I? a thousand miles from home? I have no family to take to church to-day. My pastor will not expect my presence. I think I shall look over my accounts and study my memorandum book. Then I will write a few business-letters, and talk to that merchant who came in on the same train with me." Stop! you cannot afford to do it.

"But," you say, "I am worth five hundred thousand dollars." You cannot afford to do it. You say: "I am worth a million dollars." You cannot afford to do it. All you gain by breaking the Sabbath you will lose. You will lose one of three things: your intellect, your morals, or your property, and you cannot point in the whole earth to a single exception to this rule. God gives us six days and keeps one for himself. Now, if we try to get the seventh, he will upset the work of all the other six.

I remember going up Mount Washington, before the railroad had been built, to the Tip-Top House, and the guide would come around to our horses and stop up when we were crossing a very steep and dangerous place, and he would tighten the girth of the horse, and straighten the saddle. And I have to tell you that this road of life is so steep and full of peril we must, at least one day in seven, stop and have the harness of life readjusted, and our souls re-equipped. The seven days of the week are like seven business partners, and you must give to each one his share, or the business will be broken up. God is so generous with us: he has given you six days to his one. Now, here is a Father who has seven apples, and he gives six to his greedy boy, proposing to keep one for himself. The greedy boy grabs for the other one and loses all the six.

How few men there are who know how to keep the Lord's Day away from home. A great many who are consistent on the banks of the St. Lawrence, or the Alabama, or the Mississippi, are not consistent when they get so far off as the East River. I repeat—though it is putting it on a low ground—you cannot financially afford to break the Lord's Day. It is only another way of tearing up your government securities, and putting down the price of goods, and blowing up your store. I have friends who are all the time slicing off pieces of the Sabbath. They cut a little of the Sabbath off that end, and a little of the Sabbath off this end. They do not keep the twenty-four hours. The Bible says: "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." I have good friends who are quite accustomed to leaving Albany by the midnight train on Saturday night, and getting home before church. Now, there may be occasions when it is right, but generally it is wrong. How, if the train should run off the track into the North River? I hope your friends will not send to me to preach your funeral sermon. It would be an awkward thing for me to stand up by your side and preach—you a Christian man, killed on a rail-train traveling on a Sunday morning. "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." Oh, we want to keep vigilantly in this country the American Sabbath, and not have transplanted here the European Sabbath, which for the most part is no Sabbath at all.

Oh, strangers, welcome to the great city. May you find Christ here, and not any physical or moral damage. Men coming from inland, from distant cities, have here found God and found him in our service. May that be your case to-day. You thought you were brought to this place merely for the purpose of sight-seeing. Perhaps God brought you to this roaring city for the purpose of working out your eternal salvation. Go back to your homes and tell them how you met Christ here—the loving, patient, pardoning, and sympathetic Christ. Who knows but the city which has been the destruction of so many may be your eternal redemption.

A good many years ago, Edward Stanley, the English commander, with his regiment, took a fort. The fort was manned by some three hundred Spaniards. Edward Stanley came close up to the fort, leading his men, when a Spaniard thrust at him with a spear, intending to destroy his life; but Stanley caught hold of the spear and the Spaniard in attempting to jerk the spear away from Stanley, lifted him up into the battlements. No sooner had Stanley taken his position on the battlements, than he swung his sword and his whole regiment leaped after him and the fort was taken. So it may be with you, O, stranger. The city influences which have destroyed so many and dashed them down forever, shall be the means of lifting you up into the tower of God's mercy and strength, your soul more than conquer through the grace of him who has promised an especial benediction to those who shall treat you well, saying: "I was a stranger and ye took me in."

The Friend of the Children.

Martin B. Lewis and his Life-work as a Sunday School Founder.

HERE are few fields of Christian activity to which more attention is given at the present time, than those occupied by the Sunday School missionaries in the comparatively new sections of our States and Territories. For nearly three years, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have supported and kept in the Southwestern field, that most devoted and efficient missionary and Sunday School organizer, Rev. George W. Sharp, who for many years has been a loyal worker of the American Sunday School Union in Missouri and adjoining States. Those three years have been prolific in spiritual results, and large numbers of Sunday Schools and not a few churches have been founded, especially in northwestern Missouri.

On this page we present the portrait of Martin B. Lewis, a veteran Sunday School missionary in the Northwest, the greater part of whose life has been spent in pioneer work in northern Minnesota, Wisconsin and Dakota. Early in life he was brought to a practical knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus by the personal appeal, prayers and teachings of the late Hon. Wm. E. Dodge, who ever afterwards was his warm friend and adviser in Christian work. Whenever Mr. Lewis came to New York in the interest of the missionary cause, he was invited to the home of Mr. Dodge. He commenced work with the American Sunday School Union in 1860. His district covers fifteen counties of Minnesota, the population of which is sixty per cent. Scandinavian. These foreigners are nearly all farmers, and they make the best of citizens. They have a few parochial schools of their own, but the young people get out of them quickly, and when they connect themselves with the work of the American Sunday School Union, they very soon become efficient workers. In this extensive territory there are at the present time eight hundred Sunday Schools or possibly more, all of which were organized by Mr. Lewis. Over thirty thousand children have thus been gathered in and trained in the Gospel and the Christian life.

MARTIN B. LEWIS.

Who has founded hundreds of Sunday Schools in the Northwest.

Mr. Lewis tells an interesting story of the beginning of his work as a Sunday School founder. "I was an Eastern business man," he says, "with a sick wife; she suffered from consumption. She recovered, and in gratitude to God we gave ourselves and all that we had to the Sunday School Union, going to the State where my loving wife regained her health. Before joining the Union I had established schools in Minnesota teaching English to the Swedish children. In six months I taught them so that they could read well. They were the children of poor families. At that time there were few or no religious services of any sort held in a very large section, and on Sundays I used to visit several places, driving there and holding brief services one after the other."

Gradually the scattered population of that section began to take an active and intelligent interest in the work Mr. Lewis had begun. Kindnesses were shown by many, who, before, had been averse to anything like religion. One young man, one day, brought a great, strong arm-chair for the missionary and placed it in the school. A friend in the East offered Mr. Lewis $25 for it and it was sent to him. It thus became the means of buying three acres of land for school purposes. When the work of erecting a school building on these acres began, all the neighbors gave willing help. Some cut down timber; others drew it to the mill and still others brought it back; and when all was over, there was enough lumber to build a little church in addition to the schoolhouse. In this and other ways Mr. Lewis always taught the people to help themselves as far as possible.

These were rough experiences, in these early times among the backwoodsmen of Wisconsin and Minnesota, among whom Mr. Lewis labored. After connecting himself with the American Sunday School Union in 1860, he entered into the work with tenfold energy and never since then, now thirty-four years ago, has he ceased in his labors. His home is the suburbs of the town of Red Wing, on the Mississippi River. When he first located there, the country was wild and there were more Indians than white men in the neighborhood. The place is now a thriving town, with a population of 8,000, and is a centre of business and religious activity.

In the course of his journeyings—he has traveled about 4,000 miles annually for over thirty years—the missionary has many times been placed in positions of great peril, but his life and work have been divinely protected. He has crossed rivers and mountains; man, horse and buggy have been sunk in treacherous sloughs, so that little more could be seen of the horse than his neck and head; he has been extricated, dripping and exhausted, from swollen streams whose currents he had tried to ford in order to reach some point where he had to preach or open Sunday School, and he has talked to congregations while the water from his garments made little streams on the plank floor. In one locality, called Plum Creek, he was warned to stay away. As he rode to keep the appointment, a desperado jumped in front of his wagon and tried to stop him and even during the service in the schoolhouse, a man was kept parading in front to prevent interference. Afterward, some of the very persons who had been most bitterly opposed to the introduction of religious worship and Sunday Schools, became their warmest advocates and supporters. Such is always the power of the Gospel, when exemplified by an earnest Christian life.

"In Waukegan county," said Mr. Lewis, "one day called upon a woman who did not believe in Sunday Schools. Her six or eight boys and girls went fishing, Sundays. I had learned that the woman originally came from Chautauque county, N. Y. When I arrived, I found the door partly open. After a greeting which was coolly received I mentioned some people I knew in Chautauque county, when she instantly thawed out and kicking away the block behind the door, invited me inside. Through this trifling incident, we secured the good offices of the whole family and they became active church members and good Christian people. Two of the daughters are now school teachers, and the Sunday School has developed four consecrated and successful ministers of the Gospel."

The work accomplished by this veteran missionary in the wide territory in which he labored, both in Wisconsin and Minnesota, is one that may well inspire less energetic Christians to increased activity. His labors have been strictly undenominational and in planting and nourishing schools and churches, he has endeavored by sermons, addresses, and Gospel book and tracts, and otherwise to show the way of salvation through faith in Jesus. He has been uniformly successful in securing superintendents and teachers who have been enlightened by the Holy Spirit, and who are able to teach others also. From 1860 to 1892, no less than 156 churches have been established as the result of the Sunday Schools he has planted and nourished in the two states already mentioned.

Surely, this is a record to arouse the spirit of Christian emulation in well-doing. Such lives are well spent in the Master's service, and thousands who have come to a knowledge of the Gospel by these means invoke daily blessings on the self-sacrificing missionaries of the Sunday School Union.

JOSEPH, RULER OF EGYPT.

S.S. Lesson for Apr. 22, Gen. 41:38-48. Golden Text, I. Sam. 2:30. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

IN a severe, almost impossible school, Joseph had been passing standard after standard. Not one trial of the many through which he had to pass could have been spared. God knows what human nature needs to bring it into utter nothingness in itself, and utter dependence on him; he chastens us "for our profit that we may be partakers of his holiness." (Heb. 12:10.) Through no other school could Joseph have learned to be a simple, but a fit instrument to carry out the designs of God with an intelligent comprehension of his purpose. Earthly position, prospects, reputation, were all gone, and still "the Lord was with Joseph," and would yet prove himself to be for his servant more than all which he had lost. Joseph was no stranger to the school of faith; he had learned to recognize God in every thing, and to be happy when stripped of all, and in his true element, because without home, without friends, without reputation, exiled, oppressed, wronged in the most galling manner, yet the keynote of his life was neither his wrongs, nor yet his faithfulness, but the blessed fact patent to others as well as himself:

"The Lord was With Joseph."

Let everything be against us, let our trials be superhuman, let the tests to which God puts us be the greatest which fall to the lot of man; if under all, and above all the Lord is with us, not one pang of suffering will be lost; our God shall reap his own harvest in our lives; his purpose shall be accomplished. Himself in unbroken communion with God, Joseph was in a position to bring others near to him. Wherever one or more of God's children are drawing near to him, a spiritual atmosphere exists, and it is easier for others also to draw near to God. Thus it was that the chief butler and the chief baker dreamed, and thus it was that, later on, Pharaoh also dreamed. What there may have been of intercession for this heathen king laid on Joseph's heart before this, we may never know; suffice it that after two years from the time of the restoration of the chief butler, Pharaoh dreamed. How little the politicians of Egypt knew that a mighty hand was at work in Egypt, who should bring about unsuspected changes in the government, and that his instrument should be a man lying under a criminal charge, undergoing his sentence in the state prison! So unlooked for are

The Ways of God.

The dream of Pharaoh made a great impression upon him; something, which he could not account for, had happened to him; he could not shake off the impression; God had spoken, but he did not know the language. Oh, if men of the world would be as wise as Pharaoh, and set themselves to understand when something unexpected breaks in upon their lives, there would be more men saved from destruction and brought nigh to God than there are. In the first place, the king sent for all the magicians and the wise men of Egypt. It was plain to them that no invention of theirs could satisfy the king, he was in real earnest, and only the real thing, only a knowledge of the mysterious Being who had spoken to him in his dream could satisfy the awakened monarch. Egypt was the school of the world at that time, the repository of learning; it was a humbling thing that, in such a land, God should "bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent"; yet so it was.

The chief butler was no mean person at court, and the consternation of the baffled men of letters recalled to him what he owed to the young Hebrew prisoner who had interpreted his dream and that of the chief baker. He told the story before the king.

Joseph knew that a place of rule awaited him, and the pledge of it had been given him in Poliphar's home and in the prison, in both of which places he rose spontaneously above his surroundings. But how little did he know that deliverance was so near when Pharaoh's messages "made him run" (ver. 14, marg.), to the palace, after a hasty shave and change of garments, to interpret the dream which was confessedly beyond the learning of the wise men of Egypt! How little was he himself prepared for the king's communication: "I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it; and I have heard say of thee that thou canst understand a dream to interpret it!"

"It is not in Me,"

said the witness for his God; "God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace. Joseph had learned his lesson. Much of the self-consciousness which said to his brethren thirteen years previously "Hear this dream that I have dreamed" had been left behind in his slavery and imprisonment. Now it was: God shall give Pharaoh an answer. And when the king related his double dream to the young stranger before him, Joseph was immediately taught of God how to speak before the king: "The dream of Pharaoh is one: God hath showed Pharaoh what he is about to do." And then he explained how the seven fat kine which Pharaoh dreamed he saw on the bank of the river and the seven good ears of corn which he dreamed grew upon one stalk, both indicated seven years of unparalleled fruitfulness and prosperity, and that the seven lean kine, which devoured the seven fat kine, and the seven empty ears of corn, which devoured the seven good ears, signified seven years of terrible famine, which should follow the seven plenteous years, and that the very fact of the dream being doubled was a sign of how certain should be the fulfilment. Joseph showed his own personal belief in it by advising Pharaoh to appoint a minister whose business it should be to husband the resources of the land during the years of plenty, that there might be provision in Egypt against the coming time of famine.

Had not the reverses which Joseph had met with humbled him and brought him to see neither himself, nor men, nor circumstances with the same distinctness with which he would always see his God, his head might have been turned when Pharaoh said: "Can we find such a one as this is, a man in whom the Spirit of God is?" O! how Joseph must have understood all his past strange experiences, when, in the presence of the humbled scholars of Egypt, in the presence of the chief butler, his late fellow-prisoner, in the presence of Potiphar, his late master, perhaps in the presence of Potiphar's wicked wife, — Pharaoh, who ruled Egypt as an absolute monarch, addressed him, saying: "Forasmuch as God hath showed thee all this, there is none so discreet and wise as thou art, thou shalt be and according to thy word shall all my people be ruled; only in the throne will I be greater than thou. See I have set thee over all the land of Egypt!" God had been faithful. He had kept his word; Joseph at last had the place of rule. But how would he have sufficed for the many and onerous duties which came upon him had he not learned, in his severe school, how to have the Lord with him at all times and under all circumstances! He was thirty years of age; in the full vigor of physical and intellectual life; and even the heathen saw that the Spirit of God was in him. Thus he could and did take counsel with his God, and Egypt was really governed by God through the instrumentality of Joseph. A man who has been proved true in adversity is fitted to stand the temptation of prosperity; one who has fully learned to serve and obey is thereby fitted to rule. Such a man knows what obedience costs, and has much to demand of those who are subject to him.

Over My House,

Joseph followed out the policy which he had indicated to Pharaoh. He began by storing up at once the corn which exceeded the present demands of the population. It must have taken no small capital to do this, but Pharaoh fully believed in Joseph's interpretation of his prophetic dreams, and probably he furnished government funds for the purpose of buying up, at very low prices, the corn which exceeded the demand. It may be also that the government taxes were paid in corn instead of money, and thus government property consisted chiefly of large and well stocked granaries.

When the seven years of plenty were succeeded by the years of famine, those who might have been sceptical hitherto, had a very distant proof of the truth of Joseph's words.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

UDDENLY the scene of our lesson study changes. The boy of seventeen years of age, familiar only with pastoral scenes, with no experience of cities and courts, whom we left at the end of our last lesson, a slave in the hands of traders, we meet this week a man of thirty, an Egyptian noble, viceroy or chancellor of the mightiest empire on earth. The interval of thirteen years had been to Joseph a strangely varied one. Favored and trusted by the court official who had purchased him, he becomes his steward, with control of all his master's affairs. Then after ten years of faithful service, thrown into prison on a false charge, he wins favor of his jailer and becomes chief warden of the prison, while himself a prisoner. Finally, having rendered a service to an officer of the court, who is under temporary disgrace, he is, after three years' imprisonment, summoned to the palace to render a similar service to the monarch, is rewarded with the highest office in the land and is raised to the peerage with the title of Zaphnath-paaneah (Saviour of the World). The transformation is bewildering, but Joseph seems to have been unspoiled by it. His utterances at a later date, show him to have regarded himself as having been intrusted by God with a special mission, for which the severe discipline of the previous period was a preparation. His career suggests lessons of pertinent value to young people. We see a young man away from home, among strangers, faithful to God and resisting temptation. A young man suffering innocently, cruelly used by his brothers and by his master, yet not cast down, or sullen, or repining, but doing his duty in adverse circumstances so well and wisely, that he is honored and trusted by men who could have had no predisposition in his favor. Although, having reason to be discouraged and depressed, not so occupied with his own grievances that he was unobservant of the sadness of his fellow-prisoners. His advancement comes at last through the king hearing of an act of kindness cheerfully done in a humble sphere. Under the Christian dispensation the promise of reward and distinction in Christ's kingdom is not to the rich and powerful, but to those who faithfully and conscientiously do their duty in the position they occupy, however humble it may be.

Thou shalt be over my house. Our civilization and institutions furnish no instances of a change of condition so enormous and so sudden as that of Joseph, who was raised from a prison to a palace in one day. Yet sudden elevations are not, even now, uncommon in Oriental lands. Dr. A. F. Schaeffer says that when he was a boy, he was in Constantinople when such a change occurred. One day the Sultan had a toothache and he sent for the court dentist, a highly paid and highly honored functionary. The dentist happened to be away from his palace on a hunting expedition. The Sultan could not wait and despatched messengers to find some other dentist. They found a practitioner in a poor quarter of the city whose business scarcely kept him in food and they ordered him to accompany them to the imperial palace. He was first hastily taken to a clothing store, where his old clothes were exchanged for sumptuous garments at the Sultan's expense and he was then taken to see his Imperial patient. He extracted the aching tooth and gave the tortured monarch instant relief. The grateful Sultan at once made him court dentist, depositing the absent official. Thus in two hours the dentist was raised from penury to affluence, and made a Pasha, with a palace and a princely income. The good fortune turned his head and he became crazy. Promptly again the Sultan acted. The dentist was deposed; his title, his palace and income were taken away and in one day he was as poor as before.

And Pharaoh took off his ring. Probably the signet with which he stamped legal documents. These documents were of moist clay which after being written on and stamped with the imperial seal, were sent to be baked. Thousands of such tablets have been found and have been read and translated more than three thousand years after they were inscribed. Afterward when paper and parchment were used, a piece of clay was attached to it by strings, and the seal was imprinted on the clay. The seal was sometimes engraved on the gold and sometimes on a stone inserted in the ring or attached to it on a swivel. The engraving was exquisitely done and usually the signet contained the king's name and titles. The picture which forms the initial of this article shows the ring of Cheops, the builder of the great pyramid, and an enlarged fac-simile of the inscription on its flat face. The possession of the ring of Pharaoh enabled Joseph to give to his commands the force of imperial edicts. Mention of this use of the king's ring is found in Esther 3:10, 12, and Dan. 6:17. References having spiritual significance are found in John 3:33, and II Timothy 2:19.

And Pharaoh said unto his servants. There has been considerable difficulty in recognizing this Pharaoh in secular history. It is now believed that the Pharaoh who exalted Joseph must have belonged to the sixth dynasty, and was probably the one who reigned under the title of Ra-apepi II. The seat of his government was at Haouar, which was near On, or Heliopolis, where the sun was worshipped. The priest of this worship gave his daughter, doubtless at the king's command, to Joseph for his wife. An ancient Jewish legend has it that this priest was no other than the Potiphar who was formerly Joseph's master. The similarity of the names may have given rise to the legend.

And laid up the food in the cities. Dr. Marcus Dods quotes a touching memorial of the famine with which Joseph had to deal. It was, he says, found in a tomb in Arabia which a flood had laid bare. In the tomb lay an embalmed body of a woman, covered with a profusion of jewels of great value. At her head stood a coffer filled with treasure, on which lay a tablet bearing an inscription, of which the following is a translation: "In thy name, O God, the God of Himyar, Tayar, the daughter of Dzu Shefar, sent my steward to Joseph and he delayed to return to me. I then sent my handmaid with a measure of silver to bring me back a measure of flour; and not being able to procure it, I sent her with a measure of gold; and not being able to procure it, I sent her with a measure of pearls; and not being able to procure it, I commanded them to be ground; and finding no profit in them, I am shut up here." There is something very pathetic in the woman making the discovery that she could not exchange pearls, or gold, or silver, for an equal quantity of flour.

A man in whom the spirit of God is. A well-known author tells us of a clergyman who worked among the poor of a great city. He had no money to give, but he was always to be found in the tenements sympathizing with a couple who had lost a child, encouraging a man who was trying to get free of the drink curse, watching by the sick and comforting the sorrowing. After some years of this work he broached a scheme for gathering these poor friends of his into a religious organization. The idea was opposed, for many of them were socialists and not a few sceptics. One after another rose and spoke against the project. At last one man said: "I don't understand the scheme, but I am with the clergyman in whatever he wants. I have seen God in him."

DURING the weeks and months of most intense suffering among the destitute of New York—a condition now greatly relieved—there was no brighter phase of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Food Fund's Chief Mission than the cordial and hearty manner in which a large number of well-known city pastors co-operated with it. These godly men—each the spiritual shepherd of a considerable flock, and all having a thousand and one imperative duties of metropolitan pulpit to fulfil—did not hesitate a moment when the urgent call sounded summoning the workers to personally aid in the Food Fund's distribution of supplies to the cold and famishing thousands in the East and West side tenements.

They saw the work of the Food Fund expanding, and they knew the crying need of men of wide experience and broad Christian sympathies, to assume the responsibility for conducting the distribution of supplies at the new relief stations of the Food Fund as rapidly as they were opened. For weeks they labored earnestly and faithfully, each pastor being personally in charge of a relief station at which one hundred or more destitute worthy families were cared for. And when the decrease in the extent of the distress justified the discontinuance of all except the two main stations of the Food Fund at No. 210 Eighth avenue and No. 12 Stuyvesant street, his band of devoted and unselfish men closed an experience whose material and spiritual results have been of the highest importance to thousands of their brothers and sisters in the lowlier walks of life.

Believing that every contributor to the Food Fund, and all who love to do the work of the Master, whether it be to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked or to lead the sinner to the Cross, have a deep personal interest in the spiritual outcome of his great charity which is now closing, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD presents on this page the portraits of the pastors who have acted in concert with the Fund, and also letters from them, in which they freely express their view as to the spiritual results. It is not a surprise to find that the shower of gifts, sent with such abundant and fervent prayers, has borne fruit, in very many instances, in the saving of both the body and the soul. Hardly a contribution was sent to the Fund that was not already consecrated: not a loaf nor a package of groceries, nor a garment, was given to the hungry, or the destitute, or the naked, that was not fragrant with the incense of Christian supplication. At the daily gatherings of the Fund's mission workers, before a single applicant was helped, the Divine blessing was invoked on giver and recipient alike. It was the same at every one of the twelve stations established by the Fund while the distress was at its height; and even now, with prospects everywhere brightening and the ranks of the destitute lessening daily, no step is taken until it has first the Divine sanction secured through all-prevailing prayer. Viewed, therefore, from every side, the work of the Food Fund is one of the most magnificent and convincing evidences of the potentiality of earnest and sincere supplication to Him whose ears are never shut to the cry of His children.

THE FOOD FUND'S SOUL-HARVEST.

Well-known New York Pastors, who Aided in the Relief Movement, Tell of its Glorious Spiritual Results—A Channel of Rich Blessing.

These letters, extracts from which are given below, speak for themselves. Rev. C. Wright, of the Bedford Street Church, in his letter says:

I believe Eternity alone can show all the results of the beneficent work of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN was illustratively given to the world by the Divine Master. During the past winter we have tried to return to the Divine, though unpopular, method of making known the Gospel. Men, women, and children in actual want have had their needs supplied, so far as means were provided, while at the same time the Gospel truth was made known. The conversions are very striking. Men for forty years addicted to drink and every form of vice, have been saved, and for weeks led a consistent active Christian life. The work is no less marked among the children.

From the Allen Memorial Church, Rivington street, of which Rev. Wm. Hamilton is pastor, comes the following testimony:

We were enabled to aid 150 families through the Food Fund. The attendance at our regular services, it is safe to say, increased one-half through our being enabled to feed the hungry and clothe the naked. I believe those who have suffered most in our vicinity are the Jews. "I don't see why you Christians do so much for us," a Jewish woman said to me one day. "We never do anything for you." I was so glad to tell her that the Christ-love for humanity had prompted the action. Many of the dear children when we ceived help from the share of this general Food distributed by Mr. Wm. Dean, minister in charge of the Calvary Branch, and his assistants. Every recipient of the charity was known personally to Mr. Dean or to myself, or to both of us, as being entirely worthy. The letters received from many of the recipients would have received a heart even of stone. It was a work on which, I am sure the benediction of God sweetly and continuously rested. That God may bless all the contributors and all the beneficiaries of this noble charity, is my sincere desire and prayer.

R. S. MACARTHUR.

From Rev. J. B. Stansberry, Bethel African M. E. Church comes the following:

The grand work you have accomplished in relieving the poor and destitute of New York City, will not be forgotten by the colored people of this city. The hard times, with no work, brought to them distress and destitution. Through your assistance, you have enabled us to relieve weekly 140 families, averaging about four to a family. Missionaries from my church found many cases of extreme destitution. My people regard the relief as "God sent." Much good has been accomplished in bringing souls to Christ. Many who thought possibly very little of the spiritual side of the matter, were brought to consider earnestly the goodness of God to them, and to say, "this is the Lord's doings and is marvellous in our sight." The beneficiaries of this bounty will ever hold you in grateful remembrance and their prayers will ever ascend to the giver of all perfect gifts for his blessings upon you.

JNO. B. STANSBERRY.

Rev. E. L. Fox, Pastor of East 11th street M. E. Church, writes:

Help in the form of food, coal, rent and clothing, has been distributed to nearly five hundred families; but a greater blessing has come to a great many. While giving help we have held daily gospel service to crowded houses. Of the saved, many were led by gratitude to accept Christ. Eternity only can estimate the vast spiritual good that the gifts of Christian people have brought about this winter. E. L. Fox.

Rev. C. W. Millard, of the Washington Square Methodist Episcopal Church, writes:

The Washington Square Methodist Episcopal Church gave up the use of its Asbury building for relief purposes from Jan. 26 to March 10 of this year. The Council of King's Daughters took charge of the work. Our facilities were also increased by generous donations from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Food Fund. Nine thousand meals were given, seven thousand applications for shelter were granted and very many families were supplied, with groceries. Perhaps the greatest direct advantage is the practical and convincing demonstration before the most needy, of the downright good-will and Christlike tenderness on the part of the Christian Church. Thousands upon thousands of working men, suddenly precipitated into helpless distress, have found welcome, cheer and hope where some had thought them to expect hard indifference.

Mrs. Bella Cooke, the grand old Christian philanthropist who, though forty years bedridden, is still serving the Master with all her might, and who has for many weeks past personally superintended the supplying of over 100 needy families through the Food Fund, writes:

The distribution is a great—a very great pleasure to both me and the many King's Daughters who have been coming to put up the things, to visit the families and speak to them of the Giver of every good gift and of the food "that perisheth not." It is a grand work and fully repays for all the sleepless nights we pass. Many, oh, so many hearts have been made glad through your kindness. Could the contributors to the Food Fund see, as I have done, these past weeks, the smiles through tears when the hungry and sorrowing ones were made glad, their hearts would be filled with thankfulness at the success of their work. From this room, through their kindness, 174 destitute families have been supplied for many days with food. My soul rejoices in the loving kindness of our God for it.

Rev. John A. B. Wilson, Eighteenth St., M. L. Church, also writes officially recording his own and his church's observations on the work and its excellent material and spiritual results.

NEW YORK PASTORS, ASSOCIATED WITH "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" FOOD FUND IN ITS RELIEF WORK AMONG THE DESTITUTE.

1. REV. R. S. MACARTHUR, D.D.
2. REV. C. W. MILLARD.
3. REV. J. C. THOMS.

4. REV. H. FAUST.
5. REV. J. A. B. WILSON.
6. REV. C. WRIGHT.

7. REV. J. B. STANSBERRY.
8. REV. E. L. FOX.
9. REV. WM. HAMILTON.

HERALD and its energetic, consecrated proprietor during the past winter. Let me tell you what I know the Food Fund has done for some of the poor of the Ninth Ward.

1st. It has kept some people from starving to death.

2nd. Helped the poor, the widow and orphan, without any of the mysteries of municipal methods or the circumlocution of so-called Charity Associations.

3rd. Gave the poor of the city an illustration of the fact that Christians care for the body as well as the soul.

4th. It has won many to the Church where they were unaccustomed to go.

5th. It has led some to accept the Bread of Life, and to become soundly converted.

No temporal blessing has come to this part of the city in years that has done so much good, in such a quiet, Christlike manner, as the help afforded by the Food Fund. We thank God for it. We thank the contributors to the Fund and invoke God's blessing upon them. And when each have passed the last mile stone may they hear the approving voice of the Master: "I was hungry and ye fed me."

C. WRIGHT.

Rev. J. C. Thoms, of The Mariners' Temple, Oliver street, writes:

The work of the good Samaritan is as productive of spiritual good to-day as in the day when the truth first came into the work could not be persuaded to enter the Church, but now come gladly.

From Rev. H. Faust of the Hebrew Christian Mission, Forsyth street, comes some remarkable testimony of the spiritual results of the Food Fund Charity. He has numerous applications for Christian baptism from Russian and Polish Jews whose strong indifference to the Gospel has been wholly overcome by the kindness of Christian people in voluntary succoring them and their families in the time of deepest distress.

Rev. R. S. MacArthur, of the Calvary Baptist Church, 57th street, writes:

The worshippers at the Calvary Baptist Branch, Sixty-eighth street and Boulevard, the members of the Calvary Church and congregation generally, and hundreds of the poor in the vicinity of the Branch, extend through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD an expression of their hearty appreciation of the kindness of its friends for their contributions to the Food Fund. It has been used as the appropriate channel through which the gifts of God's children have flowed to help many thousands of worthy poor in this city. Not fewer than 2,300 to 2,500—I have not the missionary's exact figures—under my eye at the moment—have re-

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash or postal notes.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by early renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

HAPPINESS AND WORLDLINESS.

DO not depend for happiness upon the discipleship of worldliness. I have seen men as vain of their old-fashioned and their eccentric hat as your brainless fop is proud of his dangleing fooleries. Fashion sometimes makes a reasonable demand of us, and then we ought to yield to it. The daisies of the field have their fashion of color and leaf, the honey-suckles have their fashion of ear-drop, and the snow-flakes flung out of the winter heavens have their fashion of exquisiteness. After the summer shower the sky weds the earth with a ring of rainbow. And I do not think we have a right to despise the elegancies and fashions of this world, especially if they make reasonable demands upon us; but the discipleship and worship of fashion is death to the body, and death to the soul. I am glad the world is improving. Look at the fashion plates of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and you will find that the world is not so extravagant and extraordinary now as it was then, and all the marvellous things that the grand-daughter will do will never equal that done by the grandmother. Go still farther back to the Bible times, and you will find that in those times fashion wielded a terrible and horrible sceptre. You have only to turn to the third chapter of Isaiah and read: "Because the daughters of Zion are haughty and walk with stretched-forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet: in that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments about their feet, and their cauls, and their round tires like the moon: the chains, and the bracelets, and the mufflers, the bonnets and the headbands, and the tablets and the ear-rings, and the nose-jewels, the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping pins, the glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the veils." Only think of a woman having all that on!

I am glad the world is getting better and that fashion, which has dominated in the world so ruinously in other days, has for a little time, for a little degree at any rate, relaxed its energies. All the splendors and extravaganzas of this world dyed into your robe and flung over your shoulder cannot wrap peace around your heart for a single moment. The gayest wardrobe will utter no voice of condolence in the day of trouble and darkness. The woman is grandly dressed, and only she, who is wrapped in the robe of a Saviour's righteousness. The home may be very humble, the hat may be very plain, the frock may be very coarse; but the halo of heaven settles in the room when she wears it, and the faintest touch of the resurrection angel will change that garment into raiment exceeding white, so as no fuller on earth could whiten it. I come to you, young women, to-day to say that this world cannot make you happy. I know it is a bright world, with glorious sunshine, and golden rivers, and fire-worked sunset, and bird orchestra, and the darkest cave has its crystals, and the wrathiest wave has its foam wreath, and the coldest midnight its flaming aurora; but God will put out all these lights with the blast of his own nostrils, and the glories of this world will perish in final conflagration.

BACKBONE IN RELIGION.

MUCH of the religion of the day is flabby, very flabby indeed. It is afflicted with a sort of Saint Vitus's dance; now bending this way, and now that; and it is uncertain which way it will wriggle next. It accommodates itself to the whims of the world. It is almost disposed to exchange our Bible for a science that, instead of tracing our origin to Adam, makes us only a better order of tadpoles, and instead of reading, "Abraham begat Isaac, and Isaac begat Jacob, and Jacob begat Judas," would read: "The fish begat the reptile, and the reptile begat a marsupial animal, and the marsupial animal begat the inadruman, and the inadruman begat the gorilla, and the gorilla begat the ape, and the ape begat Darwin."

Much of our modern religion begins with an eulogy of human nature, instead of an exposition of its utter downfall. It makes us sick to hear all this talk about the dignity of manhood which St. John describes as "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked."

IMMORALITY OF MALODORS.

THERE are certain kinds of chemical odors that are said to be healthful, but the healthiest thing in the world is pure air, and stagnant ponds and sluggish canals, and dumping places on vacant lots, and bad sewerage ought to be swept by the bosom of municipal indignation. If epidemic could get one good smell of Gowanus Canal, or Newark Flats, it would in a week accept the invitation and our Northern cities would be thrown into a panic. By cremation of the offal of great cities the garbage question might soon be settled. Reduce the horses and dogs and cats which have gone into a state of demise into ashes through crematories such as have been successfully established in some places, and burn the disgusting cabbage, which was never intended for our world, the seed for it having been hurled this way in a meteoric stone out of some world where the inhabitants are without a nose, and change the suburbs of our cities, which are a Gehenna, into gardens, and the typhoid fevers and the agues and the diphtherias which every year work death among our populations would emigrate, and the cholera and yellow fevers could have for us no affright. But you say, "We must have dumping-grounds for our cities, and soap factories, and gas houses, and bone grinders, and chemical laboratories." Oh, yes; every city like every house must have its kitchen. But this is a mighty big world and there is plenty of room yet for all the municipal sculleries, and the rail-train puts regions ten miles off under twenty minutes of transit.

There is a phase of this subject never touched, and that is the fact that malodors are deathful to good morals as well as to good health. Find the regions that are in a state of half suffocation or semi-asphyxia from the breath of decaying vegetation, and you will find crime rampant and decency fifty per cent. off. Virtue has keen olfactory, while sin can stand anything, and to her the stench of a gin shop are gales from Araby, and breath that smells of rum and onions, ottar of roses! We all admit the fact that the eye and the ear powerfully affect the morals by what they see and hear, and why do we not recognize the moral mission of the nostril? Nature certainly indicates its importance, making it the most prominent feature of the human countenance, and no community can afford to insult it. Enter any strange city and be blindfolded at the depot, and then be led through all the wards and districts of that city, and by the exhalations, redolent or gravolent, the nostril will rightly decide in the first place whether it is a moral or immoral city, and in the next place which district is the most moral or the most immoral. Thank God for a good nose! and as a man through it breathes from sixteen to twenty times each minute and from six to ten pints of air at each respiration, you may get some idea of how much depends on the composition of the atmosphere. Through the nostril nearly all epidemics and contagions find entrance to the human system. It is especially so among the intelligent classes. Only the idiotic and small-brained walk with their mouths open. The intelligent classes walk with their mouths shut, and so the only avenue to distemper for them is the nostril. Give us pure air in all our suburbs, in all our streets, in all our houses, in all our churches.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

C. M. H., Plainfield, N. J. How many different religions are there in India?

Five great religions classified as follows: Hindoo, Mussulman, Parsee, Buddhist and Christian. There are probably two hundred varieties of forms of heathen worship, and an almost countless number of minor deities, among such tribes as the Vedhas, Todas, Hottas, Bhils, Gonds, Badagas and others, all of which, worship images of wood, stone, rocks and trees, and offer sacrifices.

D. N. Freeman, Cardington, O. Of what tribe, race or nationality was Abraham, and where does that tribe or its descendants live at present?

Abraham was a native of Chaldea and a lineal descendant of Heber. "The father of all who are called Hebrews." He was descended, in the ninth generation, from Shem, the son of Noah. The posterity of Abraham comprises not only the Jewish nation, but a large part of the Semitic races of the world, some of which are found in Egypt, in Arabia, in Asia, in Syria and even in India.

Reader, Burditt's Rapids. Did the Apostle, in using the word "unbelievers" in II. Cor. 6: 14, refer to persons who did not believe in the existence of a God or merely to persons who were not Christians?

We think the expression covered both classes. The Christian ought never to marry one who is not a Christian. Such unions are seldom, if ever, happy. There is necessarily an absence in one party of that which is, or should be, the very essence and mainspring of life in the other and that absence must result in inharmonious relations.

O, Virginia. Does God send disease?

God governs the world by the natural laws which he has established, and it would be impossible to define the extent to which he uses those laws to work out his providential purposes. It is probable that in some cases, where he sees that a child of his needs discipline, or to be laid aside from worldly work and association so as to be drawn nearer to him, he may arrange that sickness shall come upon him, and so he may be said to "send disease." In some passages sickness is threatened as a punishment. (See Deut. 28: 27, 59, 60 and 61.) An instance is mentioned in Acts 12: 23. On the other hand, it is certain that many diseases which afflict humanity are the result of disregard of sanitary laws, and although they may be used for the spiritual benefit of the sufferer, should not be attributed to God.

Reader, Arlington. Is there any Bible proof that there is such a place as heaven? 2. Is it true that there are, as I have heard it stated, parts of the Bible which cannot do the reader any good?

1. Christ's teachings abound in such proofs. A more explicit statement than that in John 14: 2, could not be given. Another equally direct statement is made in Luke 10: 20. Besides these, and many other references in the Gospels, there are numerous mentions of the place in the Epistles and Revelation. 2. The direct spiritual value of the books and passages varies, as you may see by reading them. It would be difficult to extract any spiritual benefit from such chapters as the eighth of the first book of Chronicles and others devoted entirely to genealogies. They were inserted because they were valuable to the Jews for whom the book was primarily written, and it is so valuable as a whole to us that we have no disposition to mutilate it.

Earnest Inquirer, Masonville, Iowa. I gather from the first chapter of Genesis that the sun and the moon were made after the earth, and that there was light before the sun was made. Science teaches the opposite, which is right, and can the discrepancy be explained?

Many ingenious attempts have been made to harmonize the teachings of science and the first chapter of Genesis, but the results have not been satisfactory. The difficulty is the greater because scientific men are continually making fresh discoveries, which have sometimes proved their former theories untenable. The Bible was not written to teach science, but religion. The discrepancies between the story of creation as given in the Bible, and that given by the scientists are very much such as we should find in two descriptions of a great battle, if one of them was written by a clergyman who knew nothing of military tactics, and the other by a military expert who knew nothing of religion. The important fact for us—the fact that is of more momentous interest than all the discoveries of science, is that God made the universe. For this knowledge we are not indebted to science which has not yet attained it, but we do get it from the Bible. A person who wants to know the latest discoveries of science as to geology and astronomy, should study the recent books of science; but if he wants to know the way to God and eternal happiness, he should go to the Bible. Each has its own sphere.

T. W. Child, Fallsdale, Neb. What is the best book I can obtain and explain the Bible?

The very best for general purposes is "The Helps to the Study of the Bible," which are bound in with The International Teachers' Bible. You can secure The International Teachers' Bible by forwarding one new subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at $2 to this office.

H. G. Rand, Bridgeport, Conn. Who was the first inventor of the harp and of brass instruments?

The inventor of the harp is said to have been Jubal. (Gen. 4: 21.) It is found pictured on the oldest monuments in Egypt and Assyria. The first horns or trumpets were probably horns of cattle, and these, after the invention of working in metals was discovered, were imitated in metal. The name of the first person to use brass instruments is unknown. Tubal Cain who is mentioned as "the instructor of every artificer in brass and iron," may have been the inventor.

A. Fladhamer. 1. Can a person be a Christian without testifying. 2. Can a person enter the kingdom of heaven without being baptized? 3. Is it possible that there can be three persons in one as taught in the doctrine of the Trinity? 4. Did Christ drink wine on the cross?

1. It is conceivable that there may be no opportunities of testifying and in such a case a man may be a Christian without doing so. It is however, a duty to testify, or as Christ phrased it, to confess before men. He said distinctly that any one who was ashamed to do so of him would Christ be ashamed at the last day. (See Luke 9: 26.) The manner of testifying is not prescribed, but the Christian must let it be known to his associates that he is a follower of Christ. 2. If an unbaptized person becomes a Christian, he will be anxious to obey his Lord's command. If through sickness or other insurmountable obstacles, he is prevented from obeying, he will not be excluded for not obeying. 3. The Scriptures so teach. It is incomprehensible to us, but we accept it in faith. We cannot understand the trinity in ourselves of body, soul and spirit, but we believe that it exists. 4. We do not know what the ingredients of the mixture were. It was prepared by some kindly women in Jerusalem to be given to men who suffered the agonies of crucifixion. It lulled the senses and relieved the pain. Matthew says it was vinegar mixed with gall (Matt. 27: 34), but when he tasted it he would not drink.

Inquirer, Washington, D. C. Yes: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be sent for one year, together with the International Bible, to subscribers forwarding $2.—J. H. Y. 1. We do not know of any publication containing his sermons. 2. Yes. 3. You can procure them from any publisher or bookseller.—Reader. 1. Yes; remit 25 cents and we will send you a genuine piece of Olive Wood. 2. The hostess should slightly precede the visitor on entering the room, and then, standing one side, making the introduction or presentation.—F. S. D., Peru, N. Y. It may be impossible to forget, but it should not be difficult for a Christian to forgive an injury. We are not asked to achieve impossibilities.—H. D. S., Chicago, Ill. To secure THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, together with From Manger to Throne and the International Teachers' Bible, send $3 to this office.—S. J. Fisher, Lowell, Ind. It is part fact and part imagination.—L. C. Washington, D. C. We do not believe in the life.—Mrs. Isaac Clark, Gainesville, Ill. We do not know of any place where our articles can be disposed of to advantage.—G. W. Ostrander, Richmondville, N. Y. We do not believe he can.—Mrs. N. B. Cowan, Mechanicsville, Ia. Write to Mrs. Whittemore, Door of Hope, 101 East Sixty-first street, N. Y., about Christian work of the sort mentioned in your letter.—Friend, Brockport, N. Y. We do not believe that the practices to which you refer are consistent with Christian life.—Mrs. A. W. K., W. Harpeth, Tenn. Dr. Talmage has already preached on that subject.—W. E. Snack, Kearney, N. J. Your question has already been answered repeatedly in "The Mail-Bag."—James C. Hogg, Dripping Springs, Texas. There can be no harm in it, providing the element of gambling be strictly excluded.—R. A. Kenner, Mountain Lake, Minn. Certainly not; any instrument may be consecrated by the right use. Music is elevating and spiritualizing.—Aaron B. Wolf, W. Salamanca, N. J. The sermons of Evangelists Munhall and Mills, so far as we know, are reported only in the daily papers. There is no organ in which they appear verbatim.—Enquirer. For the words and music of the song, "King of the Heavens," write to Biglow & Main, music publishers, 6th street, New York.—W. T. Marshall, N. Y. It was a parable, and intended to interest and educate the spiritual nature of his hearers.—Subscriber. It would be improper for us to express an opinion as to the right or wrong of parties to a family quarrel, as we do not know all the circumstances. It would seem, however, from your statement, that if the wife really desires Scriptural guidance she would find appropriate passages in I. Peter 2: 20-23 and 3: 6.—Mrs. L. W. Bond, Bondville, Mass.—There is no way of obtaining the information you desire. The Bible is silent on the subject and from that only could light be gained.—M. King, Winamac, Ind. Your question has been answered several times in these columns. If you refer to our issue of January 3, you will find our belief fully stated on page 6, in an answer to "Subscriber Greenville, N. J."

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

A BLUNDER IN AFRICA.

AN incident in the conflicts between European nations and the natives of Western Africa which is described in recent reports has a pathos of its own. The accompanying illustration is reproduced from the drawing of an artist who witnessed the incident. It represents the conveyance from Warina of a wounded officer who died before his journey was ended. He was one of the company of English police stationed in Sierra Leone. For some time past the people of the Konno country, under English protection and those on the other side of the Niger who are under French protection, have suffered from the raids of the Sofas, a fierce, and warlike tribe, who live by plunder. The Sofas differ from other African peoples in their energy and activity. Their customs are of the old feudal type and their devotion to their king is extraordinary. All the plunder they secure is carried into his quarters and there behind rude fortifications his people fight in his defence. A decision to punish the Sofas for their raids was arrived at simultaneously by the French and English commanders and expeditions were sent out by both sides for the purpose. Both expeditions had been several days on the march, when one night the French commander heard that a large force of Sofas was encamped near him, on British territory. It is a well known habit of the Sofas when they make a raid on French territory and are pursued, to take refuge across the frontier, on British territory and vice versa. As the two commanders were on friendly terms, although not acting in concert, the French commander had no compunction in crossing the frontier to attack the common enemy. His assault was vigorous and it was as vigorously repulsed. Fighting was still going on by moonlight, when a native soldier was captured and from him it was learned that the enemy whom the French were assailing was not the Sofas, but the English expedition. At once the battle ceased but the consequences of the blunder were irreparable. The French commander had been killed, three British officers were dead and another was dying of his wounds, besides the loss of many native soldiers on both sides. Sincere regret for the unfortunate mistake is expressed by the French government and its apologies have been cordially accepted by the English who realize that the zeal of the young French officer was alone the cause of the misfortune. This is not the first time that such a blunder has been made. History records several similar mistakes on land and sea. The history of the Church, too, is not without such records, and to this day we sometimes see bitter conflicts between denominations who direct their attacks on each other instead of on the common enemy of Christ and his church. (Mark 9: 38-40.)

An Impecunious Suitor.

A cable dispatch from Paris announces that a young Belgian noble is on his way to this country to find a wealthy bride. He is well known in Paris where he has spent his patrimony in gambling and dissipation. His creditors became so pressing that he was unable to remain in that city, and he is coming here in the hope of retrieving his fortunes by marriage. There is no concealment as to his motive, as his past record shows. A short time ago he was engaged to a South American girl, and the civil marriage, required by the French law, took place. Before the religious ceremony occurred, he made demands for money on the girl's father, which were refused, and the prince thereupon refused to complete the marriage. The civil contract was therefore annulled. He will probably induce some American heiress to marry him, although he does not deserve to succeed. Many are ready to accept titled suitors of mercenary dispositions, though they turn a deaf ear to the wooings of Christ, who would raise them to the incomparable dignity of children of God. (John 1: 12.)

Sight Lost and Restored.

A reporter on a Brooklyn journal has had a novel experience during the past few days. He was stepping out of the publication office and suddenly looked upward at something that attracted his attention. At that moment a trolley car was passing and the little wheel slipped off the wire. There was a brilliant flash of the electricity which was repeated as the conductor tried to bring the reporter's eyes, he answered, "Nothing." The eyes had been right all along. The young man had suffered a nervous shock which had produced a suspension of the will power over the nerve centres, which control the eyes. He believed that he was blind, and he was blind. In order to cure him it was only necessary to convince him that he could see. Some cases of spiritual blindness belong to the same category. The defect is in the will power, and this may be removed by applying to him who has said, "they shall be made willing in the day of my power." (Psalms 110: 3.)

A Murderer's Confession.

A startling story reached Perth Amboy, N. J., on March 31. It was to the effect that a man had surrendered himself to the police of Amsterdam, and confessed to having committed a double murder eleven years ago at Perth Amboy. He said that while staying at that town in 1883, he had become enamored with a girl of the neighborhood, and wishing to marry her he had killed his wife and child. The police records corroborate the story so far as to the finding of the murdered woman at the time and place indicated. The self-accused man says that after the crime, he went to Cuba, and afterward to Australia, but he could get no peace night or day. It mattered not, he said how who occupied the floor below, and sent them down by the rope. Then two women were awakened and they two went down by the rope in safety. There was one other man in the house who helped the painter fix the rope. The painter looked for him to go down next, but being unable to find him went down himself. He was concerned about the other man but there was no way of finding him until the fire was extinguished. Then his body was found among the debris. It was evident that while the others had been escaping by the rope, he had tried to get out by jumping down the burning staircase. He had fallen and broken his leg, and being unable to move or make himself heard, had burned to death. Many a soul has been lost in a similar way. None are in greater danger of perishing than those self-sufficient persons who think they can save themselves and neglect the means by which the weak and infirm reach safety. (Rom. 4: 5.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The expenses of the recent Evangelistic services held by Dr. Chapman in Detroit amounted to $3,732, which covered hire of halls, printing, advertising, entertainment of evangelists. In all 160 meetings were held. The additions to the churches since the meetings exceed two thousand, of whom nearly one half united with the Presbyterian church.

More than Five Hundred Persons Made a profession of faith as the result of Major Geo. A. Hilton's services at Indiana, Pa. The "Progress" of that town says that "Indiana never experienced such an interest as is now felt in religious matters." The Evangelist went from Indiana to Latrobe, where union meetings are being held.

The death of Robertson Smith, of Scotland is announced by cable. Prof. Smith was well known in this country by his famous works on Bible criticism. Although under fifty years old when he died, he had attained the highest rank among Biblical scholars, and had been honored by a trial for heterodoxy.

A bill has been introduced in Congress, and passed by the House of Representatives, making it a penal offence to use the symbol of the Red Cross Society as a trade mark, or to use the words "Red Cross" as a designation of its business. As the Red Cross Society is protected by international treaty in time of war, the adoption of its name or symbol by merchants or manufacturers is held to be detrimental to its interests.

A Russian Traveller has discovered an interesting ancient manuscript in a monastery of Tibet. It purports to be a life of Christ, but the incidents recorded by the Evangelists are strangely blended with statements that Christ travelled in Persia and India. It represents him as being taught by the Brahmins, being initiated into the higher mysteries of Buddhism, returning to Judea when he was twenty-nine years old and beginning to preach there. Finally it states that Pilate crucified him between two thieves; he was buried, but on the third day his tomb was found empty. Throughout the book Christ is called Issa.

The interest in the New York revival increases. It became necessary on April 2nd, to obtain larger accommodations for the noon meeting, the ball of the Young Men's Christian Association having proved altogether inadequate. Niblo's Theatre was therefore engaged for a week at least. The services in Cooper Union were held each day at 3:30 with audiences increasing in size daily. The evening meetings in the various churches were continued. The committee in charge of the meetings makes an earnest appeal for funds to meet the increased expenses. Contributions may be sent to Rev. S. V. Robinson, 62 Gates Avenue, Brooklyn.

Rev. Father A. Lambert, one of the Leading priests of the Redemptorist Order, has abjured the errors of the Romish Church. On March 22, at the close of a mission he was conducting in the pro-Cathedral in Brooklyn, he sent in his resignation to his bishop and published in the newspapers a copy of the letter he had sent to the Superior-General of his order at Rome, explaining his reasons for quitting the Catholic Church.

Contributions of clothing for the Relief Fund from the following, are acknowledged:

Orion G. Clark, New York; Mrs. J. Turner, West Groton, Mass.; W. C. T., Woodbury, Conn.; Mrs. S. M. Tracey, Mr. and Mrs. S. Sprague, Miss U. Elliott, Meredith, N. H.; Mrs. J. F. Sparrell, West Groton, Mass.; Stuartville, Ohio; Nashua, N. H.; Goodspeeds, Conn.; Mrs. G. C. Gerlack, Van Buren, O.; Mrs. W. D. Buser, Sallaburg, Pa.; Burdette Miss. Society, and Presbyterian Church, Cannbury, N. J.; M. E. Church, Reynoldville, N. Y.; Mrs. Alexis Courier, Springfield, Mass.; Y. P. S. C. E., Burlington, N. Y.; W. H. M. S. of Cambridge, Vt.; Bassett & Co., Florence, Vt.; Belcher, N. Y.; Ulysses Lyons; Baptist Mission Circle, "I. H. N."; A few ladies of Waldo, Fla.; Mrs. W. R. Cochrane, Antrine, N. H.; Addis M. Wilbur, South Otselec, N. Y.; Arson E. Lee, South Otselec, N. Y., and two contributions of clothing from unknown friends.

Contributions of provisions, etc., have been received from the following:

Friend, Southampton, bag potatoes; Moriches, sack vegetables; Mrs. J. C. H., Kentucky, papers; Mrs. U. J. Holmes, Forked River, cabbage and potatoes; Bear Creek, potatoes; Hightstown, potatoes; Middletown, onions; Pittsford, Vt., papers; Mrs. G. B. Abrams, Seward, N. Y., barrel of supplies.

CARRYING A WOUNDED OFFICER IN A LITTER IN WESTERN AFRICA.

wheel again to the wire. With an agonizing cry of "My eyes, my eyes," the reporter staggered and would have fallen if a friend had not caught him. He was completely blinded and was taken at once to the Eye and Ear Infirmary. His eyes were carefully examined with the microscope, but no cause for the blindness could be discovered. The doctors pronounced the case one of hysterical amblyopia, and ordered him to be kept for two days in a dark room. At the end of that time he was taken, with his eyes bandaged, back to the infirmary, and into a darkened room there. Placing himself in front of the patient from whose eyes the bandage had been removed, the doctor asked him in a doubtful tone if he could see him, and the patient replied that he could not. Then the doctor changed his position and opened a shutter, so as to stand in the light. Holding up a mirror to the sunlight and speaking confidently, he said, "Now you can see this." The patient gave a cry of surprise and declared that he could see it and looking round he could see the friends who had accompanied him and every object in the room. His sight was completely restored. When the doctor was asked by a friend what had been the matter with the good was his work, how good his health was, nor how much money he had, the crime was gnawing at his soul. For years he had been on the point of making a confession that he might get some relief from the torment he was suffering. Finally he has given himself up. It may be hoped that his efforts to recover peace of mind will not end there. It is only a false and temporary peace that any sinner obtains by submitting to the penalty of the law, unless he also applies to the blood of Jesus which cleanses from all sin. (1. John 1: 7.)

A Fatal Fire.

A man lost his life in a fire which occurred in New York a few days ago, when he might have been saved. The fire broke out on the ground floor of a three story house about midnight. All the inmates had retired, when the policeman on the beat saw flames shooting out of the ventilator, and gave the alarm. There was no fire-escape, but a painter who occupied a room on the top floor had taken the precaution to keep a rope in his room for just such an emergency. He flung it out as soon as he was awakened and found that the stairs were on fire. He aroused his employer and his wife

Among the Lepers.

Our Traveler Visits the Naaman House in Damascus—A Living Tomb.

A LEPER IN THE SUN.

lips as we follow it to the Eastern gate of the city, and see it merged into a wider and less desirous road.

This is bounded on one side by the dry moat of the wall. We ought, after two months' seasoning in regions associated in western imaginations with attar of rose and spicy breezes, and Araby the blest—to be coolly indifferent to the effluvia arising from the wasting carcasses of two camels which have been thrown out of the highway into the ditch. A pack of lean scavenger-curs, yellow and black, are snarling over the unsavory spoils. Skeletons, denuded and dessicated lie further on, and small bones make an unattractive miscellany between the large and more pronounced.

"It is an Eastern poet, I believe, who says that Damascus is as fragrant as Paradise?" observes Alcides, with his nose well in the air.

There is no reply to the gibe, for our guide, Abraham Avoub, a Damascene, selected by David Jamal, "halts us" at a miserable gateway in a more miserable mud wall on the left of the road. If there were ever gates, they have fallen from the hinges long ago. This is the entrance to a filthy courtyard where the sun falls with kindly warmth. Four human figures are huddled in the sunniest corner, mere bundles of rags to the casual glance. Two look up as we pass, and our shadows fall upon them. With our minds full of Bible stories of "lepers white as snow," we should not recognize these caricatures of humanity as victims of the awful plague, had not David's graphic descriptions prepared us for the revelation.

Alcides has recorded in his note-book as our dragoman's diagnosis of the loathsome thing—"a combination of itch, chilblains and gangrene." No more apt language comes to my pen, after having seen scores of the wretched objects. Beyond the outer court, we pass between two huts into a second enclosure, about thirty feet square, surrounded by squalid hovels, all facing upon the open area. They are of mud, they are without windows; they have one door apiece, and they are unfurnished, save for the ragged mats which serve as beds. Scraps of moldy bread, bits of bone and rotten vegetables strew the floor—the remnants of meals devoured here, as the dogs without the walls are gnawing theirs. Of the odors flowing through the doors into the sun-filled outer world, I cannot speak. On this fine day, everybody is outside except a few women dimly visible in the obscure interiors, and at these we abstain from looking as we pass.

A strange voice, both hoarse and shrill, hails us while we stand in the middle of the courtyard. It proceeds from the porch of a small frame house directly opposite the opening by which we have entered. The house is, we note, larger than the mud huts, and has two windows besides the door. A woman or girl, for she must be under twenty, and might be good-looking but for her viragoish expression and a certain hardness, —I might term it a callosity of skin and features that betrays the blight which has fallen upon her—stands upon the upper step wringing out a cloth she has taken from a great metal pan. We have interrupted their day's washing, and for other reasons she is ill-pleased. Her husky scream is a question, for our guide answers apologetically what he translates to us in a hasty undertone:

"This gentleman"—designating Alcides—"is a great 'hakim' (physician) from over the sea, who seeks to help you if he can. We intend now harm."

She has thrown the cloth back into the tub with a despairing gesture, and rushed into the house while he is still speaking, appearing a minute later at the window:

"Go away!" she cries, her voice breaking oddly upon the high notes as a consumptive fails when he is about to cough. "Go away! Allah only can help us, and he will not!"

"Her father is the chief man of the lepers," says the guide to us. "He was once a rich—one very rich, man. Now he is here—and old—and cannot leave his bed. His housekeeper, also old, and this, his only child, live here with him in the Naaman House."

For this loathly place (to borrow a word granted to the least afflicted of the colony to bake in the public ovens dough kneaded by their diseased hands.

We had been led to believe the Naaman House a hospital for what are surely the most grievously-smitten of all God's human creatures, and are surprised to learn that this retreat is merely a hole in which they can burrow and hide and be fed apart from the rest of the world. Last year there were forty-two lepers here; now, we are told, they number but twenty-eight.

"What has become of the rest?"

The guide lifts his shoulders to his ears. "What must come to all of them—death. Each is a dying man even now. See!"

Pity unutterable gets the better of disgust, as we survey the scene.

The lepers lie grouped and sit singly in the sunshine, most of them against the wall, seemingly regardless of our presence. Curiosity is dead within them. They do not even beg for "bakshish," as is the habit of their kind in the streets of the city and on the wayside. Some crouch in corners, their poor, marred faces supported by hands from which the fingers are literally dropping; others lie flat upon their backs, soaking in the warmth, eyes closed and jaws falling, as if dead. Every few minutes one begins to cough spasmodically, and the example proving infectious, another and another will join in, until a horrid chorus that threatens to shake the loose frames apart, fills the place. Two near us crawl away, still coughing in a weak, wheezy way, clots of blood dripping from their lips as they go. None of them walk, but all shuffle along on their haunches like beasts who have been hamstrung, or creep upon hands and knees. In some cases, the hands and feet are muffled in dirty rags. Turks are here in garments that bear tokens of old-time finery in shreds of tarnished gold lace and frayed embroidery; and Bedouins, that are ghastly travesties of the tall, bronzed horsemen we see in the desert and among the mountains. They still wear the costume of their race, the suggestion thus conveyed of the free, active life forever left behind them, accentuating their present misery.

One of these loiters nearer to us than the rest, his eyes and manner expressive of some degree of interest in us and our movements. The girl at the window swears furiously at him, as he obeys the beckon of our guide's hand and approaches.

HOUSE OF CHIEF LEPER IN NAAMAN'S HOUSE OF LEPERS.

(From a photograph by Marion Harland.)

"Dare not to go near them!" she vociferates. "They are dogs and the offspring of dogs, as their fathers were before them. They come, not to give alms, but to make a mock of us and to take pictures of us!"

The last half-sentence is drawn forth by the sight of the kodak swung from Alcides' shoulder.

A magic word of two syllables—the first I verily believe that Arab and Syrian babies learn to lisp—has quickened the Bedouin's step, and he stands before us, well-made and heavily bearded, with comparatively few traces in face and figure of the fatal malady. He is about forty years old, and when he speaks his voice is faint and dissonant. His lungs must be well-nigh gone. He is quite willing to converse—thanks to the prospective "bakshish."

"How long have you been ill?" we ask by the mouth of the interpreter.

"Since I was fourteen years old."

"At what age do the symptoms first show themselves?"

"In men, about fifteen; in women, twelve to thirteen."

"Are you contented—and—" bringing out the last word with an effort—"comfortable here?"

"I am not unhappy. I have no work to do. I have my lodgings. I have my food. What more do I want?"

"But if you have no work to do, how do you pass the day?"

"I sit in the sun. I do nothing. Why should I work? Man works to get clothes; I have clothes. And for bread and bed, and a cover by night when it rains. These are mine."

"Have you amusements here?" trying not to glance around the mean enclosure and at the repulsive occupants.

He stares vacantly. The idea is too new and strange to work itself into his brain. From the groups distributed about the court odd murmurs are arising; mutterings in weak, raucous tones, like the growling and whining of beasts disturbed in their slumbers in the sunshine. The woman leans over the window-sill and devotes us to the vengeance of heaven and the abode of the fiend. The whole affair is an abhorrent nightmare, from which we are thankful to escape. Our Bedouin casts furtive looks over his shoulder at the malcontents, and will answer no more questions, however mildly put. The liberal bakshish dropped from a prudent height into his maimed hand, does not pacify the daughter of the bedridden chief of the queer colony. As long as we can hear her, she is reckoning up the misdeeds of our ancestry and imprecating curses upon our heads.

Dante never pictured a fouler deep than this so-called House of Mercy where beings of like form and nature with ourselves are

LEPERS BEGGING AT THE MOUNT OF OLIVES.

(Photographed for "The Christian Herald" by Marion Harland.)

from a former generation), is nigh unto the grounds where are shown a couple of columns surrounded by a mud-and-stone wall, said to be the ruins of the house of the famous Syrian captain. It is maintained by Moslem charity. Wealthy Mohammedans die and leave legacies for the support of the colony, in the hope that the act may bring repose to their own disembodied souls. Kind-hearted people in the neighborhood give them provisions, leaving them inside the outer gate and hastening away to avoid contamination. In spring-time, a few of the stronger men are hired to do light work in the fields, and in harvest to glean after the reapers, gather beans, etc. A less humane measure is the permission other and another will join in, until a horrid chorus that threatens to shake the loose frames apart, fills the place. Two near us crawl away, still coughing in a weak, wheezy way, clots of blood dripping from their lips as they go. None of them walk, but all shuffle along on their haunches like beasts who have been hamstrung, or creep upon hands and knees. In some cases, the hands and feet are muffled in dirty rags. Turks are here in garments that bear tokens of old-time finery in shreds of tarnished gold lace and frayed embroidery; and Bedouins, that are ghastly travesties of the tall, bronzed horsemen we see in the desert and among the mountains. They still wear the costume of their race, the suggestion thus conveyed of the free, acdecaying piece-meal, while the breath of life still animates their dismembered bodies.

As I have intimated, this form of leprosy must not be confounded with that which overtook Moses as a proof of God's ability to work whatever wonder he wills; or Miriam and Gehazi and Uzziah, as punishment for sin, or that which drove haughty Naaman to bathe in little Jordan, at the behest of a prophet who would not even grant him a personal interview. This is hereditary in forty-nine cases out of fifty, and the recognized result of the sins of the forefathers. David Jamal and his Damascus friend agree that the malady is unknown at this day among the Jews, testimony which is corroborated by other authorities to which I have referred the question.

"It is clearly, then, not caused by want of neatness in this generation," is the grave conclusion of our dragoman.

Intermarriages among lepers are constantly occurring, and sometimes, although, David says, not frequently, children are born to the horrible heritage of disease and disgrace.

Instances are on record of attempts to avert the certain doom by removing the child in early infancy to the judicious guardianship of others than the parents. In spite of sanitary and medical precautions, the unmistakable signs make their appearance between the ages of thirteen and fifteen. The incipient stages are intense itching of the hands, extending gradually to other parts until the whole frame is a body of living death, a mass of purrifying sores and decomposing bones.

The Jerusalem lepers who are at large are, if possible, in a sadder case than those sheltered in the Naaman House at Damascus. They have, it is true, a village of their own below Siloam (whose "shady rill" and growing lily are sadly dismissed to the realm of hymnal romance), a wretched cluster of huts to which they resort at nightfall, but the streets are their home, and begging is the only means by which they earn a livelihood. They haunt places frequented by tourists and pilgrims, following Russian and Greek devotees in their periodical visits to the Virgin's Tomb, Gethsemane and the Mount of Olives. There may be in the Holy City about sixty of this class of professional mendicants.

Singularly enough, lepers are found in but four towns in Palestine: Damascus, Nablous, Ramleh and Jerusalem. These are to them as cities of refuge when attacked in the neighboring villages. No longer with the warning cry of "unclean! unclean!" they obtrude themselves upon our notice whenever we walk or drive through the thoroughfares in Damascus and Jerusalem; stumps of hands or fingers, from which one or several joints are missing, are thrust into our faces, the horrid voice, unhuman in quality and inflection, calls for "bakshish," and the disfigured faces grin or weep, as suits the owner's mood and taste.

The lights in this dark picture are found in the Leper Home at Jerusalem, founded in 1867 by the Baroness Keffenbrinck-Ascheradin, and by her transferred in 1880 to the Moravians. The building stands upon a hill pleasantly visible from the Bethany road. The management is excellent, and all the appointments are those of a well-kept hospital. Divine service is held twice a week, and those who are too ill to attend it are visited separately in their rooms. The "house father" and his wife and the chaplain address themselves to their terrible task in the spirit expressed by the last-named in a recent report:

"Remembering always that the loathsome and terrible disease of the patient is one which seems ever to have thrilled our Saviour's breast with a keen and instantaneous compassion. . . .

"Gospel addresses, prayers offered at the bedside of many a stricken sufferer and private intercourse with Moslem and Christian patients have led many to acknowledge the benefits of Christianity and to endeavor to live according to the high principles of the Gospel."

Physicians and nurses acknowledge that the malady is absolutely incurable. They are likewise unanimous in the opinion that, however long the seeds may lie latent in the individual or family, leprosy is not to be eliminated from the blood. All that they can do—and this is much—is, by cleanliness, alleviative medicines and external applications, to lessen present suffering, and smooth the pathway to the grave.

Wild rumors of extraordinary cures effected by a German physician who was here for a while, and whose work included some

O God, the Rock of Ages.

E. BICKERSTETH.

HUBERT P. MAIN.

1. O God, the Rock of A - ges, Who ev - er - more hast been,
2. Our years are like the shad - ows On sun - ny hills that lie,
3. O Thou who canst not slum - ber, Whose light grows nev - er pale,

What time the tem - pest ra - ges, Our dwell - ing - place se - rene;
Or grass - es in the mead - ows That blos - som but to die;
Teach us a - right to num - ber Our years be - fore they fail;

Be - fore Thy first cre - a - tions, O Lord, the same as now,
A sleep, a dream, a sto - ry, By strangers quick - ly told,
On us Thy mer - cy light - en, On us Thy good - ness rest,

To end - less gen - er - a - tions, The Ev - er - last - ing Thou!
An un - re - main - ing glo - ry Of things that soon are old.
And let Thy Spir - it bright - en Thy hearts Thy - self hast blessed!

Copyright, 1893, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From SELECT SONGS No. 2, by per. of the Publishers.

skilful operations, and of the miraculous properties of a certain oil have excited false hopes in many who eagerly apply for admission. Those in charge of the Home, are firmly candid in dissipating these fancies, declaring that no mortal skill can do anything more than to alleviate the least tolerable and delay the horrible end.

MARION HARLAND.

STAND STILL IN JORDAN.

"When ye are come to the brink of the water of Jordan, ye shall stand still in Jordan." Joshua 3: 8.

WHEN your feet come down to Jordan,
When you stand upon its brink,
Let your courage never falter—
Let your spirit never shrink.
You shall witness at the Jordan
The salvation of our God—
You shall pass the river safely—
Crossing over it dry shod.

CHORUS:—Stand still, then, in Jordan,
Stand still and behold

How God still delivers,
Who Jordan controlled.
Stand still, then, in Jordan,
Have faith in the Lord;
And mighty deliverance
Shall be your reward.

Yes, the Lord is great and mighty,
And his children he will keep—
He will pile up Jordan's waters,
Till they're standing as an heap.
Never doubt his love,—oh, never—
It will always be the same—
Yes, forever and forever
You may trust his holy name.—Chor.

When you stand in doubt or darkness,
Or whatever be your need,
God is ready to deliver,
If his promise you will plead.
Then stand still within the Jordan,
For our God will have control,
And the darkly surging waters
Shall not overwhelm your soul.—Chor.

THE LAST GREAT WAR.

Characteristics of the War and its Leader at the Close of this Dispensation.

(Concluded from page 217.)

THE kingdom represented by the iron of the quadrimetallic image of Daniel 2 was, like iron, to break in pieces and subdue all things, and to this kingdom belongs the evil chieftain of the last days. The fourth beast of Daniel 7, on which appeared the Little Horn, was dreadful, terrible, and strong exceedingly; it had great iron teeth, and devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet; and it had ten horns, representing subject kings. The King of Fierce Countenance of Daniel 8 waxed exceedingly great (the prophetic mode of expressing continual conquest over rival powers) towards the south and east, and towards the pleasant land—even to the host of heaven, casting down some of the host and of the stars to the ground. The Wilful King of Daniel 9 shall do according to his will, and exalt and magnify himself above all. He will be involved in contests with the king of the south, and other powers. Of the Man of Sin of St. Paul little is said to connect him with war or war-like proceedings and conquests; but his identity with the Wild Beast of the Apocalypse is undeniable; and it is not easy to conceive how he could in this world reach the exalted position assigned to him by Paul, except by means of successful war against all opposers. But the apocalyptic Wild Beast, without doubt, is a great warrior. The outcry of wonder from all the world, "Who is like him? who is able to make war with him?" cannot be sent forth until he has made his prowess felt. All the characteristics of Daniel's iron kingdom, Little Horn, King of Fierce Countenance, Wilful King, and Paul's Man of Sin, and Son of Perdition, meet in him. After his establishment upon the earth as King of the Locusts, there are indications in the prophecy of an indescribable conflict of great powers under the second woe-trumpet. This implies war in a struggle for conquest; and as it occurs before the war against the saints and slaughter of the witnesses, it confirms the position before implicitly arrived at—that the last conflict between good and evil can only take place after a tremendous struggle among the nations for supremacy; and this position is thus established by Scripture, as well as by reason.

The course of the argument has unfolded a view of the condition of the world in the latter days that most strikingly answers to the prescient description given by our Saviour to his disciples as he sat upon the Mount of Olives: "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines and pestilences, and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven. . . . For in those days shall be affliction from the beginning of the creation until this time, neither shall be."

The war with the saints and witnesses, though designated a war, will more properly be a raid of persecution and extermination; for in proportion as the followers of Christ are true representatives of the good will they refrain from the sword and from all acts of offence and reprisal. In the extremity of their peril the Lord will appear for their salvation, and will then avenge their blood upon those that dwell on the earth. This raid upon the saints will be a movement totally distinct from that in which "nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom," as described by our Lord. The former will be projected and carried on by the Antichrist, or evil chief alone, and the latter will be the process of his rise to supreme power by the subjugation of his ten confederated allies and all worldly antagonists.

This period of commotion among the nations and kingdoms must necessarily be a time of terrible "distress and perplexity." It will not be surprising that the pretensions of some to be deliverers and saviours will excite the hopes and foster the credulity of multitudes, who will be led after false Christs and false prophets only until the Antichrist himself shall appear with signs and lying wonders, aided by all the powers of Satan, and so able to delude the world into the worship of himself as its God and Saviour. This will inaugurate the last stage of this world's impiety and blasphemy, which, supplemented as it will be by the raid of Antichrist upon the saints, will call down the predicted vials of Divine wrath and empty them to the last drop of their indignation upon the destroyers of the earth.

PROVIDING FOR THE FUTURE.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor
Topic for the Week Commencing April
22. Matt. 25 : 31-46.

ONE of the most striking paradoxes of Christ's teaching was, that he who would save his life should lose it, and he that would lose his life for Christ's sake should save it. The passage selected for the topic is an amplification and illustration of that paradox. It shows the life of service, of unselfishness, of love and beneficence rewarded, and the life of negligence and self-indulgence condemned. Nothing is said by the Judge as to creed, or ordinances, but all turns on whether deeds of helpfulness have been done or left undone. The inference is, that wherever there is love for Christ these deeds will surely be done and where they are not done, there is no love for Christ in the soul. Again and again in the New Testament is this principle enunciated. Men are classed there, not as we class them, by their station, or creed, but by their conduct. Christ perceives by what they have done, whether they have his spirit. He that is intent on securing good things for himself and is unmindful of others, stands self-convicted. He does not belong to Christ or he would be leading a different life. Christianity, as Christ taught it and lived it, is self-denial, self-forgetfulness, self-sacrifice and abounding love to men. The fact is conspicuous in this passage. Those on the right hand had forgotten themselves and their services and were surprised that they were to be rewarded for deeds which had been prompted by love, untainted by selfish consideration. Little likelihood was there of the Judge, who could read all hearts, and who takes account of motive, addressing such words to men who had done good work for the sake of reward. Even ordinary men discriminate in such matters. It is related of Napoleon that, in one of his battles, a gun was dismounted at a critical moment. It had been brought hurriedly to a point of vantage to operate on an advancing column of the enemy, and every moment was precious. The gunner, a man of gigantic strength, seized it and by a prodigious effort raised it to its place on the gun-carriage. Napoleon was delighted and made the man a captain on the spot. A trooper who heard of the affair envied his comrade and resolved to win promotion in the same way. He counted himself fortunate when he heard the Emperor, on parade, order the gunners to put a gun on its carriage. He stepped forward and by his own unaided strength executed the order. To his amazement, the Emperor instead of praising and promoting him, censured him for needlessly exerting himself and sent him to prison. The value of every action is gauged by the motive that prompts it. In the picture Christ drew in this passage, he saw his own spirit working in his people, leading them to live his life of love and kindness in the world—a life of spontaneous helpfulness, caring for the poor and the unfortunate, and loving and serving them in their need for Christ's sake. It is a significant sign of the extent to which selfishness has corroded the spirit of our time that a body of Christian men can see in such a picture of devotion and self sacrifice merely a method of providing for the future.

THE RAILROAD Y. M. C. A. CONFERENCE.

The seventh annual conference of Railroad Young Men's Christian Associations was held in the new building of the department in New York, commencing March 29. By the courtesy of Messrs. Harper & Brothers, we give here a picture of this building, which is the most complete and ployes of the railroads, were received from Mr. E. W. Pullman, of the Palace Car Company; Mr. Frank Thompson, of the Pennsylvania Railroad; Mr. S. Sloan, of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western; Mr. Thomas P. Fowler, of the New York, Ontario and Western, and from about thirty other Presidents and Vice Presidents, all of whom declared that the results of the Association's work were beneficial both to the railroads and the employes.

Mr. Clarence J. Hicks, Secretary of the International Committee, reported on the work which had been accomplished by the Railroad Department. "The main object sought to be attained was," he said, "to counteract the evils resulting from frequenting saloons. The railroad corporations were now contributing over $100,000 a year toward the support of the association, to enable the employes of their roads to establish clubrooms with libraries and reading rooms, gymnasiums, and other means of recreation calculated to elevate the character of the men and improve their efficiency. Thirty-one associations occupy commodious buildings owned by them or placed at their disposal by the railroad companies. Last year $147,389 was paid out for current expenses, of which sum 25 per cent. was contributed young men who are manning the American system of railroads are producing that miracle of the apostolic times that wherever the Christian man goes, in the railroad offices or in the freight station, he finds young men who, by their speech and conduct, bear testimony for their Master by their exemplary lives and deportment. Practice heroism and self-sacrifice in your various callings, and I ask you to give the work of this association more and more of your sympathy. I rejoice to believe that in your associations a wider sphere of development and progress is in store for you."

AMONG THE ORDERS.

The influence of the Silver Cross House, Toronto, has gone over the sea. One of "the King's Daughters' household," who now lives in Edinburgh, has organized a Circle there that does mission work in "the old town."

There are many old members and friends of the Young Men's Christian Association in all lands who will be glad to know that, in connection with the celebration of the forthcoming jubilee in June next, a fund is being raised to present on behalf of the members and associates to Mr. George Williams, who organized the first Y. M. C. A. fifty years ago, a token of affection in the shape of a marble bust by Hamo Thornycroft, R. A.

The National Executive of the Young Men's Christian Associations in England is uniting with the Sunday School Union and similar organizations in promoting a bill in Parliament to lessen the facilities for gambling which now exist.

The Young Men's Christian Association, of Tokio, Japan, expects to occupy a new building this month. The report of last year's work in Tokio gives encouraging details, and many incidents showing the value of the boarding-house.

Since May, 1888, a Christian Endeavor Society in Rangoon has held regular sessions every Monday evening, and carried on work among the young people. The hand of the Lord has guided it, and much good has been accomplished.

The Baptist Young People's Union of Greenwood Church, Brooklyn, is supporting a native preacher at Banza Manteke, in Africa, and one in Toungoo, Burmah, besides paying for a free bed in the Ningpo Hospital, China. The Personal Work committee report over seventy conversions as a result of their efforts during the revival meetings just closed.

A Floating Endeavorer on the U. S. S. "Chicago," writes: "In my wanderings over the sea I found a Christian Endeavor Society at Kingstown, Ireland, in the heart of the enemy's country. I worshipped there, and had blessed fellowship and communion with them."

Progress in Young Men's Christian Association work is reported from many parts of France. An Association has been formed at Sedan, under the Presidency of Pasteur Loux. The members of the Association at Bordeaux are very helpful to the McAll Mission.

There is a movement on foot in Pittsburg, Pa., to establish an organization on lines similar to the Young Men's Christian Association and to be known as the Chinese Young Men's Christian Association. This movement has no connection with the recognized Young Men's Christian Association, but is designed by certain philanthropists of that city to provide a retreat for the Christian Chinamen there.

From HARPER'S WEEKLY

Copyright, 1886, by HARPER & BROTHERS.

THE RAILROAD YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, NEW YORK.

attractive the Railroad Department has in the whole country. It cost over one hundred thousand dollars, and was the gift of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt to the Association. It is located on Madison avenue and Forty-fifth street, near the Grand Central Station, and its doors are open day and night all the year round. It has all the conveniences of a club house, with social rooms, library, reading-room, gymnasium, restaurant and other accommodations.

The conference was a large one, ninety-eight railroad Associations being represented. The number of secretaries and ex-officio members brought the actual working delegation up to 250. Beside these there was a large attendance of officials and employes of the Trunk Roads and branches from all sections as far west as Denver, Col. Letters expressing appreciation of the work of the Association and testifying to the good effect it produced on the em-by railroad employes, the remainder being contributed by the railroad companies. There are 76 libraries, containing 46,000 volumes, in the clubrooms of the association.

Among the speakers at the conference were Bishop Potter, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, Col. McCook and Mr. Richard C. Morse. Bishop Potter in the course of an eloquent address said:

"I thank God with all my heart for the work the Young Men's Christian Association is doing in relation to railroad men on the railways of the United States and Canada, and all over the vast continent. The Romans built roads, wonderful, imperishable, colossal, and surpassing anything modern architecture has produced, that are impregnable to the assaults of time. But the Romans built their roads for the march of armies. I bless God that the ties that bind the

The Women of Morocco.

Their Condition one of Gilded Slavery and Spiritual Ignorance.

THE social condition of woman in Eastern lands has witnessed very little improvement within the last few centuries. This is especially true of Moslem countries; and indeed, everywhere, save where Judaism and Christianity have dignified the condition of womanhood, her state is that of a mere household slave. Assigned to a state of perpetual childhood, as far as mental and spiritual training are concerned, her higher nature has no opportunity for development and any talent or natural endowment she may possess is cruelly crushed unless it ministers to the selfish pleasure of her ruler, master or husband. This condition of affairs may be said to pervade Oriental society as a whole, with the exception possibly of a few localities in cities like Beyrout, Cairo, and Alexandria, where, in some more progressive and enlightened households, woman is treated as a few degrees better than a chattel, a bond servant or a petted and jeweled slave.

Nowhere is feminine subservience to man more strongly emphasized than in Morocco. Child marriages are very common in many parts of the East, throughout Syria, Egypt, and some sections of Arabia, also in India and China. It is estimated that in India alone there are 25,000,000 child-wives, of whom 70,000 are under ten years of age. In Morocco child-marriages may be said to be the rule, rather than the exception. The betrothal takes place in early infancy, the parents entering into a binding ceremony or making a verbal promise, that the boy and girl shall be united in marriage. As the children grow up, it becomes the privilege of the youth to make the girl his wife whenever he is able to support her. Many hardships, privations and cruelties are endured in consequence of these early marriages, yet the custom of espousing children is respected, and parents are envied who find desirable suitors for their daughters, while the latter are yet very young.

To the western mind and especially to the people of Christian countries, such practices appear barbarous, repugnant and sinful; yet all through the East, child-espousal is a time-honored and respected institution. When the poor little child-wife grows up to mature womanhood, and realizes the burdens, cares and responsibilities of her station, she usually finds life a dreary and monotonous affair. Utterly untrained to think of anything that will arouse her intellectual and spiritual nature, she falls back on dress, and jewelry, and the thousand little decorations and ornamentation of self and surroundings, which gratify uncultured taste and vanity alike. If she has a rich husband, her dresses and her jewelry are superb and matchless, her divans soft and luxurious, her tapestries and rugs the costliest the markets of Damascus or the bazaars of Cairo can afford. If poor, she is indeed to be pitied.

Whether the average Moorish home is a happy one, is a question which it would be difficult to decide. The women live in the complete seclusion of the harem, just as they do in almost all Mohammedan countries. They lead an indolent, unambitious life, devoted to dress, music and a few accomplishments, together with the routine duties of the household. They rarely venture outside the grounds of the home and their unacquaintance with the great world and its doings may be likened to that of mere children. Illiterate with rare exceptions, their spiritual natures wholly undeveloped, they are creatures of passion and impulse, affectionate, yet revengeful, and knowing nothing of those qualities that make life bright and beautiful to the women of Christian lands. Living in one of the loveliest countries in the world—a land of citrons, lemons, limes and oranges, of the vine and all manners of fruits and grains, of splendid forests, songful with birds, great mountain ranges, with rivers and beautiful valleys, it is only on rare occasions that a Moorish lady travels, and when she does, she is so bundled and hooded that she can see but little and is herself supposed to be unseen.

There is a peculiar elegance of draping in the costumes of the Moroccan woman that unconsciously carries the mind back to the beautiful art creations of the Moors, the remains of which are found in Granada and at the opening of some reformatory institution for boys, during which he remarked that if only one boy was saved from ruin, it would pay for all the cost, and care, and labor of establishing such an institution as that. After the exercises had closed, in private conversation, a gentleman rallied Mr. Mann upon his statement and said to him: "Did you not color that a little when you said that all the expense and labor would be repaid if it only saved one boy?" "Not if it were my boy," was the solemn and convincing reply.

The Lot of Woman in Siam.

It is a wretched one, in the main. In the king's palace are four thousand women. The jewels contained in this fairy palace are of fabulous worth. The first Queen possesses a huge safe, made by a London firm, filled with jewelry of untold value: the second Queen owns a scarcely inferior assortment, while the jewel repository of the King is said to occupy the entire space of the royal bed-chamber. Yet in spite of gems and bijouterie, the lot of women in Siam is not a happy one. The poorer women are the beasts of burden and the tillers alone with God. Shut out all but Jesus. Nobody else but he and yourself know what is being said in that secret chamber. But something will take place that will be the result of that secret interview with God, for "Thy Father will reward thee openly." After you have left that sacred lone spot you will meet God in public where you will have the open reward of secret prayer."

GRANDMOTHERS.

ONE glance at the portraits of the women a hundred years ago and their style of dress, makes us wonder how they ever got their breath. All this makes me think, writes Dr. Talmage, that the express rail train is no more an improvement on the old canal boat, or the telegraph no more an improvement on the old-time saddle-bags, than the women of our day are an improvement on the women of the last century. But still, notwithstanding that those times were so much worse than ours, there was a glorious race of godly women, seventy and a hundred years ago, who held the world back from sin and lifted it toward virtue, and without their exalted and sanctified influence, before this the last good influence would have perished from the earth. Indeed, all over this land there are seated to-day—not so much in churches, for many of them are too feeble to come—a great many aged grandmothers. They sometimes feel that the world has gone past them, and they have an idea that they are of little account. Their heads sometimes get aching from the racket of the grandchildren down-stairs or in the next room. They steady themselves by the banisters as they go up and down. When they get cold it hangs on to them longer than it used to. They cannot bear to have the grandchildren punished even when they deserve it, and have so relaxed their ideas of family discipline that they would spoil all the youngsters of the household by too great leniency. These old folks are the resort when great troubles come, and there is calming and soothing power in the touch of an aged hand that is almost supernatural. They feel they are almost through with the journey of life, and read the old book more than they used to, hardly knowing which most they enjoy, the Old Testament or the New, and often stop and gaze tearfully over the family record half-way between. I hail them all, whether in the house of God or at the homestead. Blessed is that house that has in it a grandmother Lois. Where she is, angels are hovering round and God is in the room. May her last days be like those lovely autumnal days that we call Indian Summer.

I never knew the joy of having a grandmother; that is the disadvantage of being the youngest child of the family. The elder members only have the benediction. But though she went up out of this life before I began it, I have heard of her faith in God, that brought all her children into the kingdom, and two of them into the ministry, and then brought all her grandchildren into the kingdom, myself the last and least worthy. Is it not time that you and I do two things, swing open a picture gallery of the wrinkled faces and stooped shoulders of the past, and call down from their heavenly thrones the godly grandmothers to give them our thanks, and then persuade the mothers of to-day that they are living for all time, and that against the side of every cradle in which a child is rocked beat the two eternities?

Six Excellent Rules to Remember.

Here are six rules for young people to remember:

Never lose any time. Time spent in recreation is not lost.

Never err the least from the truth.

Never say an ill thing of a person when you can say a good thing. Not only speak charitably, but feel so.

Never be irritable or unkind to any one. Never indulge in luxuries that are not necessary.

Do all things with consideration. Temperance, virtue and morality in youth and young manhood are the surest guarantees for a happy and contented old age. Build for the future as well as for the present.

Why a Moslem Girl Loved Jesus.

A little Moslem girl who had seized upon one difference between Mohammedanism and Christianity said: "I like your Jesus because he loved little girls." Our Mohammed did not love little girls."

A HOME GROUP IN MOROCCO.

elsewhere. Like the women of Syria, they are fond of bright colors, and strings of glittering coins of gold and silver. But with all the pomp and grandeur that fill even the most aristocratic Moorish homes, they belong to a decaying race.

With the expulsion of the Moors from Spain in 1492, the splendid history of a race which had held a prominent position in the affairs of the world for seven centuries, came to an inglorious close. Even yet, the Moorish homes of the better class (such as that shown in the illustration), contain evidences of the splendid art that characterized the race when, in the zenith of its power, it exerted an influence on art all over Southern Europe which has survived through the ages and whose best examples are found in the Alhambra and the magnificent mosques of Cordova in Spain.

The Value of a Boy.

Some years ago the late Horace Mann, the eminent educator, delivered an address of the soil, the hewers of wood and drawers of water. Their lazy husbands sleep while the wretched wives cultivate the paddy-fields. And as for woman in the royal palace, her life is a blank, which will end only with herself. She does everything by rote, parrot-like. Her very children are taken from her at perhaps six years old, and the chances are much against her ever seeing them again. They are lost to her, just as she has been lost to her parents since girlhood.

Praying in Secret.

In most cases, morning and evening prayers are not secret—you are not alone with God; others are in the room with you. The door is not shut. What God wants is to have private talks with you alone every day. He wants you in addition to these morning and evening prayers to set apart special times when the Lord can meet with you every day. Any place will do for a closet, so it be a place where we may be

CHAPTER XIII. (Continued.)

"YOU cannot stop there!" said Mrs. Paull with sportive decision. "The sermon is incomplete without the application. O, Annie! talk is so easy and so cheap! You will think me a reprobate for saying that I distrust many people whose business it is to preach and to teach religion. They all fall into one rut—'Do this and live! Do that and die! Half of the time they say it with the professional side of them, and live their own lives out just as other fallible mortals live out theirs. I should like to know something of your evangelists' six-days-in-the-week walk and conversation. While I am trenching upon irreverent talk of the profession which is above every other, I may as well be frank. Is his the Squeersian principle of first spelling a word, and then going out and doing it?"

Her forced lightness did not cheat her companion into forgetfulness of the significant truth that Ernest Paull was, for years, the popular superintendent of a Sunday School and a telling speaker in Sabbath School conventions, also, a notable worker in other departments of church enterprise. Her answer was grave and direct:

"He does the thing before he spells it. He gives away more than half his income yearly, and gives himself wholly to what he considers the reasonable service of every saved soul." His capacious lungs are full of oxygen, and his bodily health is perfect, notwithstanding the tremendous labors of a day that begins at five o'clock in the morning. He rises then to go to a breakfast-room furnished and supported by himself for tramps and newsboys. He asks God's blessing upon a substantial meal, and, when it is over, talks to the five or six hundred men and lads there assembled of the duties and temptations of the day, and of God's love and care and of his expectation that they will love and serve him, and carry everywhere with them the thought that God's eye is upon them. His parish comprises, as he once said, everybody who needs him. He is constantly on the alert for the opportunity to do 'little deeds of kindness.' Somebody has found fault with him that he is always 'on the side of the under dog.' His sympathies go out most quickly to those whose cry is, 'No man careth for my soul.' He would as readily run up five flights of stairs to pray with a sick man or woman at the top of a tenement house, as to enter a church to electrify an audience with his sound common sense, his all-pervading spirituality and the spirit of consecration that is manifest in every word and look. It matters nothing that people call him an impractical enthusiast and a fanatic. He knows that everyday practice is the very foundation of his doctrine and action. His private life is the best possible commentary upon his teachings."

"Elspeth!" called Mrs. Paull over her shoulder, "move your chair out here. Mrs. Barnes is talking of the Royal Road."

Something in the aspect of the upright figure filling up the kitchen door suggested to the mistress the isolation of the follower who had forsaken all other friends for her, and with it arose a misgiving lest in her own satisfaction in the society of her early friend, she had left the faithful creature too much to herself of late. With the instinct of true gentleness that never deserted her, Mrs. Barnes turned her chair slightly towards Elspeth, as she joined the ladies, still at a respectful distance.

"I was about to tell Mrs. Paull, how, after hearing Nurse Williams's Mr. Stevens, I went home, determined to try, for myself, his rule of living by the day. Mrs. Williams left me to my own thoughts during most of the journey back to Brooklyn. She saw that my mind and heart were full, and, as she told me since, contented herself with praying for me. My husband was not at home, and I had several hours to myself.

As soon as I laid off my hat, I got out my Bible. I would take nothing upon man's word without appeal to the Law and the Testimony.

"I had said over to myself times without number—'Take no thought for to-morrow,' very much as a Roman Catholic wears a scapular, and a pagan a charm against the Evil Eye. Now, when I sat down with the one desire to take God at his word, the text took on a new meaning. By the way, the Revised Version puts it yet more clearly and strongly than the Old. It says:

"Be not therefore anxious for the morrow, for the morrow will be anxious for itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

"That was the first verse I looked up. On the same page I read, as I had never seen it until then:

"Be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Behold the birds of the heaven, that they sow not, neither do they reap, or gather into barns; and your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not of much more value than they?"

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow. They toil not, neither do they spin. Yet I say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

"I stopped there to read those last words over again. All that man's wealth and wisdom and skill could accomplish; the tribute of Tarshish and the isles, the gifts of Sheba and Seba—could not array this mightiest monarch of the earth like one of these wild flowers. I took the little preacher in imagination between my fingers, gazed into the glowing cup and touched the velvet petals reverently, my heart well-nigh breaking with love and penitence.

"The rest followed naturally:

"If God so clothed the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you?"

"You, Annie Barnes! whose life he has thus far crowned with goodness and mercy; whose cup overflows with blessings; you who are his dear child, graven upon his hands; you for whom Christ died that you might live and reign with him forever. By this time, I was prepared for the tender reproach:

"O ye of little faith!"

"Why, Alice Paull! I told him then and there upon my knees, between my sobs, that I had never had one atom of real faith, and asked him to give me just one more trial. Still on my knees, I turned the leaves of my Testament.

"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father in heaven give good things to them that ask him."

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden and I will give you rest. And ye shall find rest to your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

"That is, when he is taken utterly, simply and joyfully at his Word.

"And after the miracle of the loaves and fishes—really no more of a miracle than happens often and often in the lives of those who are on the alert to interpret his wonderful providences. 'O, ye of little faith! Why reason ye among yourselves because ye have no bread? Do ye not perceive, neither remember the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?"

"Whoso shall humble himself as this little child"—believe that I mean what I say and that every jot and tittle of my Word shall come to pass—"is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

"All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer—believing—ye shall receive."

"The very hairs of your head are numbered."

"Ye are of more value than many sparrows."

"Boast not thyself of to-morrow."

"They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing."

"Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you."

"But you and Elspeth know them all, and could recall a hundred more, one and all bearing the same message to the simple of heart: 'Trust me to do what is right and best for you, and I will be your refuge. Underneath you are the Everlasting Arms. Lie peacefully and happily within them.' Reading them in the new white light that streamed upon the page, I was as one who had found great treasure.

"Marie! dear child!" holding out her hand as a light step fell upon the floor behind her. "Mrs. Morse approached me with a petition after church this morning which she dared not prefer to you. The young man who officiates as organist goes away this week for a month's vacation. She says that if you will take his place for that time you will gratify Mr. Morse and herself and delight the congregation. I could not answer for you, of course."

"Certainly not."

Marie spoke in a lifeless tone and did not return the pressure of the firm fingers enfolding hers. She stood perfectly still, one hand on the back of Mrs. Barnes's chair. The impulse that sent her to the piano had exhausted itself in her long practising.

"Would you like to take the position, my love?" her mother queried.

"That is for you to say, mother."

It was always "mother" now-a-days, never "mamma."

"I do not wish to force your inclinations. I thought you might desire to oblige Mr. and Mrs. Morse who are so kind to you."

"Very well, then. I will do it," as passively as she had spoken before.

Mrs. Barnes was not easily put down. A wet blanket had no appreciable effect upon her spirits; nothing short of a deluge drowned her energies. She pressed the small, limp hand to her warm cheek, smooth as a sixteen-year-old girl's.

"These same left fingers will serve you well, should you ever care to become an organist in a city church. I know a woman who plays very little better who gets a salary of one thousand dollars a year."

She felt an electric quiver in the fingers she praised, and heard the irregular breathing that went with the girl's exclamation:

"One thousand dollars! O, Mrs. Barnes! Do you really think I could ever get half of that?"

"Easily—should the occur a vacancy in a city organ-loft. When you have left school, if you still wish it, we must see about it."

Marie was mute for a minute, then spoke dreamily but with suppressed passion that startled her companions:

"I wish I could earn some money! I wish I could earn five hundred dollars! It is a dreadful thing to be a woman—in any circumstances. It is intolerable to be poor as well. Good night, Mrs. Barnes. Good night, mother. I am tired almost to death!"

She went off without offering to kiss either of them. Elspeth arose and followed her silently. Coldness and ingratitude could not weaken her attachment.

"And you blame me for looking forward anxiously to her future!" sighed Mrs. Paull. "She is more of an enigma to me every day. A mother should know her daughter."

"A girl of seventeen does not know herself. Yours is forcing her way single-handed through the debatable ground; trying to ford the current 'where the brook and river meet.' A majority of girls take to misanthropy and mysticism and melancholy during the transition-period, catch it from one another, or inhale the bacteria of that miasmatic region, as they caught measles and whooping-cough when babies. The worst thing that could happen to Marie would be to fall heirless to a million dollars to-morrow. I am well content that she should not have the five hundred for a year or two. Alice, darling!" dropping the jesting strain, "Take your first step in the Royal Road by committing that precious creature entirely for this one night into the hands of him who careth for her as for you."

"I will try!" The answer was low and not prompt.

"Say 'I will,' dear heart! That is the Bible phrase."

"I will praise the Lord while I have my being."

"As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

"I will abide in thy tabernacle forever."

"I therefore, will we not fear though the earth be removed and the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea."

"I will!"

The lips of the friends met in a mute seal upon the covenant.

The holy calm of the summer night rested upon the waters and field, and mountain, and upon the troubled sea of human thought like a Sabbath benediction. Puffs of perfume, now warm, now cool, were the welcome of the pines to the visits of the breezes wandering down from loftier heights, by way of the northern gorge through which the lake had escaped to the valley.

"As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth, even forever!" said Mrs. Barnes, by and by. "That is the oratorio of your hills. It came to me when I saw the amphitheatre of the valley from the top of Baldmount, on my way from Pedlington, and I hear it continually. Henceforth, even forever! Never off guard! There is another proof-text for you."

CHAPTER XIV.

"Any child of God, who, in any adequate way, believes that he can partake of the divine nature, knows that he has strength enough for any business that looks the right way; that is, which helps to bring God's kingdom into the world. If you are working with Aladdin's lamp, or with Monte Cristo's treasures, you are not apt to think you will fail. Far less will you think that you will fail if you are working with the omnipotence of the Lord God behind you."

Edward Everett Hale.

Two years had flown since Ernest Paull passed from the sight and ken of his family and the friends of his better days. Since the vessel that bore him under his false name, left New York Harbor, no more work or token of his existence had come to his wife than if he had fallen at night into mid-ocean, unseen, and never missed by his fellow-voyagers. In the business world, where he used to consider himself a personage of note, he was missed as little as would have been a pebble thrown into a lake a hundred years ago. His disappearance had created wonderfully little sensation at the time—so little that his brother-in-law—to whose promptness and energy was due the fact that few knew of the elopement, and fewer of the embezzlement, until the scandal was dissipated by time into odorlessness—smiled sometimes to himself in reflecting that the queer combination we know as self-love would have smarted had the criminal suspected the truth.

It would mortify many and console none of us to comprehend the absolute insignificance of the human unit in the sum of the ages.

Mrs. Paull's removal from city to country helped to keep the disgraceful story quiet, and her infrequent appearance in scenes where she had once been prominent, completed the effacement of herself and her affairs from the minds of mere acquaintances. Tom and Edwin, sturdy and happy in the free spaciousness of the Pinehurst woods and orchard, gradually ceased to think of the absent parent whose image had faded entirely from Gladys's memory. Their mother was their teacher, co-worker and play-mate, and the sun of the domestic system. Her country neighbors nodded and smiled in cordial good fellowship in meeting her upon the highway, or, as happened oftener, in mountain passes, where the grass grew high and flowers bloomed between the wheel tracks—stepping lightly, head erect and cheeks glowing—a son on each side. Sometimes all three carried baskets for nuts or berries, or for roots to be transplanted in the garden that was the talk of the region for beauty and variety.

In church she sat in her own pew, her children about her, earnest and devout, a chastened serenity in eyes and upon lip, that was a wonder to those who had gleaned fragments of her history and pitied the forsaken wife and toiling mother. Her hair had gathered frost during the terrible winter of two years ago, while the face beneath the abundant locks rolled back from her forehead, gained placidity and almost youthful bloom.

"I know now why the hoary head is said to be a crown of glory," said Lanier, one September evening as he lay at her feet, his head in her lap. "Your hair is a veritable crown, and sheds a sort of radiance over your face, such as falls from the nimbus about saints' heads in the pictures of the old masters. It is mysterious—but beautiful. Yet"—raising a hand to the head bent over his—"it gives me a heartache. Mother! you are the bravest woman I ever knew. This"—stroking the silvered coil—"is the only tell-tale."

(To be Continued.)

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD FOOD FUND.

Additional Contributions for the Relief of the Destitute in New York City.

Anderson, O.A.	250	Friends, Madison, N.Y.	200	Partridge, C.E.	100
Alexander, W.H. and friend	200	Friends, Sparta, Ill.	500	Pond, Mrs F.M.	500
Agnew, Sadie	100	Friend & children, Freedom, Pa.	125	Peterson, Mrs A.	200
Allen, Mrs J.J.	100	Family, Ridgefield, Ill.	100	Poueroy, R.A.	100
Atkinson, A.	500	From a sewing woman, Chicago, Ill.	100	Payne, Albert and Carrie.	150
Augustine, Mrs J.L.	500	From Dana and Darrel, Horn-nollsville, N.Y.	100	Parents and children, School District No. 14, Easton, N.Y.	600
Adams, Mrs E.B.	100	For Christ's sake, West Charl-ton, N.Y.	100	Reinhart, Mrs	100
Austin, S.S.	200	For Him that careth for the sparrows, Woodstock, N.J.	100	Reader, Holly, N.Y.	100
Anderson, Adolph and sisters	500	Graham, Wm F.	100	Reader, Monroe, Mich.	100
Allen, S.L.	100	Geissler, Mrs M.M.	100	Readers of the Herald, Nan-tucket, Mass.	600
Baker, John	100	Goodson, Mrs Rev J.B.	200	Rose, Susie E.	200
Bucklin, Wm H.	100	Gillheist, Mrs Mary	200	Rafferty, Miss E.	100
Brown, T.A.	100	Greene, Geo N.	100	Rowley, N.R.	100
Baldwin, E. and M.R.	200	Griffin, G.E.	100	Roberts, Robbie E.	200
Burton, Kate	100	Gordon, Jennie	100	Richmond, Kate	500
Blakeman, M.	200	Gilmour, Carrie	150	Reed, Edward	500
Belsher, Clyde	100	Gingerich, Mrs K.	100	Ressler, Joel	500
Bonds, Mrs E.R.	300	Gordon, Ada	200	Rodgers, Mrs Helen M.	100
Billings, Mrs C.	100	Gardner, Mrs Lucia C.	200	Reader, Port Haywood, Va.	100
Bennett, Lillian	100	Graham, Mrs	100	Reader, Oneida, N.Y.	100
Bartlett, Jessie	100	Harman, F.G.	100	Reader, Ypsilanti, Mich.	100
Bloomer, Mrs O.B.	200	Hanson, C.D.	100	Sackie, J.S.	200
Boley, Ira, Eva, Lawrence and Grandpa	100	Hartman, Caroline	100	Sanford, Mrs Wm	200
Bonar, Caroline	100	Heagy's, Mrs Dr. Bible class	230	Sackett, C. Dell	500
Ball, Wm	200	Cochranville, Pa.	230	Shanklin, Mrs O.	850
Babbage, Mrs Wm	100	Haskins, Mrs Sarah	500	Slawson, Mrs H.H.	500
Bowman, Mrs M.S.	100	Hornby, Mrs C.	500	Spencer, M.A.	300
Balen, Mrs J.	100	Hawkins, J.E.	100	Strong, Wm	100
Brady, Miss Mary E.	200	Hasty, Mrs Martha	100	Stevens, L.O.	100
Bement, Mrs	100	Haddon, Mrs	200	Seely, Mrs Wm	100
Buck, Jens C.	300	Hyde, L.D.	100	Shine, Mrs J.B.	150
Crawford, Mrs W.	100	Hitchings, Geo H.	100	Subr, Tecumseh, Okla.	200
Conway, Geo B.	100	Hooker, H.	100	Subr, Santa Ana, Cal.	100
Caswell, Mrs R.	100	Harris, Wm	100	Subr, East Pepperell, Mass.	100
Caswell, R.	100	Holmes, Mrs F.C.	200	Subr, Bristol, Conn.	100
Currie, Mrs	100	Hamilton, Henry	200	Subr, L.H.B. Athol, Mass.	100
Coak, Mary	100	Hnbard, M.H. and wife	500	Subr, J.S.B. Kan.	200
Cobb, Mrs Ruth	100	Holder, J.M.	500	Spring Valley Pres S.S.	200
Clapp, Mr and Mrs E.D.	200	Hamilton friends, N.Y.	400	S.S. of Pearson's Chapel, Trim Cave, Miss.	160
Callow, Little Alvah O.	100	In His Name, Phila. Pa.	200	Symphathizer, Cutler, Ill.	100
Cornell, Mrs E.K.	100	" " Cheyenne, Wyo.	100	Symphathizing Subr, Gale's burg, Ill.	300
Chamberlin, John R.	500	" " Pawtucket, R.I.	100	Senior Christian Endeavor, Dodgeville, Wis.	150
Chaffee, D.B.	100	" " Whitesboro, N.Y.	100	Sister, West Le Roy, Pa.	100
Chapman, Mrs M.L.	100	" " Candia, N.H.	100	Thatcher, Samuel	100
Chark, Helen	400	I.H.N., Chesapeake City, Md.	200	Thompson, Mrs J.R.	300
Campbell, Jessie	100	In His Name, Sauquoit, N.Y.	500	Thompson, Mrs J.R.	300
Clarkson, Mrs J.C.	100	" " New Haven, Vt.	500	Thomas, Miss Mary E.	100
Cookery, Mr and Mrs Jas.	100	" " Brooklyn, La.	100	Thorsen, Mrs T. and daughter	200
Chaffee, Mrs H.S.	500	" " Belle Rose, La.	100	Trucker, Geo	100
Creary, Mrs H.L.	100	" " Warrenton, Mo.	500	Thank offering from H. Sum-merfield, Ill.	1000
Chambers, Mrs Annie	100	Janse, Mrs H.	100	Thank offering, Phila. Pa.	200
Cumming, Mrs L.W.	100	Jeffs, A.C.	100	Two readers, N.Y.	200
Christian Endeavor Society,	250	Johnson, John	100	Two sisters, Verona, N.J.	200
Cash, Norwalk, Conn.	500	Johnston, Mrs R.T.	100	Three well wishers in Jesus' name, Olyphant, Pa.	800
Class in 1st Congregational S., Mansfield Center, Conn.	500	Johnson, T.P.	100	Three young ladies, Williams-burg, Tex.	300
Collected by a subr, W.H. Ber-wick, N.S.	300	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Conrad, Mrs M.E.	200	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Conrad, Mrs M.E.	200	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Carter, Mrs John	300	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Clark, Z.H. and wife	300	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Cong S.S. Monro, Conn.	500	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Calvary Chapel, Men's Bible Class, Harrisburg, Pa.	500	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Darr, Mrs H.B.	500	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Druggan, Mrs Wm	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Dunwell, Mrs H.P.	150	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Damon, L.M.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Day, Mrs C.S.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Denny, T.M.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Deane, Mrs Chas R.	300	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Duncan, Mrs J.B.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Dunham, Mrs A.M.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Dodd, F.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Duncan & Simpson	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Davis, Anne	150	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Dana, L.O.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Desh, W.K.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Dawwell, Mr and Mrs A.E.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Daggett, H.B.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Dutch Reformed S.S. West-field, N.D.	75	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Eagle, E.	300	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Edie, Annie	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Eppes, Mrs R.B.	250	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Ezra, Kahoka, Mo.	500	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Easter Offering, E.J.S. Gil-berthville, N.Y.	200	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Eames, Mrs H.F.	200	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Easter offering from F.E.C. Monson, Mass.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Friend	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" Jonesport, Me.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" Canaan, N.H.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" E. Satauket, Li.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" F. Pepperell, Mass.	200	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" Celina, O.	200	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" Reno, Nev.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" Gardean, Pa.	500	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" Brownsville, Pa.	500	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" Waitsfield, Vt.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" New Haven, Mich.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" Ashland, O.	200	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" Louisville, Ky.	300	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
Friend, by Rev E.W. Crane	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" from Kan.	100	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100
" subr, W. Compton, NH	500	Johnson, J.C.	100	Two friends, Princeton, Ill.	100

For Weak Nerves

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It is particularly useful in making weak nerves strong, as it contains necessary elements of nutrition for the nervous system, obtained from natural sources.

Do You Use

Evaporated cream or unsweetened Condensed Milk, and desire the best? Then obtain from your grocer Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream, which ranks first in quality. Prepared by New York Con-densed Milk Company.

A CHRISTIAN TEMPLE IN AFRICA.

Bishop Tucker, of the Church Mission-ary Society, has ordained at the capital of Uganda, seven natives as deacons in the Christian Church, two of them being the greatest chiefs in the country, who govern large provinces. Bishop Tucker speaks of the new church building as worthy of the name of Cathedral. "For Central Africa it is as wonderful a building as Durham Cathedral is for England." There are nearly five hundred trees in it used as pil-lars; some of them were brought five or six days' journey, and it required several hun-dred men for the task." This recalls the ac-counts given of the building of the churches at the Sandwich Islands. The Hawaiians brought the coral, out of which lime was obtained, on their backs, often a distance of a dozen miles, and the largest timbers were dragged from the hoia forests, sometimes nearly twenty miles by hundreds of natives.

A Mere Skeleton

Very Much Reduced After The Grip.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Soon Gave Appetite and Healthy Digestion.

"In December last I was stricken down with the grip, and cannot express my suffering. When the disease left me, I was weak and had little hope of recovery. I was a mere skeleton; had no appetite, and Everything I Ate Distressed Me.

My wife called my attention to Hood's Sarsaparilla. I told the doctor I thought I would begin to take it, and he said it might do me good. So I began, and the first dose of Hood's Sarsaparilla seemed to give me a desire for food. I continued to improve, and to make a long story short, I was soon able to attend to my business. I owe all to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and think it should be kept in every home." F. W. VORMELEKER, JR., 130 Brooklyn St., Cleveland, Ohio.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner pills, assist digestion, cure headache. 25c. per box.

PARSONS PILLS.

Make New Rich Blood.

"Best Liver Pill Made"

Positively cure BILIOUSNESS and SICK HEADACHE, Liver and Bowel Complaints. They expel all impurities from the blood. Delicate women find great benefit from using them. Price 25 cts. five $1.00. Full particulars free. I.S. JOHNSON & CO., 22 Custom House St. Boston, Mass.

No local dealer can compete with us

WALL PAPER

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with sample Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.

We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS, 30-32 W. 18th St., New York, 156-188 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

FREE COMET FOUNTAIN PEN

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this Hard Rubber Fountain Pen. Warranted a perfect writer & im-mense ill. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

AGENTS can make $50.00 to $100.00 a week canvassing for the best specialties ever of-fered. No competition. Write for terms. N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N, 34 East 14th St., New York, or Kansas City, Mo.

Swiss Lozenges, For curing Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, &c. Price 25 cts. a Box. Mailed. H. EDWARD WENDEL, S. E. cor. 3d and George Streets, Philadelphia

THE STAY THAT STAYS

DR. WARNER'S CORALINE DRESS STAY

"If at first you don't succeed," Try

SAPOLIO

The Genuine De Long PATENT Hook AND EYE has on the face and back of every card the words:

See that hump?

TRADE-MARK REG. APR. 19-92.

Richardson & De Long Bros, Philadelphia.

ELI BROWN.

FREE.

The following remark-able statement to which we direct special atten-tion, is from a Tenn. farmer.

My age is 63. I suf-fered intensely from cat-arrh to yrs., dry scabs formed in nostrils, one or both sides stopped up continually, dryness and soreness of throat, hoarseness, intense head-ache, took cold easily, and had continual roaring, cracking, buzzing, and singing in my ears. My hearing began to fail, and for three years I was almost entirely deaf, and contin-ually grew worse. Every thing I had tried, failed. In despair I commenced to use the Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of catarrh. ELI BROWN, Jacksboro, Tenn.

MEDICINES FOR THREE MONTHS' TREATMENT FREE.

To introduce this treatment and prove be-yond doubt that it is a positive cure for Deaf-ness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address, J. H. Moore, M.D., Cincinnati, O.

TO THE UNEMPLOYED. You can make $75 to $250 a Month. Working for us in any locality. Will pay a salary or commission [as you prefer] and all expenses; month-ly deposited in bank to cover same when started. If you are out of work or even wish to better your condition, we have something entirely new to offer, and if you follow our instructions you cannot fail to meet with success; the people will have our goods no matter how hard the times are. We are re-ported big sales everywhere from Maine to Mexico; all that is required is a little pluck and push and success is yours. Why stand idle; this offer may be your stepping stone to a fortune. We fur-nish sample outfits free. If you care to investigate write today for particulars before all valuable terri-tory is taken. Address Standard Silver-ware Co., Dept., 71 Boston, Mass.

TRUSS The BEST is none too good. Send 25c. for 100-pp. illustrated book, and learn which is BEST—and WHY. I. B. SEELEY & CO., 25 S. 11th St., Philada., Pa.

TAPE-WORM Expelled alive in 60 minutes with head, or no charge. Send 2c stamp for circular. Dr. M. Ney Smith, Specialist, 721 Olive, St. Louis, Mo.

FREE! SAVE MONEY.

Send for Our New 28 pp. Catalogue, hand-somely illustrated in colors, and containing a full de-scription of all our celebrated PIANOS and ORGANS.

Remember.—We are the only firm of actual manufacturers that sell exclusively to the public direct from our fac-tories, at Guaranteed WHOLESALE COST. FOR CASH, OR ON THE EASY PAY-MENT PLAN. No Agents. No Dealers. Factory to Home direct. Free test trial in your own home. No money in advance. Special terms to farmers and others, who cannot pay all cash down.

References—Our Bank. Your Bank. Any Bank in the U.S. Write to-day to CORNISH & CO. Washington, New Jersey. Established nearly 30 years.

The Late Senator Colquitt.

Georgia's Famous Senator, Ex-Governor, and Religious and Temperance Leader has Passed Away.

A GENERAL feeling of sorrow in all parts of the country has been caused by the death of Senator Colquitt of Georgia, which occurred on March 26. In the North, the Senator had many friends who admired and loved him and now join with a host of his friends in the South in mourning his death. He was a man of sterling he was known to spend a whole night after a battle, on the field or in the hospital praying with the wounded and dying.

It was not until 1876 that he resumed his public service to his State. In that year he was elected Governor of Georgia and was re-elected at the end of his term. In 1882 he was elected Senator and was re-elected in 1888 for the term which had not expired at his death. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and took a warm interest in its affairs. He was also a strong temperance advocate. His death leaves a void in the State and nation which is severely felt.

CONVERTED BY STOLEN GOSPELS.

The first Protestant minister landed on Corea—a kingdom on the N. E. of China—in 1884, and a few others followed in the next year. Dr. Underwood, one of these missionaries, recently gave the following account of the earliest convert at Dr. Gratian Guinness' London Hall: "Not many months of the year 1886 had gone by before a Corean visiting the mission house saw lying on the table two Gospels. Curiously he read to himself their novel titles, 'The Blessed Tidings of Luke,' 'The Blessed Tidings of Matthew.' And before the missionary was aware of what had happened, the visitor concealed the volumes in the folds of his long loose sleeves. Little did the workers realize how greatly their cry for blessings was being answered in the heart of this one man! But when he returned soon after, his face beaming, and stood before them holding up the two books, one in either hand, exclaiming with the with the gladness of one who has found long-sought treasure, 'Oh, it is good! It is good! It is good!' they knew that God had heard. Without note or comment, without a word of explanation, he had come to understand 'the blessed tidings.' There, standing before them, was the first Corean convert; unhelped of any but God he had accepted simply, and in its fulness, the gift of life.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Penny Stories, for Virge Reese Phelps. A collection of charming stories by juveniles. Pp. 207; cloth covers. A. I. Bradley, Boston, publisher.

Life in a Nubshell; A Story with a Practical Application, by Agnes Giberne; cloth; pp. 222; with frontispiece. A. I. Bradley, Boston, publisher.

At the Lord's Table, Thoughts on Communion and Fellowship, by Howard Crosby. Pp. 127; cloth; price 60c. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York, publishers.

The Life of Daniel Alexander Payne, D.D., LL.D.; by Rev. C. S. Smith, D.D. A Monograph; illustrated. A.M.E. Church and Sunday School Union, Nashville.

In the Shadow of the Alhambra, or The Last of the Moorish Kings; by W. M. Greenley, A.M., M.D.; this volume is the result of more than ten years' travel and research in Europe and the Moslem countries of Asia; cloth covers; pp. 350; price $1.50. S. B. Newman & Co., Knoxville, Tenn., publishers.

THE LATE U. S. SENATOR A. H. COLQUITT.

Christian character, singularly noble and dignified in his conduct and as gentle and sympathetic as he was brave.

The late Senator was born in Walton county, Georgia, in 1824. The family originally belonged to Virginia, but Senator Colquitt's grandfather removed to Georgia in 1801. There he soon came into prominence and his son, the late Senator's father, served his State in both branches of Congress. He was wealthy and took care that his son should have an excellent education. After studying in the best local institutions, he was sent to Princeton University where he graduated in 1844. He then took a course in law and commenced practice in Macon. He served as a volunteer in the Mexican war in 1847, attaining the rank of major. After the conclusion of the war, he returned to his law practice, which he continued until his election to Congress in 1852. The death of his wife, two years afterward prostrated him with grief and he declined the renomination to Congress which was offered him.

He was at that time a large slaveholder and it is worthy of note that he exerted himself to a degree which provoked the censure of many of his friends for the spiritual welfare of his slaves. It was his habit for many years to gather the children on his estate every Sunday afternoon in Sunday School which he taught himself, and at night the elders met to hear him read the Bible and explain it. The devotion of his slaves to him was unwavering. When the war broke out, he had been married a second time and he unhesitatingly left his young wife and child in charge of the negroes on his estate without the supervision of any white man. During his absence on the field, the slaves spontaneously held prayer-meetings on Sundays and week-days to ask that his life might be preserved and he might return in safety. Nor was the good feeling disturbed by emancipation. The first colored church organized in Georgia after the war was indebted for the building in which it worshipped to the munificence of Gen. Colquitt. His military services were of a distinguished order. He entered the war as captain, but before its close he had won the rank of major-general. It was said of him, that although brave and fearless to the verge of recklessness, no officer was so careful of his men or so averse to needlessly exposing them to danger. More than once

Good News for Asthmatics.

We observe that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is now in reach of suffering from Asthma. As before announced, this new discovery is a positive cure for Asthma. You can make trial of the Kola Compound free by addressing a postal card to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, who are sending out large trial cases free by mail, to sufferers.

O'Neill's

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street,

NEW YORK.

Importers and Retailers.

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Cloaks,
Costumes, Fancy Goods, etc.

Special.

A Good Seasonable Tailor-made Suit (same as cut) of All-Wool Cheviot Serge, black or navy, Alexandra waist, skirt four yards wide, extreme sleeves, turn-over collar, double breasted waist, lined and stayed, all silk sewed, for

$7.98

When ordering by mail, please mention Bust and Sleeve Measurement, also length of Skirt in front.

Send for our Illustrated Catalogue

Now Ready.

Mention The Christian Herald when ordering.

All purchases delivered by express, free of charge, at any point within 100 miles of New York City.

H. O'NEILL & CO.,

6th Ave., 20th to 21st St., New York.

Arnold
Constable & Co.

Costumes.

London and Paris Novelties.

Spring Selections.

Lace Trimmed Dresses,

Tailor Made Suits.

GARMENTS, COSTUMES,

Wraps and Cloaks,

EVENING TOILETS.

Broadway & 19th St.

NEW YORK.

Direct Paris Shipment.

Rare Crepons.

Arrived this week a hurried shipment of rare Paris Crepons, this season's Novelties.

Long-grain Crepon, Bayadere Crepon, Dimpled Crepon, and Boa Snake Crepons. Many varieties intermingled with silk.

Colors: Fawns, Browns, and the Golden tints, now in demand.

These goods have been shown only in the Paris model Dresses, and were not heretofore to be had by the yard.

James McCreery & Co.,

BROADWAY & 11th STREET,

NEW YORK.

They turn Green

at the ball and heel—even some of the best black stockings. Wash them with Pearline, and you'll have the black color restored. Does that look as though Pearline would "injure the clothes?"

Things like these, hundreds of them, all more or less important, make Pearline the best thing to wash with.

Then, on top of that, it saves labor, saves rubbing, saves wear and tear, time and money.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as," or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 433 JAMES PYLE, New York.

LOOK AT THE CROOK

Can't slip—Can't cut
Metal work covered up

Sold Everywhere—Made by Warner Bros., N. Y. and Chicago.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$10.50 Buy the Oxford Improved RINGER Sewing Machine, with a complete set of attachments and guaranteed for 10 years. Shipped anywhere on 7 days' trial. No money required in advance. 75 cents in one. World's Fair Medal awarded. Buy from factory, more dealers and agents' profit. Write today for one. FREE CATALOGUE. Oxford Mfg. Co., 342 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PRINTING OFFICE 15c

A large font of Type (over 44) with Figures, Holder, Indelible Ink, Pencil, Tensers, Corkscrew, etc., as shown in cut, complete in neat case. Best Liner Marker, Card Printer, etc. Regular Price 60c. Sample postpaid for 15c, to introduce, with Catalogue of 1000 new articles. CAT. FREE. INGERSOLL & Bros., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

DONGOLA, SOLID LEATHER, PERFECT-FITTING.

This shoe is controlled by us exclusively and cannot be obtained elsewhere.

It is worth Three Dollars and far superior to the unreliable Shoes often sold by mail. Sizes, 1 to 8. Common Sense or Opera Toe, and Opera with Patent Leather Tips; widths, C, D, E, EE. We guarantee the shoe and will refund the money to anyone who for any reason is dissatisfied. We can point, however, to thousands who stay by us because we do just as we agree. Sent express prepaid for $1.47. Let us send you "Shoe Facts," Free. You will find us and the shoe at 1088 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

MOOAR BROTHERS.

DON'T GIVE UP IN DESPAIR

Because you have not been cured by ointments, suppositories or liniments.

Komchacin Caloric CURES

Piles, Hemorrhoids, Fissure, etc.,

by the greatest method ever devised. Our

Dry Heated Medicinal Vapor

Absorbs the ulcers and heals all affected parts. Sent post-paid. PRICE $1.00.

Send for descriptive circular with testimonials. KOMCHACIN CALORIC CO., Office No. 4, 130 and 132 Lincoln St., BOSTON, Mass.

TOM.
BY REV. C. H. MEAD.

NEVER did any one have a better start in life than Tom. Born of Christian parents, he inherited from them no bad defects, moral or physical. He was built on a liberal plan, having a large head, large hands, large feet, large body, and within all, a heart big with generosity. His face was the embodiment of good nature, and his laugh was musical and infectious. Being an only child there was no one to share with him the lavish love of his parents. They saw in him nothing less than a future President of the United States, and they made every sacrifice to fit him for his coming position. He was a prime favorite with all, and being a born leader, he was ungrudgingly accorded that position by his playmates at school and his fellows at the University. He wrestled with rhetoric, and logic, and political economy, and geometry, and came off an easy victor; he put new life into the dead languages, dug among the Greek roots by day and soared up among the stars by night. None could outstrip him as a student, and he easily held his place at the head of his class. The dullest scholar found in him a friend and a helper, while the brighter ones found in his example, an incentive to do their best.

In athletic sports, too, he was excelled by none. He could run faster, jump higher, lift a dumb-bell easier, strike a ball harder, and pull as strong an oar as the best of them. He was the point of the flying wedge in the game of football, and woe be to the opponent against whom that point struck. To sum it all up, Tom was a mental and physical giant, as well as a superb specimen of what that college could make out of a young man. But unfortunately, it was one of those institutions that developed the mental, trained the physical, and starved the spiritual, and so it came to pass ere his college days were ended, Tom had an enemy, and that enemy was the bottle.

The more respectable you make sin, the more dangerous it is. An old black bottle in the rough hand of the keeper of a low dive, would have no power to cause a clean young man to swerve from the right course, but he is a hero ten times over, who can withstand the temptation of a wine glass in the jewelled fingers of a beautiful young lady. Tom's tempter came in the latter form, and she who might have spurred him on to the highest goal, and whispered in his ear, "look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright," started him down a course which made him learn from a terrible experience that "at the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." Does any one call a glass of wine a small thing? Read Tom's story and then call it small, if you dare! Whatever he did was done with his might, drinking not excepted. He boasted of his power to drink much and keep sober, while he laughed at the companions who imbibed far less and went to bed drunk. At first Tom was the master and the bottle his slave, but in three years' time they changed places. When too late, his parents discovered that the college had sent back to them a ripe scholar, a trained athlete and a drunkard. The mother tried to save her son, but failing in every effort, her heart broke and she died with Tom's name on her lips. The father, weighed down under the dead sorrow and the living trouble, vainly strove to rescue his son, and was found one night in the attitude of prayer, kneeling by the side of the bed where his wife's broken heart a few months before had ceased to beat. He died praying for his boy!

One evening as the sun was setting, a man stood leaning against the fence along one of the streets of a certain city. His clothes were ragged, his hands and face unwashed, his hair uncombed and his eyes bleared; he looked more like a wild beast hunted and hungry, than a human being. It was Tom. The boys gathered about him, and made him the object of their fun and ridicule. At first he seemed not to notice them, but suddenly he cried out: "Cease your laughter until you know what you are laughing at. Let me talk to my Master while you listen."

He pulled a bottle from his pocket, held it up, and looking at it with deep hatred flashing from his reddened eyes, he said: "I was once your Master; now I am your slave. In my strength you deceived me; in my weakness you mock me. You have burned my brain, blistered my body, blasted my hopes, bitten my soul and broken my will. You have taken my money, destroyed my home, stolen my good name, and robbed me of every friend I ever had. You killed my mother, slew my father, sent me out into the world a worthless vagabond, until I find myself a son without parents, a man without friends, a wanderer without a home, a human being without sympathy, and a pauper without bread. Deceiver, mocker, robber, murderer—I hate you! Oh, for one hour of my old-time strength, that I might slay you! Oh, for one friend and some power to free me from this slavery!"

The laugh had ceased and the boys stood gazing on him with awe. A young lady and gentleman had joined the company just as Tom began this terrible arraignment of his Master, and as he ceased, the young lady stepped up to him and earnestly said: "You have one friend and there is one power that can break your chains and set you free."

Tom gazed at her a moment and then said: "Who is my friend?"

"The King is your friend," she answered. "And pray, who are you?" said Tom.

"One of the King's Daughters," was the reply, "and 'In His Name' I tell you he has power to set you free."

"Free, free did you say? But, you mock me. A girl with as white a hand and as fair a face as yours, delivered me to my Master."

"Then, in the name of the King whose daughter am I, even Jesus Christ the Lord, let the hand of another girl lead you to him who came to break the chains of the captive and set the prisoner free."

Tom looked at the earnest face of the pleading girl, hesitated awhile, as his lip quivered and the big tears filled his eyes, and then suddenly lifting the bottle high above his head, he dashed it down on the pavement, and as it broke into a thousand pieces, he said: "I'll trust you, I'll trust you, Lead me to the King!"

And lead him she did, as always a King's Daughter will lead one who sorely needs help. His chains were broken, and at twenty-nine years of age Tom began life over again. He is not the man he might have been, but no one doubts his loyalty to the King. His place in the prayer circle is never vacant, and you can always find him in the ranks of those whose sworn purpose it is to slay Tom's old Master, King Alcohol!

FORGIVENESS IS GODLIKE.

A gentleman who had filled many high stations in public life, with the greatest honor to himself and advantage to the nation, once went to Sir Eardley Wilmot, an eminent Englishman, in great anger at a real injury he had received from a person high in the political world, which he was considering how to resent in the most effectual manner. After relating the particulars to Sir Eardley, he asked if he did not think it would be manly to resent it? "Yes," said Sir Eardley, "it would doubtless be manly to resent it, but it would be godlike to forget it." This, the gentleman declared, had such an instantaneous effect upon him, that he came away quite another man, and in a temper entirely altered from that in which he went.

A Wonderful Discovery—Catarrh and Consumption Cured.

There is good news for our readers who are victims of Lung Diseases, Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption, in the wonderful cures made by the new treatment known in Europe as the Andral-Broca Discovery. Write to the New Medical Advance, 67 East 6th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and they will send you this new treatment free for trial. State age and all particulars of your disease.

Unless you kill your doubts they will some day kill you. If you doubt the medicinal powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla take half a dozen bottles and then doubt and disease will be conquered.

Seeds and Bulbs GIVEN AWAY. The choicest collection and best offer ever made. We want every reader of this paper to try this collection: 1 pkt. Lovely Marguerite Carnation, 1 pkt. Fuller's Perfection Pansy, 1 pkt. Snow Queen Pansy, pure satini white; 1 pkt. Balmain, 1 pkt. Floral Park Giant Phlox, 1 pkt. Sweet Pea, 1 pkt. Mignonette, 1 pkt. Giant Zinnia, 1 pkt. Sweet Pea, 1 pkt. Aster, 1 Bulb. Lovely Tuberoses, 6 Bulbs. Orlax, free bloomers. The above collection, 10 packets seeds, 1 Bulbs and our Bargain Catalogue mailed free on following conditions: Send us 20 cents to pay postage and packing. We will include in each collection a check good for 20 cents worth of seeds with first order. J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N. Y.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

A POWERFUL and the ONLY KNOWN Solvent of STONE IN THE BLADDER.

The following plate is from a photograph which forms a part of a communication of DR. GEORGE H. PIERCE, of Danbury, Conn., to the New England Medical Monthly for Nov. 1890 (see page 73 of that journal), and represents some of the largest specimens of

Two Ounces and Twenty-seven Grains of Dissolved Stone from a patient under the action of Buffalo Lithia Water. Smaller particles, and a quantity of Brickdust deposit, Dr. Pierce states, were not estimated.

DR. CYRUS EDSON,
Commissioner of Health, New York City, and President of the Board of Pharmacy.
"I have frequently made use of
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
in my practice, with excellent results. It is a potent remedy for correcting Rheumatic Diathesis. In a case of uric acid gravel, in which I recently prescribed it, its beneficial effects were apparent after the third dose. I have also prescribed it with great benefit in Bright's Disease of the Kidneys."

This Water has proved not less efficacious in BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEYS, GOUT, RHEUMATIC GOUT, RHEUMATISM, NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA, NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, &c.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half gallon bottles $5.00 f.o.b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent at any address.

THOMAS F. GOODE, Proprietor,
Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

In order to introduce
THE Cosmopolitan Magazine

To readers of The Christian Herald we will send a back number sample copy of THE COSMOPOLITAN containing 128 pages reading matter with over 100 fine illustrations upon receipt of 7 cts. in stamps. Address:
The Cosmopolitan Magazine,
Sixth Ave. and 11th St., New York.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY & SONS' MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEM OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These only are the genuine MOODY TAILOR SYSTEMS. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address, MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

For 10c, I will send 5 pkts. of either flower or vegetable seeds and a copy of Teed's Seed Almanac, or Almanac free. Best seed book out.
H. E. TWEED, Box 38, Ripley, O.

SEEDS.

FREE CURE.

Kidney

Liver & Urinary Diseases.

or if you will send us Ten Cents (postage stamps will do to pay express charges, we will send you One Bottle by express, prepaid, FREE. We know ALKAVIS is a positive cure, and we send it Free to prove its wonderful effects. Give your Post-office and nearest Express Office. Address, THE CHURCH KIDNEY CURE CO., 115 Fourth Avenue, New York.

OUR NEW 1894 FLOWER SEED OFFER.

A Magnificent Collection of FLOWER SEEDS 200 Varieties, FREE!

An Unparalleled offer by an Old and Reliable Publishing House! This Ladies' World is a large 24-page, 80-column illustrated Magazine for ladies and the family circle. It is devoted to stories, poems, tales, fancy work, home decoration, house-keeping, fashions, hygiene, juvenile reading, etiquette, etc. To introduce this charming ladies' paper into 10,000 homes where it is not already taken, we now make the following colossal offer: Upon receipt of only 12 Cents in silver or stamps, we will send The Ladies' World for Three Months and to each subscriber we will also send Free and postpaid, a large and magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds, 200 varieties, including Pansies, Verbenas, Chrysanthemums, Asters, Peaches, Drums, Balloons, Cypress Vines, Stocks, Digitalis, Double Zinnias, Pinks, etc., etc. Remember twelve cents pays for the magazine three months and this entire magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds, set up by a first-class Seed House and warranted fresh and reliable. We guarantee every subscriber many times the value of money sent, and will refund your money and make you a present of both seeds and Magazine if you are not satisfied. Do not confound our offer with the cheap, worthless, and unscrupulous schemes of other seed houses. Write to-day. Don't put it off! Six subscriptions and 60 Seed Collections sent for 60 cents. To any lady sending us 12 cents for above offer, and naming the paper in which she saw this advertisement, we will send free, in addition to all the above, one packet of the celebrated Marguerite (Carnation half dwarf variety), the only Carnation that will bloom from seed the first season. It produces in great abundance, large, exquisitely fragrant flowers of the most brilliant hues, in the various shades of white, red, pink and variegated, fully 80 per cent. being double. Plants begin to bloom in four months after planting, and continue in great profusion until frost comes. This packet of seeds is alone worth the price charged for the entire combination.

ANOTHER GREAT OFFER! Upon receipt of Thirty-five Cents (our regular subscription price) we will send The Ladies' World for One Year, together with our magnificent Collection of Choice Flower seeds above described, likewise one packet of the extensively advertised and popular Marguerite Carnation. Address: S. H. MOORE & CO., 27 Park Place, New York.

14 KARAT GOLD PLATE

$2.75

CUT THIS OUT and send it to us with your name and address and we will send you this watch by express for examination. A guarantee for 5 years and chain and charm sent with it. You examine it and if you think it a bargain pay our sample price, $2.75, and it is yours. It is beautifully engraved and warranted the best time-keeper in the world for the money and equal in appearance to a genuine Solid Gold Watch. Write to-day, this offer will not appear again.

THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO.,
334 DEARBORN STREET,
CHICAGO, ILL.

FAT PEOPLE YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness, or injury, by the use of Dr. F. B. Clarke's Home Treatment. Perfected in many years' practice. Cures no wrinkles or flabbiness. Stout abdomens, difficult breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best references. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.

Dr. F. B. CLARKE, Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

RUPTURE CURED

WITH our Improved Elastic Truss. Worn with ease night and day. Retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain. Examination free. Lady in attendance for ladies. Send for pamphlet.

IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.,
822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York

"A HEALING WONDER."

Comfort Powder

Is best for a sensitive skin; it relieves smarting, roughness, and heals all eruptions.

Send 4 cents in stamps for liberal sample and book. COMFORT POWDER CO., HARTFORD, CONN.

Did You Ever Look Like This?

DENT'S TOOTHACHE GUM

STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY DON'T TAKE IMITATIONS

Sold by all Druggists, or send 15c to C. S. DENT & CO., Detroit, Mich.

THIS IS NOT A CHEWING GUM.

SEND POSTAL CARD for FREE Sample

Great Monthly OUR COUNTRY HOME
132 Nassau Street, N. Y. City, which has some wonderful offers for subscribers.

ALKAVIS is a positive cure for Kidney, Liver and Urinary Diseases. It is from the new Polesian shrub, KAVA-KAVA botanical name: Piper Methysticum described in New York World, Feb. 8, 1888, and Medical Gazette, of Dec. 1892. Endorsed by the Hospitals and Physicians of Europe as a specific cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Diabetes, Bright Disease, Brick-Dust deposits, Rheumatism, Liver Disease, Female Complaints, pain in back, etc. Sold at Two Dollars a Bottle. Descriptive Book sent free to all, or if you will send us Ten Cents (postage stamps will do to pay express charges, we will send you One Bottle by express, prepaid, FREE. We know ALKAVIS is a positive cure, and we send it Free to prove its wonderful effects. Give your Post-office and nearest Express Office. Address, THE CHURCH KIDNEY CURE CO., 115 Fourth Avenue, New York.

IVORY

SOAP

FOR CLOTHES.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINTI.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Book free; pills 25c. At drugstores, or write B.F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

If you want the LATEST SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOK by IRA D. SANKEY, GET WINNOWNED SONGS.

257 songs; $35 per 100, in Boards. Many of the leading Sunday Schools in the land have adopted this book. The Bigelow & Main Co. The John Church Co. 76 East Ninth St., New York. S. E. C. 4th & Elm, Cincinnati.

EXAMINE Sunny Side Songs!

THE NEW AND POPULAR Sunday School Song Book, by W. H. DOANE, the latest and best book by this favorite composer. 241 songs; $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO. 76 E. 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps.) THE HUMAN HAIR. Why it Falls Off, Turns Gray, and the Remedy. By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F.R.S. London. D. G. LONG & CO., 1013 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. "Every one should read this little book." Athenaeum

THE GREAT CHURCH LIGHT REFLECTORS

FOR OIL, GAS OR ELECTRIC LIGHT

L. P. FRANK. 351 PEARL ST. N.Y.

DOOR-PLATES, 35 cts. Hand work; gold; durable enamel. Springfield Door plate Co., 10 Urays av., Springfield, Mass.

What a wonderful thing is a live seed. Immature, old or dead it may look the same. How to know? Old gardeners say that Burpee's seeds grow.

This is the proof of life. When grown we give our word you will be satisfied—your success is ours. BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1894, 172 pages, tells all about the Best Seeds that Grow. The newspapers call it the Leading American Seed Catalogue. Yours free for the asking if you plant seeds. W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia.

A LITTLE HIGHER IN PRICE. BUT—

D*E*L*A*V*A*U*S Whooping Cough Croup Violent Coughs

Tested over 40 Years. EFFECTUAL AND HARMLESS. 50c. per bot. at drugists, or expressed from 6th and Wood Sts., Philadelphia, to any address 60c.

R*E*M*E*D*Y

WORLD'S FAIR AWARDS TWO MEDALS

and one Diploma for Beauty, Strength and Cheapness. Over 50,000 of these vehicles have been sold direct to the people. Send at once for our complete catalogue (D) of every kind of vehicle & harness, also book of testimonials, they are free. ALLIANCE CARRIAGE CO., CINCINNATI, O.

INVINCIBLE HATCHER. The BEST

Incubator & Brooder EVER OFFERED. SAUMENIG BROODER

600 sold in 6 months, and every patron satisfied. Send 4c. in stamps for No. 60 Catalogue to BUCKEYE INCUBATOR CO. SPRINGFIELD, O.

PILES CURED

Our Book on Piles—Free. Bacon Medicine Co., Richmond, Va., U.S.A.

Teachers of Cookery have critical audiences. Their cooking must be perfect. They can't afford to make any failures and in their work they must use the best.

"I have used Cleveland's Baking Powder exclusively for several years, because I have found it what it claims to be, pure and wholesome. The results have been uniformly satisfactory."

Mary J. Lincoln,
Author of the "Boston Cook Book."

"I prefer to use Cleveland's Baking Powder because I consider it perfectly wholesome and it has always given uniform results."

Carrie M. Dearborn,
Late Principal Boston Cooking School.

"I am convinced Cleveland's is the purest baking powder made, and I have adopted it exclusively in my cooking schools and for daily household use."

Sarah T. Rorer,
Principal Philadelphia Cooking School.

All leading teachers of cookery and writers on Domestic Science use and recommend Cleveland's Baking Powder.

It's "Pure" and "Sure."

No bicycle ever made at all approaches them in beauty and style joined to excellence of construction; none so strongly appeals to the experienced rider as meeting every requirement of a perfect mount.

The need of repairs for Columbias will be infrequent under our new system of inspection, which now begins with a scientific analysis of the raw material by a metallurgist, and only ends when thorough tests have been made of the complete machine and all its parts.

1894 Standard Price, $125.00.

POPE MFG. CO.,

BOSTON, NEW YORK,
CHICAGO, HARTFORD.

Seven newly designed wheels are shown in our 1894 Catalogue which will interest every cyclist. Our agents furnish it free, or we mail it for two two-cent stamps.

HARTFORDS

ARE BICYCLES FOR EVERYONE.

The PRICES are low and the QUALITY high, which represent true economy for all.

Examine them, try them and buy them. Our CATALOGUE is free. Send your address.

THE HARTFORD CYCLE CO., Hartford, Conn.

Out of a bankrupt stock we bought for cash at an enormous reduction these beautiful sets of

6 SOUVENIR SPOONS

They are HEAVY COIN SILVER plated, with GOLD plated BOWLS; each spoon representing a different building of the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased showing head of Columbus, and dates 1492-1893 and wording "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, making one of the finest souvenir collections ever produced. Sold during the World's Fair at $1.50 each; we now offer the balance of this stock at ONLY 99c. for the six spoons, formerly sold for $9.00. Sent in elegant plush lined case, properly packed and express prepaid to any address for only 99c. in Postal Note, Money Order or Currency. Money refunded if not found as represented.

ORDER IMMEDIATELY. LEONARD MFG. CO., 20 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

ONLY 99c. worth $9

AGENTS MAKE $5 a Day Greatest Kitchen Utensil Invented. Retail 35 cts. 2 to 6 sold in a house. Sample postage paid, five cents. FORSYTHE & CO. Cincinnati, O.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Fock's Invisible Tubular Ear Cautions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold only by F. H. BROWN, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 17.

COPYRIGHT 1884, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

NUMBER 16.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, APRIL 18, 1894.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

AMERICA'S OLDEST CHRISTIAN.

Millie Jefferson, the "Veteran of the Cross," and her Beautiful Faith—Testifying in her 109th Year—Blind with Age but Rejoicing in her Saviour—A Remarkable Career.

PROBABLY the oldest living Christian in America, is a venerable colored woman, Millie Jefferson, who was recently found living at No. 147 West Twenty-seventh street, New York.

with snowy-white hair. The cheeks are sunken, and the light of the eyes has gone out from this world; yet the face beams with enthusiasm as she speaks. Her voice is clear, with very little of the tremulous quaver peculiar to most aged people, and her hearing and memory are phenomenal. Indeed, her "chil'ren," as she lovingly calls the daughters who wait upon her, declare that she can recall many events which they have forgotten.

"Oh, yes," she said pleasantly, after a cordial exchange of greetings, "I can 'mem-

"I's always happy, 'cause I has the Lo'd with me," replied "Grandma" Jefferson. "Dere's nothing to make yo' unhappy, if yo' has him. I has him in my heart for long, long years, and will have him till I go to be with him where he is.

"It's jest fifty-nine years ago," she added, "sence I got religion. I was then fifty years ole. How was I converted? Well, it was jest like this: My missus was a Christian woman, and her teachings were what opened my eyes fust. But it came upon me all very sudden like. The change in my heart came when I heard Mr. Creza preach at the Methodist Conference. I took straight hol' of my Saviour, and I been holdin' right along, bless de Lo'd! Yo' see, it was a matter o' faith. De Lo'd Jesus tole me to trus' him, and I jest trus'ed. Yo' know, we's tole periences in these fifty-odd years, Granny?" "Oh, yes, but bless de Lo'd, I's all right, chile! We may slip back ninety-nine times, but ef we ask him to help us even de las' time, he won't refuse, bless his name! Now my wo'k here is done." And she held out her hands, palm upward, in an attitude of supreme resignation. "I's jest waitin', jest waitin'. Everything is finished, clean up and all nice, four years ago, and right up till now." The sightless eyes turned to the visitor as though seeking to emphasize the beautiful faith that found expression on the lips.

"You have a strong hold on Christ, Grandma?"

The old woman raised herself on one elbow in bed, with a strength that was surprising, and turned her face toward the speaker.

"Well," she said with emotion, "it's jest like this: The Lo'd tole me to trus' him and to believe what he says in the Bible, ebbery wo'd of it. Now I can't read nor neber could, but he has written it all here right in my heart, and I believe it all. He will never forsake me—never!"

"You are very patient, too, lying there so long. Do you think much of the heaven to which you are going?"

"Yes, I does, chile—often; and I's blessed lyin' here. It's all cl'ar to me. When we reach dere, dose who have kep' the faith and given themselves to him, will have no recollection of dis po' sinful, mo'tal body, wid its wickedness, and sicknesses, and feebleness, for we will have an immo'tal body, jest like this, on'y immo'tal and glorious and holy, like Jesus was holy. De Lo'd made Adam perfec' and holy, but sin destroyed the perfec'ness of the body, and in heaven we will again be what Adam was befo' he fell. We'll be perfec' and holy—jes' like he was befo' sin entered de wo'ld."

As she spoke, with clear intonation and quoting freely and accurately from Scripture, she became almost eloquent. Age could not prevent her from pouring out the tribute of her heart before the Cross.

"The Lord is very good to you, now that you are old and unable to be about."

"Ah, he allus is good to his chil'ren, if dey will on'y trus' him. Why, he allus been good to me. Even in the old slavery days, I kin 'member his goodness den. Yes, I kin 'member 'way back, when I was jest a little chile, playin' about down in Virginny; it is all cl'ar to me as I lie here, and it all comes back. I kin 'member everything. No, I never did see Ginerl Washin'ton, but I saw lots of his soldiers—saw dem march pass our plantation to Washin'ton's war. Mr. Jefferson was a great friend of the Ginerl's in dose early days. Dese were the days of good times and plenty; we never knew what want was, and I," with a smile,

"allus lived 'on top of de pot.' My chil'ren was allus raised among plenty. The massas and missuses was kind people. THE CHRISTIAN HERAL' has been a good friend to us and to all the po' folks, feedin' them through dese hard times. The Lo'd bless you for it, and I'm sure he will, I'm sure he will!"

Continued on page 243.

GRANDMA MILLIE JEFFERSON, AGED ONE HUNDRED AND NINE YEARS.
From a recent Photograph furnished to "The Christian Herald."

ber everything. You can't 'member back of de last war, eh?" with a little laugh. "De war closed jest twenty-nine years ago, on April 9."

"I am glad to see you so happy," said the caller.

to put our trus' in the Lo'd, and he will never forsake us, nor deny us any good thing. So I jest reached out an' trus'ed, and I have trus'ed ever sence." And a bright smile lit up the aged face like a ray from heaven.

"But you must have had a great many exby the missionaries of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Food Fund. For many weeks this aged saint, who is now in her one hundred and ninth year, blind and bed-ridden, has been helped by the Fund, she and her family having been reduced to extreme indigence. Yet, amid her poor surroundings and with hardships pressing on every side, there has gone out from that rear room a blessed influence that has made itself widely felt, and which has awakened in many hearts a desire to know the Saviour in whose love this old woman is happy, and resting on whom she waits with patient confidence, the opening of the celestial gates that must soon swing wide for her entrance.

When the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD visited her, a few days ago, he found her bright and cheerful, and willing to tell the story of her Christian experience. In the room were two of her daughters, the youngest seventy-six years old. Mrs. Jefferson was born in slavery, on a plantation in the historic and beautiful Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, on March 30, 1785. The plantation, which had originally been the property of President Thomas Jefferson, was owned and operated by a planter named Mosee. There she passed her childhood which, as she now recalls it, must have been a comparatively pleasant one, amid comfortable surroundings and with a kind master. She married Peter Jefferson, a slave on a plantation at Shadwell, Albemarle Co., belonging to President Jefferson, and who had been named after the father of that distinguished statesman. She bore him nine children, three of whom are still living. Fifty-seven grandchildren and twenty-six great grandchildren are her descendants.

"Grandma" Jefferson has a surprising memory, and can readily recall events that happened over a century ago. Her husband died many years ago. When the Civil War broke out she was living in Staunton, Va., where she was cook and house-servant. At the conclusion of the war, she and her children were liberated.

They are now scattered in different parts of the Union, some of them being in Oskaloosa, Iowa, where "Grandma" Jefferson lived with them, until she came to New York to be with her youngest daughter, Mrs. Davis, seven years ago.

The old woman has an exceedingly intelligent face, with a fine forehead, crowned

HOME RELIGION.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday at the Brooklyn Tabernacle. Text: Luke 8:30: "Return to thine own house, and show how great things God hath done unto thee."

AFTER a fierce and shipwrecking night, Christ and his disciples are climbing up the slaty shelving of the beach. How pleasant it is to stand on solid ground after having been tossed so long on the billows! While the disciples are congratulating each other on their marine escape, out from a dark, deep cavern on the Gadarene hills there is something swiftly and terribly advancing. Is it an apparition? Is it a man? Is it a wild beast? It is a maniac who has broken away from his keepers, perhaps a few rags on his person, and fragments of stout shackles which he has wrenched off in terrific paroxysm. With wild yell, and bleeding wounds of his own laceration, he flies down the hill.

Back to the boats, ye fishermen, and put out to sea, and escape assassination. But Christ stands his ground; so do the disciples: and as this flying fury, with gnashing teeth and uplifted fists, dashes at Christ, Christ says, "Hands off! Down at my feet, thou poor sufferer," and the demoniac drops harmless, exhausted, worshipful. "Away, ye devils!" commanded Christ, and the two thousand fiends which had been tormenting the poor man, are transferred to the two thousand swine which go to sea with their accursed cargo.

The restored demoniac sits down at Christ's feet and wants to stay there. Christ says to him practically, "Do not stop: you have a mission to execute; wash off the filth and the wounds in the sea; smooth your disheveled locks; put on decent apparel and go straight to your desolated home, and tell your wife and children that you will no more affright them, and no more do them harm; that you are restored to reason, and that I, the Omnipotent Son of God, am entitled hereafter to the worship of your entire household. Return to thine own house, and shew how great things God hath done unto thee."

Yes, the house, the home is the first place where our religious gratitude ought to be demonstrated. In the outside world we may seem to have religion when we have it not; but the home tests whether our religion is genuine or a sham. What makes a happy home?

Well, one would say, a house with great wide halls, and antlered deer-heads, and parlors with sculpture and bric-a-brac, and dining-hall with easy chair and plenty of light and engravings of game on the wall, and sleeping apartments commodious and adorned. No. In such a place as that, gigantic wretchedness has sometimes dwelt, while some of you look back to your father's house, where they read their Bible by the light of a tallow candle. There were no carpets on the floor save those made from the rags which your mother cut night by night, you helping wind them into a ball, and then sent to the weaver who brought them to shape under his slow shuttle. Not a luxury in all the house. But you cannot think of it this morning without tearful and grateful emotion. You and I have found out that it is not rich tapestry, or gorgeous architecture, or rare art that makes a happy home.

The six wise men of Greece gave prescriptions for a happy home. Solon says a happy home is a place where a man's estate was gotten without injustice, kept without disquietude, and spent without repentance. Chilo says that a happy home is the place where a man rules as a monarch a kingdom. Bias says that a happy home is a place where a man does voluntarily what by law he is compelled to do abroad. But you and I, under a grander light, give a better prescription: a happy home is a place where the kindness of the Gospel of the Son of God has full swing.

While I speak this morning there is knocking at your front door, if he be not already admitted. One whose locks are wet with the dews of the night, who would take your children into his arms, and would throw upon your nursery, and your sleeping apartments, and your drawing-room, and your entire house a blessing, that will make you rich while you live, and be an inheritance to your children after you have done the last day's work for their support, and made for them the last prayer. It is the illustrious One who said to the man of my text, "Return to thine own house, and shew how great things God hath done unto thee." Now, in the first place, we want religion in our domestic duties.

Every housekeeper needs great grace. If Martha had had more religion she would not have rushed with such bad temper to scold Mary in the presence of Christ. It is no small thing to keep order, and secure cleanliness, and mend breakages, and achieve economy, and control all the affairs of the household advantageously. Expenses will run up, store bills will come in twice as large as you think they ought to be, furniture will wear out, carpets will unravel, and the martyrs of the fire are very few in comparison with the martyrs of housekeeping. Yet there are hundreds of people in this church this morning who in their homes are managing all these affairs with a composure, an adroitness, an ingenuity, and a faithfulness which they never could have reached but for the grace of our practical Christianity. The exasperations which wear out others have been to you spiritual development and sanctification. Employments which seemed to relate only to an hour have on them all the grandeurs of eternal history.

You need the religion of Christ in the discipline of your children. The rod which in other homes may be the first means used, in yours will be the last. There will be no harsh epithets—"you knave, you villain, you scoundrel, I'll thrash the life out of you, you are the worst child I ever knew." All that kind of chastisement makes thieves, pick-pockets, murderers, and the outlaws of society. That parent who in anger strikes his child across the head, deserves the penitentiary. And yet this work of discipline must be attended to. God's grace can direct us. Alas for those who come to the work with fierce passion and recklessness of consequences. Between severity and laxity there is no choice. Both ruinous and both destructive. But there is a healthful medium which the grace of God will show to us.

Then we need the religion of Christ to help us in setting a good example. Cowper said of the oak: "Time was when settled on thy leaf a fly could shake thee to the root. Time has been when tempest could not." In other words, your children are very impressible just now. They are alert; they are gathering impressions you have no idea of. Have you not been surprised sometimes, months or years after some conversation, which you supposed was too profound or intricate for them to understand—some question of the child demonstrated the fact that he knew all about it?

Your children are apt to think that what you do is right. They have no ideal of truth or righteousness but yourself. Things which you do, knowing at the time to be wrong, they take to be right. They reason this way: "Father always does right. Father did this. Therefore this is right." That is good logic, but bad premises. No one ever gets over having had a bad example set him. Your conduct more than your teaching makes impression. Your laugh, your frown, your dress, your walk, your greetings, your good-byes, your comings, your goings, your habits at the table, the tones of your voice, are making an impression which will last a million years after you are dead, and the sun will be extinguished, and the mountains will crumble, and the world will die, and eternity will roll on in perpetual cycles, but there will be no diminution of the force of your conduct upon the young eyes that saw it, or the young ears that heard it.

Now I would not have by this the idea given to you that you must be in cold reserve in the presence of your children. You are not emperor; you are companion with them. As far as you can, you must walk with them, skate with them, fly kite with them, play ball with them, show them you are interested in all that interests them. Spensippus, the nephew and successor of Plato in the academy, had pictures of joy and gladness hung all around the school-room. You must not give your children the impression that when they come to you they are playful ripples striking against a rock. You must have them understand that you were a boy once yourself, that you know a boy's hilarities, a boy's temptations, a boy's ambition—yea, that you are a boy yet. You may deceive them and try to give them the idea that you are some distant supernatural effulgence, and you may shove them off by your rigorous behavior, but the time will come when they will find out the deception, and they will have for you utter contempt.

Besides that, how are your children ever to become Christians if you yourself are not a Christian? I have noticed that however worldly and sinful parents may be, they want their children good. When young people have presented themselves for admission into our membership, I have said to them: "Are your father and mother willing you shall come?" and they have said, "Oh! yes; they are delighted to have us come; they have not been in church for ten or fifteen years, but they will be here next Sabbath to see me baptized." I have noticed that parents, however worldly, want their children good.

So it was demonstrated in a police court in Canada, where a mother, her little child in her arms—sat by a table on which her own handcuffs lay, and the little babe took up the handcuffs and played with them, and had great glee. She knew not the sorrow of the hour. And then when the mother was sent to prison, the mother cried out, "Oh! God, let not this babe go into the jail. Is there not some mother here who will take this child? It is good enough for heaven. It is pure. I am bad. I am wicked. Is there not some one who will take this child? I cannot have it tainted with the prison." Then a brazen creature rushed up and said, "Yes, I'll take the child." "No, no," said the mother, "not you, not you. Is there not some good mother here who will take this child?" And then when the officer of the law in mercy and pity took the child to carry it away to find a home for it, the mother kissed it lovingly, and said, "Good-by, my darling; it is better you should never see me again."

However worldly and sinful people are, they want their children good. How are you going to have them good? Buy them a few good books? Teach them a few excellent catechisms? Bring them to church? That is all very well, but of little final result unless you do it with the grace of God in your heart. Do you not realize that your children are started for eternity? Are they on the right road? Those little forms that are now so bright and beautiful, when they have scattered in the dust there will be an immortal spirit living on in a mighty theatre of action, and your faithfulness or your neglect now is deciding that destiny.

There is contention already among ministering spirits of salvation and fallen angels as to who shall have the mastery of that immortal spirit. Your children are soon going out in the world. The temptations of life will rush upon them. The most rigid resolution will bend in the blast of evil. What will be the result? It will require all the restraints of the Gospel, all the strength of a father's prayer, all the influence of a Christian mother's example, to keep them.

You say it is too early to bring them. Too early to bring them to God? Do you know how early children were taken to the ancient Passover? The rule was just as soon as they could take hold of the father's hand and walk up Mount Moriah they should be taken to the Passover. Your children are not too young to come to God. While you sit here and think of them perhaps their forms now so bright and beautiful vanish from you, and their disembodied spirit rises, and you see it after the life of virtue or crime is past and the judgment is gone and eternity is here.

Again I remark, we want religion in all our home sorrows. There are ten thousand questions that come up in the best regulated household that must be settled. Perhaps the father has one favorite in the family, the mother another favorite in the family, and there are many questions that need delicate treatment.

Tyranny and arbitrary decision have no place in a household. If the parents love God, there will be a spirit of self-sacrifice, and a spirit of forgiveness, and a kindness which will throw its charm over the entire household. Christ will come into that household, and will say, "Husbands, love your wives and be not bitter against them; wives, see that you reverence your husbands; children, obey your parents in the Lord; servants, be obedient to your masters," and the family will be like a garden on a summer morning—the grass-plot, and the flowers, and the vines, and the arch of honeysuckle standing in the sunlight glittering with dew.

But then there will be sorrows that will come to the household. There are but few families that escape the stroke of financial misfortune. Financial misfortune comes to a house where there is no religion. They kick against divine allotments; they curse God for the incoming calamity, they withdraw from the world because they cannot hold as high a position in society as they once did, and they fret, and they scowl, and they sorrow, and they die. During the past few years there have been tens of thousands of men destroyed by their financial distresses.

But misfortune comes to the Christian household. If religion has full sway in that home, they stoop gracefully. They say, "This is right." The father says, "Perhaps money was getting to be my idol. Perhaps God is going to make me a better Christian by putting me through the turbulence of tribulation. Besides that, why should I fret anyhow? He who owneth the cattle on a thousand hills, and out of whose hand all the fowls of heaven peck their food, is my Father. He clotheth the lilies of the field; he will clothe me. If he takes care of the raven and the hawk and the vulture, most certainly he will take care of me, his child."

Sorer troubles come—sickness and death. Loved ones sleep the last sleep. A child is buried out of sight. You say, "Alas! for this bitter day. God has dealt very severely with me. I can never look up. O, God, I cannot bear it." Christ comes in and he says, "Hush! O, troubled soul; it is well with the child. I will strengthen thee in all thy troubles. My grace is sufficient. When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee."

When through the deep waters I call thee to go,
The rivers of sorrow shall not overflow;
For I will be with thee thy troubles to bless,
And sanctify to thee thy deepest distress.

But there are hundreds of families represented here this morning where religion has been a great comfort. There are in your homes the pictures of your departed, and things that have no wonderful value of themselves; but you keep them precious and carefully because hands now still once touched them. A father has gone out of this household, a mother has gone out of this, a daughter just after her graduation day, a son just as he was entering on the duties of life.

And to other homes trouble will come. I say it not that you may be foreboding, not that you may do the unwise thing of taking trouble by the forelock, but that you may be ready. We must go one by one. There will be partings in all our households. We must say farewell. We must die. And yet there are triumphant strains that drown these tremulous accents, there are anthems that whelm the dirge. Heaven is full of the shout of delivered captives, and to the great wide field of human sorrow there come now the reaper angels with keen sickles to harvest the sheaves of heaven.

Saints will to the end endure;
Safely will the Shepherd keep Those he purchased for his sheep.

Go home this day and ask the blessing on your noonday meal. To-night set up the family altar. Do not wait until you become a Christian yourself. This day unite Christ to your household, for the Bible distinctly says that God will pour out his fury upon the families that call not upon his name. Open the Bible and read a chapter; that will make you strong. Kneel down and offer the first prayer in your household. It may be a broken petition, it may be only "God be merciful to me, a sinner;" but God will stoop, and spirits will listen, and angels will chant, "Behold! he prays."

Do not retire from this house this morning until you have resolved upon this matter. You will be gone. I will be gone, many years will pass, and perhaps your younger children may forget almost everything about you; but forty years from now, in some Sabbath twilight, your daughter will be sitting with the family Bible on her lap reading to her children, when she will stop, and peculiar solemnity will come to her face, and a tear will start, and the children will say, "Mother, what makes you cry?" and she will say, "Nothing, only I was thinking that this is the very Bible out of which my father and mother used to read at morning and evening prayer."

All other things about you they may forget; but train them up for God and heaven; they will not forget that.

When a queen died, her three sons brought an offering to the grave. One son brought gold, another brought silver, but the third son came and stood over the grave and opened one of his veins and let the blood drop upon his mother's tomb, and all who saw it said it was the greatest demonstration of affection. My friends, what is the grandest gift we can bring to the sepulchres of a Christian ancestry? It is a life all consecrated to the God who made us and the Christ who redeemed us. I cannot but believe that there are hundreds of parents in this house who have resolved to do their whole duty, and that at this moment they are passing into a better life; and having seen the grace of the Gospel in this place to-day, you are now fully ready to return to your own house, and show what great things God has done unto you.

Though parents may in covenant be,
And have their Heaven in view;
They are not happy till they see
Their children happy too.

May the Lord God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, the God of our fathers be our God and the God of our children forever!

Christian Work in the West.

The Minneapolis Gospel Union and its Mission—Free Sunday Breakfast, Open Air Talks and Indoor Services—Souls Brought to Christ.

"Oh, the good we all may do,
While the days are going by."

WHAT is now quite familiarly known as the Gospel Union Free Breakfast Mission, is situated in the Old Market Hall, Bridge Square, in the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and although only a little more than a year old, it has increased to such an extent that it is surprising and gratifying to all who are connected with it.

In the fall of 1892, a number of earnest Christian men conceived the idea of establishing a mission with the double object of supplying of food to the needy, and of saving souls. On Sunday morning, November 27th, 1892, the first meeting was held at No. 11 Washington avenue, South Minneapolis. On Saturday night, invitations had been distributed around the various lodging-houses and saloons, and in addition to this, a sign bearing the announce-

FREE BREAKFAST
AT NINE O'CLOCK SUNDAY MORNING.
ALL WELCOME.

had been placed on the front of the building. The meeting was a great success. In May, 1893, the Mission was moved into the Old Market Building, where it has been ever since. Although no appeal was made for workers, yet the Lord increased the numbers, sending earnest Christian women and men into the field, and the Mission has now a working force of twenty-five, led by Rev. J. S. Handyside, the Superintendent, a very earnest Christian. It is the custom to have prayer and go out on the street, and hold a Gospel service, and in this way many have been reached who would not otherwise have attended. At the close of the open-air meeting, the people are invited to the meeting inside.

The Sunday morning free breakfast has the largest attendance, averaging from 300 to 350. On entering the mission hall a force of workers is seen with trays, distributing the hot coffee, rolls and bread, which are eagerly consumed by the hungry men and women, many of whom have seen better days. During the breakfast, a vocal and instrumental choir on the platform renders such stirring hymns as these: "Sinners Jesus will receive," "I will sing the wondrous story," "Jesus is tenderly calling to-day," "Calvary," etc., and as the sacred words fall upon the ears of the audience, among which are many who are hardened in sin and crime, they are led to long for a better and purer life. At 9:30 o'clock the breakfast is over, and the Superintendent calls the meeting to order, and gives out some familiar hymn in which all join heartily. The leader then proceeds with a simple, earnest appeal to men and women to accept Christ as their personal Saviour, and points out the way of salvation. An opportunity is then given to all who have accepted Christ to come forward and testify. Hearts have been gladdened, listening to these testimonies, and they have been an encouragement and inspiration to the workers.

During the summer months, open-air work was done very successfully on the streets and at Elliott Park; also among the fallen women, and many were reclaimed from a life of sin and shame. Men who have been confirmed drunkards, gamblers and criminals, for twenty, thirty and even forty years, have as a last resort, come to the foot of the Cross, and their testimony now is that they have found the true happiness.

There is also a Sunday School in the Mission, which though not yet very old, has an attendance of 150. It has succeeded in getting many boys and girls off the streets, and instilling into their young hearts and minds the truths of the Gospel. Early this year, a restaurant was opened under the auspices of the Mission, the object being to supply the poorer class with good food at low prices; the proceeds over and above expenses to be devoted to carrying on and enlarging the work. There is also a comfortable reading-room. The work, which is wholly interdenominational (the workers being members of various Christian Churches) has been supported by means of voluntary contributions. It costs in the neighborhood of $600 a year. There are in Minneapolis, in addition to the Gospel Union, two other Missions engaged in a similar work, viz.: Christian Workers, conducted by W. Petran and Bethesda by Rev. R. Ellis, the blind Evangelist and his daughter, Miss Ellis.

A TRIUMPHANT DEATH.

Rev. W. F. Thomas, of the Baptist Missionary Society, writing from Insein, Burma, thus describes the death of a native evangelist: "Our people die well," can be said by others than Wesley in Christian England. Such deaths are no exception in heathen lands, where they are particularly valuable as testimonies to the power of "the Deliverer of all these who were also themselves through fear of death all their lifetime subject to bondage." Of all the deaths which I have witnessed or of which I have heard on heathen soil, I recall none more triumphant than that of U. Hmaing, the beloved pastor of the Mingaladon Burman church, whose funeral, together with that of his nephew, I conducted last week.

JOHN S. ANDREWS.

REV. J. S. HANDYSIDE.

This pastor early began the long and consistent career of loyal service to Christ, which would entitle him to a place on the muster roll of the heroes of faith in the eleventh of Hebrews. Putting on Christ in Rangoon by baptism (necessarily secret) in the day of Burman rule, he early learned what it was to "wander in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth," to escape his enemies. Straying to Moumein, where he came in contact with the early missionaries and learned more of the truth which he had already shown to be so precious to him, he subsequently commenced preaching at his own charges in a little wayside chapel of his own erection. No sooner had he commenced, however, than he was threatened with arrest by the menials of the hostile Buddhist government—a fate which he only escaped owing to the clemency of an exceptionally upright superior officer.

What wonder, then, that the "king of terrors," had nothing to affright this intrepid soldier of the cross, who for forty years had "borne the burden and heat of the day," first as an itinerant preacher among the heathen, and subsequently as ordained pastor of the little flock which he had gathered out of the wilderness and which has for years furnished him all the pittance he has received for his incessant labors?

America's Oldest Christian.

(Continued from first page.)

"He has blessed you, Grandma, with great riches; riches beyond price."
"He has, fo' sure. Yes, yes; and I's terrible sorry for dem millions-of-airs, with all der money, who don' know how much good dey could do with it, if dey on'y had Jesus in der heart; terrible sorry for dem, for de money drags 'em down so der heart is closed to the call of the Saviour and the cry of his po'. Dem million-of-airs could do a power o' good in de wo'ld, if dey on'y had the baptism of de Spirit. You know John the Baptis' said, 'I baptize you with water, but there cometh One after me who will baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire.' Dat's what dey need—de baptism of de Spirit."

It was surely a strange and touching thing to listen to this old woman, without a dollar in the world, but rich in the Spirit, as she spoke of her sympathy for the millionaires, whose wealth she regarded as a calamity, unless it were consecrated to good works. Their millions not only kept them from Christ, but in their hands were transformed from a blessing to a curse. Unconsciously she had given utterance to a great moral and economic truth, in regarding the concentration of riches in the hands of worldly men as the cause of much of the world's suffering. Her concern for the "millions-of-airs," as she quaintly called them, was unquestionably genuine, and arose from her pure love of souls, and not from envy. What a sermon on the vanity of human pomp and riches, had the Cræsus been present to hear it!

"Grandma" Jefferson's earthly sojourn is almost ended. Her remarkable age and her feebleness of body make it improbable that she will have to wait much longer, ere she join the Master she has served for over half a hundred years. Her daily delight, next to telling the story of Jesus and his love, is to listen while some one of the Food Fund missionaries, or some member of her own family, reads aloud a portion of the Bible, telling the wondrous story of Christ's life and sacrifice. She treasures an old, worn Bible that formerly belonged to her "missus" in the old slavery days, but which has fallen apart from much handling. Its leaves have been carefully pasted in, but as "Grandma" could not read the beloved Book, many are misplaced, although none have been lost.

Not far from the rear room where aged Millie Jefferson lies patiently waiting the call from earth to heaven, is a splendid mansion in which for several weeks, another woman has lain dangerously ill, beyond hope of earthly recovery. Her life has been one of wealth and ease and self-indulgence. Her husband has lavished upon her every kindness that great riches could bestow, and she has sought to extract from life all the sweetness and pleasure the world could give. Now that she is prostrate and her life seems ebbing away, she still clings to the things of earth, not yet realizing that death, when it comes, will prove them worse than worthless. Her splendid jewels, valued at $30,000, she constantly wears, even in the sick-room. Her heart is fixed on the vanities of this life, instead of looking forward to the life which is to come. Better, a thousand times better, the poverty of the aged Christian who has "laid up treasures" in heaven, and whose lot has been cast among,

The poor and needy of earth, who are rich
In the perfect love of God.

THE JOPPA-JERUSALEM RAILROAD.

The railway from Joppa to Jerusalem is a success. Now it is proposed to build another road from some point on the Mediterranean Sea north of Joppa to Damascus. The length of the road will be about one hundred and fifty miles, and the general course will be southwesterly through lower Galilee, crossing the Jordan River, near the Sea of Galilee, and thence northeasterly through the western approach of the steppe region to Damascus. Chicago contractors are to do the work, and the estimated cost is between six and ten million dollars. If this road is built it will open to commercial intercourse and influence a vast tract of country, and thereby mark a mighty forward stride in the great work of bringing together "the ends of the earth."

JOSEPH FORGIVES HIS BRETHREN.

S. S. Lesson April 29. Gen. 45: 1-15. Golden Text, Luke 17: 3. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

NEITHER natural law, nor circumstances, nor people are supreme; all things serve God. And yet how few act as though this were so! How few see the hand of God in all which happens! Joseph was one of the few. God could afford to put him to the proof because he was loyal to him, and did not, even under the greatest proving, misunderstand his God. Since the time of Abraham God had not been able to reveal himself to man or through man as he had done in that "father of all them that believe." But Joseph served his purpose in manifesting in his own life the heart of God towards his ungrateful and rebellious creatures.

For thirteen years Joseph had been practically shut up to God. Except he had really trusted him, when most men would have doubted, he would have been crushed again and again, "but his bow abode in strength and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob;" and thus he became one in whom the Spirit of Christ "could testify beforehand" "the sufferings of Christ, and the glories that should follow them."

All countries came into Egypt to Joseph, to buy corn, and thus it came to pass that Joseph's brethren, amongst others, came also, and he saw fulfilled when "they bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth." But Joseph had been too long in the school of God to yield to the natural impulse which might lead him to make himself known to them, either from the selfish joy of meeting again with his kith and kin, or from the self justification which might have exulted that his dreams were fulfilled, or any other motive which was simply carnal and selfish. To a man of faith everything is seen in the light of God, he knows "no man after the flesh." What was God's purpose in permitting his brethren to come? How might he best serve God and serve them? Such were the thoughts in Joseph's heart. He had been schooled of God, and taught of God; he also in his turn schooled his brethren, while they were all unconscious of what was taking place. We are as much in charge for God in all the relations we hold to our families as in all which concerns us personally. "Ye are bought with a price, be not ye servants of men." If we lay ourselves out simply to please them, we come under their power; if we yield ourselves unto God as his instruments to bless them, we may bring them near to God, and confer lasting blessing on them. Whether they would or not, consciously or unconsciously Joseph's brethren must of necessity have to do with God when they came in contact with Joseph. To come near to him was to come near to the God he served.

The Dreams of His Youth

Joseph knew his brethren, he had not ceased to love them, and the eyes of love are very quick, perhaps he had long been on the lookout for them, but he knew not Joseph, and he made himself strange to them, accused them of being spies, put them in prison, and then told them that he feared God, and sent them away to fetch Benjamin, while he kept Simeon bound, and declared that they should not see his face unless they brought Benjamin with them. All this might seem to be malicious, and to be needless severity; but God was working with Joseph, and for these men were brought under conviction of sin, and said to one another: "We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us." But the time was not yet when their suffering might be alleviated. They left Egypt, but found on their homeward journey that their money was enclosed in their sack of corn. And when they reached home, and related all which had occurred, their poor old father was filled with dismay and said: "All these things are against me."

His Purpose was Accomplished,

The time came when hunger drove them back to Egypt, and it was with the utmost reluctance and ill will that Jacob surrendered his beloved Benjamin. Joseph's brethren left a broken-hearted father to face a stern ruler of Egypt, without whose help death stared them and their families in the face; would they now learn to know God? Those who are much prayed for have a hard time of it if they do not yield to God. He never disregards a single prayer of faith. He stills heaven itself to hear the prayers of his saints. But he "will not always chide; neither will he keep his anger forever." And his true children are like him.

How unsuspected are the ways of God! How often, when we have been overwhelmed with the consciousness of shortcoming, the Lord has opened to us his great heart of love, and confronted us with revelations of towards us! And again, when we had been foolish enough to be satisfied for a little time in our increasing knowledge of him, how he has permitted a kind of earthquake in our lives, and all which seemed so fair was shattered, and nothing remained to us but himself, and his precious, sheltering blood!

Unspeakable Grace

With tear and apprehension, the brethren drew near, but with surprise they found themselves received as honored and distinguished guests, in the ruler's house; to their amazement, their ages were recognized, and Benjamin came in for special honor; the former roughness of the great ruler was exchanged for the greatest suavity and kindness, and they departed from Egypt with Simeon and Benjamin, feeling as though a great load were taken from them.

But their troubles were not to end so lightly, they must learn in the school of God the bitterness of false accusation, where they were unable to justify themselves, before they were in a position to take in spirit the low place which God had foreshown to be their true position, in relation to their exalted younger brother. It was a bitter and humbling moment for them, when the steward of Joseph's house found Joseph's cup in Benjamin's sack, where it had been placed by Joseph's orders. And it was with the deepest humility that the lordly Judah offered himself as a slave, as substitute for Benjamin, the supposed culprit in the theft of Joseph's cup. What it must have cost Joseph to deal so with his brethren, who can tell? Only as directed of God could he have done so.

But now it was enough; Joseph's brethren were broken; now they could understand and appreciate grace. But no eye of man must be witness to what followed: "Cause every man to go out from me. And there stood no man with him while Joseph made himself known unto his brethren." Have we not each experienced a moment like this if we have really come to know Jesus?

"I am Joseph."

But the communication brought only trouble and terror. How had they dealt with Joseph! "Come near unto me, I pray you. . . I am Joseph your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt. Now therefore, be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither; for God did send me before you to preserve life." Only peace, only mercy, only grace, only love! What a revelation of the coming Saviour! Apparently so stern until we are broken, and come near; so overpoweringly gracious as soon as we are near to him, in his presence, bowed before him. After all the discipline to which Joseph had subjected his brethren, while they as yet knew him not, they were the better prepared to appreciate him and to fall into his proposals now. And yet there was something so unusual in his words to them, their selfish hearts would have imputed unworthy motives to him now as they did later on, if he had dealt with them any other way. He was eager now to comfort them; and telling them that the famine had yet five years to run, he added: "And God sent me before you to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance." The brethren, by sheer force of circumstances were driven to recognize the hand of God, but they found that it was the habit and the mainspring of Joseph's life to do so. And he sent them to fetch his father and to establish themselves at his expense in the land.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

THE scene which forms the subject of the lesson is one of the most pathetic in the Bible. Twenty-two years had elapsed since that day in Dothan, when Joseph was flung into the pit to starve and afterwards taken out and sold for a handful of silver.

Changes had taken place in the characters of both Joseph and his brothers. Joseph's was a greater and better character at thirty-nine, than it was when he was seventeen. Slavery, misrepresentation and imprisonment had not made him morose, misanthropic or vindictive, but had chastened, purified and elevated him. As a great writer has said, the homage of the brothers came when they were fitted to render it and Joseph was fitted to receive it; and in each case the process was one of suffering. The immature youth claiming reverence was then, as he would be now, a subject for ridicule, but, enslave him, malign him, imprison him, give him prosperity and see how he turns out. If he is unspoiled, then he deserves homage. See how tenderly Joseph speaks to his brothers, begging them not to reproach themselves, but to be glad that the evil they did had been turned to good. The brothers, too, were better men. Their voluntary return to Egypt with Benjamin showed a solicitude for him foreign to their former ways. Judah's offer to suffer in Benjamin's place is in sharp contrast with his proposal to sell Joseph, twenty-two years before. His pleading for his brother and his references to his aged father, indicate a better spirit. The crime had not been forgotten by the criminals. No sooner were they in the dangerous situation of suspected spies, than they refer to it and recognize the present calamity as retribution. Conscience does its work though it may long lie dormant and the crime be concealed. The lesson suggests also the thought that men must not be judged by their manners. The brothers told their father that "the man spake roughly unto them," but if they could have seen the man as he sat weeping in his own chamber, they would have known that he was their brother. We, too, might find, if we knew all, that those who seem harsh and repellent to us, are at heart our brothers.

Doth my father still live?

The question has often been asked, why Joseph did not communicate with his father during their long separation. No satisfactory answer can be given. It was not more than 250 miles from Heliopolis where Joseph lived, to Hebron where Jacob was. But distances were more formidable in those days of slow locomotion than now. There were no mails and probably few messengers who could be relied on to carry a message. It may also have been that during the nine years in which alone Joseph could have sent, all personal matters were subordinated to the vast work in which he was engaged. His desire to bring Jacob to him shows that there was no lack of love on Joseph's part. Nor was he ashamed of his country-bred father, as are many sons who have succeeded in life; for when Jacob came to Egypt Joseph took him to Pharaoh and introduced him. Such an act showed Joseph's greatness. An instance of a similar character is related in the life of Archbishop Tillotson, the famous divine. One day, his father, a plain farmer, commonly clad, presented himself at the Archbishop's palace, and said he wanted to see John Tillotson. The footman, who opened the door, was accustomed to hear his master spoken of as "His grace," or "His Lordship" and he was angry at the old farmer's rudeness and drove him away. The Archbishop saw the old man going, and recognized him. Some men would have sent a servant to bring him back, but Tillotson ran out and with the cry, "It is my dear father," embraced him before the crowd of astonished servants and brought him back into the palace with marks of profound respect.

Five years in which there shall be neither caring nor harvest. Various suggestions have been made as to the cause of the famine. It evidently extended far beyond the borders of Egypt, for we read that other nations sent to Egypt to buy corn. Osburn believes that so far as Egypt was concerned, the cause of the seven years of plenty followed by the famine was in a change of physical configuration. Traces have been found of a great lake on the upper Nile which existed many centuries ago. He believes that about the time of Joseph it gradually burst its banks and for some years increased the floods of the Nile and caused them to water a much larger area than usual, thus increasing the arable land, and consequently the crops. But when the lake was exhausted, the years of plenty would be followed by years when the water of the Nile would be absorbed by the dry bed of the lake, and very little water would overflow the land. History records a famine in Egypt as protracted as that in Joseph's time. A contemporary historian says that from 1064 to 1071 A. D. there was continuous famine. During those seven years horses and dogs were eaten, and in some districts, he believed, the people resorted secretly to cannibalism.

Not you . . . but God. Although men are responsible for their evil deeds, those deeds do not always work the evil that was intended. God sometimes turns them to good purposes and he often does so when the evil is directed against innocent men. There is an old Hebrew story which illustrates the fact. It represents a Rabbi as journeying on a donkey through a wild land. His only companion was a cock, whose shrill crowing at sunrise awoke him to his devotions. He came to a certain village at nightfall and besought shelter, but the inhabitants churlishly refused him. Outside the village, he found a cave, where he prepared to spend the night. He lit his lamp to read a chapter, as usual, before retiring; but a gust of wind blew it out. During the night, a wolf killed his cock and a lion devoured his ass. He passed a sleepless night and early in the morning returned to the village to see if he could obtain a horse or an ass on which to pursue his journey. To his surprise he found no one alive in the whole village. A band of robbers had come during the night and plundered the village and slain the people. "Ah!" said the Rabbi, "now I understand my annoyances. Had not the villagers closed their doors against me, I should have died with the others, and if my lamp had not been extinguished and my companions been killed, their noise, or the light, might have revealed my hiding-place to the robbers. Truly God has been good to me."

Angry with yourselves. The brothers had reason to be angry with themselves, although Joseph comforted them. Men are judged and must judge themselves by their intentions. An incident of this character was described not long ago in a western journal. It mentioned the return to the city of a man who had formerly lived there, but had suddenly disappeared and had been absent ten years. During his former residence there he had quarrelled with a neighbor and when they were alone had struck him down meaning to kill him. Believing that the man was really dead, he fled to the sea, took ship as a sailor and for ten years had been a wanderer. He longed, yet dreaded to return, and at last, by an irresistible impulse he came back. Then to his surprise and joy he learned that he was not a murderer in fact, although he was in intent, for his victim had recovered and was then living. The man said that the agonies of remorse he had endured needlessly during those ten years were worse than death.

Marion Harland In Palestine.

"The Pearl of the East."

A Day of Sight-Seeing in Damascus—Incredulous Pilgrims—Pauline Relics.

OUTSIDE the walls of Damascus—which, if you like, you may consider the setting of the "Pearl"—we first encounter a couple whom we are to know so much better by-and-by, that I may be excused for introducing them somewhat at length.

Luther Twinglins Sharp, D.D., is the ex-pastor of an Eastern church in America, and ex-president of a Western college, and these are but a few of his titles to the respectful notice of the world in general and his country people in particular. A Congregationalist by birth, education and choice, he yet committed the ecclesiastical solecism, five years ago, of marrying a High Church Episcopalian of the most advanced type. She was rich then, and has lately become much richer. Shortly after the latter accession to her fortune, the Rev. L. Twinglins Sharp (thus he registers his name at hotels), resigned all his offices in his native land and came abroad to rally from a combination of bronchitis and nervous prostration, which, various doctors say, might have been expected in the (altered) circumstances. With this aspersion we have nothing to do; still, as one who has spent more than thirty years' in church-and-charity work, I may express the doubt whether the friction of pastorate or professorship could have worn more seriously upon the nervous system of the average man than the continual conflict of opinion and belief which goes on between his spouse and himself. But Dr. Sharp is many removes from the average man.

They have left their carriage and stand below the projecting remnant of a round tower upon the outer wall. Close to the ground are sections of ancient Roman masonry; the tower is topped by a modern shed. The outlines of a window, almost wholly blocked up with rubbish, appear below the rude building on the summit.

"That," says our guide, "tradition points out as the window from which Paul was let down in a basket, as recorded in Acts, the ninth chapter and twenty-fifth verse."

I cannot record that Dr. Sharp pricks up his ears as the innocent remark enters them, for they are already red and bristling with the heat of argument. He turns energetically upon us.

"I do hope," he says, "that as intelligent Christians of the nineteenth century, you will not credit this worthless—utterly worthless—tale concocted by monkish charlatans. Setting aside the extreme improbability that the dwellers in the Damascus of that day would have regarded the spot as noteworthy, the masonry of the wall belongs so evidently to a later period that one is lost in surprise at the impudence of the attempt to identify the locality with the manner of the apostle's escape from his persecutors. And cannot you see, my good friends"—haranguing the guides of his party and of ours—"that you are guilty of folly, if not of mischief, in perpetuating the legend? Not that I blame you as much as I blame the superstitious ignorance of the travelers who encourage you to repeat such stuff."

Dr. Sharp is tall and meagre, with a long face running down into a pointed red beard. He waves his arms like a windmill as he declaims. His wife is much below medium height and plump as a quail, with bright, beady eyes not unlike those of the same bird; her voice is a mild twitter, but we feel at once that for "staying power" she can be counted upon as no mean antagonist for her irascible husband. It may be the staying quality of the feather-bed that yields, only to rebound, but it is "all there."

"My love!" is the preface to her remonstrance—"where would the Church be now, but for these traditions? When I see the unhappy effect produced upon your mind and spirits by incredulity, I am disposed to cling more closely to what holy men have transmitted to the generation following. For instance, you took no comfort whatever in our visit to the scene of St. Paul's conversion—and I had such a precious time!"

"No comfort! Where should I find satisfaction in a baseless legend, fabricated originally, I doubt not, on purpose to induce travelers to stop and buy refreshments at what, it is pretended, was an ancient resting-place of caravans from Jerusalem to Damascus. My good wife—" turning to us, as he says this, an audience being a vital necessity with men of his calibre and class—"my good wife formed her belief upon this, as upon other subjects of sacred history, by the help of pictures and goody-goody story-books. She has in her mind every detail of the scene as depicted by these; Saul—he wasn't even Paul then, my dear, much less a saint—tumbling from his horse upon a macadamized road, and his companions in various attitudes of a like plight, when it is not certain, or even probable that he was ever upon a horse in his life. It is more likely that he made the journey on foot, or upon a camel, or an ass. As to the location of the event, I dare say, that each of you guides"—in sudden appeal—"has heard one or more places named besides Keatana, as the scene of Paul's conversion."

The men look at one another, and even

THE HOUSE OF ANANIAS.
(In which the Apostle Paul Lodged in Damascus.)

grave David Jamal smiles as he answers that "Keatana, on the ancient route to Jerusalem, has been for centuries, pointed out as the place where the Apostle Paul was struck to the earth and had a direct revelation from Christ, our Lord. Other places have been suggested, but the best authorities agree upon Keatana."

I think there is something in the Christian dragoman's way of pronouncing the words, "Christ, our Lord," that tends to silence the disputants. At any rate, they do not resume the discussion until we are out of hearing.

"I have heard of that gentleman before," observes David, as we drive away. "He is, I believe, very learned, and is collecting materials for a book upon the Holy Land. Up to this time, it is said, he has found nothing anywhere that he can believe in. His book will not be large."

Encouraged by our laugh, he adds: "I recollect his wife as one of a party of thirteen ladies I took through Palestine over twelve years ago. Miss De Credo was her name. I should have said, then, that she would have been a Roman Catholic by now. She set great store by relics and the like." We halt to examine another bit of city-wall, almost ruinous above, but resting upon a sure foundation of Roman architecture. In spring-time, when the encompassing orchards are in bloom, Damascus may deserve, in the mind of the approaching traveler, some of the encomiums lavished upon it by poets and historians of a former age. At this season, the "pearl" is undeniably dingy. No modern Mohammed will pause without any one of the four gates to compare the attractions of this, as an earthly Paradise, with those of the heavenly, much less turn away with a sigh of renunciation, saying: "Man can have but one Paradise and mine must not be here!"

"Certainly not, if Damascus odors were the same than, as now!" remarks my traveling companion.

Diverging from the road skirting the city-wall are others leading between walled orchards into the outlying country, some stretching far away to cities whose names kindle wistful gleams in our eyes.

Upon that leading to Bagdad—distant, from thirty-five to forty days' journey, as a caravan travels, ten by the "swift dro medaries" that carry the mails—has halted a long string of camels. We check the driver to have a better look at the ugly, and at present patient beasts, laden with who can say what wonders of that far and fabled mart? The camel is notoriously uncertain of temper, captious, irritable, and sometimes sullen as to refuse food for a fortnight at a time, during which period he must be muzzled to prevent him from biting his fellows and drivers. We hear of another peculiarity while we survey this group: "They are of the country and the desert," we are told, "and must be unloaded here, without the gates. Not being used to city streets and sights, they would be unmanageable if taken into the town."

There they stand, with the outstretching necks that look at once supple and stiff, meek and stubborn, awaiting the command to let themselves down groaningly upon their much-doubled-up knees that their burdens may be unstrapped,—fascinating studies, if only because of their irredeemable hideousness and the physical idiosyncrasies that set them apart from other quadrupedal domesticated creatures. I always stop to look at a camel in passing, and never without a shudder of wonder that is not admiration, and loathing which is antipathy. Passing through the city-gate into the street which is called Straight and, with the memory of the Rev. Twinglins fresh in our thoughts, negating the jesting proposition to visit, first the house of Ananias, and then the grave of Cain,—this latter being a shapeless pile of stones cast together by the passers-by in execration of the first murderer—we alight presently at the entrance of the world-famous bazaars of Damascus. Hard by yawns a mighty, blackened shell; the walls still standing and the roof arched above them, but through gaps in the rude boarding filling up the doors, and through the empty window-frames one sees what devastation has been wrought, and recently, by fire. The bazaars nearest to the ruin have not escaped the licking flames that burst from the windows. A stately minaret towers heavenward near to what was the great mosque of Damascus.

THE STREET CALLED "STRAIGHT."

"There was nothing in Syria like it," relates our guide. "Men came many miles—oh, very many—to pray here. They believed one prayer in this mosque to be worth thousands and tens of thousands said in another. And that God would leave this holy place standing for forty years after the world should be burned up, in order that those who had not yet found the Gate of Paradise might have a place for prayer."

"How did it take fire?"

The two dragomen exchanged looks. One steps near and lowers his voice:

"From the melting solder with which workmen were repairing the roof, say the Christians. Others,"—avoiding in the crowd the mention of Mohammedans or Moslems,—"will have it that the fire fell from heaven upon the Mosque because Christians were employed in building it after it was burned in part, many years ago."

We have just fairly entered one of the principal streets of the bazaars—a continuation of that "which is called Straight"—when a roar as the sound of many—and musical—waters, draws our eyes to the tossing crowd filling the lower end. The guides have barely time to draw us within the shelter of a doorway where the human tide rolls up to our feet, choking the narrow thoroughfare—a hustling, struggling mass. Foremost are, perhaps, a hundred boys, clapping their hands high above their heads and screeching, rather than yelling, what David translates in our ears as "Praise to the Prophet!" A herd of twice as many men is upon their heels, vociferating the same words, shaking tamborines high in the air and beating small drums while whirling them aloft.

"What is it? A popular revolution?" we gasp, as the billows roll away in the distance, and the air settles about us in comparative quiet.

Both guides smile, evidently in no wise excited by the demonstration that took our breath and well-nigh our senses away.

"They are men, and boys, who have offered their sacrifices without pay, to the government to build again the Great Mosque," replies a guide. "They go thus about the streets crying, 'Praise to the Prophet!' that others may be moved to do likewise. We hear, to-day, that the Sultan will give generously, some say, more than one hundred thousand mejidie," (the Turkish dollar), "from his own purse towards the great work."

MARION HARLAND.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

To be With Talmage
EDITOR.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash or postal notes.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR ALL.

THERE are many persons residing in New York and vicinity, who would be glad to have an opportunity afforded them of engaging in genuine Christian work, of a personal character. They feel that such service would bring them nearer to the Master, and would have a strengthening and developing effect upon Christian character which no other work can produce. Though they may have wished for years to engage in such work, they have been unable, through unfamiliarity with the field or the proper methods, to make a beginning. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD now offers to all who are minded to make the effort in the true spirit, such an opportunity as they have long been seeking. It is volunteer Christian work that will not be a serious tax on either time or purse, and which rich and poor may undertake, with the assurance that even the humblest effort will not be without its reward. Any of our readers who wish to become personally (privately if preferred), interested in one worthy, destitute family in New York City, should read the article elsewhere on this page, entitled, "Practical Christianity," and then send their name and address to the Publisher of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who will reply to all inquiries.

THE VALUE OF THE SOUL.

THE soul. How shall I estimate the value of it? Well, by its exquisite organization. It is the most wonderful piece of mechanism ever put together. Machinery is of value in proportion as it is mighty and silent at the same time. You look at the Engine and the machinery in the Philadelphia Mint, and, as you see it performing its wonderful work, you will be surprised to find how silently it goes. Machinery that roars and tears soon destroys itself; but silent machinery is often most effective. Now, so it is with the soul of man, with all its tremendous faculties—it moves in silence. Judgment, without any racket, lifting its scales; memory, without a y noise, bringing down all its treasures; conscience taking its judgment-seat without any excitement; the understanding and the will all doing their work. Velocity, majesty, might; but silence—silence.

You listen at the door of your heart. You can hear no sound. The soul is all quiet. It is so delicate an instrument that no human hand can touch it. You break a bone, and with splinters and bandages the surgeon sets it; the eye becomes inflamed, the apothecary's wash cools it; but a soul off the track, unbalanced, no human power can readjust it. With one sweep of its wing it circles the universe, and overvaults the throne of God. Why, in the hour of death the soul is so mighty it throws aside the body as if it were a toy. It drives back medical skill as impotent. It breaks through the circle of loved ones who stand around the dying couch. With one leap, it springs beyond star and moon and sun, and chasms of immensity. Oh, a soul is superior to all material things! No fires can consume it; no floods can drown it; no rocks can crush it; no walls can impede it; no time can exhaust it. It wants no plummet with which to sound a depth. A soul so mighty, so swift, so silent, must it not be a priceless soul?

I calculate the value of a soul also, by its capacity for happiness. How much joy it gets in this world out of friendships, out of books, out of clouds, out of the sea, out of flowers, out of ten thousand things. All the enjoyment of the soul in this world, the enjoyment we think is real enjoyment, is only preparative; it is only the first stages of the thing; it is only the entrance, the beginning of that which shall be the orchestral harmonies and splendors of the redeemed.

You cannot test the full power of the soul for happiness in this world. How much power the soul has here to find enjoyment in friendship! but, oh, the grander friendships for the soul in the skies! How sweet the flowers here! How much sweeter they will be there! Christ is glorious to our souls now, but how much grander our appreciation after a while! For that immortal soul, the richest blood that was ever shed, the deepest groan that was ever uttered, all the griefs of earth compressed into one tear, all the sufferings of earth gathered into one rapier of pain and struck through His holy heart. Does it not imply tremendous value?

CONTENTMENT.

WE make a great ado about our hardships, but how little we talk of our blessings. Health of body, which is given in largest quantity to those who have never been petted, and fondled, and spoiled by fortune, we take as a matter of course. Rather have this luxury and have it alone, than, without it, look out of a palace window upon parks of deer stalking between fountains and statuary. These people sleep sounder on a straw mattress than fashionable invalids on a couch of ivory and eagle's down. The dinner of herbs tastes better to the appetite sharpened on a woodman's axe or a reaper's scythe than wealthy indigestion experiences seated at a table covered with partridge, and venison, and pineapple.

The grandest luxury God ever gave man is health. He who trades that off for all the palaces of the earth is infinitely cheated. We look back at the glory of the last Napoleon, but who would have taken his Versailles and Tuilleries if with them we had been obliged to take his gout? "Oh," says some one, "it isn't the grosser pleasures I covet, but it is the gratification of an artistic and intellectual taste." Why, my brother, you have the original from which these pictures are copied.

You see people happy and miserable amid all circumstances. In a family where the last loaf is on the table, and the last stick of wood on the fire, you sometimes find a cheerful confidence in God, while in a very fine place you will see and hear discord sounding the war-whoop, and hospitality freezing to death in the cheerless parlor. I stopped one day on Broadway at the head of Wall street, at the foot of the Trinity Church, to see who seemed the happiest people passing. I judged from their looks the happiest people were not those who went down into Wall street, for they had on their brow the anxiety of the dollar they expected to make; nor the people who came out of Wall street, for they had on their brow the anxiety of the dollar they had lost; nor the people who swept by in splendid equipage, for they met a carriage finer than theirs. The happiest person in all that crowd, judging from the countenance, was the woman who sat at the apple-stand knitting. I believe real happiness oftener looks out of the window of an humble home than through the opera-glass in the gilded box of a theatre.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Practical Christianity.

WITHIN a very short time, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Food Fund, whose relief work among the destitute has been so generously supported by our readers during the last three months, will have ceased to exist. To all who have been associated with the Fund, whether as contributors or distributors, it has been a source of spiritual blessing and substantial enjoyment. It has brought together, in the closest bonds of love and sympathy, thousands of Christian people in all parts of the Union, each of whom felt a personal responsibility for the success of the work.

There are, unhappily, among the destitute, many to whom the discontinuance of the Food Fund will be little less than a calamity. Some of them are among the most deserving of "God's Poor"—worthy Christian families who, through enforced idleness, sickness, or other causes, have been rendered destitute and are temporarily unable to help themselves. We have a number of such cases, each of which is worthy the kindest consideration at the hands of those to whom the Lord has given a sufficiency of material blessings. Some of these stories of suffering would move even the stoniest heart to pity. Here are a few of the most recent cases:

Mrs. C. No. W. Seventeenth street. Husband active, industrious worker; long sick; family wretchedly poor; wife and three little children shoeless; support devolves upon the wife, who has had a hard-to-hand fight with starvation for months.

K. No. W. Twelfth street. Old man, sick, lame and feeble; lives in small room with son who is permanently disabled by sunstroke; abjectly poor and helpless, but very worthy and deserving.

B. No. Waverly place. Aged couple; husband thirteen years disabled through pneumonia; formerly well-to-do; refined, clean, deserving; son who supported them died a few years ago. Absolutely no income.

H. No. W. Sixteenth street. Husband sick with kidney trouble, totally unfit for work; wife goes out daily to support family; leaving three children in day nursery; been facing starvation repeatedly; temperate and worthy people.

R. No. E. Tenth street. Husband paralyzed in joints; six small children; mother sick, but forces herself to work out at washing; very little work for months past; frequently no food in house. Deserving case.

B. No. E. Twelfth street. Deserted wife and five children, youngest a babe of five months; husband was worthless and left them penniless; urgent case; woman respectable and worthy.

R. No. E. Fourth street. Extraordinary case; mother, although dying by inches of cancer, yet struggling to support her four children by washing; home beautifully clean; but whole family been frequently on verge of starvation.

Mrs. C. No. Mangin street; was a minister's daughter in Germany; married a man of title, who lost all his property; coming to this country, worked as locksmith, but lately no employment; one daughter, an idiot; family repeatedly near starvation during winter; still wretchedly poor; very deserving.

D. No. W. Twenty-eighth street. Husband, wife, four children; husband in bed with broken leg; need help very much.

Mrs. K. No. Eighth avenue. Old lady over seventy; a carpet sewer by trade; at one time owned her house; sickness came and everything went.

Mrs. H. No. W. Twenty-sixth street. Terribly afflicted, her fingers are off to the second joint, and her feet are in a fearful condition; tries to earn a living by washing; pitiful case.

Mrs. L. No. W. Twenty-sixth street. Has four children; husband longshoreman; only a little work for months; found them in nearly starving condition.

Mrs. S. No. W. Eighteenth street. Husband dying of consumption, shoemaker; very worthy people; four children.

Mrs. C. No. W. Twenty-second street. Husband in insane asylum; two children; condition wretched; deserving.

Any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD residing in New York or vicinity, desiring to become interested, directly or indirectly, in any one destitute family, can do so, on sending name and address in strictest confidence to "The Relief Box," THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City. There is room for all who may wish to consecrate to this object a portion of their time and means, no matter how small. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD wants volunteers for the work, which is one that urgently calls for the co-operation of all who wish to show forth in some practical manner, their love of souls and their sympathy for the poor and needy.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD does not propose to collect and distribute the gifts unless donors desire to remain unknown to the beneficiaries; but simply to make itself a medium of communication between benefactor and beneficiary. Knowing from the experience of the past few months how many deserving poor there are, and being sure that there are also many Christian people able and willing to relieve their wants, it would bring both parties into mutually helpful relations. * * * *

Alva N. Howard, Worthington, Minn. What is typified by the three ribs mentioned in Daniel 7:5?

The beast like a bear is believed to have typified the Medo-Persian empire and the three ribs in its mouth represented Babylon, Lydia and Egypt which were not integral portions of the empire but were its prey and were ground down by its oppression. This opinion was held by Sir Isaac Newton and has been generally accepted by subsequent students of prophecy.

V. B. Stafford, Trenton, Tenn. Is there any record of the color of Christ's hair? I see that some speak of it as auburn while in the Song of Solomon 5:11, it is described as black and bushy.

There is no reliable description of Christ's personal appearance. The letter of Publius Lentulus is often quoted as giving such a description, but all intelligent people have long been aware that the letter is spurious. The quotation in the Song of Solomon has no reference to Christ. It is the description of her lover, which is given by the woman, who was taken from her country home to Solomon's court, to become an inmate of his harem.

W. F. Gold, Victoria, B. C. 1. What is meant by the thorn in the flesh? 11. Cor. 12:7? Did Paul have any affliction of the speech such as stammering?

Paul's reference to it is so vague that its nature can only be conjectured. His remark to the Galatians (4:15) that if it had been possible they would have plucked out their own eyes and given them to him, suggests the idea that he probably suffered from ophthalmia, which was a disease prevalent in the districts he traveled over, and that it was the thorn in the flesh. 2. The impression that he stammered originated in his remark that his enemies had said that in speech he was contemptible. (11. Cor. 10:10.) But there seems no other reason for supposing that he stammered.

Old Subscriber: How is the statement (Jer. 7:22) that God did not command sacrifice, to be reconciled with the elaborate legislation of Leviticus?

The apparent discrepancy is due to the Hebrew idiom in which the negative has the effect that the comparative has with us. To render the passage in Jeremiah freely, we might say: It was not of sacrifice and burnt-offering that God spoke when he brought the people out of Egypt, but of something much more important, namely, righteousness and obedience. By some it has been doubted whether God ever did command sacrifice, but only regulated a practice in existence from the earliest times. The peculiar phraseology of the first verses of Leviticus gives color to that theory. "If any man of you bring an offering," is a different way of introducing legislation to that of the Decalogue.

Subscriber, Los Angeles, Cal. 1. How are we to understand Christ's promise. (John 14:14.) "If ye ask anything in my name I will do it?" I have known persons who have asked things in Christ's name, and it has not been done. I knew a little girl with light, straight hair, ask that it might become dark and curly, but there was no change in it. 2. Is dancing wrong? The author of Ecclesiastes says, "There is a time to dance."

1. Christ was speaking to his disciples and his promise referred to the special help they would need in the arduous task before them. Such a promise would not be given to people who were not of his spirit, nor to persons who were not willing to submit their desires to his better judgment. In merely personal matters, such as the one you mention, persons who have entered into Christ's spirit would be content to leave the matter in God's hands, assured that his course would be the one best for them. An instance in point is Paul's thrice-repeated prayer for the removal of the thorn in the flesh and it was denied. (11. Cor. 12:8.) 2. There can be no wrong intrinsically in the mere act of dancing. Many of the modern dances are, however, of a suggestive character and lead to an excitement of the passions which is liable to be followed by sin. Therefore, Christians who are sincerely desirous of living pure and spiritual lives, will avoid them, as they do other avenues by which temptation to evil may assail them.

Subscriber, Newark, N. J. The first Christian Endeavor Society was organized at Portland, Me., in 1810.—William Anderson, Sisterville, W. Va. 1. Quite correct. 2. No; omit the article. 3. Rev. Mr. or Rev. Dr., with the surname. 4. We do not believe they are in existence.—C. A. P. Write to Rev. A. B. Simpson, 622 8th Ave., N. Y., and J. E. Jewett, bookseller, Bible House, New York.—D. D., Manville, Wyo. 1. It was a term used derisively by his enemies. 2. Probably not intoxicating wine. 3. Christians are right in opposing the liquor traffic.—D. A. Blackburn, Charleston, S. C. Yes; there are chaplains in the U. S. Navy. Write to Secretary of Navy, Washington, D. C.—Mrs. Guy Hayner, Albright Springs. She will be back in America next month.—C. E. T., Lynn, Mass. Write to Biglow & Main, music publishers, Ninth street, N. Y.—C. B., Wareham, Mass. Write to Treat, publisher, Cooper Union, N. Y.—Mrs. A. V. Wheeler, Hudson, Mass. We believe her works are published either by Scribner or Harper Brothers, New York.—Mrs. S. A. Hatch, Finsola, Mich. The Tabernacle's financial troubles have been satisfactorily adjusted.—Subscriber, Bristol. See issue of March 14 in which the contribution is duly acknowledged. The money has been applied to the work of the Food Fund.—F. J. Addison, Muskegon, Mich., and other inquirers on the subject of Baptism. See our answer to Edward Brown, Grand Rapids, in this journal of January 3d.—J. F. Williams, New Milford, Conn. See answer in issue of April 4th, to Subscriber, Elizabeth, N. J.—Subscriber, Dealtown, Ont., and D. N. Freeman, Canington, O. No one knows, or can know either of the matters about which you inquire. If such knowledge could be obtained it would serve no useful purpose. The Bible was not written to satisfy idle curiosity.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

A RAILROAD ON ICE.

An enterprising Ferry Company has supplied the citizens of the Russian Capital with a new means of locomotion during the past winter and has reaped a rich harvest of profit from its venture. As St. Petersburg is built on both sides of the River Neva, which at this place varies from three quarters of a mile to four hundred yards in width, there is much traffic across the river. Two substantial bridges of stone and iron span it and these are the main avenues of traffic. Besides these, there are in the summer several light wooden bridges for the convenience of people living at a distance from the great bridges. But in the fall, before the heavy snow storms come, and the huge blocks of ice float down from Lake Ladoga, the lighter bridges are removed. The people then use ferry boats until the ice becomes impassable; and afterwards as soon as the ice has become firmly fixed and will bear the weight, they cross the river on the ice, instead of the bridges, and regular roadways are made and kept clear of snow. This is often a laborious and, when the snow is falling, a dangerous walk, but the distance between the bridges being great, the roadways on the ice are much used. Last winter the experiment was made of operating a railroad across the river. It was built on light iron pillars which rest on the ice and has worked satisfactorily. As the fare was only two copecks, which are equivalent to one cent, the poorest citizens could use it. The cars have been full at every trip and the company has made a handsome profit on its investment. The motive power is obtained on the switch-back principle. The cars start from the top of an incline and gain sufficient momentum in the descent to carry them to the other side of the Neva, where a cable is attached to them and they are drawn by a stationary engine to the top of an incline corresponding to the one on the other side of the river, ready for the return trip. This principle is a novelty in Russia, although it is common with us. Unhappily, people in every land are familiar with the principle operating in morals. Many a man has realized, to his consternation, what a terrible momentum he acquires at every stage of the downward path, but it can carry him only farther down. Neither in the momentum, nor in himself, is there power to help him upward. If he would rise, he must seek help outside himself in the means God has provided. (John 12: 32.)

An Insect Community.

An entomologist sends to a scientific journal an interesting account of his recent observations of the habits of wasps. He says that few people have any idea of the perfect organization existing in the wasps' nest. "Division of labor goes a long way in the nest. Some of the workers seem to be specially employed as foragers and soldiers; others appear to be told off as nurses and guardians; while yet others are engaged as papermakers and masons. It is even said that these last work by definite shifts, and they each have a space of about a square inch allotted to them to fill with cells, on which no neighboring worker is permitted to encroach with impunity. The foragers who prey on fruit, sugar, meat or anything else that wasps like, on returning to the nest perches on the dome among his fellows who have been working there and deposits his burden in the common treasury to which all have access. None are idle and none suffer want. In times of distress, such as those through which we are passing, we have reason to regret that no such organization prevails in human communities. It would appear that with all his boasted superiority the teachers recommended by Solomon are not the only insignificant creatures from whom men could learn useful lessons. (Prov. 6, 6.)

A Waste of Heroism.

One of New York's bravest firemen is lying in Gouverneur Hospital hovering between life and death. A few days ago he went with his company to a fire in a tenement house in which twenty-four families lived. All were aroused and they came rushing down the stairs into the street. The firemen were battling with the flames, when the cry was raised that a child had been left behind on the first floor. The father and mother implored the chief to rescue the boy; and the brave man, at the risk of his life, re-entered the burning house. He covered his head with his coat as he ran through the flames in the hall and, bursting in a door, was soon in the rooms occupied by the family to which the missing child belonged. He searched them thoroughly, but could not find the boy. He was returning, when a fierce gust of flame and smoke met him and overcame him and he fell to the floor insensible. One of his men hearing him fall, made his way in and dragged him out. He was sent at once to the hospital where his injuries were treated. They are so severe that little hope is entertained of his recovery. The child whom he imperilled his life to rescue was afterwards found asleep in a hall-way a few doors away. He had been among the first to escape. So the fireman's brave act and his sufferings were needless. It has often proved so with the greatest of all sacrifices, but from a different cause. All of those whom Christ died to save were in need of rescue, but many render his sufferings and death of no avail by refusing to be saved. (Heb. 10: 29.)

THE NEW RAILROAD ACROSS THE FROZEN NEVA, AT ST. PETERSBURG.

A Unique Wound.

A New York daily journal avers that there is now on the pension roll a man whose injury is unparalleled in the pension lists of any country in the world. It is an auger hole in his back, which causes him to limp in a peculiar manner. It was received in the war, the man having served in a New Jersey regiment. Shortly before going to the front an order had been issued strictly forbidding intoxicating liquor being brought within the lines. One day the regiment was sent to occupy a position which had been hastily abandoned by the enemy on the preceding night. Among the property left behind, was a barrel of whiskey. This was taken, by the Colonel's orders, to a loft over a stable and two men were placed on guard over it. The lame man, who did not limp then, visited the loft at night, hoping to persuade the guard to let him have a drink of the whiskey. He found both the men intoxicated and therefore helped himself to the liquor. He took so much that he was soon as helpless as the guards, and lay down beside them to sleep off the effects of his potations. Several other soldiers also wanted some of the whiskey, and one of them had visited the loft during the day, and noted the position of the barrel. The men went at night to the stable and, knowing nothing of what had occurred in the loft overhead attempted to bore through the ceiling of the stable into the barrel. They had provided themselves with an auger and a pail for the purpose. But the men had not carefully taken the bearings of the barrel: for they bored not into it, but into the back of their comrade, as he lay on the floor above in a drunken stupor. It nearly cost him his life, and he has limped ever since. Probably the Government supposed, when he was granted a pension, that he received his wound on the field of battle. Although, in being injured through intoxicating drink, he may be said to have fallen a victim to an enemy of his country, that enemy has made so many victims, and is making so many more every day, that the Government could not admit its liability to pension them, or it would soon be bankrupt. (Prov. 23: 29, 30.)

New Remedy for Consumption.

A distinguished pathologist describes in the "New York Herald" a new agent in the treatment of consumption which has been used with remarkable success. It is called Guaiacol, and is mixed with sterilized oil and administered hypodermically. He says that hitherto the difficulty in dealing with the bacillus or germ which produces consumption consisted in the fact that it has the power of hiding itself in the tissues where it cannot be reached by antiseptics which would destroy it. To meet this difficulty various methods have been tried for rendering the tissue refractory to the germ: that is of so changing its nature that the bacillus cannot, or will not thrive upon it. The agents used for the purpose have not been generally successful, but it has been found by experiment that more cures have been effected by creosote than by any other drug. Many patients, however, cannot be treated with creosote, as it produces general ill-effects on their constitutions. The and he ordered the complainant and defendant to appear in court as soon as the former had recovered from his injuries, that he might learn all the facts and see that justice was done. The judge's course was undoubtedly right, but it is often difficult to get men to see that the principle on which he acted applies to sins against God. There could have been no pardon for sin if the majesty of God's laws had not been vindicated by the death of Christ. (Rom. 3: 26.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Evangelist Arthur Crane, of Plainfield, N. J., has been holding services at Spencer, N. Y. Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian Churches united in the work. The results have been very encouraging.

A Baptismal Font Erected in one of the churches in the Fiji Islands, has been made from a stone which once stood in front of an idol temple, and against which the bodies of victims were dashed as an offering to the gods.

A Traveler in China reports that he witnessed a double execution during one of his journeys. One of the culprits was a young man who had killed his father; the other was the young man's school-master who was being executed for not having trained his pupil better.

The Chicago Avenue Church, Chicago, of which Mr. Moody was formerly pastor, has invited Rev. R. A. Torrey, of the Bible Institute, to become its pastor. The pulpit has been vacant for nearly five years. If Mr. Torrey accepts it, he will have an assistant for his work in the Institute.

Dr. T. J. Barnardo has forwarded to Canada another party of boys, who were originally street waifs, but have been taught and trained in Dr. Barnardo's homes with special view to colonial life. The party numbers 239 which brings the total number so settled through the philanthropist's efforts up to 6,810.

Rev. Geo. T. Dowling, D.D., whose invitation to believers to join in the Lord's Supper at Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, some years ago led to his being separated from the Baptist denomination, has been confirmed by the Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Massachusetts, and will become a minister of that church.

The Moody meetings in Richmond have commenced auspiciously. The great Tabernacle was filled on the first evening with an audience of no less than 3,000, though the weather was stormy. The preparations under the care of the Rev. Geo. C. Needham and Mr. Bliss have been thorough, and on every hand there is hope of great good to come.

Evangelist E. P. Telford is holding successful meetings in London. The great Charington Hall in the East End of the city is crowded nightly and much good is being done. At the conclusion of these meetings, Mr. Telford is to hold meetings at Crayden, Reigate, Fenge and other places. He expects to return to the United States in September.

Prof. William R. Harper asks us to State that the semi-annual examination upon the International Sunday School Lessons will take place on June 3. The outline on which the questions will be based may be obtained free on application, enclosing stamp for return postage, from the American Institute of Sacred Literature, Hyde Park, Chicago.

A Temperance Advocate recently surprised his audience by referring to Paul's advice to Timothy as an argument for Temperance. "It showed," he said, "that in the early Christian Church, water was the customary beverage, and that Timothy used it and did not take any other, even when his stomach was out of order, until Paul urged him to do so, it he did then."

Dr. L. W. Munhall has been holding very successful meetings at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The First Presbyterian Church has been crowded daily, and a large number of conversions have taken place. On Sunday afternoon, March 25, an immense throng filled the Opera House, when Dr. Munhall preached an impressive sermon. No less than 145 persons pledged themselves in Christ's strength to live for him. On Tuesday, March 27, the factories and business houses to the number of 125, closed their establishments to give their employees an opportunity of attending the services.

The Evangelistic Campaign in New York continues with unabated interest. On Monday, April 9, the experiment was commenced of holding six afternoon meetings simultaneously in various parts of the city. Dr. A. C. Dixon spoke in Niblo's Theatre; Pastor J. K. Davis in Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church; Dr. Wilson in Eighteenth Street M. E. Church; Dr. Walker in St. Mark's Episcopal Church; Evangelist Arthur Crane at First Collegiate Church, and other Evangelists in Emanuel Baptist Church. These services commenced about half-past three, and were largely attended. Beside these, many churches are holding services every evening.

A New League for Christian Work was Organized recently in New York, at a meeting held in Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church. Its title is, "The Open or Institutional Church League." Its aims are to work through philanthropic as well as religious channels for the betterment of men physically and spiritually, abolishing, as far as possible, the distinction between the religious and the secular, and sanctifying all days and all means to the great end of saving the world for Christ. It advocates open church doors all day and every day, free seats, and the personal activity of all church members. Rev. C. A. Dickinson is President of the League.

Contributions of clothing, provisions, etc., for the Relief Fund from the following, are acknowledged:

Mrs. M. T. Pratt, North Plainfield, N. J., box clothing; Mrs. E. J. Mack, Whitesboro, N. Y., 2 boxes clothing; Mrs. F. L. Ladd, Conklin, N. Y., package clothing and 1 barrel potatoes; M. S. C. Allen, N. Y., 2 bags clothing; Mrs. N. A. bag clothing; M. C. Batesman, Lunenburg, N. Y., package clothing; Glenham, N. Y., package clothing; Santa Ana, Cal., package clothing; Santa Ana, Cal., package clothing; Mrs. N. J. Himes, Forked River, N. J., 2 bags vegetables; Miss S. Merion, and ladies of Walnut, Pa., 1 barrel clothing; Margaret Lagimodiere, Granby, N. Y., clothing; Ulster, N. Y., clothing; Mrs. Briggs, package clothing; Thomas McIntire, Granberry, Pa., box clothing.

claim is now made that guaiacol, which is one of the elements of creosote, is free from this objection, and has all the good effects of creosote. It is said to be fatal to the germ when it is imbedded. Thousands of sufferers will be thankful for this discovery if it proves to be all that is claimed for it. No one who is afflicted with the disease will neglect such a remedy, as people who are conscious of inbred sin neglect the infallible remedy which God has provided to eradicate it and render the heart refractory to its power. (Romans 8: 3.)

An Ineffectual Settlement.

The application of a lawyer was denied with some indignation by the judge of a New York court a few days ago. Handing up to Judge Cowing the papers in a certain case, he asked that they might be endorsed, "Settled out of court." The judge inquired what the nature of the case was, and the lawyer said that it was the case of an aggravated assault with intent to kill. There was no occasion to proceed with it, he added, as his client, who was the offender, had paid the complainant a sum of money which had been accepted as full compensation for the injuries inflicted. He appealed to the lawyer on the other side, who confirmed his statement. The judge, however, refused to endorse the papers. It was a case, he said, in which such a settlement could not be recognized. The complainant was not the only party concerned. The State had been outraged by a crime, and was entitled to satisfaction. It might be his duty to send the offender to state's prison,

SERMONS WORTH READING

Helpful Discourses for the People.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Sermon Preached in the First Baptist Church, Atlanta, Ga., by Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, D.D. Text: Matt. 6: 33: "Seek first the kingdom of God."

IN these words the God-Man, the highest authority and the highest wisdom of the universe, places our obligations to him above all other obligations, and our spiritual needs above every temporal concern. To seek his kingdom is to seek to put ourselves in such relations with him as will honor and glorify his name, and secure for us redemption from sin, a life of virtue, usefulness and happiness on earth, and eternal blessedness and glory in heaven. Such objects deserve and they demand the highest place in our thoughts and affections. No man ever found the kingdom of God until it became to him the supreme object of thought, desire and pursuit. No man can even come near its portal, until all material possessions, and worldly distinctions and pleasures appear to him as worthless and contemptible in comparison with it. To attempt to seek while you think more of something else, is not only unmitigated folly, but an insult to God.

What it will do.

I. What does the kingdom of God propose to do for man? It proposes to teach him and to help him to become master of himself and of the world. It implants in the man who seeks it a new principle of life, by which he may en throne his spiritual nature over all his animal feelings and tendencies. It does not free him from the limitations of his material body, with its fatigues, its weaknesses and its pains. It does not take away from him the affections and sensibilities which made him a man. A man in the kingdom of God can be just as indignant when insulted as a man outside of it. He can aspire to wealth and office, and applause and pleasure. The kingdom of God does not make us dead to the world, or to any of its legitimate aims, activities, and enjoyments. It does not sublimate or etherealize us. With the kingdom within us, filling us with joy and peace in the Holy Ghost, we are still flesh and blood, and our feet still touch the earth.

That kingdom proposes to develop within us the power of self-control—the power to overcome anger, envy, fear, and pride, to regulate every inclination and passion of our animal natures, and to extract from all the circumstances of our lives something to advance us in wisdom, virtue, and happiness.

It proposes to emancipate us from bondage to self, to fill us with sympathy and love for our fellow men, that we shall seek their welfare as we seek our own. It proposes to hallow all our earthly relationships, and to make the performance of the duties growing out of those relationships, a sacred and delightful service. It proposes to develop within us all those affections, powers, and graces that will make our lives beautiful, noble and peaceful here, and fit us for the infinitely higher and grander activities and enjoyments of an endless hereafter.

The whole world will admit the desirableness of these objects. Every rational human being will confess that if they are real, they should be coveted above all other good, and if attainable, it should be the supreme aim and effort of every man to find them. If you believe them to be real and attainable, and have not made them first in your thoughts, affections and plans, you must feel that your life so far has been a disgraceful failure, and that over its lost opportunities, its forfeited possibilities, and its inexorable stupidities and follies, you ought, if possible, to weep tears of blood.

II. But how does the kingdom of God propose to accomplish within us these blessed transformations? How does it propose to bring us to the realization of the great ideal which it holds before us? My answer is: by presenting to us as an object of faith and love, and imitation, a personal God—the Lord Jesus Christ. The ideal life to which we are called was illustrated by his own living among men, and the grace which we need to imitate that life is given to us by him. We attain to the blessed realities of the kingdom of God by faith, because faith brings us into a real, conscious, and loving Connection With the King.

Abstract precepts and impersonal ideals never made any human being good and great. A man may read in some book a list of the virtues which, in combination, make a perfect character, but it will not generate in him any very strong desire to possess those virtues. You may write on a black-board a catalogue of the qualities which in combination make a man inherently great, and your boy may read them over and over without even the slightest aspiration for greatness.

The virtues which make human character rich, beautiful and noble, are propagated not by rules and imaginings, but by being impersonated in those whom we love and admire. Your child will learn to love goodness by seeing goodness in you. Believing in you and loving you, he will love and cling to whatever you love and practice. No definition of patriotism ever made any man a patriot. It is the exhibition of that virtue in some human life—a life of sublime devotion to country that will kindle patriotic fire in other hearts. No man was ever drawn into the steep and rugged path that leads to imperial greatness by reading some philosopher's analysis of greatness. It is the personal influence of some majestic man whom he venerates and loves, that will fire him with ambition, and strengthen him for heroic effort. So it is in the kingdom of God. There at the head of it stands the God-Man—the impersonation and incarnation of all truth, wisdom, virtue, beauty, majesty, and greatness, and the source of all that can enrich, elevate, and glorify the human soul. We seek the kingdom of God when we seek him.

We Find the Kingdom of God when we find him, and we find him when by faith we accept him as our Redeemer and King. Believing in him he becomes the mercy of God to take away our sins, the wisdom of God to show the path of truth, safety, duty and happiness, and the power of God to walk in that path in defiance of every adversary within or without, on the earth or under the earth. We cannot believe in him without loving him, and we cannot love him without being like him, and to be like him is to be adorned with all the virtues, and filled with all the riches, promised to those who seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

III. Accepting this view, we find the way into God's kingdom so simple that a child may understand it, and so easy that anybody who will may enter it, and realize the ineffable blessedness of it. To enter that kingdom you will not have to master a system of philosophy, or investigate a creed. You have only to believe in a person, a being in human form, who once breathed the atmosphere and trod the soil of earth, and who was seen by human eyes and touched by human hands. To get into the kingdom of God, you have not to make a study of all the visible religious organizations calling themselves churches, and by a comparison of their creeds, rituals, forms of worship, government, and history, determine which is the true church. No. It would take the average person a life-time to do that. There are millions of people, who, owing to the feebleness of their capacities and their lack of facilities, could never accomplish the task. If there is no simpler, easier, shorter way than that to the kingdom of God, three-fourths of the human family have not the capacity to enter it, and are doomed to everlasting darkness, degradation and wretchedness. To get into a church you may have to subscribe to a great many things, but to get into the kingdom of God you have only to receive Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour. And he is not afar off. He is here. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." To seek him is simply to open your heart and say, "Redeemer and Master, come in, and take possession of me, and rule my heart and life."

In thus surrendering yourself to him you pass into, and become forever a subject of his kingdom. You are then invested with privileges and rights which can never be taken from you. You are shielded by a fortress from which "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature" can ever dislodge you.

But the kingdom of God is both individual and social. It but it does not end with him. It proposes to regenerate society just as truly and radically as it regenerates the individual man. You are to seek the kingdom of God not only for the purpose of getting it into your own heart and life, but to extend it to other hearts and lives, and to bring society with all of its sentiments, purposes, plans, customs, and institutions under the domination of its principles and power.

Begins With the Individual

United to the Lord Jesus Christ by a living faith, and feeling and knowing the reality and blessedness of his kingdom, you are prepared to commend it to others, and to exert an influence that will move them to seek it. If every man who has entered Christ's kingdom had made its progress his chief concern, the whole world would have been evangelized more than a thousand years ago. If the men and women in the world to-day who believe in Christ and know by actual experience the benefits of belonging to his kingdom, would come up to the measure of their duty in teaching and practicing his truth, how soon Christian ideas and influences would pervade and control philosophy, science, social customs, commerce and government, in every quarter of the globe.

I have found my own zeal for the kingdom of God greatly stimulated at times, by imagining what the condition of things in this country would be if we were entirely deprived of the Influences of that Kingdom.

Eliminate from our statute books all the legislation that is traceable to Christian ideas and sentiments, and till our judicial and executive offices with men without faith in God and Christ, and what a reign of degradation and devilry would follow. To bring about these results—to establish truth and righteousness throughout all our social organism—we must advance the kingdom of God; and to extend and strengthen that kingdom, we must give it the largest and highest place in our thoughts, affections and activities.

IV. How may we place the kingdom of God above every other object of desire and pursuit? We may do it, first, by an immediate response to its demands. This is reasonable. Whatever is of supreme importance to us and to the world, should receive our first attention. Can you conceive of anything so important to you as the interests of your own soul—its regeneration, its cleansing from guilt, its escape from the damnation here and hereafter of unforgiven sin, its growth in all those virtues which will render it meet for eternal companionship with angels and "the spirits of just men made perfect," and with God himself in that better country, "Where beauty smiles eternally and pleasure never dies?"

We read in this sacred book that a young man came to Jesus and said, "Master, I will follow thee, but suffer me first to go and bury my father." Surely it there would be anything that would warrant a man in postponing a single day the seeking of his soul's salvation, it is his sense of obligation to a dead and unbred parent. But what was the response of

The Great Teacher?

"Let the dead bury their dead: but come thou and follow me." I repudiate all the fanciful interpretations by which men have sought to conceal, or to soften, the significance of these words. It is simply a deceitful handling of the Word of God, to say that Jesus did not mean, that if a man be saved, he should not turn from the work of seeking salvation even to bury his own father. If that young man's plea for postponement was not admissible, where shall I find words to express the stupendous folly, and the reckless and wicked audacity, of men and women, who propose to defer the work of seeking God's kingdom and getting ready for death, judgment and eternity, until their material fortunes are made, or until certain worldly distinctions are won, or until they are too old to enjoy any more the pleasures of sin? I am chargeable with no extravagance of speech when I say, that, there is not insanity in your mad-houses comparable to that.

Earnestness.

We can make the kingdom of God first, not only by seeking it before we seek anything else, but by seeking it with a more zealous devotion, than that which we bring to the pursuit of other objects. The man who, like Jacob, wrestles with God in prayer through a whole night, saying, "I will not let thee go until thou bless me," or who goes into the closet and locks the door, determined never to come out again and never to look into another human face, until his sins are forgiven, and his name is written in the Book of Life, exalts the kingdom of God immeasurably above all temporal pursuits and possessions. The same is true of the man who says, "I am not my own—I am bought with a price and therefore whatever I have is subject to the demands of my Heavenly Master." A Christian minister in New York recently made a very tender and timely allusion to the life of a Christian merchant, a member of his congregation, who a few years before had exchanged the toils of earth for the rest of heaven. That merchant began his contributions to the kingdom of Christ by giving one-tenth of his income. Later he gave the half of it, and finally the whole of it. On his death-bed he said, "I think I can say, as in the sight of God, that my has been the same aim as that of every true minister in preaching the Gospel of Christ. There was a man who sought "first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." There was a man whose supreme aim in doing business was the expansion and exaltation of the cause of Christ. How many of the business men before me this morning can say as much for themselves? How many of them will be able to say it when they pass "down the valley into the shadow of death?"

Aim in Making Money

We seek first the kingdom of God, when, to extend its triumphs, we are willing not only to give and to labor, but to suffer the loss of all things. Who doubts that the apostles loved that kingdom supremely, when confronting the august tribunal which forbade them to bear witness for the risen Christ, they declared that they would "obey God rather than men?" Who doubts that it was uppermost in the heart of Paul, when foreseeing the bonds and imprisonments that awaited him, he said, "I am ready to preach the gospel to them who are in Rome also." Who doubts that the interests of that Kingdom were supreme in the affections of Martin Luther, when like Elijah before the priests of Baal, he stood before Emperors and bishops, and generals, and legates in the Diet of Worms, and said with an

Emphasis that Electrified

the world: "Unless you confute me by arguments based on the word of God, I cannot and will not recant?" Who doubts that John Knox loved that Kingdom above everything else which a human heart can covet, when, preaching in the presence of Queen Mary, and rebuked by one of her subordinates for reminding her of her littleness in the sight of God, he declared "I am in the place where I am demanded by my conscience to speak the truth, and therefore the truth I will speak." Who doubts that John Bunyan loved the Kingdom more than his own liberty, when, in replying to the magistrate who condemned him for preaching the gospel without the license of the King, he said: "Turn me out of jail to-day, sir, and by the grace of God I will preach the gospel to-morrow."

Brethren, think not that the times and circumstances in which we live furnish no opportunity for such heroic witnessing for Christ and his kingdom. The opportunities are manifold. In this, the nineteenth century of the Christian era no man escapes opposition, detraction, calumny, hatred and persecution, who everywhere and at all times seeks first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness. But if we suffer with Christ, we shall also reign with him. After the cross the crown. After the sighing and the sobbing will come the music of peace and gladness. The night is far spent. Look to the East, where up the lucid sky the morning climbs.

NEGRO ECONOMY IN THE BLACK BELT.

A COLORED woman came to the headquarters of the Industrial Mission Association at Beloit, Ala., to get a pair of shoes, writes Mrs. C. B. Curtis, wife of the President of the Association. They were wanted for one of her three boys who, with no little sacrifice, are being sent to the pay school, which after a four months' free school, has just opened. In response to a remark with reference to her keeping herself neat so that she could be an example for her young daughter and her boys, there came out a story of self-denial for their sakes that was rather heroic.

"You see," she said, "when hun (meaning her daughter), wears out her clothes, I takes 'em and patches 'em and covers up the holes and gives her the new ones, and I teaches her how to make it too. I say 'there, you take that new cloth and cut it out.' I shows her how and then has her sit down and make it. She now makes every piece she wears and the clothes for the others, too. I gives her the new cloth to work on when we kin get it and I goes along with the mending.

"In the sewing class the other day, Miss Hunt said she didn't see how I could cut out my baby a dress of the piece of cloth she gave me, without a pattern, but I does it. I was a poor, motherless gal and was raised up by 'most anyone. When I couldn't get a pair of scissors I would cut out my dress with a case knife, yes with a case knife (seeing my look of surprise), and baste it up and try it on and baste it up again and try it on and make it fit me. I sure don't waste a thing. When a coat (meaning a dress) is worn out, I rips it up and takes the good pieces out of the 'tail' of it and makes dresses for the little chaps, and the bits that are too small for that and cuts up and makes a quilt of. When my husband's clothes are all worn out and the boys pants, I picks out the good pieces, no matter how small and sits down of a night and sews them together and first I know there is a quilt on the frames.

"I have one boy that wears dresses. You never hear me asking for new cloth for him. I takes the good pieces from the worn-out clothes of the rest and goes on and makes clothes for him, and when the cotton sacks are all worn out, I washes 'um up and makes good warm skirts for him. I works hard; our husbands cant get along 'cept we wives do work. Plow? Yes indeed I plows as good as he does. From the time the crop is in the ground till the last bit is gathered I never stops from Monday morning till Friday night, and then on Saturday I does the washing and mending for all on 'um. I tells you with six head of chillen one has to work hard. It isn't one Saturday, but every Saturday just so. I tries to take up just as little as I can. Six head of chillen soon do destroy a heap of victuals. Right smart of times I eats dinner one day and don't eat again till next day at dinner. When crops is short and you have so many chillen you can't eat right regular. We mothers have to live sca'ce for the sake of our chillen. I has a heap to do, but I goes to the Lord every day and he helps me to do it."

Motherhood is much the same the world over and while many of the colord women know little of economy and self-denial, this instance that I have tried imperfectly to portray is not a solitary one.

MONEY RECEIVED.

Since our last acknowledgment, the following sums have been received and applied to the various funds indicated by the senders:

From G. H. Harvey $1 for Sister Charlotte's Home; from James Henry Lawrence $1 for the Flood Sufferers in the South; from T. G. E., Evanston, Ill., $5 for the China Inland Mission; from Mary J. Foye and Mary C. Clements 25c. each for the Mary Washington Fund; from N. Thompson, $25 for Mr. Penzotti, the South American missionary.

For THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School Missionary in the Southwest: Mrs. M. D. Merrifield, $1; W. A. Bray, $1; Mrs. E. Alshadden, $1; Reader, Peoria, Ill., $5. Previously ack'd $192.67. Total, $200.67.

For the Bethany Lodging-House for Homeless Women: Frank C. Bucknam, $2; Friend, Dane Co., Wis., $1; Doda and Kitty Bowden, $1. Previously acknowledged, $1,547.15. Total, $1,551.15.

For Mrs. Bella Cooke's Work: Kate E. Baldwin, $1; Teachers and Pupils of Union School, Fredericktown, O., $1.50.

Conducted by Ira D. Sankey

Hark! Hark! my Soul.

REV. F. W. FABER

WM. F. SHERWIN

1. Hark! hark! my soul: Angelic songs are swelling O'er earth's green fields and
2. On - ward we go, for still we hear them singing, "Come, weary souls, for
3. Far, far a - way, like bells at evening pealing, The voice of Je - sus
4. An-gels, sing on! your faithful watches keeping, Sing us sweet fragments ocean's wave-beat shore; How sweet the truth those blessed strains are telling Je - sus bids you come; And thro' the dark, its echoes sweetly ring-ing, sounds o'er land and sea: And laden souls by thousands meekly steal-ing, of the songs a-bove, Till morning's joy shall end the night of weeping,

Of that new life when sin shall be no more!
The mu - sic of the gos-pel leads us home.
Kind Shepherd, turn their weary steps to Thee. } An-gels of Je - sus!
And life's long shadows break in cloudless love.

An - gels of light! Sing-ing to wel-come the pilgrims of the night.

By per. The Biglow & Main Co., owners of Copyright

From SELECT SONGS No. 2, by permission of the Publishers.

THINGS THAT SHALL BE.

THE sword of the Living One shall come

Like fire to the lips that have long been [dumb.
And sons and daughters, as prophets told,
Shall the secret thoughts of the Lord unfold.
And, "Wake, O, Sleeper," the cry shall be,
Arise, O, sinner; for refuge flee.
For the flood shall rise, and the storm shall fall;

And the flame shall burst from the castle [wall;
The city will crumble, the vintage fail;
Death's arrow shall fly and the foe prevail.
And "Stand, O, Herald, upon the tower!
And watch, O, watcher, another hour."

Though none of that fateful hour may know,
Yet its forecast splendor shall thrill and glow.

In the heart of the watcher who sees afar
The yellow gleam of the morning star.
And the soul of Nature that ave hath sung
The praise of God in an unknown tongue.
That soul so near the Divine shall see,
And write of His coming on blossom and tree;
And the earth shall thrill with a conscious pain,

For the fear of death shall her pulse enchain;
In place of the calm of her summer leaves,
Red buds her passion of sorrow weaves,
A fire like the sun on her boughs shall glow;
And the currents of life from her veins
o'erflow, [the dead:
Like drops from a hydrant, like tears for
For the earth shall be smitten, her summer-time fled.

Alas! for that terrible day of the Lord
When the valiant-hearted shall draw the sword,
The sickle shall gleam in the meadow fair,
And the harvest of gold shall the reaper share.

The purple grapes on the hills shall shine,
With the dew's of night turned to sacred wine.
And the morn shall dawn when the night is old, [cold
O'er the sun-steeped hills, down the valleys
Shall plunge a splendor from opening sky,
The like ne'er witnessed by mortal eye,
And the day that dawns shall no night
o'er shroud, [cloud.
And that sun's bright disk shall no shadow
Junesville, Wis. HARRIET WARNER REQUA.

MILLENNIAL POWER.

How the Divine Resources of Power will be Exercised in the Millennium.

BY REV. WILLIAM MAUDE.

WHEN we inquire into the extent and special character of the power which will be exercised over nature by Christ and the risen saints in the Coming Kingdom, we shall, I apprehend, find the key to the question in the remarkable words used in Heb. 6, "The powers of the age to come." There can scarcely be a doubt that in this expression the apostle refers to those miraculous gifts which were the endowment of the early church, in most gracious fulfilment of the Lord's promise, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my Father. (John 13: 12). We are warranted, then, in regarding the miracles of Christ and his Apostles as glorious specimens of "powers" which shall be fully possessed and lovingly exercised by the risen saints in that "age to come" whereof we speak.

If we arrange the miracles of Christ in groups, and then view those groups in connection, we shall see how completely they cover, representatively, the whole extent of that dominion over the works of God's hands, which man lost in the first Adam, but shall regain, and more than regain, in the Second Adam. Thus, in one group, comprising the turning of the water into wine at the marriage feast, the feeding of the five thousand, and the draughts of fishes, we have specimens of power over the resources of nature. For instance, the multiplying of the bread easily shows itself as such.

As Archbishop Trench said, "The original curse of sin was the curse of barrenness, the earth yielding hard-won and scanty returns to the sweat and labor of man; but here his curse is removed, and in its stead the primæval abundance for a moment re-appears. All scantiness and scarcity, such as this lack of bread in the wilderness, such as that failing of the wine at the marriage feast, belonged not to man as his portion at first; for all the earth was appointed to serve him, and to pour the fullness of its treasures into his lap. That he ever should hunger or thirst, that he should have lack of anything, was a consequence of Adam's sin—fifty, therefore, removed by him, the Second Adam, who came to give him back all which had been forfeited by the first."

Again, in the second group, including the stilling of the tempest and the walking on the sea, we have specimens of power over the elements of nature and the recovery of that control over them which has been usurped by Satan. It is this that physical science aims to regain, and, in some small measure, succeeds. But, after all, how poor and partial are its boasted triumphs. Man can use the wind to propel his ships and grind his corn; but can he restrain the tempest in which his stoutest bark founders and his proudest palace or most sacred temple is levelled with the dust? "What manner of man is this?" cried the awe-stricken disciples of old, "that even the winds and the sea obey him?" But such manner of men will doubtless be the risen and glorified saints when clothed with "the powers of the age to come."

In like manner, in the third group, the largest of all, comprising all the Lord's miracles of healing, we have examples of the power over various forms of bodily disease which will be characteristic of the ministry of the coming kingdom. The instrumentality employed being, apparently, the leaves of the tree of life, as mentioned both by Ezekiel and John. (See Ezek. 47: 12; Rev. 22: 2).

So, again, in a fourth group, including the healing of the demoniac possessed by the legion—him in the synagogue of Capernaum, and the casting out of the dumb and deaf spirit; we have wonderful examples of power over ultra-natural agents,—blessed earnest of the plenary fulfilment of the promise—"The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly" (Rom. 16: 10).

Lastly, in yet another group, in which are included the raising of the daughter of Jairus, the widow's son, and—most stupendous miracle of all—that of his friend Lazarus, we have blessed examples of the supreme exercise of Christ's redemptive power in the physical region,—his power even over death. And this, too, will be included among "the powers of the age to come?"

GOD'S CARE FOR HIS OWN.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Commencing April 29. Psalm 103.

PROBABLY no question has perplexed the Christian more painfully and more frequently than that of Divine Providence. To many who are suffering under poverty, disease and bereavement, the words of this Psalm must read like awful mockery. "Where," they may ask, "is the God who healeth all their diseases, who redeemeth their life from destruction, satisfieth their mouth with good things and crowneth them with his tender mercies?" The Psalmist himself was not always in this mood of thankfulness. In another place he complains bitterly that he is plagued all the day long and chastened every morning, and that it is the wicked who have an immunity from trouble and are not plagued like other men. Very early in human history the problem was forced on the attention of the philosopher, by obvious facts. In the discussion between Job and his friends, the subject was considered in all its phases. So general was the idea that prosperity was the portion of the righteous, that the absence of prosperity came to be regarded as clear proof of unrighteousness. Job contended with very natural indignation against such a cruel theory, and insisted that his calamities were not punishments. So will many members of Christian Endeavor Societies feel, as they hear this subject discussed, and the torment of self-accusation may be added to outward ills of life. "God's care for his own," will be proved, and many a sleek, prosperous Christian will give testimony from his own experience of such special care. The poor, troubled, harassed hearer, whose only comfort is his trust in God, will listen and ask himself, "Am I mistaken after all? Am I really a child of God? I cannot be his or he would care for me."

The solution of the problem comes where Job found it and where David went: "When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me, until I went into the sanctuary of God." That is not the church, which has been reared by men. Its very magnificence is often only a painful addition to the complication. It is in God's presence, the true sanctuary, where the ineffable light shines, and man communes alone with his Father. There he learns that God is really caring for him, in spite of appearances. God is not unmindful of his suffering, but is watching, with love, and joy, and sympathy, his patience under it, and the graces which are growing amid unpropitious circumstances. It is not of his outward man that God is thinking; he is caring for the spiritual nature and the pure gold in the soul, which is accumulating while the dross of money is eluding the grasp. God does care for his own; but not as the foolish father cares for the son when he surrounds with luxury, and supplies with funds that he may enjoy all pleasure. With some of his own, God could give no better evidence of care than the poverty and suffering in their lot. As the marble in the hands of the sculptor is chiselled and scoured, until it assumes the shape of the hero or the statesman, so the character is cut and smoothed by afflictions until it takes the likeness of Christ. God has cared for his child; and here and hereafter that child is a monument of his care.

THE B. Y. P. U. OF BOSTON.

A city organization of Baptist Young People's Unions has been effected in Boston, Mass. At a conference of representatives of the Unions recently held in Bowdoin Square Tabernacle, to which forty-five associations sent delegates, a board of officers was elected and plans formulated for united action. The President is R. I. Condon, of Everett; Vice President, J. E. Norcross, of Watertown; Secretary, Miss May Abercrombie, of Boston; Treasurer, Dr. Winslow B. French, of Allston. The distinctive features of the Union's work were fully discussed at the three sessions held by the Conference. "Junior Methods" was the subject of the afternoon sessions at which Rev. J. K. Wilson, President of the State Union presided. The discussion was opened by Rev. Everett D. Burr, of Ruggles Street Church. The Christian Culture Courses were emphatically endorsed by the Conference. At the session devoted to the subject, Dr. Mabie spoke for the Missionary Union, Henry C. Vedder, of New York, for the churches, and Rev. F. M. Gardner, of Boston, for the pastors. The report of the Committee on the Constitution gave rise to surrounded by a well-kept garden and has the appearance of a private mansion. It has, however, all the conveniences of a more stately city Association building. Its first floor comprises the gymnasium, bowling alley, reception-room and Secretary's office. A spacious reading-room and library occupies the second floor. On the third floor is the auditorium, which has a seating capacity of nearly five hundred. The fourth floor has the janitor's room and a chess-room, which is much frequented and has attained a wide reputation for the skill of the players who meet there. The Association has over six hundred members and has already extended its work by organizing two branches, one of which is for colored young men. The Secretary under whose leadership the Association achieved its first successes was Mr. John T. Swift, who resigned soon after the opening of the building to become a missionary in Japan.

A METHODIST MINISTER'S PLEA.

Pending the decision of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South on the subject of the Epworth League an earnest appeal for affiliation with the Christian Endeavor Society is made by Rev. Gilby C. Kelly. In a communication to the "Christian Advocate" of Nashville, Tenn., he pleads that the church adopt the style of Epworth Leagues of Christian Endeavor. These denominational rallies are strikingly suggestive of the tribal segregations of Israel about the Tabernacle.

AMONG THE ORDERS.

A new Christian Endeavor Society has been formed in Rathgar, Ireland. Belfast has fifteen Young People's and two Junior societies; Ireland has in all thirty societies.

The Epworth League Chapter of Frederick, Ind., tendered a reception to the Baltimore Conference at its recent meeting in that city. Both the Conference and the League were gratified by the result.

At Chefoo, N. China, native Y. M. C. A. work was opened at the end of January. Dr. Corbett, of the American Presbyterian Mission, presided, and four or five Christian natives spoke. Meetings are held in two sections of the city on alternate nights.

The bill lately passed by the Iowa Legislature, forbidding the sale or gift of tobacco to any boy under the age of sixteen, was drawn up at the request of the temperance committee of an Endeavor Society, which also did good service in arousing public sentiment in its favor.

Several Epworth Leagues have adopted the plan of holding occasional meetings at the homes of their members in rotation. In all cases the plan has worked well. After the business is transacted there is music and informal conversation. Light refreshments are provided.

A free breakfast has been served every Sunday morning to a crowd of hungry men at Morgan Chapel, Boston, for several weeks past by the Epworth Leagues of Newton and Chelsea. From two to three hundred men were fed each week and listened with delight to the Gospel hymns sung by the Leaguers after the meal.

Delegates to the National Conference of the Baptist Young People's Union which will be held at Toronto, July 10-22, will be carried by the railroads at reduced rates. A rate $10 for the round trip from Washington, Baltimore, New York and Philadelphia to Niagara is announced for delegates from that quarter.

Another pilgrimage to the Mecca of Methodism, Epworth, England, is planned by the Epworth League, to start from New York early in July. Dr. J. T. Docking writes us that the management of the party has been placed in his hands and that he will be pleased to furnish all information to persons wishing to join the party. His address is 109 High street, West-erly, R. I.

The Baptist Young People's Union of New Jersey will celebrate its fourth anniversary on May 16 and 17. The meetings will be held in the Baptist Church, Bridgeton, N. J. An attractive programme has been prepared. Among the speakers will be Dr. H. M. King of Providence, R. I., Rev. L. L. Henson of Baltimore and Miss Mary Campbell of New Brunswick.

The General Secretary of the Epworth League reports that he has received an application for an Epworth League charter from Spring Hill, Kan., with the significant information that the entire membership of thirty are newly converted young persons. The president is the only full member of the church in the Epworth League. The remainder are all probationers.

An interesting circle of King's Daughters was organized years ago in Mauncetown, N. J. They called it the "Speak no Evil" Circle. Its membership has now grown to thirty, although at first there were but eight members. Miss Cleora Compton is President; Miss Leonice Weaver, Recording Secretary, and Miss Hannah Corson, Corresponding Secretary. The circle succeeded in raising $168 during its first year, by which it cleared its parsonage of debt. The proceeds of its work last year amounted to $126, with which various good objects were aided. This year also promises well.

THE Y. M. C. A. BUILDING OF THE ORANGES, N. J.

an earnest and practical discussion of the opportunities for aggressive work, and how they should be occupied. Rev. C. A. Reese of Minneapolis, presented a vigorous appeal for the Founding Fund. Dr. C. Perren, of Chicago, defended the principles of the Union and urged closer organization with hearty goodwill towards kindred associations. The Union, it was stated, would have fully a thousand members.

A PROGRESSIVE ASSOCIATION.

Few Young Men's Christian Associations have had so rapid a growth as the one a picture of whose home appears on this page. It is the Association of the Oranges, N. J. Its organization was effected shortly after a visit from Mr. D. L. Moody in 1885. The need of such an institution in the district was self-evident, and Mr. Moody's work had kindled the kind of enthusiasm which must have practical expression. Temporary accommodations were secured for the work, but from the outset the advantages of a building of its own were recognized and measures were taken to secure them. At a public meeting of the citizens plans were submitted and at that meeting promises to the amount of eight thousand dollars were given. A committee was appointed to canvass the neighborhood and in a short time the treasury contained $25,000. A site was secured and in two years from the organization of the institution, the Association took possession of its beautiful home. The building is more homelike than such edifices usually are. It is deavor. In summarizing the advantages of fraternal, if not organic relations, he says:

The interdenominational fellowship of the Christian Endeavor Society is spiritual and informal, and has come to pass without forcing. Young people's societies having a common name, common aims, and common methods, have been organized in thirty different denominations, to the number of 24,924 in the United States, 2,039 in Canada, 1,708 in Great Britain, Australia, and in all missionary lands.

The young people of these societies find it desirable and convenient to come together occasionally in local unions, and in State and International Conventions for inspiration and fellowship. These meetings are not delegated assemblies, but mass conventions. There is no presentation of credentials, no reception of fraternal delegates from other bodies. All Christian Endeavorers are requested to enroll themselves as such, just as in Union Sunday School Conventions representatives of Sunday Schools are requested to enroll themselves as such.

The denominational idea is not lost sight of. In the more recent conventions an afternoon has been devoted to denominational rallies—there is the Presbyterian rally, the Congregational rally, the Episcopal rally, the Baptist rally, and so on to the end of the list. There were a half dozen or more ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at the union rally of Endeavorers of the Methodist Episcopal, the Canada Methodist, and the Methodist Episcopal South, Churches in Washington Square Methodist Church in connection with the great New

"Venice, the Beautiful!"

The City of the Sea with its Treasures of Art and its many Palaces and Bridges—A Gloomy Side to a Glorious Picture.

VENICE, the glory of the middle age, the seat of the Doges, the city of dark tragedies and splendid palaces, of winding waterways and gondolas, is one of the few famous old-world cities upon which the passing centuries seem to make no special impress. It is a fragment of the Orient amid the surrounding influences of modern Europe, and still retains many of the features that recall the days, when as Queen of the Levant, it was the scene of almost imperial splendor and authority. Only a few days ago, the whole city was "en fete," the occasion being the meeting there of King Humbert of Italy and the German Emperor.

The visitor to Venice, for the first time, finds it a place of surpassing interest. A short distance from the railway depot, one enters a region where carriages and cars are unknown, where there is no roar of traffic in the streets as in other great cities, and where silent gondolas or smoothly-gliding steamers sweep up and down the broad canals, or through the waterways that largely occupy the place of streets. Even in the few streets that do exist in the ancient city, the noise of wheels or the clatter of horses' hoofs is a stranger.

Among the sights of the city, which is crowded with magnificent buildings, is the famous Cathedral of St. Mark—a wonderful structure, that at first oppresses the eye with its confusion of domes and minarets, arches and columns, rich mosaics and elaborate carvings. Beyond it, and towering still higher, is the Campanile, even greater, gloomier and grander, while nearby is the palace of the Doges, its exterior a marvel of architectural genius and its halls filled with relics of ancient magnificence. Close at hand is the famous "Bridge of Sighs," which is shown in the illustration on this page. This bridge which spanned one of the canals, led from the palace to the state prisons of the Doges—dungeons that are described as slimy and horrible, and in which hundreds of offenders against the state have ended their wretched lives.

Ancient Venice was originally an aristocratic republic, governed by magistrates called "maritime tribunes." In the seventh century, a duke or "doge" was chosen for the purpose of giving more power and unity to the popular representation. Soon, however, the entire power became centralized in the hands of the doges, and rebellion arose against their authority, doges being put to death, others exiled and still others punished in various ways. In the next two and a half centuries there was a succession of eighteen doges, fifteen of whom were chosen from three leading families, indicating that the ruling power was tending to become hereditary.

During the time of the great Crusades, Venice played an active part, as it furnished transportation to the East for the vast armies that went to fight the battles of the Cross. The most brilliant period in Venetian history was the twelfth century, when it became a powerful and wealthy state whose alliance was much sought by emperors and popes. Then began a career in which art, the various industries, commerce and literature flourished as they had never before done in any part of Europe. The magnificent system of canals was developed and perfected, palaces were reared on every available site, and graceful bridges arose, like enchanted structures, to link the whole city together. The church of St. Mark—from being a comparatively small edifice, was enlarged and beautified. According to the early chronicles, the body of the evangelist had been removed from Alexandria to Venice in the ninth century, and he was ever after recognized as its patron saint. The bones of St. Mark are now said to lie within the high altar of the church.

To describe or even to enumerate the rare works of art in this great cathedral would fill pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

"THE BRIDGE OF SIGH," AT VENICE.

Mosaic pictures, portraying passages in the lives of the Saviour, Saint John the Baptist, and the various disciples, priceless enamels of like character, marvelous statues of angels and prophets, and rich workmanship in silver and gold, with an incomparable collection of chalices and other costly articles, precious stones and jewels of every description, are among the possessions of this historic temple of worship. Even the ducal palaces, with their vast wealth of paintings and statuary, are not to be compared with St. Marks in point of interest. All the churches (there are about seventy), and almost all the great buildings of Venice, however, are rich in art. Except the Italian capital itself, no city in the world has had a more enduring influence upon art and literature, than "the Queen of the Adriatic."

A True Compliment to Mother.

A compliment is most appreciated when it comes with the flavor of true sincerity evident upon it. What could be more gratifying in this respect, says a writer in "The Ram's Horn," than the appreciation implied in the eager exclamation of a little lad who after studying the lesson on "the excellent woman," in Prov. 31, ran home to his mother and breathlessly cried, "Mamma, we've been studying about you in the Sunday school to-day!" The mother who could evoke such a tribute from her own child is a mother indeed.

A Girl's Outlook at Thirteen.

A girl of thirteen cannot decide, writes Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, with any discretion or any assurance, whether she will be a sculptor or a washerwoman, a farmer or a poet; but she can decide distinctly whether it is her wish or her duty, after leaving public reader some coming day. And the very sawdust of the French or Latin grammar becomes ashes of roses to the stout little fancy that dreams of brave work and big salary in some foreign department at Washington, or tutoring girls or boys for college. All over the terrible ocean, among the lawless sailors, the men with wives and children to work for are those who lead the gentlest and cleanest lives. So, on the great ocean of school life, the girls with aims to study for are those whose labor is the richest and ripest.

CHILDISH BUGABOOS.

If a mother tell a child he is not good, some bugaboo will come and catch him, the fear excited may make the child a coward, and the fact that he finds that there is no bugaboo may make him a liar, and the echo of that false alarm may be heard after fifteen generations have been born and have expired. If a mother promise a child a reward for good behavior and after the good behavior forget to give the reward, the cheat may crop out in some faithlessness half a thousand years further on. If a mother culture a child's vanity and eulogize his curls and extol the night-black or sky-blue or nut-brown of the child's eyes, and call out in his presence the admiration of spectators, pride and arrogance may be prolonged after half a dozen family records have been obliterated. If a mother express doubt about some statement of the Holy Bible in a child's presence, long after the gates of this historical era have closed, and the gates of another era have opened, the result may be seen in a champion blasphemer. On the other hand, if a mother, walking with a child, see a suffering one by the wayside and say: "My child, give that ten-cent piece to that lame boy," the result may be seen on the other side of the following century in some George Muller building a whole village of orphanages. If a mother sit almost every evening by the trundle-bed of a child and teach it lessons of a Saviour's example, of the importance of truth and the horror of a lie, and the virtues of industry and kindness and sympathy and self-sacrifice, though the tombstones shall have been washed out by the storms of innumerable winters, there may be standing, as a result of those trundle-bed lessons, flaming evangelists, world-moving reformers, circulating Summerfields, weeping Paysons, thundering Whitefields, and emancipating Washingtons.

Child-training.

In view of the possibilities of a single life, writes Rev. J. T. Gibson in the "Presbyterian Messenger," we cannot but be deeply impressed with the responsibility of training one little child. Multiply that responsibility by twenty millions, and you have an estimate of the responsibility of those who are to train the youth now in the homes and schools of this country. Whether these youth will be a blessing to themselves and to the world depends, to a great extent, upon their training. The wise man said "train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

This, however, is not so much a command to any one in particular, as it is a two-fold philosophical statement. First, that children should be trained, and, second, that if they are trained in the right way, they will not forsake that way after they have grown old—that youthful training will be their security in old age.

CHAPTER XIV. Continued.

"It is the habit of the Laniers to turn gray early in life," said Mrs. Paull in cheerful evasion. "Since this is so, I should be thankful that it is becoming. I don't want to be frightful in my children's eyes."

"That could never be, had you small-pox complicated by leprosy. I wonder sometime if you are as happy as you look."

"Happier—often. The heart knows its deepest bliss no less than its own bitterness. God has been—he is so loving-kind to me that I have no excuse for gloomy thoughts. Every day is crowned with goodness, and he never lets me doubt that all my steps are ordered by him. How could I be discontented?"

The boy lay looking into the heart of the fire-built of pine cones, of which a great basketful stood at the corner of the hearth. The night was rainy, the clouds rushing down the valley before a strong northeast wind. The ceaseless moan of the pines was blent with the surf-like roar of the grove of oaks and hickories behind the house. Mother and son had the room, dusky-red with fire-light, to themselves.

Lanier's "coaching" engagement had been renewed during each of the vacations that had passed since his first visit to Keene. He had nevertheless, contrived to visit his mother in the September of both years, besides spending two Christmases at Pinehurst. He had arrived this afternoon upon a three days' furlough, and her soul basked in his presence with grateful delight.

As her first-born grew in knowledge of books and of men, the tie knitting the heart of the man she had gotten from the Lord to the heart of the mother strengthened and shortened. He was very like her in feature and manner—a resemblance peculiarly striking to-night in the ruddy half-light that colored both faces alike.

"He is lover, friend and son all in one," she had said to Mrs. Barnes in one of the impetuous bursts of confidence that were rarer with her now than of yore. "Pulse of my pulses, core of my heart!"

In the close folding of his left hand in hers, now, the yearning fondness of the regards bent upon the lineaments she thought so handsome, the ring and thrill of her voice as she addressed him, one read all this and more. Sometimes, while she talked of him or listened to others' praise of her eldest son, she blushed like a girl at mention of her lover's name, and laughed at her own sweet folly. Maternal love of this peculiar quality and power is seldom seen in wives whose hearts rest in full satisfaction in their husband's affection. God gives in this life no richer compensation for disappointment in the dearest hope of a woman's heart than is to be found in the chivalric fondness of her sons.

"You do not weary of your Royal Road, then?" resumed Lanier at length, smiling thoughtfully.

"Who does, who has found it?"

"It has been the path of peace to you, evidently, mother dear. I suspect, nevertheless, that few are willing to walk in it until more attractive avenues are closed. Without hope and ambition, youth would have no dreams—and what is youth without dreams?"

"Hope! ambition! do you mean that we leave them behind us when we set our feet upon the King's Highway? My darling! then begins the only hope worthy of the name—sure and blessed—an anchor that never drags."

"For I am persuaded," says Paul, "that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." And—"Shall He not also with Him freely give us all things." And again—"All things work together for good to them that love God, who are the called according to his purpose." The beloved disciple, whose head rested upon the Master's heart while he said his parting words to his disciples, asserts as one who knows whereof he speaks:

"And this is the boldness which we have towards him, that if we ask anything according to his will he heareth us." Can hope be grounded upon a firmer rock?

"Abstractedly considered—no! All of us who hope that we are Christians, yield intellectual assent to these things. The trouble is that the promises seem vague, and fulfillment afar off when the question is of a note to be met next week, or bread to be bought to-morrow when there is no money in hand with which to buy it. Steadfast souls—women's souls—can fix their thoughts and concentrate their energies upon to-day's tasks and interests, but what of a man's duty to provide for those of his own household?"

"Provision for to-morrow may be—it often is, a part of to-day's duty."

"Aha!"

"You interrupted me! I said 'provision'—not anxiety. Not to make intelligent provision for what experience and common sense tell us must be met, is fatuous and childish."

"Tom and Edwin had their little gardens laid out last spring, side by side, and I gave each the same quantity and kind of seeds. Tom got all his in on Monday, and on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, scratched open the rows to see if they were sprouting and likely to come up. Edwin let his alone. It is useless to say which has the better show of vegetables by this time. I try to keep one test continually before the eyes of my heart:—And having done all, to stand." Some err in stopping short of doing with their might whatsoever their hands find to do, not working while the day lasts. The hard task for me is to 'stand' when I see nothing else that my hands can do just now. As to next week's note, make the best arrangements to meet it that your judgment and ingenuity can devise; then, stand still, and see what great things God will work. So with to-morrow's bread. Look narrowly at the work laid to your hand for to-day to see if this may not include getting together cents enough to buy a loaf for to-morrow's breakfast. Perhaps—God knows whether or not this is to be—and what good end is to be gained by it—you are to suffer protest and loss of credit, and to go hungry. If so, you can rest submissively in the belief—which is the substance of things hoped for—that the day's strength will come with the day's trial. O, my boy! this is not a rainbow theory with me, but a tower, tried and found steadfast, into which I have run and been safe."

Lanier pressed first one, then the other, of her hands to his lips.

"Precious mother!" he murmured in strong emotion. "The sight of your practice goes leagues upon leagues further to convert me than your texts and your sermon. Where is there another woman who would make such a bright, beneficent life out of such poor material?"

"Poor material! Don't say that!" a hasty terror in her tone. "Not while I have my children—and work to do for God and man. Dear! have you noticed that blasted oak on the hillside up there—just where a gap in the woods gives you the first glimpse of Pinehurst, and the lake and the mountains? Your uncle spoke of cutting it down, but I would not let him do it. It is an object-lesson to me, a symbol, a likeness of myself."

"My pretty, graceful mother! that I will not listen to!"

"Hush!" laughingly pulling her face away from the hand he would have laid upon her mouth. "It was struck by lightning eight or ten years ago—that tree, which is not so old as one might think—and the bark stripped from one side. At least half of the trunk is bare. All the same, it bears leaves and acorns, and carries aloft a branchy crown all summer long, and you ought to have seen its foliage last fall. Rich, purplish crimson, that, as the snows and cold rains came, gathered, as it were, gray ashes upon the upper surface of the leaves, before they changed to a comfortable sober brown they held all winter long, and until the young buds pushed them off in April. The edges of the torn bark have healed healthily, making a long lip against the flayed trunk; all the sap necessary for the life of the tree is carried up through that strip. I have stood by that tree with my hand laid upon the bark, until I could be sure that I felt it throb, sympathetically."

Her voice had fallen, as she went on, the words were uttered more and more slowly until she ceased. Lanier drew himself to her side, wound his arm about her and laid his head against her shoulder. Verbal response was impossible and needless.

"I told you that I saw Marie this morning," was his next remark.

"Yes, and that she is looking well."

"Well, and handsome. She will be a splendid woman soon. She says she is quite happy with her teaching and her organ. How did she get the situation? There would be a lively competition for the vacant place in a church like St. Gudule's."

"Your uncle has friends in the vestry—and exerted his influence. This Marie must not suspect. Much as she desired the place, she would throw it up to-morrow if she guessed to whom she owes it."

"How absurd and how shamefully ungrateful! I must talk her out of that nonsense some day."

"Better leave the subject alone. The misguided child believes honestly that she does right to be angry with my brother. I imagine that one motive of her perseverance in trying to get the position of music teacher at Mrs. Marcy's and that of organist in St. Gudule's, was the desire to free herself from obligations to him."

"Which she can never do."

"She thinks that she can. We must leave her to nurse her fancied grievance until her eyes are opened by the logic of events, or until God touches her heart to gentler judgment of her best friends."

"Does she support herself entirely?"

"She has steadily refused to accept anything from me for a year. I have no idea what Mrs. Marcy pays her. Her salary at St. Gudule's is seven hundred dollars, but I should not have known that had not your uncle told me. She grows more reserved as time goes on."

The brother set his lower jaw sternly.

"Does she visit you often?"

"I contrive to see her at least once in ten days, but her duties prevent her from coming often to us. Of course she can no longer pass her Sundays at home. I am afraid—" she went on reluctantly—"that she is inclined to be severe with herself in the matter of personal expense. Mrs. Marcy told me the last time I called there, while I was waiting for Marie to finish a lesson, that 'Miss Paull had too little recreation. Except for the long walk which she takes every day unless in very stormy weather, she leaves the house but once during the week, and that is on Friday evening to attend choir-rehearsal. She declines all invitations to friends' houses and to places of amusement, such as most young people enjoy.' I mentioned this to Marie when she came in, and Mrs. Marcy left us. She answered that she now belonged to the working classes, and had no time to squander upon pleasure-taking. She dresses very plainly—almost shabbily. I do not think she has bought a new gown or even hat since she began to take care of her own finances."

"Marie miserly!" amused and incredulous. "She used to be an incorrigible spendthrift. Mother!" as if struck by a startling thought. "But no! that could hardly be!"

"That she is pinching herself in order to send money out of the country?" Mrs. Paull spoke out the suspicion he had repressed. "She would do it were there occasion—or if she imagined there were. I am sure that she has no foreign correspondent, or I should have discovered it during the two months she spent here this summer. She would hardly conceal the circumstance from me, I think, even had not the mail enlightened me. Indeed, had she opened communication with her father, I believe that her high sense of honor and of what loyalty to him demanded would have driven her to me with the intelligence. She is fearless in her very wilfulness. Poor child! she sees everything now through a distorted medium. Ah, well! In God's good time all will be right."

Another interval of silence followed. Such are unmistakable indices of perfect communion of spirit. Common friendship demands the reassurance, at decorous distances, of mutual regard and thoughtfulness.

Lanier leaned forward to pile more logs upon the sinking coals, putting them on, one at a time, apparently interested in the consumption of each.

"Mother," without withdrawing his eyes from this operation, "may I ask you one question?"

"As many as you like, my son," steadily and cheerfully.

"You told me awhile ago that, besides paying the interest to Uncle Roger, you had deposited in the savings bank last year and this, six hundred dollars. At that rate you will have paid off the whole debt in eight years more. Should—he who laid the debt upon you, return to America, then—have you ever thought what would be your duty, or your inclination?"

He could not see the sickly pallor the fire-glow did not veil, or the sharp quiver that shook the light from her eyes. He divined, through the nameless sympathy welding heart to heart, that a short, fierce battle against powerful odds kept her silent for the instant that elapsed before her hand rested upon his head.

"My darling! for months the thought never left me, sleeping or waking. When I began to learn how to take God at his word and not to meddle with a future which is all his, and none of it mine, I asked him, as I suppose Paul besought him to take away the thorn in his flesh—to remove from me the dread and the doubt and the vain planning, to show me how to leave the wanderer and all pertaining to him in his safe, wise, loving hands. He answered my prayer—not as he answered Paul, for Paul was stronger than I, and could bear more—but by setting my thoughts free from that one torturing subject that I might study and obey his will in and for me in the Present. Should the hour ever come for decision and action, his grace will be sufficient for me, his wisdom will not be withheld. Until then—let the dead Past bury its dead."

While mother and son talked together that stormy September night, the choir of St. Gudule's rehearsed the music selected for the approaching Sabbath. The new organist had been inducted into office but two months before. Her youth and sex had told against her in the judgment of musical critics in the congregation, and with at least two of the quartette choir. The correctness and brilliancy of her technique; the taste and spirit with which she interpreted the most difficult passage submitted to her, broke down the prejudice of the listeners below-stairs; the almost austere gravity of her demeanor, the respect with which she hearkened to suggestions, and her willingness to obey them, silenced her coadjutors. She was, apparently, bent upon, as the basso put it, "cold business," comprehending why she was there and with no eye or ear for anything but duty.

She wore to-night a black merino gown as simply-fashioned as a nun's, and a close black felt hat, one blue velvet bow, nestling in the puffs of golden hair, the only touch of color in her costume. Her face, unsmiling and intent as her eyes followed the score, might have belonged to a woman twice her years for any sign it gave of triviality; there was not a tinge of coquetry in her reception of the greetings of her companions at her entrance, or of the encomiums passed upon her execution when the rehearsal was over.

"Thank you!" to one, and "You are very kind!" to another, were spoken without a rise of color and with the least possible smile consistent with the fine freedom that marked every motion and syllable.

The tenor, who was, after the usual custom of tenors, young and thin, with fair hair and a sweeping mustache, did not venture upon an improvement of his very slight acquaintanceship with her, but got himself into his ulster and waited for the soprano to pull on her rubber sandals before offering to see her home. She was not very young, not at all pretty, but she was accessible, and that went for much with a man who was bashful when not entrenched behind a sheet of music. The basso, being thicker-skinned and a married man of forty, took courage to approach the organist as she buttoned her gloves preparatory to assuming waterproof and umbrella.

(To be Continued.)

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD FOOD FUND.

Additional Contributions for the Relief of the Destitute in New York City.

Gold, Eliza	500	Mannas, Miss Helen O.	100	D L Venice, O.	100
lyn, Mrs Mary E.	100	Martice, C V	100	Mrs B B R. So Lake Weir, Fla	500
ey, Mrs S A	100	McBill, Daniel	100	E J B. Delaware, O	100
len, S M	100	McKenzie, Mrs P	100	J W V. Jersey City, N J	200
lams, L B	100	March, Mrs Luzzetta A	500	M J R. Remson, Ill	100
ger, Fred H	100	McKay, J A	100	A A A. Wrightsboro, Tex	200
kinson, Mr and Mrs F	100	Manton, Mrs M E	200	S E B. N Y	100
Montan, Fionore family	100	Mobler, Dan'l	100	N L Jackson, Mich	500
lover of God's poor, Boyle	100	M E S S, Oceanport, N J	633	W H R. Redlands, Cal	500
San	100	Moravia S S, Ephraim, Wis	675	C Ohio	100
few of the Christian brethren	2100	Mt Carmel S S, Emmorton, Md	100	J L Webster, N Y	100
of New Durham, Ont	2100	Mary R. St Louis, Mo	100	A Young People's Society	200
lover of the Lord, Mont	100	Margaret E. Binghamton, N Y	100	Monticello, Minn	200
licher, Mr and Mrs T L	100	Mother and daughter, Morris, N J	500	Mrs M. Petoskey, Mich	100
rgert, M D H John	100	Mother and son, Waldo	500	A A B. Smithfield, Conn	100
odmer, Wm	100	"Manatee River Journal,"	500	A Dallas Centre, Ia	100
unningham, Wm	100	Braidentown, Fla	500	M S. Bloomingdale, Ga	100
unning, Mrs J W	100	Newell, Mrs C A	250	E S. Summerfield, O	100
award, Mrs R L	100	Ollie, Jacob F	100	L G Dayton, Fla	100
le, and children	500	One whom Jesus loves.	100	"X" Mt Pleasant, Tex	100
rtis, P P	200	Our family	100	J F. Gettysburg, Pa	100
umpacker, J P	100	Browns Valley, Minn	200	W A S. Ln Verne, Minn	200
lected by Mrs D Gridley	425	Osborn, F	200	I R. Backmoutown, N Y	100
lected by C E S. Newport	100	Olmead, Mrs A E	100	R. Pittsford, Mich	100
Utr, Vt	150	Our boys, Fredonia, Ia	100	M. V. Lathersville, R I	100
ristian W Kers, Bartlett, N H	940	Porter, Mrs Joseph	100	"R." Denver, Col	100
ris, Wm S	500	Phelps, S A	200	M R. Ingleside, Pa	200
ckman, Mrs. Phila	200	Parker, F J	100	A A H. Hawley, Mass	100
unlap Mission S S, Shreve-	100	Polk, B H	100	G H. Mansfield, Ill	100
port, La	150	Pierce, Mrs L A	100	Mrs E J. Lydonville, N Y	100
rans, Wm W	100	Parke, Marion	100	Gloversville, N Y	100
rans, Mrs	100	Pease, Mr and Mrs C W	100	San Jose, Cal	100
ver, A D W	100	Price, C A	100	New Bern, Tenn	100
llis, Richard	125	Phelps, A D	100	Albany, N Y	100
llows, J B	100	Perrin, Mrs John	100	Marquette, Wis	300
ndlay, Mr and Mrs Wm	500	Porter, Wm O	100	Almond, N Y	200
ash, Geo	100	Pollock, Mrs Edgar	100	Langford, S D	100
ney, Mr and Mrs Geo	100	Palmer, Mrs N B	100	Quincy, Mich	100
erguson, Eleanor Y	500	Patterson, Rev A	100	Lathersville, R I	100
ey, Mrs G W	500	Patron, Union	100	Morrison, N J	1500
ey, Mrs Fred L	100	Pasell, F H	300	Charlotte, N C	100
ick, lone	100	Price, John R	100	Steilcoom City, Wash	100
rst Union S S, Silver Creek	350	Pangburn, C	100	Blossburg, Pa	300
Neb	500	Reid, W E	500	Granite Hills, Lebanon,	200
rom Jack's sake, Newark, N J	100	Rnble, John, Violet, Edna &	150	Mecca, Ohio	100
rom one who pities the poor	250	Aunt Minnie	300	Minnieville Po, W Va	300
Ella G. Decorah, Iowa	250	Roberson family	200	Knox, N Y	100
riend, Montana	100	Rutherford, J L	200	Jacksonville, Vt	200
" Frederickton, Can	100	Reader, Atlantic Highlands,	200	Newbern, Va	100
"	100	N J	100	Decorah, Ill	500
" Manusville, N Y	500	Reader, Reading, Mass	300	Skaloosa, Ia	100
" Columbus, S C	120	Readers, Narrows, Fla	100	N B. Can	500
" Lake Grove, N Y	250	Salisbury, Mrs Mary	100	Elkview, Pa	100
" Atkinson, Ill	250	Smith, W and wife	100	Victoria, Mex	100
" W Va	200	Summerville, E	100	Mineral Point, Wis	200
" Somerworth, N H	100	Sherman, Mrs Phebe	100	B B B Medicine Co. Con-	1000
" Tiffin, O	100	Schermert, T	100	nersville, Ind	100
" Brownsdale, Ore	500	Sloan, Miss E B	100	U Mission Band of Cheerful	450
" Berlin, N H	500	Stowe, Warren	100	Workers, Peoria, Wyo	250
" Oregon, Wis	100	Snyder, M W	100	The Pine Bluff Union S S	150
" Daws, Mich	500	Snbr, Woodstock, Va	100	Muscatine, Ia	250
" Connell Bluffs, Ia	100	Snbr, Ancram Lead Mines	300	No 1 Bartlett Building, Ean	150
" Birmingham, Mich	100	Snbr, Kenesaw, Neb	100	Claire, Wis	100
" Lake Linden	100	Sympathizing friends, Mill	156	A Working woman, Calumet,	100
" Batesville, O	100	Spring, Ky	500	U T. Viogna, Wis	150
" Bristol, Vt	100	Small band of C E. Ustick, Ill	100	Alexander, Mrs J H 50c; Adick,	200
" Windsor, N S	100	Shattuck, Mrs S	100	O B 50c; Andrews, Mrs S B 25c; Al-	200
" Clover, N C	100	Shenton, Celia	100	ton, Anne 15c; Abor, Mrs Helen,	100
" Lancaster, Ont	200	Shipman, M L	100	25c; Alston, Robt, 25c;	100
" Albert Lea, Minn	100	Shaw, D W	100	Baldwin, Emeline 50c; Belsher,	100
" of the poor, Trow-	500	Shallies, Mr and Mrs H E	100	Root 25c; Boyd, E A 10c; Barber,	100
bridge, Ont	100	Smith, Virginia, and 17 friends	200	M Estella, 25c; Bartlett, Mamie 50c;	100
" of the poor, Williams-	100	Smith, Mrs. Frank O	100	Bartlett, A E 50c; Burbee, Mrs E	250
burg, Tex	100	Stockman, Luana	100	25c; Brownell, Mrs Chas 50c; Boyd,	100
" of the poor, Harleys-	100	Shinker, A	100	Little Reginald 10c; Bellew, I, 25c;	100
vile, Pa	100	Singleton, W J	100	Blake, Grace L 30c; Ball, Mrs Mary,	500
riend, Aztalan, Wis	100	Sinleton, Geo W	100	50c; Ballew, Wm, 25c;	100
" Cedarville, Ill	100	Snabr, Mila, Va	100	Crabberg, C 25c; Christian broth-	100
" Pomona, Cal	100	Snabr, Hopkins, Mo	100	er, Warrenton, Mo 55c; Child of a	100
" Hndson, Mass	200	Snabr, Wiscoy, N Y	100	King, So Whitley, Ind, 50c; Casey,	100
" Harley, S D	100	Snabr & reader, E N Lebanon,	100	Sallie 10c; Currier, 25c; Chittenden,	100
" Montrose, Mass	100	Conn	100	Mary A 50c; Canyis, Thomas 25c;	100
" Friends of the cause, Phila	500	Spruithz, engr, Athol, Mass	100	"Calloway, Ann E 25c; Cummings,	100
" N Stenwen, N Y	500	S S of Glendale, near Minne-	450	Mrs N 40c; Contributor, Opekika,	100
" NS	500	S S & C E, Lamanda Park, Cal	323	Ala 50c	100
" Gilsom, N H	600	"Scatter Good League," Syra-	100	Donglas, Kate 10c; Day, Wm 50c;	100
" Amhurst, Mass	500	cuse, N Y	100	Durand, Mrs Sam'l C 50c; Day, Miss	200
" Hopkinton, N H	600	Townsend, Sarah A	100	Anna, 50c; Dillon, Mrs J C 50c;	100
" Friends, Mabel, Minn	200	Thompson, Eva J	100	Eska, Jack 25c; Emmons, Sarah	100
" Firtford, N Y	200	Two friends, Mentor, O	200	10c; Emmons, Mr J E 50c; Enos,	100
" Waukan, Wis	100	Two sisters, Willett, Pa	300	Candia, N H 5c; Emma and Carac,	100
" Granville, Ia	300	Two sisters, Wycoff, N J	300	10c; Easton, A N Easter offer-	100
" nersey, Amelia	300	Two readers, Medina, N Y	100	ing, Portville, Ia, 45c;	100
" avette, Alice and Anna	100	Taser, S S	100	Foulds, A M 25c; Fellows, Mellis-	100
regory, F H and wife	200	Thomas, Allen	100	sa 5c; Foster, Susie 25c; Farnsworth	100
ould, Mrs J C	100	Thompson, W J	100	Friend, L 50c; Friend, A W, N Y 30c;	100
rove, Mrs R B	100	Tonger, A	100	Friend, Anbnrn, Me 55c; Friend, N	100
ammond, Margaret	100	Tener, Mrs Ella F	100	Y C 25c; Friend, Winthrop, Me 25c;	100
umm, M L	100	Taylor, Jacob	300	Friend, Lizzie, Wm Plains, N C	100
bbard, M Y	100	Two friends, Wellsville, O	300	From three loving little helpers	100
erman, Rev J E	300	Three ladies, Brookfield, N Y	250	Hackensack, N J 50c; For Jesus'	100
erry, Mrs L	100	Ulrich, Mary	100	sake, Ventura, Cal 25c; Friend,	100
ughes, Dr A	100	Urbiquart, Mrs L C	100	Middletown, N Y, 25c; Friend, Or-	100
arrington, M A	200	Upham, G	100	lindo, Mo, 25c; Friend, Springfield,	100
" His Name, Crainville, Kan	200	White, Mary A	500	Mass, 25c; Friends, Hillsboro, Ia 50c;	100
" Beaver Falls, Minn	100	Widow's mite, Saxonburg, Pa	100	Friend, Lizzie, Wm Plains, N C	100
" Columbia, Tenn	300	Wood, I N	100	Field, Ind 35c; Friend, Auburn, Me	100
" Mebrose, Miss	100	Waxler, Fania E	100	50c; Friend, Nebr 50c;	100
" Jesus' Name, Dego, Ind	100	Wilkins, Mr and Mrs S B	100	Grundy, Miss F 50c; Garrett, Vin-	100
" N Sympathy, Seymour, Ia	100	White, Mary A	100	nie and Alice 25c; Greenly, Marian	100
" ones, E F	200	Whitson, Mrs Geo	100	50c; Garside, Little Martha 10c;	100
" enkins, L A	200	Williams, Mrs A S	300	Gillilan, Mrs S M 30c; Guard, En-	100
" S C E, Cullison, Kan	100	Willbran, J P	100	nice L 10c; Gingerich, Orville 5c;	100
" ass, Wm	100	Wycoff, I	100	Gingerich, Jesse 10c; Gingerich,	100
" ally, Mrs G M	100	Winter, Julia M	100	Alvin 10c; Geer, Mrs A, 25c; Gut-	100
" inney, Elsie and Harold	100	Williams, Robert S	100	rie, John 50c; Geyer, Nathaniel 50c;	100
" ews, Evans D	100	Wolfe, Olive	100	Grammar School, Shelburne Falls,	100
" ews, Evans D	100	White, Mrs C F	100	Mass 25c	100
" ews, Evans D	100	Wheeler, Mrs Lydia E	100	Houston, M, 25c; Hughes, Dollie,	100
" ews, Evans D	100	Woolsey, Mrs Harriett	100	10c; Hicks, Chas, 3c; Hanson, S J,	100
" ews, Evans D	100	Young Mrs Peter	100	30c; Hays, J W, Plains, N C	100
" ews, Evans D	100	Young Ladies' Mission Band,	500	J H, 50c; Harris, A J, 50c; Hilliard,	100
" ews, Evans D	100	Orange City, Ia	500	A D, 50c; Harkness, Mrs E D, 25c;	100
" ews, Evans D	100	N M C, Granville, N Y	100	Harkness, Mrs S D, 25c; Hohn,	100
" ews, Evans D	100	Mrs B. Ocala, Fla	100	Gladstone, 25c; Herrmann, Lizzie,	100
" ews, Evans D	100	Mr and Mrs W M, Clay Cen-	100	25c; Herrick, M L 30c; Hale, Am-	100
" ews, Evans D	100	ter, Kan	100	brose 15c; Howard, Mrs, 25c;	100
" ews, Evans D	100	X, Kenneth Square, Pa	100	P Name Forked, River, 25c;	100
" ews, Evans D	100	W E S, Chittenango, N Y	100	1 H N, Naponee, Ont, 50c; I H N,	100
" ews, Evans D	100	J M J, Wapnaca, Wis	100	Mass, 25c; In His Name, Grand Val-	100
" ews, Evans D	100	C M J and family, Cross Creek,	100	ley, Pa 25c; I H N, Springtown, Tex	100
" ews, Evans D	100	W X W, Phila, Pa	500	25c	100
" ews, Evans D	100	H F A, Strasburg, Pa	500	Janse, Mrs John, 25c; Jessup, M	100
" ews, Evans D	100	Mrs H A D, Dehi, Ia	500	S, 25c; Jacob, Douglas, Alas, 10c;	100
" ews, Evans D	100	I S H, Marsfield, O	500	John, Mrs J W, Plains, N C	100
" ews, Evans D	100	Mrs M O, Brooklyn, N Y	500	Johnson, Donald P 25c; Jones, E, 50c;	100
" ews, Evans D	100	M M Conn	100	Kern, Mrs D A, 50c; Kake, Jennie,	100
" ews, Evans D	100	E A S	250	10c; Kessler, Helen, 25c; Klett, Lit-	100
" ews, Evans D	100	E and L Hastings, Neb	100		100
" ews, Evans D	100	M W, Downing, Wis	100		100
" ews, Evans D	100	Mrs F B, So Manchester, Conn	100		100

Good Cooking
one of the chief blessings of every home. To always insure good custards, puddings, sauces, etc., use Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. Directly on the label. Take no substitute for the Eagle Brand.

For Dyspepsia and Exhaustion
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
Dr. E. CORNELL ESTEN, Philadelphia, Pa., says:
"I have met with the greatest and most satisfactory results in dyspepsia and general derangement of the cerebral and nervous systems, causing debility and exhaustion."

Scrofula

The Worst Case the Doctors Ever Saw

Hood's Sarsaparilla Perfectly Cured
"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:
"Dear Sirs:—I wish to testify to the great value of Hood's Sarsaparilla. For some time I had been troubled with scrofula, which early last winter assumed a very bad form.

Sores Appeared on My Face and hands and gradually increased in number until they reached to my shoulder. The doctors said it was the worst case of scrofula they ever saw and also went so far as to say it was incurable. I tried ointments and other remedies but to no avail. A

Hood's Cures
friend recommended Hood's Sarsaparilla, and although I was completely discouraged, as a last chance I resolved to give it a trial. After taking one bottle I noticed the sores had commenced to heal.
After the sixth bottle

They Were All Healed.
I continued to take it, however, until I had used nine bottles, and now I am perfectly well." Miss KATIE ROSENGRANT, Ulster, Penn.

Hood's Pills are prompt and efficient, yet easy in action. Sold by all druggists. 25c.

EVERY MOTHER

Should Have It in The House.
Dropped on Sugar, Children Love to take JOHNSON'S ASODYNE LINTMENT for Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cramps and Pains. Relieves all Summer Complaints, Cuts and Bruises like magic. Sold everywhere. Price 35c. by mail; 6 bottles Express paid, $2. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

WALL PAPER

No local dealer can compete with us in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.
Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples.
Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.
We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.
ALFRED PEATS,
50-32 W. 13th St., NEW YORK. 156-158 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

The California Grape Cure.

Delicious as a Bunch of Ripe Grapes.
Sanitas Grape Food is Unfermented, Concentrated and Absolutely Pure.
Nervous people will find it soothing and strengthening.
Sufferers from impaired digestion find its use grateful and nourishing.
Mothers with weak and sickly children find it invaluable both for themselves and their offspring.
A most delightful and refreshing beverage, and positively non-alcoholic, fitted for the table or sacrament.
IT IS NOT COSTLY.
The contents of a pint bottle when properly diluted for use, are equal to one-half gallon of the food, and will cost but 75c.
at your druggist's or grocer's.
Send your address to any of our agencies and receive, post-paid, a booklet telling all about Grape Food.
New York Selling Agent, NORMAN
BARBOUR, 77 Warren Street.
The California Grape Food Co.,
Los Gatos, California.
General Eastern
Agency, 145 Broadway, New York.
General Pacific
Agency, 408 Sutter street, San Francisco.

FREE CURE.

Kidney

Liver & Urinary Diseases.

Many Old Farms
Worn-Out require so much fertilizing that farms and gardens
won't produce a profit.
The rich, loamy soil of Michigan Farms produces a fine crop without this expense. The near markets, general healthfulness of climate and freedom from cyclones, hizzards, together with good society, churches, etc., make Michigan Farms the best in the world.
Write to me and I will tell you how to get the best farms on long time; low rate of interest.

"Brevity is the Soul of Wit."
Good Wife, You Need

QUALITY, WORKMANSHIP, And SHAPES UNEQUALED.

Ferris' Good Sense

Corset Waist.
MODERN Ideas of HEALTHFUL Dress are
PERFECTED in this Waist.
Worn by over a million Mothers, Misses and Children.
Buttons at front instead of clasps. Clasp Buckle at hip for hose supporters. Tape fastened buttons—won't pull off. Cord edge button holes—won't wear out. All sizes; all shapes. Full or slim bust; long or short waist.
MARSHALL FIELD & CO., Chicago,
Western Wholesale Depot.
FOR SALE BY ALL LEADING RETAILERS.
Send for illustrated circular to FERRIS BROS. Manufacturers and Patentees, Principal Office—341 Broadway, NEW YORK.
Branch Office—537 Market St., San Francisco.

Every reason why it should
FIT
For Dr. Warner's
Coraline
Corsets
are made in 25 styles—modelled to fit every variety
of form.
Wear the one that fits
YOU

WE WILL SELL YOU
THE BEST
Car, Horse, Furniture, Spring Wagon,
Surrey, or Saddle! the world at lowest wholesale prices. Shipped anywhere to anyone with privilege to examine without paying one cent in advance. Two years written warranty. Send for our new illustrated catalogue. Its free with testimonials and references. Write to-day and save money.
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 125 W. Van Buren St., Bx 33, Chicago, Ill.

RUPTURE CURED

WITH our Improved Elastic Truss. Worn with ease night and day. Retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain. Examination free.
Ladies in attendance for ladies. Send for pamphlet.
IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.,
822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 13th St., New York

PILES CURED

Our Book on Piles—Free
Bacon Medicine Co.,
Richmond, Va., U.S.A.
FREE
COUNTY FOUNTAIN PEN

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this Hard Rubber Fountain Pen. Warranted a perfect writer & immense H. B. Bargain Catalogue for 10c. to cover postage.
ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

GRAY HAIR RESTORED to youthful color by Dr.

Hays' Hair Restorer. Removed dandruff. Don't wash your hair with soap. Use Hays' Hair Restorer. Sold by for Hair Book and box HAYS' KIDNEY PILLS, Best Cure Cure, both FREE

SAPOLIO

CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.*

Religion a Sacrifice.

RELIGION is not not something besides life, not a withdrawal of life from fellowships, but the pouring out of life as a sacrifice to God in the service of man. There is no falser conception of religion than that which speaks of the works of the world as hindrances to spiritual growth: as vocations secular and profane. The drudgery of the world is worship; it is communion of the creature with God. I am excited to more reverence when I stand in the factory than before the cathedral. I have more sense of the presence of God in the midst of the work of the world, being done by the hands and minds of men, than I have in those institutions which stand wholly for the development of religious culture. The mill, the mine, the palace of bargain and exchange, are methods and sacraments of life with God; they are ways in which men may manifest themselves as sons of God; they are sanctuaries of the divinely human fellowship where God and men may work together in the making of the kingdom.

The immediate mission of Christianity is the interpretation of all life and work in the light of the kingdom of God. It cannot too swiftly tear away the last vestige of everything that is simply ecclesiastical: overcome every division and opinion, every pride of tradition and polity, that breaks up the unity of life; rend asunder all veils that hide the presence of God in the midst of the people and their work. The lesson taught Elijah is still to be learned: not seclusion, but the obedience of life to service, is the temple wherein God's voice may be clearest heard. The fact that the novel is becoming more than the preacher the social teacher, lies in its dealing more with the common experiences of life, and less in the imaginary romances of kings and their courts. The kingdom of God is the kingdom of the people and their work.

The Message to Men of Wealth.

Nearly all the warnings of the Old and the New Testament, which we so self-assuringly address to so-called unbelievers, were addressed in the first place to those who presumed themselves to be already in the kingdom of God; to those in the temple services and the churches. The ethical instructions of Jesus and the apostles were all based upon, and developed from, the cross. Theological truth has repeatedly shown its barrenness of the fruit of righteousness. The darkest crimes of history have been committed by the conservators of religion. A jealousy for theological truth often accompanies a hatred of duty. The Pharisees were so orthodox that they crucified Christ for heresy. They possessed the oracles of God. Yet the truth did not save them from greedy, heartless, malignant, hypocritical lives. A slavish and enslaving conservatism has always joined hands with an indifferent worldliness for the crucifixion of God's perennial revelations of incarnate truth. I suspect the devil knows more truth than any of us; and he is all the more devilish for knowing it. Truth that does not strike its roots in love is a curse; and the truer the truth the more accursed its results. There is a pregnant thought, which the church has yet to learn, in a saying of Mozambique in his "Oriental Christ": "Unless our creeds fertilize the world, and our lives furnish meat and drink to mankind, the curse uttered on barrenness will descend on us."

Good News for Sufferers—Catarrh and Consumption Cured.

Our readers who are victims of Lung Diseases, Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption, will be glad to know of the wonderful cures made by the new treatment known in Europe as the Aural-Hoax Disc very. The New Medical Advance 67 East 6th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, will send you this new treatment free for trial. Write to them. Give age and a particulars of your disease.

Some druggists try to substitute the brand of life with cake of their own make. Therefore sufferers who have decided to take Hood's Sarsaparilla should insist on having Hood's and only Hood's.

opportunity for a sound progress, by the response of the capital in Christian hands to the immediate social need. Wealth is always a social production and responsibility, viewed economically. Viewed ethically, a crisis, a time of unemployment and want, a time of social extremity, is the supreme obligation and opportunity of wealth to at least furnish work and bread for the society whose protection has made wealth possible. The tenement house system, the system of monopolies, the system of land aggregation, the sweating system, the system of municipal public works, the railway system, the whole industrial system, the present crisis, is the divine, and perhaps the last, opportunity of the collective Christian capital of America to lay in peace the foundations for a Christian society. This collective Christian capital is under the same quality of an obligation that God is to answer the prayer, Give us this day our daily bread. It is under as great an obligation to build factories, and open new fields of industry, because of compassion on the multitudes, as Jesus was to spend a healing sympathy on the sinful and the sick. Let the ingenuity of wealth become social, let its energies be naturally and divinely directed, let its forces become redemptive, let its ends be the social well-being, its concern the common health and wealth of the people, and it will have discovered a true economy: and it will create a new world. Jesus was under no more obligation to give his life for the world than is the collective Christian capital of to-day to give its money for society in the creation of a Christian democracy of industry. Except wealth become the manifestation of the providence of God, except its economy be an answer to the people's prayer for daily bread, except it so administer itself that in seeing it we see the fatherhood of God, except it believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, it cannot be saved.

* From The Christian Society, by George D. Heron, D.D., Professor Iowa College; pp. 158; cloth covers. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago and Toronto, publishers.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Murdered Millions, by George D. Dowdant, M.D.; with introduction by Theodore L. Cuyler: A striking little book, showing the great need of Medical Missions in heathen lands. Pp. 84; cloth board covers: price 30c. Published by the American Missionary Record, N. Y.

Auto-Hypnotism, or Training to the Infidelity of the Bible, edited and compiled by Rev. L. W. Munnell, M.A. A collection of scholarly, comprehensive and convincing themes by eminent theologians and Biblical scholars, including some of America's leading divines; of the highest interest to Christian readers. Pp. 354; cloth; price $1.50. Hunt & Eaton, New York, and Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati, publishers.

Deeds, or the Building of a Better World, by Mrs. E. M. Whittemore, founder of the "Door of Hope," 102 East 61 St., N. Y. (third edition). This remarkably touching story of the conversion and Christian life-work of a girl of the slums has been the means of creating a deep and genuine interest in Gospel work of this character. The book is illustrated; 134 pages; in paper covers, 50 cents; cloth covers, 75 cents. Door of Hope, New York.

The World's Parliament of Religions, edited by Rev. John Henry Barrows, D.D., Chairman of the Religious Congress at the World's Fair. This is the second volume of this famous work, which is the authorized and most popular story of the first Parliament of Religions ever held. In point of contents and illustrations it is of surpassing interest and will take rank as a standard publication. Each volume has 400 pages and is copiously illustrated; cloth binding. The Parliament Pub. Co., Chicago, or J. A. Hill & Co., N. Y., agents.

Rubifoam

FOR THE TEETH

is absolutely perfect. It is delicious in use. It gives strength to the gums, stops decay, and destroys that extreme sensitiveness that causes suffering. Rubifoam is your friend. It's a perfect liquid dentifrice 25 cents. All Druggists.

Sample vial free. Address
E. W. Hoyt & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sunny Side Songs!

THE NEW AND POPULAR
Sunday School Song Book,

By W. H. DOANE, the latest and best book by this favorite composer. 241 songs; $20 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 E. 9th St., New York, 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

CHAMBERLAIN'S

Cough Syrup

Summer Blossoms, —5 cts. ea.
Sundays, —3 cts. ea.
The Children's King, —5 cts. ea.
Grateful Offerings, —5 cts. ea.
Gems for the Crown, —5 cts. ea.

Also excellent services complete with Carols, Resp. Readings and Recitations. Send 20 cts. in stamps for samples of the free. CANTATA: FATHER TIME. For young people, very fine, price 30 cts. SEND THE LIGHT. A missionary song, 10 cts. ea.
Give 50 cts. for 3 and W. Madison St. Chicago, Ill.

Indisputable Evidence

Of the Successful Treatment of Consumption and Chest Diseases by the English Method, as Discovered and Practiced by George Thomas Congreve.

By a Special Reporter.

STATEMENT BY HIS AGENT.

For years Mr. Congreve has been entreated to make his remedy known in America, but his time has been too much absorbed by his English patients to allow of this. Now, however, he has been able to extend his organization, so as to bring America within the scope of his personal observation, and desires to make it clear to all citizens of the United States, that they may henceforth procure from his American depot, a cure for consumption, which even in the advanced stages of that terrible disease, may be used with certainty of relief.

To those who have not previously heard of Mr. Congreve, the following extracts from editorials in leading English religious papers, will be interesting and convincing.

The Christian Age, of London, says:

"We are far from disparaging others, but our knowledge of Mr. Congreve, extending as it does over a considerable number of years, justifies us in giving unhesitating testimony to the efficacy of his treatment in cases of incipient consumption, bronchitis, cold on the chest, &c. We have seen hundreds of letters (not copies, the originals) in which clergymen, ministers, literary men, lawyers, and others of nearly every rank in life, have borne witness to the almost miraculous character of the cures effected through Mr. Congreve's instrumentality. We always keep Mr. Congreve's medicine in the house, and find in all cases of cold hoarseness, bronchitis, cough or similar troubles, that it is an unfailing remedy. We earnestly say TRY IT."

And later—

"We have much pleasure, from our own personal knowledge of Mr. Congreve, in speaking of him, as deserving the confidence of every consumptive patient; also as an earnest Christian worker, much respected in the denomination of which he is a member, and an ardent lover and promoter of Sunday Schools."

The "Fountain," edited by Rev. J. Parker, D.D., the Temple, London, says:

"We take this opportunity of stating that Mr. Congreve, by help of God, has been the means of great service to the cause of humanity, as well as to the cause of Christ. He has probably been more successful in treating cases of Consumption than any man ever known. He has given the subject long and devoted study. His pamphlet has had an enormous circulation. The arguments he employs commend themselves to the judgment of any impartial reader. While fallacies of treatment are laid bare, the author dispels the prevalent notion of the hopelessly fatal character of the 'scourge of England,' and proves beyond all doubt that this fell disease is 'curable by proper means.'"

The Christian Herald, London edition, says, when editorially reviewing Mr. Congreve's work on consumption:

"Our attention has been called to a pamphlet on the treatment of this terrible malady, and on asthma and diseases of the lungs in general, by Mr. Geo. Thos. Congreve, of Coombe Lodge, Peckham—a Christian gentleman, well known to most of our leading ministers, the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon among the rest, who at a recent meeting, spoke very highly of him, stating that many members of his Church and students of his College had consulted him with remarkable success. One instance in Mr. Congreve's work deserving special notice is that of Rev. Jas. Smith, formerly of the College, and pastor of Redhill Church, and now of York Road Church, Leeds, who was restored after the case had been pronounced hopeless. Other extraordinary cases are related by Mr. Spurgeon's first student (Rev. T. W. Medhurst, of Portsmouth), and many more from ministers too numerous to mention."

The Christian Union, of London, says: "Mr. Geo. Thos. Congreve, of Coombe Lodge, Peckham, is a man whose fame lies in all the churches for his devoted, self-denying, and remarkably successful labours, in the cause of Christianity and Christian education. The Sunday schools that he so successfully conducts at Rye Lane are almost unexampled as the work of a private layman, and were the occasion recently of a deserved compliment being paid to him at a splendid gathering of Christian ministers and friends. But Mr. Congreve has another sphere of work in which he is no less a benefactor, as fully transpired, indeed, at the meeting in question, when the late C. H. Spurgeon bore testimony to the marvellous success of his treatment of Consumption, asthma, and other bronchial diseases too fatally prevalent in this country. Mr. Spurgeon observed that he had known some remarkably cases of cure effected by Mr. Congreve, and warmly acknowledge the generosity with which he had given his skill and help to the students of his College and many of the poorer members of the Tabernacle. From the abundant evidence before us we can have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Congreve is one of the most successful men in cases of Consumption, and of the like disorders, ever known."

Such testimony as the above must be convincing, but, if more is wanted, read the following letter from one of the most celebrated divines ever known, the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon:

"Dear Mr. Congreve:—As a rule, I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw, in the person of one of my students, the effects of your remedy.

He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man.

Since then, I have seen, in many, very many, instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power, through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

Yours heartily,

(Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON.

Westwood, Beulah Hill, England."

Hundreds and hundreds of other letters and notices of a similar nature have been received by Mr. Congreve, but if the above statements from well-known people whose words are unimpeachable are not sufficient, no evidence would be satisfactory.

If they were not true, the editor of this paper would not allow them to appear.

Reader, what are you going to do? Perhaps, your dear wife is ill? Perhaps, you are suffering yourself? Perhaps you have a dear child about whom you are anxious, or some near relative or neighbor, is in a condition that makes you fear the worst. Don't you feel you would like to know more of Mr. Congreve's treatment? Even if you have a doctor, read Mr. Congreve's Book. He has cured hundreds of cases considered hopeless by the medical profession. Full particulars of his treatment are given in his work on Consumption (300th edition), together with details of over 400 perfectly cured cases, anyone of which may be like yours, now published in America for the first time, price 25 cents; or it will be sent free with every first order of a one dollar trial bottle of Congreve's Balsamic Elixir.

Address,

GEO. THOS. CONGREVE,
4 Wooster St., New York.

Seeds and Bulbs

GIVEN AWAY.

The Cheapest Collection and best offer ever made. We want every reader of this paper to try this collection: 1 pkt. Lovely Marguerite Carnation, 1 pkt. Fuller's Perfection Pansy, 1 pkt. Snow Queen Pansy, pure white; 1 pkt. Balmain, 1 pkt. Floral Park Giant Phlox, 1 pkt. Sweet Pea, 1 pkt. Mignonette, 1 pkt. Giant Zinnia, 1 pkt. Poppy Bridesmaid, 1 pkt. Aster, 1 Bulb Lovely Tulip, 6 Bulbs Glaxia, free bloomers. The above collection, 10 packets seeds, 1 Bulb and our Bargain Catalogue mailed free on following conditions: Send us 20 cents to pay postage and packing. We will include in each collection a check good for 20 cents worth of seeds with first order.

J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N. Y.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
76-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

A TIBETAN "LIFE OF CHRIST."

In a previous issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD mention was made of the remarkable discovery by a Russian traveler in Tibet of a manuscript purporting to be a life of the Saviour. The document which bears every evidence of great antiquity, has been translated into French. It is said to be held in no less reverence by certain Buddhists than the Rag Veda by the Brahmins. It is, in the eyes of the Lamas (the leading religious teachers of Tibet), a canonical book.

M. Nicholas Notovitch, traveling in Tibet, heard in a monastery that the Buddhists knew and honored the Prophet Issa. Certain particulars of the life of Issa forced upon him the conviction that the prophet was Jesus Christ. He inquired of the Lamas where a history of his life was to be found. It was to be found in manuscripts preserved as sacred books in the monasteries of Ladak. He went over the Ladak country, visited the city of Leh, and at length stopped at a convent called Hemis. There he commenced negotiation for the manuscript. He sent presents to the Llama—a watch, a thermometer, and an alarm. But all to no purpose. Several days later an accident brought him what his diplomacy had failed to achieve. Riding in front of Hemis he broke his leg. He was received into the convent and nursed there. One day the Llama came into his room with two large volumes bound in pasteboard, the leaves being turned yellow by lapse of time. It was the life of Issa written in the Pali language.

The Llama himself read it out verse by verse, M. Notovitch taking down his interpreter's translation. The manuscript relates that Issa was born in Israel, and from his childhood preached the one God. He studied with Brahmins, learning to read and understand the Vedas. Eventually he broke away from the Brahmins, and in Visma the white priests threatened his life. He took refuge with the Goutamides, learnt Pali, and in six months was initiated into the mysteries of pure Buddhism. Then he went westward, preaching against idols. In Persia he opposed the religion of Zoroaster, but was persecuted and fled. He was twenty-nine years old when he returned to Judea. He at once began to preach, but his popularity alarmed Pontius Pilate. The latter summoned the priests and learned men to try Issa. This tribunal examined Issa and pronounced him to be innocent. The manuscript then relates how false witnesses were bribed by Pilate to betray Issa, and how Pilate ordered his death, the judges leaving the matter in his hands, saying, "We are innocent of the death of a just man." Issa and two thieves were crucified, but the third day Issa's sepulchre was found open and empty.

This remarkable document, should it be proved to be genuine, may yet be accepted by Biblical scholars as clearing up much of the mystery that surrounds the years of the Saviour's life on earth before he entered upon his ministry, which years are not fully accounted for by any of the authentic records now in existence. The translation will be published in England.

A New Cure for Asthma!

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending out large trial cases of the Kola Compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send your name and address on postal card and they will send you a trial case by mail free.

Unlike the Dutch Process
No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals
are used in the preparation of
W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa
which is absolutely pure and soluble.
It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.
Sold by Grocers everywhere.
W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

MELLIN'S
FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS.
FOOD
THE ONLY PERFECT Substitute for Mother's Milk.
Detroit, Mich.
Gentlemen:—The Michigan Churchman, a weekly religious paper here, would like to advertise your Mellin's Food. We know it from experience, and have the handsomest baby in Michigan, raised on Mellin's Food.
Rev. G. MOTT WILLIAMS.
Wilmington, Del.
Gentlemen:—I have used your Mellin's Food for my baby since weaning him, and it has given me great satisfaction.
Mrs. F. L. GILPIN.
SEND for our book, "The Care and Feeding of Infants," mailed Free to any address.
Doliver-Goodale Co., Boston, Mass.

O'Neill's
6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street,
NEW YORK.
Importers and Retailers.
Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Cloaks, Costumes, Fancy Goods, etc.

Special.
A Good Seasonable Tailor-made Suit (same as cut) of All-Wool Cheviot Serge, black or navy, Alexandra waist, skirt four yards wide, extreme sleeves, turn-over collar, double breasted waist, lined and stayed, all silk sewed, for $7.98

When ordering by mail, please mention Bust and Sleeve Measurement, also length of Skirt in front.

Send for our Illustrated Catalogue
Now Ready.
Mention The Christian Herald when ordering.
All purchases delivered by express, free of charge, at any point within 100 miles of New York City.

H. O'NEILL & CO.,
6th Ave., 20th to 21st St., New York.
YOUR OPPORTUNITY, LADIES
We absolutely give away China Sets, Clocks, Watches, Silverware, etc., to agents handling our Teas, Spices, Baking Powder, Extracts, Soaps, Perfumes, etc. LADY AGENTS wanted everywhere. No money required until goods and premium received. Particulars free. The HOWELL TEA CO., (Incorporated), O.
For curing Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, &c.
Price, 25 cts. a Box Mailed
H. EDWARD WENDEL,
S. E. cor. 3d and George Streets, Philadelphia
Mexican Drawn Work.
Dollies, Tray-covers, Tea-squares, etc., cheaply and beautifully made by needy Mexican women. Sent on approval to any address.
MRS. MARY MASON, Brownsville, Texas.

REMOVAL.
The Store and Offices of the American Tract Society have removed to 10 East 23d Street, near Broadway, opposite Madison Sq.
NEW BOOKS OF THE
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,
10 East 23d Street, New York.
Mailed postpaid on receipt of price.
ASSYRIAN ECHOES OF THE WORD.
By Thomas Laurie, D. D. Illust. 8vo. 380 pp. $2.
This volume presents for general use the progress and the results attained by explorations and excavations in confirmation of the Biblical narrative.
THE STARRY SKIES. By Agnes Giberne. 12mo. 234 pp. $1.
A very delightful book on astronomy, attractive and instructive equally for a child of twelve or a reader of sixty. The illustrations add to its interest.
RACHEL'S FARM. By Miss A. L. Noble. Illustrated. 12mo. 223 pp.
A fresh, breezy, country book by a clever writer, with many blessed lessons of Christian truth.
AMERICAN HEROES ON MISSION FIELDS. Edited by Dr. Haydn. Series 1. 12mo. 362 pp. $1.25.
Containing very interesting biographies of Eliot, Zeisberger, Williamson, Mr. and Mrs. Spaulding, Titus Coan, Mrs. Armstrong (mother of the late Gen. Armstrong), Logan, Judson, and Boardman CONSOLATION FOR MOTHERS WITH EMPTY ARMS. By Mrs. G. A. Panll. Dainty white cloth, 30 cts. The title tells its purpose.
CRADLE THOUGHTS. By Mrs. Paull. Paper, 10 cts. Loving words for mothers.

Latest Arrival
French Challie Novelties.
Very select assortment of best quality French Challies—all Novelties.
Seaside Challies, strikingly new style, close damask figure, with plain band on edge for trimming.
Two-tone Challie in Hopsack checks. Cream Challies with all over design and Daisy Cluster border.
Bright Silk Mixed Cheviots and dark blue English Serges, 50 cents per yard. All in the Basement.

James McCreery & Co.,
BROADWAY & 11th STREET,
NEW YORK.
DOOR PLATES 25 Cents. Durable and Handsome; in good letters on metal. Stamps taken; circulars. Springfield Door-Plate Co., 18 Grays ave., Springfield, Mass.

FREE!
Our large 24-page catalogue of Organs, also our new and elegant catalogue of Pianos, containing 16 pages. We have the largest manufactory in the world, from which we sell direct to the consumer at wholesale prices, thus saving the profits of the dealer and the commissions of the agents. We furnish a first-class Organ, warranted 20 years, with stool and book, for $27.50 only until instrument has been thoroughly tested in your own house. Sold on instalments. Easy payment.
NO MONEY REQUIRED
We positively guarantee every organ and Piano twenty years. Send for catalogue at once if you want to obtain the greatest bargain ever offered on earth. Write your name and address plainly, and we will send by mail same day letter is received.
As an advertisement, we will sell the first Piano of $175.00 our make in a place for only $175.00 Stool, Book and Cover Free. Regular price, $350.00
Beethoven Piano and Organ Co.,
P. O. Box 741 Washington, N. J.

Anarchy
Seeks to overthrow the present status of Society—aiming to destroy the magnificent institutions of modern civilization.
THE Massachusetts BENEFIT LIFE ASSOCIATION
Seeks to conserve and uplift Society as now constituted—by carrying blessings to its corner stone—the HOME.
The Largest and Strongest Natural-Premium Insurance Co. of New England.
$5,000.00 a day paid to beneficiaries at 60% of usual cost.
The NEW POLICY of the Massachusetts Benefit Life Association has no superior. It gives Cash Dividends, Cash Surrender Values, Paid-Up Insurance, and other desirable options.
Splendid Openings for Energetic Men to Act as Special, General and State Agents.
GEO. A. LITCHFIELD, Pres. 53 State St., Boston.

Some Ladies Perspire Constantly
It is a great annoyance. Ladies of "full habit" suffer much from this cause, though many slender ones are equally afflicted.

Comfort Powder
removes the cause, dispels offensive odor, allays irritation, heals all skin affections, cures and prevents chafing.
It will positively cure
Eczema, Itching, Burns, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Bed Sores, A Chafing Baby, Tender Feet, Irritation under Truss.
It ensures a Clear Complexion.
Sold by druggists, 50 cents per box, postage paid.
COMFORT POWDER CO., HARTFORD, CONN.
Send 2 two-cent stamps for liberal sample and book.

Use COMFORT SOAP.
The Finest Medicated Toilet Soap for the Hands, the Face, and Complexion, 25c. cake.
BABY CARRIAGES Shipped anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal—$18.50 Carriage for $9.25. ers' profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95. Illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75. free. Address: Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.
WONDER CABINET FREE. Pack Truck Cards, 2 Magic Keys, Devil's Bottle, Pocket Camera, Latest Wire Puzzle, Book of Sleight of Hand, Total Value 60c. Sent free with immense catalogue of 1000 Bargains for 10c. for postage. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 Cortlandt Street N. Y.
AGENTS wanted in every town. Something new $75 a month. Write quick. Sherman & Butler, 26 W. Lake St. Chicago

$175.00
until instrument has been thoroughly tested in your own house. Sold on instalments. Easy payment.
We positively guarantee every organ and Piano twenty years. Send for catalogue at once if you want to obtain the greatest bargain ever offered on earth. Write your name and address plainly, and we will send by mail same day letter is received.
As an advertisement, we will sell the first Piano of $175.00 our make in a place for only $175.00 Stool, Book and Cover Free. Regular price, $350.00
Beethoven Piano and Organ Co.,
P. O. Box 741 Washington, N. J.

IVORY SOAP

99 4/100%
= PURE =

FOR CLOTHES.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINT'L.

Beecham's pills are for biliousness, bilious headache, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, loss of appetite, sallow skin, when caused by constipation; and constipation is the most frequent cause of all of them.

Book free; pills 25c. At drugstores, or write B.F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

Model 36 Columbia

Price, $125.

The New Century Columbia stands easily at the head of all fully equipped roadsters, and will successfully maintain the high reputation its predecessors have established. Full details concerning its new features in the Columbia catalogue, which is a beautiful book and full of interest. Free upon application at any Columbia agency, or we mail it for two two-cent stamps.

POPE MFG. CO.,

Boston. New York. Chicago. Hartford.

HARTFORDS.

Our CATALOGUE

will explain in detail the design and special points of these Bicycles. Our Agents will be pleased to show them to you.

Everyone who rides can be suited. Examine them before you decide what to buy.

CATALOGUE SENT FREE.

THE HARTFORD CYCLE CO.,
Hartford, Conn.

For All Stockings

worn by ladies and children

there is only one hose supporter which cannot cut the stocking. All genuine Warren

Hose Supporters

are made with Warren Fasteners with Rounded Rib on Holding Edges—all other supporters must cut the stocking. For sale everywhere.

Made by George Frost Co., Boston.

GRAND COMBINATION OFFER.

For 15 CENTS, stamps or coin, STAMPING OUTFIT, latest and best designs, no hot iron need, ed for them. SILK REMNANTS, 3 packages of brilliant all colors, for patchwork, full instructions and our GREAT STORY PAPER, for three months. Address OUR COUNTRY HOME, New York City.

2c. WALL PAPER.

First paper 25c etc. up. Embossed gold 10c to 125c etc. per roll. 100 New samples mailed FREE for 10c postage. Good Quality. Fair Dealings. Write WALL PAPER CO., 133 E. 11th ST., CINCINNATI, O.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

$14 Buy our 2 drawer walnut or oak improved High Arm Slicer sewing machine. Finely finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 years with automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder Shuttle, Self-Feeding Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments; shipped anywhere on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. World's Fair Medal's varied machine and attachments. Box from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits. Get This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and Glances of the World's Fair. OXFORD MFG. CO., 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.

TYPEWRITERS.

Unprejudiced advice given. All makes half-price. Shipped anywhere for examination. Exchanging a Specialty. Monthly payments. 52-page cat. free. TYPEWRITER 45 Liberty St., New York. HEADQUARTERS, 186 Monroe St., Chicago.

AGENTS

can make $50.00 to $100.00 a week canvassing for the best specialties ever offered. No competition. Write for terms. N. Y. & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N., 34 East 14th St., New York, or Kansas City, Mo.

INVINCIBLE HATCHER

$17 for 100 Egg Size. Self Regulating. Need 4c. In stamps for No. 60 Catalog, testimonials & treatise. BUCKEYE INCUBATOR CO. SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

1894 HIGH GRADE BICYCLES Shipped C. O. D.

Anywhere to anyone $25 bicycle for $12.50. All styles and prices. $75 " $37.50. Have dealer's profits $125 " $62.50. Send for large illustrated Catalogue Free. CASH IN TREAS. UNION, 162 W Van Buren St., B 33, Chicago, Ill.

YOUR WEIGHT REDUCED

15 lbs. a month by a new harmless, herbal remedy—safe, sure and speedy. Trial package sent FREE on application. Give a trial. It costs you nothing. Chase Remedy Co., Dept. 11, Chicago.

TAPE-WORM

Expelled alive in 60 minutes with head, or no charge. Send 2c stamp for circular. Dr. M. Noy Smith, Specialist, 721 Olive St. St. Louis, Mo.

MUST HAVE AGENTS AT ONCE. Sample Bushlock free by mail for 2c. stamp. Immense demand. Only good one ever invented. Beats weights. Sales unparalleled. $12 a day. Write quick. BROADBENT, Box 21, Phila.

A rounded spoonful of

Cleveland's Baking Powder

does better work than a heaping spoonful of others.

Bread and cake raised with

Cleveland's Baking Powder

keep their freshness and flavor.
"Pure" and "Sure."

FREE! SAVE MONEY.

Send for Our New 28 pp. Catalogue, handsomely illustrated in colors, and containing a full description of all our celebrated PIANOS and ORGANS.

Pianos FROM $150.

Organs FROM $27.50.

Remember—We are the only firm of actual manufacturers that sell exclusively to the public direct from our factories, at GUARANTEED WHOLESALE COST.

FOR CASH, OR ON THE EASY PAYMENT PLAN.

No Agents. No Dealers. Factory to Home direct.

Free test trial in your own home. No money in advance. Special terms to farmers and others, who cannot pay all cash down.

References—Our Bank. Your Bank. Any Bank in the U.S.

Write to-day to CORNISH & CO. Washington, New Jersey. Established nearly 30 years.

EAT BICYCLES

Without Charge.

A.W. GUMP & CO., Dayton, O.

will send you a list of new and second-hand Bicycles, showing a saving of from $20.00 to $50.00, or for 10 cents they will send you a Candy Bicycle Transparency, good to eat but better to hang in your window.

FENCING

WIRE ROPE SELVAGE.

McMULLEN'S

POULTRY AND RABBIT NETTING

Railroad, Farm, Garden, Cemetery, Lawn Fencing. Prices down. Freight paid. Catalog free. McMullen Woven Wire Fence Co., Chicago.

DE LA VEAU'S

Whooping Cough Croup Violent Coughs

Tested over 40 Years. EFFECTUAL AND HARMLESS. 50c. per bot. at druggists, or expressed from 6th and Wood Sts., Philadelphia, to any address 60c.

R*E*M*E*D*Y

SPRAY

YOUR FRUIT TREES & VINES.

Stahl's Double Acting Excelsior Spraying Outlets prevent Leaf Blight & Wormy Fruit. Insures a heavy yield of all Fruit and Vegetable crops. Thousands in use. Send 6c. for catalogue and full treating on spraying. Circulars free. WM. STAHL, Quincy, Ill.

AMERICAN WATCH & CHAIN

EVERY WATCH GUARANTEED NO KEY REQUIRED

NEW $1.50

The cut exactly represents our new 1894 American Lever Watch and Chain. It is not an imported watch, but entirely American produced in this country by the best skilled mechanics. Neither is it a clock, but a perfect watch of ordinary size, 2 1/8 inches in diameter, 1 1/4 larger than that. It is perfect in mechanism and we furnish with each a POSITIVE GUARANTEE as an accurate time-keeper for one year. Our factory produced last year nearly 600,000 watches and we have proven beyond doubt, that America can make not only the BEST but the CHEAPEST watches. Do not be deceived by its low price or your past experience with other watches. Though cheap, it is good. The publisher of this paper will tell you that our guarantee may be relied on. DESCRIPTION: The movement is regular American Lever; Lantern pinion; 240 beats to minute; keyless (or stem) wind and set; 4 turns runs 24 hours; steel pinions; all parts of great durability and perfectly adjusted; patent escapement and regulator; dust proof case, handsomely finished in nickel or gold; weight of watch 3.5-4 oz. diameter 2 1/8 in.; fully GUARANTEED one year—same as an Elgin or Waltham. SAMPLE post-paid with HANDSOME CHAIN & catalogue $1.50; 3 for $4.00; 12 for $15.00 by Express. AGENTS & Stockholders apply at once. Mention Paper. R. H. INCERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLAND ST., N. Y. CITY

THE WORLD'S FAIR

Highest MEDAL AND DIPLOMA, on our INFANT and BUNNIE Combined. If you are interested in Poultry, it will pay you to send 4 cents in stamps for 72 page catalogue, giving valuable points on Poultry Culture. Address Reliable Incubator Co., Quincy, Ill.

$12.00 to $35.00 a week can be made working for us. Parties preferred who can furnish a horse and travel through the country; a team, though, is not necessary. A few vacancies in towns and cities. Men and women of good character will find this an exceptional opportunity for profitable employment. Spare hours may be used to good advantage. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 11th and Main Sts., Richmond, Va.

TRUSS

The BEST is none too good. Send for 100-page illustrated book, and learn Which is BEST—and WHY.

L. B. BEELEY & CO., 258, 11th St., Philad., Pa.

PRINTING OFFICE

15c

A large lot of Type (over 40) with Figures, Holder, Indefinite Ink, Pad, Teacups, Corkscrew, etc., as shown in cut, complete in next case. Best Linen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Regular Price 94c. Sample postpaid for life, to introduce, with Catalogue of 1000 new articles. CAT. FREE. INCERSOLL & Bro. 65 Cortland St. N. Y. City

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 17.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor,
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, APRIL 25, 1894.

COPYRIGHT 1894, BY LOUIS KLOPPSCH.

NUMBER 17.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

MARION HARLAND AT JOSEPH'S TOMB.

Our Traveler Visits the Valley of Shechem—A Region Rich in Bible Memories—
Ebal and Gerizim—Jacob's Well and its Historic Surroundings.

PURSUIING our way from Nablous (the ancient Shechem) in the cold winter morning, we are spared the sight of the lepers who sit daily at the wayside, begging, when the weather is moderate. Cold is peculiarly painful to these unfortunates, and until it abates, they lie as nearly torpid as their condition will allow, in whatever shelter they can find. We see but four to-day. In the immediate outskirts of the town, one, better dressed than a majority of his class, his face muffled from the sharp air so that but one eye is visible, and his maimed hands behind him, shivers against a sunny wall, and another is huddled in a neighboring doorway. When we left the streets behind us, we pass two more; one squatted on the stones, his companion lying upon his stomach, supported by his elbows.

All stare vacantly at us, too demoralized by the fall of temperature to unclose their lips, even to utter "bakshish." If any men and women upon this beautiful earth have a valid excuse for beggary, it is the lepers of the country towns. Cut off from such branches of industry as require people to labor in companies, debarred by mutilated members and stiffened joints from tilling the fields, their only resort from starvation is to cry aloud and spare not, to entreat the charity of all who pass by. It the day were mild, both sides of the road would be lined with them, and the strange, husky call we learned, long ago, to recognize above the clamor of crowded thoroughfares,—"Bakshish! howadji! Abras! Abras! bakshish!" (Give money, gentlemen! we are lepers! lepers! Oh! give money!)—would deafen the ear andicken the heart. Whatever may be our views on the subject of mendicancy and the evils of indiscriminate alms-giving, we cannot refrain from throwing some coins to them in hurrying by, and looking back, see them stoop slowly and painfully to pick them up. This is the sharpest morning we have felt. John, of the numerous appellations, and Imbarak, the tall, following the mules laden with tents and camp-furniture, are bundled up in all manner of extemporized shawls and scarves; the jaunty waiter, erect as a ramrod in the discharge of official duties, is bowed and shrunk as a gladiolus-stalk under a nipping frost, and glances piteously at us in response to our cheery "good-bye."

The weather that shrivels up these children of the sun, has cleared the atmosphere from horizon to horizon. The Valley of Shechem is wondrously beautiful in the pure light. But we miss Hermon, gleaming as with newly-fallen snows, and the purple peak of Safed, the highest point on Galilee, so often visible to us for the past two days.

"To which it is said, Christ Our Lord pointed when he said, 'A city set on a hill cannot be hid!'" is our guide's comment upon the storied height. Every foot of Concordance. In the still, dry air, the words have a peculiar ring that helps us to believe what learned commentators upon the remarkable narrative aver, namely, that the responses chanted by the half of the Israelites stationed upon Mount Ebal could be heard across the narrow valley upon the summit of Mount Gerizim:

And all Israel and their elders, and officers, and their judges, stood on this side the ark and on that side before the priests the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, as well the stranger as he that was born among them: half of them over against Mount Gerizim, and half of them over against Mount Ebal as Moses the servant of the Lord had commanded before, that they should bless the people of Israel.

And afterward he read all the words of the law, the blessings and cursings according to all that is written in the book of the law.

"What a magnificent responsive service!" observes one, as the "best Baedeker for Palestine," is closed.

Not put away, for Shechem of old figures often and prominently upon the inspired pages: the mention of the name draws about it a host of striking pictures. In Mrs. Whitney's one book of foreign travel,

True and Only God in the land then held by the Canaanites. They call it now, "The Holy Oak," in memory of the tree under which Jacob buried the "strange gods that were in their hands, and all their earrings that were in their ears," and where Joshua set up the great memorial stone of the "statute and ordinance" made in Shechem.

Nearer to us, and toward this holy site, we turn our steps in mute reverence. For this is "the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph, the parcel of a field where he had spread his tent, which he bought of the children of Hamor, Shechem's father, for an hundred pieces of money." We turn from Genesis to John's Gospel:

Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus, therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well; and it was about the sixth hour.

The "sixth hour" would be high noon, and there had been a fatiguing walk over the hills. As he "sat thus" (wearily), upon the curb of the well, he needed the meat which his disciples had gone into the city to buy, no less than water and rest.

A rough, broken stone wall surrounds the well. The archway is closed half the way up by a door. This is locked, and there is no care-taker near to admit us. Selecting the lowest breach in the wall, we clamber over fallen masonry to the top and over it to the inside. A church stood here once, probably erected by those valiant and indefatigable church-builders, the Crusaders; but altar, columns and architecture were swept away centuries ago, and the mosaic pavement buried many feet deep under the rubbish we see. A feeble effort at exploration for what we know must underlie the ruins was made recently, and laid bare the steps. A short flight leads down to the landing; beyond the landing is another locked door. We shake it energetically and uselessly. The priest who acts as custodian is absent, and the key is with him. On the other side of the door is the mouth of the well, more than seventy feet deep.

"It was, we are told, over an hundred feet in depth in former times," David relates, seated on the upper step. "The custom of visitors of throwing stones to the bottom to hear them fall into the water, has helped fill it up. There used to be a flat stone on top, with a round hole in the middle, through which pig-skin buckets were let down by long ropes. I'm thinking that a few thousand dollars would be well-spent in clearing away all this rubbish, and show what the well was on that day."

The sigh is continually in the mouth of the visitor who bears in memory that the ground is connected with the sacred Classics. For while Nablous means nothing to us, our eyes, ears and hearts are opened when we recollect that the modern town is the ancient Shechem. Mount Ebal, on our left and Gerizim, on the right, are the Mounts of Cursing and of Blessing.

Continued on page 261.

THE TOMB OF JOSEPH THE PATRIARCH. NEAR ANCIENT SHECHEM, PALESTINE.

(From a Photograph taken before the Structure was repaired and the Dome replaced.)

"If the Captain will kindly turn to Joshua, the eighth chapter, thirty-third and thirty-fourth verses," suggests our animate

"Sights and Insights," she puts into the mouth of Emory Ann, a shrewd New England spinster, a saying we borrow often, and at last appropriate unscrupulously. She describes herself as "realizing her geography." We are "realizing our Bible."

The little village whitening in the sunshine and nestling at the base of Gerizim, marks the place where the Father of the Faithful built the first altar raised to the One

FAIREST OF THE FAIR.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday at the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Text: Solomon's Song 5: 16, "He is altogether lovely."

THE human race has during centuries been improving. For awhile it deflected and degenerated, and from all I can read, for ages the whole tendency was towards barbarism.

But under the ever widening and deepening influence of Christianity the tendency is now in the upward direction. The physical appearance of the human race is seventy-five per cent more attractive than in the sixteenth, seventeenth or eighteenth centuries. From the pictures on canvas and the faces and forms in sculpture of those who were considered the grand-looking men and the attractive women of two hundred years ago, I conclude the superiority of the men and women of our time. Such looking people of the past centuries as painting and sculpture have presented as fine specimens of beauty and dignity, would be in our time considered deformity and repulsiveness complete. The fact that many men and women in antediluvian times were eight and ten feet high tended to make the human race obnoxious rather than winning. Such portable mountains of human flesh did not add to the charms of the world.

But in no climate and in no age did there ever appear any one who in physical attractiveness could be compared to him whom my text celebrates, thousands of years before he put his infantile foot on the hill back of Bethlehem. He was, and is, altogether lovely. The physical appearance of Christ is, for the most part, an artistic guess. Some writers declare him to have been a brunette or dark complexioned, and others a blonde or light complexioned. St. John, of Damascus, writing eleven hundred years ago, and so much nearer than ourselves to the time of Christ, and hence with more likelihood of accurate tradition, represents him with beard black and curly, eye-brows joined together, and "yellow complexion, and long fingers like his mother." An author writing fifteen hundred years ago represents Christ as a blonde: "His hair the color of wine and golden at the root; straight and without lustre; but from the level of the ears curling and glossy, and divided down the centre after the fashion of the Nazarenes. His forehead is even and smooth, his face without blemish, and enlanced by a tempered bloom; his countenance ingenuous and kind. Nose and mouth are in no way faulty. His beard is full, of the same color as his hair, and forked in form; his eyes blue and extremely brilliant."

My opinion is it was a Jewish face. His mother was a Jewess, and there is no womanhood on earth more beautiful than Jewish womanhood. Alas! that he lived so long before the Daguerrean and photographic arts were born, or we might have known his exact features. I know that Sculpture and Painting were born long before Christ, and they might have transferred from olden times to our times the forehead, the nostril, the eye, the lips of our Lord. Phidias the sculptor put down his chisel of enchantment five hundred years before Christ came. Why did not some one take up that chisel, and give us the side face or full face of our Lord? Polygnus the painter put down his pencil four hundred years before Christ. Why did not some one take it up, and give us at least the eye of our Lord, the eye, that sovereign of the face? Dionysius the literary artist who saw at Heliopolis, Egypt, the strange darkening of the heavens at the time of Christ's crucifixion near Jerusalem, and not knowing what it was, but describing it as a peculiar eclipse of the sun, and saying, "Either the Deity suffers or sympathizes with some sufferer," that Dionysius might have put his pen to the work, and drawn the portrait of our Lord. But no! the fine arts were busy perpetuating the form and appearance of the world's favorites only, and not the form and appearance of the peasantry, among whom Christ appeared.

It was not until the fifteenth century, or until more than fourteen hundred years after Christ, that talented painters attempted by pencil to give us the idea of Christ's face. The pictures before that time were so offensive that the Council at Constantine forbade their exhibition. But Leonardo Da Vinci, in the fifteenth century, presented Christ's face on two canvases, yet the one was a repulsive face, and the other an effeminate face. Raphael's face of Christ is a weak face. Albert Durer's face of Christ is an expressionless face. The mightiest artists, either with pencil or chisel, have made signal failure in attempting to give the forehead, the cheek, the eyes, the nostril, the mouth of our blessed Lord.

But about his face I can tell you something positive, and beyond controversy. I am sure it was a soulful face. The face is only the curtain of the soul. It was impossible that a disposition like Christ's should not have demonstrated itself in his physiognomy. Kindness as an occasional impulse may give no illumination to the features, but kindness as the lifelong, dominant habit will produce attractiveness of countenance as certainly as the shining of the sun produces flowers. Children are afraid of a scowling or hard-visaged man. They cry out if he proposes to take them. If he try to caress them, he evokes a slap rather than a kiss. All mothers know how hard it is to get their children to go to a man or woman of forbidding appearance. But no sooner did Christ appear in the domestic group than there was an infantile excitement, and the youngsters began to struggle to get out of their mother's arms. They could not hold the children back. "Stand back with those children!" scolded some of the disciples. Perhaps the little ones may have been playing in the dirt, and their faces may not have been clean, or they may not have been well clad, or the disciples may have thought Christ's religion was a religion chiefly for big folks. But Christ made the infantile excitement still livelier by his saying that he liked children better than grown people, declaring, "Except ye become as a little child ye cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Alas! for those people who do not like children. They had better stay out of heaven, for the place is full of them. That, I think, is one reason why the vast majority of the human race die in infancy. Christ is so fond of children that he takes them to himself before the world has time to despoil and harden them, and so they are now at the windows of the Palace, and on the doorsteps, and playing on the green. Sometimes Matthew, or Mark, or Luke tells a story of Christ, and only one tells it, but Matthew, Mark and Luke all join in that picture of Christ girdled by children, and I know by what occurred at that time that Christ had a face full of geniality.

Not only was Christ altogether lovely in his countenance, but lovely in his habits. I know, without being told, that the Lord who made the rivers, and lakes, and oceans, was cleanly in his appearance. He disliked the disease of leprosy, not only because it was distressing, but because it was not clean, and his curative words were, "I will; be thou clean." He declared himself in favor of thorough washing, and opposed to superficial washing, when he denounced the hypocrites for making clean only "the outside of the platter," and he applauds his disciples by saying, "Now are ye clean," and giving directions to those who fasted, among other things he says, "Wash thy face;" and to a blind man whom he was doctoring, "Go, wash in the pool of Siloam." And he himself actually washed the disciples' feet, I suppose not only to demonstrate his own humility, but probably their feet needed to be washed. The fact is, the Lord was a great friend of water. I know that from the fact that most of the world is water. But when I find Christ in such constant commendation of water, I know he was personally neat, although he mingled much among very rough populations, and took such long journeys on dusty highways. He wore his hair long, according to the custom of his land and time, but neither trouble nor old age had thinned or injured his locks, which were never worn shaggy or unkempt. Yea, all his habits of personal appearance were lovely.

Sobriety was also an established habit of his life. In addition to the water, he drank the juice of the grape. When at a wedding party this beverage gave out, he made gallons on gallons of grape juice, but it was as unlike what the world makes in our time as health is different from disease, and as calm pulses are different from the paroxysms of delirium tremens. There was no strychnine in that beverage, or logwood, or nux vomica. The tipplers and the sots who now quote the wine-making in Cana of Galilee as an excuse for the fiery and damning beverages of the nineteenth century, forget that the wine at the New Testament wedding had two characteristics, the one that the Lord made it, and the other that it was made out of water. Buy all you can of that kind and drink it at least three times a day, and send a barrel of it around to my cellar. You cannot make me believe that the blessed Christ who went up and down healing the sick, would create for man that style of drink which is the cause of disease more than all other causes combined; or that he who calmed the maniacs into their right mind, would create that style of drink which does more than anything else to fill insane asylums; or that he who was so helpful to the poor, would make a style of drink that crowds the earth with pauperism; or that he who came to save the nations from sin, would create a liquor that is the source of most of the crime that now stuffs the penitentiaries. A lovely sobriety was written all over his face, from the hair-line of the forehead to the bottom of the bearded chin.

Domesticity was also his habit. Though too poor to have a home of his own, he went out to spend the night at Bethany, two or three miles' walk from Jerusalem, and over a rough and hilly road that made it equal to six or seven ordinary miles, every morning and night going to and fro. I would rather walk from here to Central Park, or walk from Edinburgh to Arthur's Seat, or in London clear around Hyde Park, than to walk that road that Christ walked twice a day from Jerusalem to Bethany. But he liked the quietude of home life, and he was lovely in his domesticity.

How he enjoyed handing over the resurrected boy to his mother, and the resurrected girl to her father, and reconstructing homesteads which disease or death was breaking up. As the song, "Home, Sweet Home," was written by a man who at that time had no home, so I think the homelessness of Christ added to his appreciation of domesticity.

Furthermore, he was lovely in his sympathies. Now, dropsy is a most distressful complaint. It inflames, and swells, and tortures any limb or physical organ it touches. As soon as a case of that kind is submitted to Christ, he, without any use of diaphoretics, commands its cure. And what an eye-doctor he was for opening the long-closed gates of sight to the blue of the sky, and the yellow of the flower, and the emerald of the grass! What a Christ he was for cooling fevers without so much as a spoonful of febrifuge; and straightening crooked backs without any pang of surgery; and standing whole choirs of music along the silent galleries of a deaf ear; and giving healthful nervous system to cataleptics! Sympathy! He did not give them stoical advice, or philosophize about the science of grief. He sat down and cried with them.

It is spoken of as the shortest verse in the Bible, but to me it is about the longest and grandest—"Jesus wept." Ah! many of us know the meaning of that. When we were in great trouble, some one came in with voluble consolation and quoted the Scripture in a sort of heartless way, and did not help us at all. But after awhile some one else came in, and without saying a word sat down and burst into a flood of tears at the sight of our woe, and somehow it helped us right away. "Jesus wept." You see, it was a deeply-attached household, that of Mary, and Martha, and Lazarus. The father and mother were dead, and the girls depended on their brother. Lazarus had said to them, "Now Mary, now Martha, stop your worrying. I will take care of you. I will be to you both father and mother. My arm is strong. Girls, you can depend on me!"

But now Lazarus was sick; yea, Lazarus was dead. All broken up, the sisters sit disconsolate, and there is a knock at the door. "Come in," says Martha. "Come in," says Mary. Christ entered, and he just broke down. It was too much for him. He had been so often and so kindly entertained in that home before sickness and death devastated it, that he choked up and sobbed aloud, and the tears trickled down the sad face of the sympathetic Christ. "Jesus wept." Why do you not try that mode of helping? You say, "I am a man of few words," or "I am a woman of few words." Why, you dear soul, words are not necessary. Imitate your Lord, and go to those afflicted homes and cry with them.

John Murphy! Well, you did not know him. Once, when I was in great bereavement, he came to my house. Kind ministers of the Gospel had come and talked beautifully, and prayed with us, and did all they could to console. But John Murphy, one of the best friends I ever had, a big-souled, glorious Irishman, came in and looked into my face, put out his broad, strong hand, and said not a word, but sat down and cried with us. I am not enough of a philosopher to say how it was, or why it was, but somehow from door to door, and from floor to ceiling, the room was filled with an all-pervading comfort. "Jesus wept."

I think that is what makes Christ such a popular Christ. There are so many who want sympathy. Miss Fiske, the famous Nestorian missionary, was in the chapel one day talking to the heathen, and she was in very poor health, and so weak she sat upon a mat while she talked, and felt the need of something to lean against, when she felt a woman's form at her back, and heard a woman's voice saying, "Lean on me." She leaned a little, but did not want to be too cumbersome, when the woman's voice said, "Lean hard, if you love me, lean hard." And that makes Christ so lovely. He wants all the sick, and troubled, and weary to lean against him, and he says, "Lean hard, if you love me, lean hard." Aye, he is close by with his sympathetic help. Hedley Vickers, the famous soldier and Christian of the Crimean war, died because when he was wounded his regiment was too far off from the tent of sup-ies. He was not mortally wounded, and the surgeons could only have got at the bandages and the medicines, he would have covered. So much of human sympathy and hopefulness comes too late; but Christ always close by if we want him, and has all the medicines ready, and has eternal life for all who ask for it. Sympathy!

Aye, he was lovely in his doctrines. Self-sacrifice, or the relief of the suffering of others by our own suffering. He was the only physician that ever proposed to cure his patients by taking their disorders. Self-sacrifice! And what did he not give up for others? The best climate in the universe, the air of heaven, for the wintry weather of Palestine; a sceptre of unlimited dominion for a prisoner's box in an earthly courtroom; a flashing tiara for a crown of stinging brambles; a palace for a cattle pen; a throne for a cross. Self-sacrifice! What more lovely? Mothers dying for their children down with scarlet-fever; railroad engineers going down through the open raw-bridge to save the train; firemen scorched to death trying to help some one down the ladder from the fourth story of the consuming house; all these put together only faint and insufficient similes by which to illustrate the grander, mightier, farther-reaching self-sacrifice of the "Altogether lovely."

Do you wonder that the story of his self-sacrifice has led hundreds of thousands to die for him? In one series of persecutions over 200,000 were put to death for Christ's sake. For him Blandina was tied to a post and wild beasts were let out upon her, and when life continued after the attack of tooth and paw, she was put in a net, and that net containing her was thrown to a wild bull, that tossed her with its horns till life was extinct. All for Christ! Huguenots dying for Christ! Albigenses dying for Christ! The Vaudois dying for Christ! The Smithfield fires endured for Christ! The bones of martyrs, if distributed, would make a path of mouldering life all around the earth. The loveliness of the Saviour's sacrifice has inspired all the heroisms, and all the martyrdoms of subsequent centuries. Christ has had more men and women die for him than all the other inhabitants of all the ages have had die for them.

Furthermore, he was lovely in his sermons. He knew when to begin, when to stop, and just what to say. The longest sermon he ever preached, so far as the Bible reports him, namely, the Sermon on the Mount, was about sixteen minutes in delivery, at the ordinary rate of speech. His longest prayer reported, commonly called "The Lord's Prayer," was about half a minute. Time them by your own watch, and you will find my estimate accurate. By which I do not mean to say that sermons ought to be only sixteen minutes long, and prayers only half a minute long. Christ had such infinite power of compression that he could put enough into his sixteen minute sermon, and his half minute prayer, to keep all the following ages busy in thought and action. No one but a Christ could afford to pray or preach as short as that, but he meant to teach us compression.

At Selma, Alabama, the other day I was shown a cotton-press by which cotton was put in such shape that it occupied in transportation only one car, where three cars were formerly necessary; and one ship where three ships had been required, and I imagine that we all need to compress our sermons and our prayers into smaller spaces.

And his sermons were so lovely for sentiment and practicality, and simplicity, and illustration: the light of a candle, the crystal of the salt; the cluck of a hen for her chickens; the hypocrite's dolorous physiognomy; the moth in the clothes-closet; the black wing of a raven; the snow-bank of white lilies; our extreme botheration about the splinter of imperfection in some one else's character; the swine fed on the pearls; wolves dramatizing sheep; and the peroration made up of a cyclone in which you hear the crash of a tumbling house unwisely constructed. No technicalities; no splitting of hairs between North and Northwest side; no dogmatics; but a great Christ-like throb of helpfulness. I do not wonder at the record which says, "When he was come down from the mountain great multitudes followed him." They had but one fault to find with his sermon: it was too short. God help all of us in Christian work to get down off our stilts, and realize there is only one thing we have to do:—there is the great wound of the world's sin and sorrow, and here is the great healing plaster of the Gospel. What you and I want to do is to put the plaster on the wound. All-sufficient is this Gospel if it is only applied. A minister preaching to an audience of sailors concerning the ruin by sin and the rescue by the Gospel, accommodated himself to sailor's vernacular, and said, "This plank bears." Many years after, this preacher was called to see a dying sailor, and asked him about his hope, and got the suggestive reply, "This plank bears."

Yea, Christ was lovely in his chief life's work. There were a thousand things for him to do, but his great work was to get our shipwrecked world out of the breakers. That he came to do, and that he did; and he did it in three years. He took thirty years to prepare for that three years' activity. From twelve to thirty years of age we hear nothing about him. That intervening eighteen years I think he was in India. But he came back to Palestine and crowded everything into three years: three winters, three springs, three summers, three autumns. Our life is short, but would God we might see how much we could do in three years. Concentration! Intensification!

Three years of kind words! Three years of living for others! Three years of self-sacrifice! Let us try it.

Aye! Christ was lovely in his demise.

He had a right that last hour to deal in anathematization. Never had any one been so meanly treated. Cradle of straw among goats and camels—that was the world's reception of him! Rocky cliff, with hammers pounding spikes through tortured nerves—that was the world's farewell salutation! The slaughter of that scene sometimes hides the loveliness of the Sufferer. Under the saturation of tears and blood we sometimes fail to see the sweetest face of earth and heaven. Altogether lovely! Can coldest criticism find an unkind word he ever spoke; or an unkind action that he ever performed, or an unkind thought that he ever harbored? What a marvel it is that all the nations of earth do not rise up in raptures of affection for him! I must say it here and now. I lift my right hand in solemn attestation. I love him! and the grief of my life is that I do not love him more. Is it an impertinence for me to ask, do you, my hearer—you, my reader, love him? Has he become a part of your nature? Have you committed your children on earth into his keeping, as your children in heaven are already in his bosom? Has he done enough to win your confidence? Can you trust him, living and dying, and forever? Is your back, or your face, toward him? Would you like to have his hand to guide you? His might to protect you? His grace to comfort you? His sufferings to atone for you? His arms to welcome you? His love to encircle you? His Heaven to crown you?

Oh, that we might all have something of the great German reformer's love for this Christ, which led him to say, "If any one knocks at the door of my breast and says, 'Who lives there?' my reply is, 'Jesus Christ lives here, not Martin Luther.'" Will it not be grand if when we get through this short and rugged road of life we can go right up into his presence and live with him world without end? And if, entering the gate of that heavenly city we should be so overwhelmed with our unworthiness on the one side, and the supernal splendor on the other side, we get a little bewildered and should for a few moments be lost on the streets of gold, and among the burnished temples, and the sapphire thrones, there would be plenty to show us the way, and take us out of our joyful bewilderment: and perhaps the woman of Nain would say, "Come, let me take you to the Christ who raised my only boy to life." And Martha would say, "Come, let me take you to the Christ who brought up my brother, Lazarus from the tomb." And one of the disciples would say, "Come, and let me take you to the Christ who saved our sinking ship in the hurricane on Gennesaret." And Paul would say, "Come, and let me lead you to the Christ for whom I died on the road to Ostia." And whole groups of martyrs would say, "Come, let us show you the Christ for whom we rattled the chain, and waded the floods, and dared the fires." And our own glorified kindred would flock around us, saying, "We have been waiting a good while for you, but before we talk over old times, and we tell you of what we have enjoyed since we have been here, and you tell us of what you have suffered since we parted, come, come, and let us show you the greatest sight in all the place, the most resplendent throne, and upon it the mightiest Conqueror, the Exaltation of Heaven, the Theme of the immortals, the Altogether-great, the Altogether-good, the Altogether-fair, the Altogether-lovely!

THE NEW CENTRAL UNION CHURCH, HONOLULU.

Well, the delightful morn will come,
When my dear Lord will bring me home,
And I shall see his face:
Then with my Saviour, Brother, Friend,
A blest eternity I'll spend,
Triumphant in his grace.

AS DOVES TO THEIR WINDOWS.

Written for "The Christian Herald."

WHO are these that fly as a driven cloud,
As doves to their windows flocking?
List! A wing-like hum rises clear and loud,
As up to the houses of prayer they crowd,
And halt at the thresholds, knocking!

These are they, who under the yoke of sin,
Unto God for relief are crying;
Everlasting life by the Cross to win,
Far from foes without, and from fears within,
For refuge to Jesus are flying!

Ye that watch for souls? Open portals wide;
Draw them in, with their need sore-press'd—
Lead them close to the Saviour's wounded side!
Where from wrath to come they may safely
Only there can they find that blessing!

On the air of heav'n, angel's music floats;
And the bells in its towers are ringing!
Let your songs, oh Church! join the praise-ful notes,

While the lost, in flocks—as doves to their cotes,—
To the Cross on the hill are winging!

Brighton Heights, S. I. J. VAN TASSELL.

Gospel Progress in Hawaii.

Religion and Education Advancing hand-in-hand in the Mid-Pacific State.

READER of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in Hawaii, sends us some interesting information, showing the progress of that country in religious and educational matters. Work on the new college buildings at Oahu is being pushed forward, and the entire structure, when completed, will be one of the handsomest and most substantial in the country. It is a long, commodious building, of modern design, with certain Moorish details that give it a rich and picturesque appearance. The college is intended for both sexes and will have five class rooms, assembly room, library and museum. It is built of native lava rock and is altogether a notable addition to the educational institutions of Hawaii.

Another building, equally notable as indicating the steady progress of Christian principles in that country, is the new temple erected by the Central Union Congregational Church at Honolulu, which is shown in the illustration on this page. The congregation was formed several years ago by the union of the Bethel and Fort street churches, and the new building was finished at a total cost of $127,500. America, England and China contributed toward its construction, much of the material having been brought from these countries. No congregation in Hawaii is better equipped for church work. Japanese, Chinese, Portuguese and native Sunday School classes, Young People's Societies, Bands of Missionary Gleaners, and a score or more of kindred organizations furnish ample opportunity for the activities of the four hundred and sixty-two members throughout the year.

Quite recently, the tenth anniversary of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor connected with the Central Union Church, was celebrated. The exercises were led by the President of the Society, Miss Wing, and well sustained by the members, and showed an earnest and active spirit, evincing the good work wrought by the association in the minds and characters of the young people.

Rev. E. G. Beckwith, the aged pastor of the Central Union Church, lately resigned, after six years of efficient and valued service, and Rev. Alexander S. Twombly, D. D., late of Winthrop Church, Boston, Mass., was chosen as his successor. Dr. Twombly is a man of eminent Christianity and distinguished alike for eloquence and erudition. English is the language of the upper circles in Honolulu, but to be thoroughly efficient in church work, as well as to carry on business successfully in any department of trade, some acquaintance with the native, no less than with Chinese, Japanese, and even Portuguese, is a decided advantage. A cosmopolitan population such as is found in the Sandwich Islands develops some remarkable linguists, and almost all the officials, as well as many business men, speak Hawaiian as fluently as English, while many, in addition, use French, Spanish, German, Italian and Portuguese.

MONEY RECEIVED.

Since our last acknowledgment, the following sums have been received and applied to the various funds indicated by the senders:

From P. H. Miller $1 for the Flood Sufferers in the South; Sister May Hazel Hill 25c. for the Mary Washington Fund; Miss Lydia E. Wheeler $1 for the Door of Hope; Mrs. A. S. Williams $1 for Bella Cooke's work.

For THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School Missionary in the South: Mrs. Addison Jackson, $1; Friends of the Cause, Philadelphia, $2; In His Name, Cheyenne, Wyo, $1. Previously acknowledged, $204.67. Total, $204.67.

For the Bethesda Home for the Reclamation of Fallen Girls: Friend, Bristol, Tenn., $2; —, Texas, $1; In His Name, Colton, N. Y., $1. Previously acknowledged, $334.50. Total, $338.50.

For the Bethany Lodging-House for Homeless Women: Mrs. A. S. Williams, $1; Mrs. Lydia E. Wheeler, $1; In His Name, Colton, N. Y., $1. Previously acknowledged, $1,551.15. Total, $1,554.15.

JOSEPH'S LAST DAYS.

S.S. Lesson for May 6, Gen. 50: 14-26. Golden Text, Prov. 4:18. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

HIS bow abode in strength." These words of his father Jacob which are both descriptive and prophetic, characterize the whole life of Joseph. Many of the true saints of God had blemishes in their character and dark pages in their history as though to show us how no man can stand without the special grace of God. Even Moses failed when he struck the rock in impatience and unbelief, David failed grievously, Asa, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, Josiah, the best among the kings of Judah, all failed in their latter days. But failure is not a necessity. There is grace in God to keep his children faithful, even in the most difficult circumstances. Many might have thought that with all the business and all the temptations of a court, it was far more difficult for Joseph and for Daniel to be true to God than for men who were separated by God to intense communion with him alone, such as Elijah and John the Baptist. Yet both of these latter failed through discouragement while it might be said of both of the witnesses for God in heathen courts: "Their bow abode in strength." The way of man is not in himself: "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps," it is not circumstances which either help or hinder. It is God's grace on his part, appreciated and received on man's part, which alone can keep him faithful.

As a beloved son, and a hated and envied brother, at home; as a slave in Potiphar's house, enjoying the fullest confidence, and then subject to the most terrible temptation and injustice; as the prisoner working out his sentence; and as the prime minister of Pharaoh, Joseph was alike unmoved, alike in all these varied circumstances "the Lord was with Joseph," and his life proved equally to friend and foe that God was true. Shall we not learn from him the unspeakable privilege which God confers upon us when he permits more than ordinary trial and suffering to come upon us? Shall we not take it as a token of our Father's confidence?

Jacob's sun was set. In Egypt, with his sons around him, he had made use of his last remaining strength to speak inspired words and faithful to them before he died. When God showed the patriarchs that their time was come, they did not fight against his summons, but prepared for it, and passed from this world into the next, with a holy, quiet dignity; they "Gave up the Ghost."

The death chamber of Jacob was for those who should continue his witness for God when he was gone, the physicians only entered it when nothing remained but the poor dead body for them to embalm. Jacob's old habit of securing his own interests followed him to the last, even to his dying bed. He was only a refugee in Egypt from the famine-stricken land of Canaan, yet in order to make sure of the promises which God had made to him he must needs have his body carried up out of Egypt to be buried in Abraham's grave at Machpelah. It was "a very great company," both chariots and horsemen, which went up with all the adults of Jacob's family into Canaan and this was after funeral obsequies in Egypt which had already lasted seventy days! More than half a year in all was occupied with the mourning over, and the burying of Jacob.

Joseph, as an obedient and filial son, carried out his father's will to the very letter, although his own very different, and very simple directions about his own burial are sufficient evidence that he saw no actual need for them. But a new and unlooked for trial awaited him. No sooner were his brethren settled down in Egypt after their father's death, than they began to distrust Joseph. Amongst themselves they said: "It may be that Joseph will hate us and will fully requite us all the evil which we did unto him." And they conjured up so much sense of their danger, that they took measures to defend themselves against the creation of their unworthy imagination. Alas, they judged Joseph by themselves. They credited him with no real love to them, and believed that he had acted kindly to them only under constraint of their father's presence! It was a cutting blow to Joseph, but still his bow abode in strength, and the same God in whose companionship he could consent to be sold, imprisoned, defamed, was still with him to understand him, when the nearest of kin misunderstood him.

Perhaps more Christians get off the rails through the misunderstanding and misjudgment of their than any other thing. It comes so close to us when our own flesh and blood impute to us motives altogether foreign to us. Can we consent to this also for the sake of him whose own brethren did not believe in him? There are those who, like the Master, must tread the wine-press alone, as far as those are concerned who by nature are the nearest.

Near Relations

The brethren of Joseph had worked themselves up into such a state of fear that they could not come themselves, and open their hearts to their innocent and unsuspecting brother; they sent a deputation to him, saying: "Thy father did command before he died, saying: So shall ye say to Joseph: Forgive, I pray thee now the transgression of thy brethren, and their sin, for that they did unto thee evil, and now we pray thee, forgive the trespass of the servants of the God of thy father." What then? had they never believed in the sincerity of that love which had been manifested by so many solid proofs! Did all the love and care of Joseph on their behalf go for nothing? Would they never begin to believe in him? The natural heart would soon grow weary of such mistrust. But the Lord was with Joseph and he, "the Creator of the ends of the earth fainteth not, neither is weary," kept his servant unwearied with him.

Joseph wept when they spake unto him, but he was above reproaching them, he wept for the state of heart in them which could allow them thus to doubt him, but he took the suffering from the hand of another, and Bowed Before his God.

Oh, how independent of man it makes us when we carry everything to God! Men may count us callous and indifferent; it is not so; but all which we take from the hand of God comes to us with blessed possibility; it is a burden, the weight of which is borne by him who says: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee." Little by little, it comes to be a reality that everything is easy so long as nothing comes between him and us.

Joseph's brethren then tell down before him and said: "We are thy servants." He had a brother's heart towards them, but they treated him as a master and not as a brother. How many of us have dealt thus with him who, with much greater reason than Joseph, might have been ashamed to call us brethren? Yet he says: "Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth, but I have called you friends; for all things which I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you."

Joseph reassured his brethren, and said: "Fear not, for am I in the place of God? Look at things in his light; it is true you thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass as it is this day, to save much people alive." What a reproof to his brethren! Joseph was a true son of Abraham in whom all the families of earth should be blest; he could not be occupied with his own rights and his own wrongs. God had saved the lives of thousands of people, and had graciously made use of him as the instrument. Should he then be occupied with the petty wrongs of years gone by, when God had used them to bring him into Egypt for such a purpose? Joseph would enlarge his brethren's horizon with his own: "Now therefore, fear ye not, I will nourish you and your little ones. And he comforted them, and spake kindly unto them." At last Joseph's time came to die; he had seen his children and his grandchildren, and now he was to see the face of the God he had trusted and served so long.

The Littleness of Self-life,

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

AN EGYPTIAN COFFIN.

THE verses of the lesson finish the story of Joseph's life.

The brief record ends with the statement that he was embalmed and put in a coffin in Egypt. According to Egyptian custom the coffin would not be buried, but would probably be kept in the home of his son Ephraim. The Egyptian mummies in our museums show how wonderful was the skill the ancient embalmers possessed. So treated, it was possible for Joseph's body to be kept above ground ready for removal, some two or three hundred years later, when the Israelites went up out of Egypt. It is certain that they took the body with them, carried it with them in all their wanderings, and finally buried it at Succoth, in land assigned to Ephraim and associated with Jacob's residence there (see Genesis 33: 17 and Joshua 24: 32.) The traditional tomb of Joseph is still shown, and a picture of it appears on the first page.

Of the events of fifty-four years, these verses are all the sacred chroniclers think it necessary to write. The Bible writers do not attempt to give complete historical records. Their purpose is distinctly ethical and, true to that purpose, they present a series of pictures full of beautiful and minute detail, and leave between them great gaps of time unfilled. A whole chapter is devoted to the events of one day, while, as in this case, a period of half a century is compressed into a few words. We should like to know how Joseph lived after his father died; whether he retained his political power to the end of his life; whether the successor of the Pharaoh, who had advanced him, remembered Joseph's services to the throne and nation, and retained him in office; and many other interesting facts. But the Bible has nothing to say on these matters, or on hundreds of others that we should like to know. It is not its business to satisfy curiosity, or to write history, but simply to tell us such things as, by direct teaching or example, will help us to live better lives. Thus Joseph's trouble with his brothers and with Potiphar's wife, have for centuries been an inspiration and a support, under trial, to young men of every Bible-reading nation; and will be so until the end of time. Of other historical events of the time it has little or nothing to say, but passes on quickly to other scenes of spiritual import.

The record, though brief, is significant. The story of the brothers' apprehension shows how the motives and principles of a good man's life may be misunderstood, even by those nearest him. The brothers did not understand Joseph. To quite understand a good man, we must be good ourselves. The man who does right, because it is right, can never be understood by the man, who does right from motives of policy, from concern for his reputation, or because of his church connection, or from love of some human being. The brothers showed their nature when they entertained the fear, as clearly as Joseph showed his nature when he wept over their distrust.

God meant it unto good. It is great comfort, when we see wicked men planning and plotting evil, to know that God can turn what they do to good. Many a time since Joseph's day, malicious plots to ruin a prominent man have resulted in raising him to greater honor. God has the power, too, of influencing the minds of men to do things which they do unconsciously that they are under any influence but that of their own desires. A remarkable illustration of that power is given by Bishop Bedell in his reminiscences of Bishop Chase, of Ohio. He says that Bishop Chase was staying at the house of a Mr. Beck, of Philadelphia, when a letter reached him from a friend in Europe. The letter referred to some property in America which was claimed by a poor friend of the writer, but the claim could not be substantiated because certain documents could not be found. The letter had been sent to Bishop Chase's home in Ohio, forwarded thence to Washington; missed him there and followed him to Philadelphia. The Bishop mentioned the matter incidentally to Mr. Beck as merely a matter of romantic interest. But Mr. Beck exclaimed, to his surprise, "Why, I know all about those documents, and I am the only man in the world who does know. I have them here, and have had them forty-three years, not knowing to whom they belonged."

They did unto thee evil. Among the legends of the patriarchs there is the following relating to Joseph: After that, Jacob went down into Egypt, that he might see his son Joseph before he died. And when they met, they fell on one another's necks and wept, and kissed; and Jacob said to his son, "Tell me, I pray thee, what evil thy brothers did to thee?" But Joseph answered, "Nay, my father, I will tell thee only how great good the Lord did to me."

God will surely visit you. Charles Finney used to tell a story illustrative of this sublime faith which Joseph exercised in the promise of God. He said that Johannes, the founder of the Carmelites, once addressed the friars at the dinner table in a very cheering and inspiring manner. The Order was very poor, and on this particular day there was nothing in the larder for dinner but dry bread. The bread was put on the table and Johannes spoke so eloquently of the love of God and the joys of following Christ that in spite of the meagreness of the provision, the friars rose refreshed and delighted. They had scarcely retired, before a wealthy friend of the order sent in a quantity of provisions. When Johannes was told, he wept. When asked why he was moved to tears, he said he thought God could have trusted his people a little longer. They were sure he would provide for them, but it seemed that God feared that if he delayed sending, their faith would fail. It is not every one who in adversity can say, "God will surely visit me."

They embalmed him and he was put in a coffin. The cost of embalming an Egyptian king or noble is estimated by Diodorus Siculus at a talent of silver (over $1,000). The knowledge of the mode was said by the Egyptian priests to have come from Osiris. The embalmers first removed part of the brain and destroyed the rest by injecting caustic drugs. An incision was then made along the flank with a sharp Ethiopian stone, and the whole of the intestines removed. The cavity was rinsed out with palm-wine, and afterward scoured with pounded perfumes. It was then filled with pure myrrh, pounded cassia, and other aromatics, except frankincense. This done, the body was sewn up and steeped in natron for seventy days. When the seventy days were accomplished, the embalmers washed the corpse and swathed it in bandages of linen, cut in strips, some of which were 700 yards long, and smeared with gum. They then gave it up to the relative of the deceased, who provided for it a wooden case, made in the shape of a man, in which the dead was placed, and deposited in an erect position against the wall of the sepulchral chamber. An Egyptian noble frequently had in his sepulchral chamber the mummies of several generations of his ancestors, the coffin of each bearing a carved and painted likeness of the face of the dead man or woman, and a hieroglyphic record of name, title and achievements. The family and friends had access to the chamber, which had no smell or taint of death, but was fragrant with the smell of the spices on the bodies. This was the mode of dealing with the bodies of distinguished people. Simpler and rougher, but equally effectual, methods were adopted in the case of common people. It is estimated that, in the one way or the other, no less than four hundred million persons were embalmed before the practice became obsolete.

Marion Harland at Joseph's Tomb.

Continued from first page.

deposit of ages has arisen many feet above the surface upon which our Master walked. We make our way up to the present level: lay our Guide-book upon the wall, and reread, the beautiful story of the interview with the woman of Samaria.

JOSEPH'S TOMB, WITH THE DOME RESTORED.

"It is called Askar, now," we learn, "and lies just there"—a finger is pointed toward Mount Ebal—"a little distance away."

It was an insignificant town then, and she who came carelessly along the path winding around the hill was not a good woman, an ornament to the place. So loose had been her life, and so bold must have been the glance she dropped upon the Galilean peasant, sitting with lax limbs and drooping head—maybe upon the massive steps we have just left—that the impulse of a man who consulted self-respect rather than the opportunity to lift the fallen, would have been to feign ignorance of her presence.

We have never appreciated until at this reading the effrontery of her rejoinder to the request common to the lips of every way-worn man, halting at a well, from the days of Eleazar of Damascus up to this, our day—"Give me to drink." She might be notoriously profligate, getting rid of, or being cast off by one after another of five husbands, and at length braving public opinion and risking a shameful death by living with one who was not her husband; but she had not sunk so low as to give a draught of cold water to a Jew. She was a Samaritan, through and through. Even when her insolence was quelled by the majesty of the Stranger's presence and speech, she vaunted herself upon her great ancestor, Jacob, and the patriarch fathers who worshipped in "this mountain."

"That would be Gerizim," we check the narrative to say, looking up with awe to the summit on which may be traced the ruins of an ancient synagogue. However changed other features of the scene may be, the hills are the same, and it is certain upon what His eyes rested as He spoke of "this mountain."

We have sent the horses out to wait for us at the Tomb of Joseph, and walk the quarter-mile separating us from Jacob's Well. The low-domed mosque beside the last resting-place of the patriarch glares whitely against the background of mountains. The tomb itself is in the enclosure without the mosque, and olive trees grow so near as to shade it when the sunbeams slant from the west.

"For over sixty years his mummy must have traveled with the tribes," Alcides has been making a rough computation upon the fly-leaf of his note-book, based upon the chronological headings of certain pages in the "Palestine Baedeker." "And he had lain in a coffin in Egypt four hundred years. Not such a long time compared with the two or three-thousand-year-old mummies one makes free with in museums; yet one cannot but feel that it must have been a comfort when Joshua at last buried his bones quietly (and for all time, let us hope) in this parcel of ground."

It is a goodly resting-place, guarded by the everlasting hills, upon one of which Eleazar and Phinehas, the son and grandson of Aaron, were interred.

The defile between the Mounts of Blessing and of Cursing, scarcely more than half a mile wide in the narrowest part, widens into what is styled—pathetically enough—the "Wandering Field of Joseph." Again—and I am ashamed to confess for what number of times we might set it down—we discover that our preconceived idea of time and distance in a familiar Bible story is utterly at fault. If a catechised, we should have said that Joseph's search lasted, throughout, perhaps, one day, and the ground covered by the "wandering in the field" measured by acres, not miles. It absolutely startled us to discover that the seventeen-year-old lad had traveled over forty miles—measured by an air-line—after leaving his father at Hebron before he met "a certain man" at Shechem, who had heard Jacob's elder sons say, "Let us go to Dothan." Dothan, itself, is fifty miles from Jacob's home in Hebron.

JESUS AND THE SAMARITAN WOMAN AT JACOB'S WELL, NEAR SYCHAR.

One is moved to compassion and admiration at the thought of the anxious hours and tedious days consumed in the errand, and the steadfastness that held the messenger to it.

"Yet," we remind one another, "the boy was used to such expeditions. Do you recollect the Bedouin girl we met at Baniyas, who had been looking for her father's camels for two days, and had not found them when we saw her? She had slept at night in the tents of her people, as she chanced to come up with them. Joseph no doubt did the same, or laid him down to rest, as darkness fell, upon the grass. That his brethren were in the fields with their flocks shows that the season was not winter."

A shepherd-boy appears in the defile terminating in the "Wandering Field," swinging himself along with the springy tread of the mountain-bred native. His tunic is dark blue cloth, the upper garment of sheepskin made up with the wool inside; a scarf of many colors is twisted about his waist, and a gay "kafiyeh" bound over his head with a black "ikâl," or cord of camel's hair. In the momentary pause caused by the sudden sight of the approaching cavalcade, the kodak has caught him as a "Joseph of today."

MARION HARLAND.

The Story of a Wedge.

BY REV. C. H. MEAD.

FOR more than a hundred miles, I had traveled, having the entire seat to myself. Aside from the selfishness of the average traveler, who, while unwilling to pay for more sitting, is more than willing to monopolize the whole seat, I was glad of plenty of elbow room to enable me to answer some pressing letters.

But as the car began to fill up, I knew the bag at my side must soon give way to another kind of neighbor, and presently down the aisle he came. From a perpendicular standpoint he was small, but horizontally, he was immense, and I viewed his approach with some alarm.

There was a merry twinkle in his eye, and his face beamed with good nature as he said, "Ah, I see you have room for a wedge at your side; allow me to put it in place." With considerable effort and a good deal of tight squeezing, he at last settled down in the seat, remarking, with a merry laugh, "Here I am at last;" and there I was too, and there I was likely to remain, if that wedge did not fly out, or the side of the car give way.

"Have you room enough?" I slyly inquired.

as much like mother spiritually as I resemble father physically."

The tender pathos of his voice, as he said this, made me feel that his sainted mother, were she present, would have no reason to feel ashamed of her son.

As he was about to replace his hat on his head, I noticed in large letters pasted on the lining, these words, "Hinder nobody—help everybody."

"Excuse me, sir," I said, as I pointed to the words, "What is the meaning of that?"

Quickly the tears on his cheeks, were illuminated by a smile as he said—"That's my watchword: I carry it in my hat, have it hung up on my wall at home, and since I went into my present business, I've tried to make it the daily practice of my life."

"May I inquire what your business is?"

"Certainly, sir, my business is serving the Lord, and there is no business like it in the universe. It pays good dividends, brings me no worry, insures me a good standing in the best society; feeds me on the fat of the land, fills my heart with peace and makes me an heir to a kingdom, a robe and a crown. Bankruptcy and bad debts never stare me in the face, and every draft I draw is honored at the bank. Thus, I hinder nobody, and am able to 'help everybody.'"

"Where do you reside?" I asked.

"On Pisgah's top"—and his face fairly shone as he repeated it—"on Pisgah's top."

At first I lived down in the valley among Ezekiel's dry bones, and used to help the multitudes sing—

Could we but climb where Moses stood,
And view the landscape o'er:
Not Jordan's stream nor death's cold flood,
Should fright us from the shore.

"But I moved on and up to my present residence, and now I sing—

From Pisgah's top, the promised land,

I now exult to see:
My hope is full, oh, glorious hope,
Of immortality.

"But I beg your pardon, sir; am I crowding you?"

"Crowding me? not a bit of it. I trust I shall always have room for company like you."

"Thank you, sir, thank you. I'm only a wedge"—with a merry laugh—"but I try to fill every opening the Lord shows me. Excuse me but how far are you going?"

"I get off at Albany," I replied. He looked at me as if taking my measure, and, after a moment he said:

"I hope you are not a member of the legislature."

"No, sir," I said, "I'm a Methodist."

"Give me your hand. I am so glad to know you are going in the opposite direction. A man may go to heaven by way of the legislature, but I would as soon think of going where I could get cholera in order to secure good health, as expect to serve God by becoming a member of the legislature. Ah, here is Albany! Good day, sir; don't forget the wedge. And if you will, I wish you would remember the watchword—"Hinder Nobody—Help Everybody."

HIS CARE.

GOD holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad:
If other hands should hold the key,
Or if he trusted it to me,
I might be sad.

What if to-morrow's cares were here
Without its rest?
I'd rather he unlock the day,
And, as the hours swing open, say,
"Thy will is best."

I cannot read his future plan,
But this I know:
I have the smiling of his face,
And all the refuge of his grace,
While here below.

Enough: this covers all my want,
And so I rest:
For what I cannot, he can see,
And in his care I sure shall be Forever blest.

REV. JOHN PARKER.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

To be With Talmage
EDITOR.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash or postal notes.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

WILL YOU HELP?

FROM many quarters come words of warm encouragement and approval of the plan proposed by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD last week, for affording an opportunity to readers to engage in practical Christian work. The proposition was specially addressed to those who might feel called upon to serve the Master in a quiet, unostentatious way, but who, until now, had been hindered, through unacquaintance with the field, from making a start. We believe that there are numbers of earnest Christian men and women, admirable in all that relates to life and character, yet who feel their lives to be incomplete and who long to do something for Jesus. Their highest dream of personal service would be to humbly follow the example of Him who not only taught the multitudes but fed, clothed, helped and comforted them with his own hands.

The early discontinuance of the Food Fund, which has already been longer in existence than any other temporary relief organization in this city during the present year, will leave many destitute families in a most pitiable condition; for, despite the fact that thousands have been relieved by the Fund and started anew in the battle of life, with fresh hope and renewed spirituality, there are many who, through idleness, sickness or family affliction, are still subjects for sympathy. We have a number of such cases on the lists of the Food Fund, all known to our missionaries as worthy and deserving. Those of our readers residing in New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, or nearby towns, who desire to personally undertake volunteer Christian work, have here an opportunity to begin. Any reader can become personally interested in the welfare of one destitute family, by sending name and address to the publisher of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who will reply with all the necessary particulars.

Many will doubtless recognize in this offer the providential opening of a way they have long been seeking; walking and working in which will afford a satisfaction the world's pleasures cannot give. There is no better incentive to spiritual growth than the exercise of Christian charity and kindness; and when this can be done quietly and known only to God and ourselves, it is all the more fruitful of blessing. A multitude of experiences has shown that time, effort and money devoted to such work, return tenfold interest to the giver.

SPRING SUGGESTIONS.

THE spring is suggestive of God and heaven and the resurrection day. The eye must be blind that does not see God's footsteps in the new grass and hear his voice in the call of the swallow at the eaves. In the white blossoms of the orchard we find suggestions of those whose robes have been made white in the blood of the Lamb. A spring morning is a door opening into heaven. So autumn mothers a great many moral and religious suggestions. Seasons of corn husking and the gorgeous woods that are becoming the catalogue of the dead year, reminding the dullest of his own fading and departure. But summer fatigues and weakens and no man keeps his soul in as desirable a frame, unless by positive resolution and especial imploration. Pulpit and pew often get stupid together, and ardent devotion is adjourned until September.

But who can afford to lose two months out of each year when the years are so short and so few? He who stops religious growth in July and August will require the next six months to get over it. No, he never recovers. When the season comes, when the fields are full of leafage and life let us not be lethargic and stupid. Let us remember that iniquity does not cease in summer time. She never takes a vacation. She never leaves town. The child of want living up that dark alley has not so much fresh air nor sees as many flowers as in winter time. In cold weather the frost blossoms on her window pane and the snow falls in wreaths in the alley. God pity the wretchedness that pants and sweats and festers, and dies on the hot pavement in the cellars of the town. Let us remember that our exit from this world will more probably be in Summer than in any other season, and we can not afford to die at a time when we are least alert and worshipful. At midsummer the average of departures is larger than in cool weather. The sunstrokes, the dysenteries, the fevers, the choleras, have affinity for July and August. On the edge of summer death often stands whetting his scythe for a great harvest. We are more careful to have our doors locked and our windows fastened and our burglar alarm set at times when thieves are most busy, and at a season of the year when diseases are most active in their burglaries of human life, we need to be ready.

Our charge, therefore, is, make no adjournment of your religion. Whether you stay in town, or seek the farmhouse, or the seashore, or the mountains, be faithful in prayer, in Bible-reading and in attendance upon Christian ordinances. He who throws away two months of his life wastes that for which many a dying man would have been willing to give all his possessions, when he found that "the harvest was past and the summer was ended."

THE DEMOCRACY OF RELIGION.

IF in the Pantheon at Paris, you smite your hand against the wall among the tombs of the dead, you will hear a very strange echo coming from all parts of the Pantheon just as soon as you smite the wall. And I suppose it is so arranged that every stroke of sorrow among the tombs of bereavement ought to have found, long and oft-repeated echo of sympathy all around the world.

What a beautiful theory it is—and it is a Christian theory—that Englishman, German, Scotchman, Irishman, Norwegian, Frenchman, Italian, Russian, are all akin. Of one blood all nations. I was never more impressed with this truth than on the day the body of the Prince Imperial of France was brought to London. I was that day speaking in Exeter Hall while the minute guns were sounding. The Earl of Kintore, the distinguished Scottish lord, was presiding, and in his opening speech he said: "We have come here to listen to an American while he talks about 'Happy Homes,' but, alas! for that home at Chiselmurst." And all heads were bowed, and the tears rolled down the cheeks of the people. Then I thought: "This is one grief, one agony." It was not because that boy was the son of an Empress; it was not because that boy died fighting for the English government; it was because he was the only son of his mother, and she a widow. Of one blood all nations—high, low, titled, rich, poor. O, the democracy of religion!

That is a very beautiful inscription over the door in Edinburgh—over the door of the house where John Knox used to live. It is getting somewhat dim now, but there is the inscription fit for the door of any household: "Love God above all and your neighbor as yourself." I think we must be brothers and sisters all. I think that all nations must belong to one family, and that they must have the same great mother—God.

HEALTH A DUTY.

THE church of God cannot afford to be indifferent to the attempts of our health officers for the rescue of our cities from the malarious and miasma, and when word comes that the last precaution against disease has been established, the churches could afford to adjourn one day and go out and thank God on the borders of the redeemed districts. The fact is that this old world needs to be sweetened. Flowers can do part of the work by launches of aroma, kind seeds can make brighter sidewalk and garden; but the greatest of all the sweetening influences is the Gospel of your Christ and mine. Its founder was the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley. When his Gospel has done its work the earth will be girdled with acacia and verberna and china aster and foxglove and rose of amaranth, and instead of effluvia will be heliotrope and the only carnage will be that of dahlia reddening the plains; and instead of epidemic there shall be general health that will keep the race unto old age.

DR. TALMAGE'S SILVER JUBILEE.

IN the matter of the reception to be tendered to Dr. Talmage on the completion of the twenty-fifth year of his pastorate in Brooklyn, the following correspondence has passed between prominent citizens of this city and the pastor of the Tabernacle:

BROOKLYN, March 30, 1894.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D.,
Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle, Brooklyn, N.Y.

REVEREND AND DEAR SIR:—The forthcoming completion of the twenty-fifth year of your pastorate at the Brooklyn Tabernacle offers a convenient and welcome opportunity to appropriately testify to our high appreciation of your distinguished services for God and humanity, and by public demonstration to emphasize our endorsement of the great and good work you have done for our city, our nation and the world.

We therefore respectfully request you to appoint a day when you will meet such of your fellow-citizens as may feel disposed to join in honoring one who, for a quarter of a century, has held so prominent a place among the public teachers of the age, and with the assurance of our profound esteem, we are,

Very sincerely yours,

Charles A. Schieren, Mayor; Hon. J. S. T. Stranahan; B. F. Tracy, Ex-Secretary of Navy; B. D. Sullivan, James Howell, Ex-Mayor and President of Brooklyn Bridge; J. W. Hunter, Ex-Mayor; David A. Boddy, Ex-Mayor; Samuel Bell, Ex-Mayor; F. A. Schroeder, Ex-Mayor and President Germania Savings Bank; General J. B. Woodward, General Stewart L. Woodford; Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D.D.; Bernard Peters; Prof. Freeman J. Backus, Principal Packer Institute; Ex-congressman Jas. C. Hendrix; Dr. S. Fleet Sprir; General Alfred C. Barnes; Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.; Pastor of Plymouth Church; Rev. C. Outcalt Hall, D.D.; Pastor First Presbyterian Church; Rev. David Gregg, D.D.; Pastor Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church; J. C. Skene, M.D.; Prof. Chas. E. West, Calvin E. Pratt, Judge Supreme Court; Edgar M. Cullen, Judge Supreme Court; Nathaniel H. Clement, Judge City Court; Wm. J. Osborne, Judge City Court; A. Van Vek, Judge City Court; Henry A. Moore, Judge of County Court; Rev. C. W. Parsons, D.D.; Pastor Hanson Place M. E. Church; Rev. Thos. B. McLeod, D.D.; Pastor Clinton Ave. Congregational Church; General Horatio King; Murat Halstead; S. B. Dutcher, Prest. Hamilton Trust Co.; Felix Campbell, Prest. People's Trust Co.; W. H. Hazard, Prest. Fulton National Bank; Chas. E. Young, Prest. National City Bank; Ex-Judge James Tracy, General G. T. Christensen, Prest. Brooklyn Trust Co.; J. G. Jenkins, Prest. First National Bank; Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D.; Pastor Hanson Place Baptist Church; Rev. L. Wintner, D.D.; Rabbi Temple Beth Elahim; Col. Alex. S. Bacon; Geo. H. Southard, Prest. Franklin Trust Co.; H. E. Hutchinson, Prest. Brooklyn Bank; Wm. B. Davenport, Public Administrator; Post-master A. T. Sullivan, and many others.

To which Dr. Talmage made the following reply:

BROOKLYN, April 12th, 1894.

To His Honor, Mayor Schieren, and other Gentlemen of the Reception Committee.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I feel more gratitude than I can express for your generous letter inviting me to appoint a time and place where some kind of expression can be made concerning my twenty-five years of service in Brooklyn. The invitation is the more impressive, because it is signed by friends in all professions and occupations, and in all denominations of religion. I accept your invitation, and suggest that the meeting proposed be held the second week of May and in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, if such time and place are convenient.

Again thanking you for this evidence of friendship and good neighborhood, I am,

Yours heartily,

T. DEWITT TALMAGE.

At the next meeting of the Committee the exact date of the occasion, which promises to assume international proportions, will be determined. Enthusiastic admirers of Dr. Talmage are planning for a three days' celebration.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

D. Pillow, Augusta, Ga. How many newspapers are published in the world and what proportion is American?

About 48,000 papers and magazines of all descriptions of which about 20,000, or two-fifths, are printed in this country.

Old Subscriber, Bridgeport, Conn. Can you inform me as to the number of pensioners on the rolls of the United States government? A friend contends that there are nearly a million?

Your friend is not very far short of the actual total, which in February last was 966,400, with fully half a million more applications under consideration.

Mrs. Agnes C. Crawford, Bradley Beach, N. J. Could you suggest a short Biblical name (similar to "Mizpah"), for a house here?

Some of the following may be suitable: Hiel, ("God Lives"); Pethuel, ("Mouth of God"); Phaneul, ("Face of God"); Asher, ("Happiness, or Blessed"); Tabur, ("Purity").

Mr. John Gibson, Nottawa, Mich., sends some stirring verses, the theme of which is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We give an extract:

It enters our homes, with wonderful grace,
Tis a friend we can trust, as seen on its face;
Each one rushes forth, the first hand-shake to share,
To glean o'er its pages, to see what is there.

We commence at the first, and read to the last,
Tis the sound of a bugle, we know by the blast;
Each note is a warning, the evil to shun,—
A beacon to light us, till earth's work is done.

Mrs. L. W. W., Greenfield, Mass. In what way will the dead who go to heaven be affected by the resurrection, when it takes place?

The mystery of the condition of glorified spirits cannot be explained or understood. The Scriptures, however, plainly intimate that they will receive a glorified body, probably one similar to that in which Christ appeared to his disciples after his resurrection. (See I. Cor. 15: 35-50 and II. Cor. 5: 1-8.)

J. A., Plymouth, Pa. Who was Tertullus, mentioned in Acts 24: 1? Was he a Jew or a Gentile?

He was probably a Gentile of Roman, or, at all events, of Italian origin, a professional orator or advocate, or lawyer, who was retained by the high priest and Sanhedrim to accuse Paul at Caesarea. The Sanhedrim doubtless engaged him, as they themselves were unfamiliar with Latin (in which the proceedings would have to be conducted before Felix), and ignorant of the procedure of a Roman law-court.

A Student, Brooklyn, N. Y. If a person has once strayed, under fierce temptation, from the path of virtue and then repented and earnestly sought God's forgiveness, which, it is believed, has been granted, and if that person since that time has led a life pure in deed and thought—may that person marry one who neither knows nor suspects that there has been evil in the past? I have sought the Scriptures for light without avail.

The person who has sinned and repented is not, we believe, thereby debarred from marriage. It would, however, in our opinion, be a grievous wrong to marry without informing the unsuspecting person of the past sin. So much is due and is a part of the penalty of the transgression. Even as a matter of prudence it is necessary. It will save the guilty party the continual haunting apprehension of the disclosure coming from others. A voluntary confession also evokes sympathy and respect, which cannot be expected if the confession is made after detection.

B. S. Wilder, Williamsville, Ont. In all probability she was.—E. P. Searles, Chattanooga, Tenn. The point is to make the best of the situation with the material at hand. Even a slight reform is better than none. Radical reformers accomplish little and all great reforms have moved by slow stages.—Rev. R. E. Williamson, Plymouth, Pa. For Jameson, Faussett & Browne's Commentary, write to Fleming H. Revell Co., publishers, 112 Fifth avenue, N. Y.—John Burroughs, Ratan, Pa. They should not be held in the church, but in some other building.—B. Brandon Becklund, Minneclosa, Manitoba, Can. can utilize to advantage any back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD or other religious literature our readers may send him.—Netic Council, Meigsville, O. Write to Scribner's, publishers, N. Y., who will doubtless be able to supply such a book as you want.—Sarah B. Osborn, Port Byron, N. Y. We cannot.—Miss Belle H. Bacon, Malden, Mass. 1. We do not know the institution to which you refer. No such statement could have appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. 2. The Tabernacle Emergency Fund was long ago completed.—Subscriber, Racine, Wis. 1. The only way is patient persistence. If you have written what the publishers want, you will not have to wait long. 2. They are excellent institutions. 3. Address American Press Association, 47-49 Park place, N. Y.—R. Crane, Nottawa, Ont. It is published by Nelson D. F. Randolph, N. Y., price 50¢.—Subscriber. Address her care of Mr. David Jannal, Jerusalem, Turkey. Remittance may be made by postal order.—Shut-in. Your gift to the Food Fund cannot be utilized, but we have placed a small sum to your credit for the Fund, and will return the articles if you will send us your address.—Miss J. R. Balch, Washington, D. C. Read the article in line with your suggestion in last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD.—Mrs. Mary S. Budd, Albion, N. Y. Regarding the explanation in "The Mail-Bag" of that passage of Scripture relative to a camel going through the eye of a needle, I have read that the walls of Jerusalem had holes in them, which were called "needle's eyes." Any one who came to the gate late in the evening with a loaded camel, the gate being shut, he could not find entrance until the camel was unloaded. The animal then crawled through on his knees, the load being pushed through after him. Lady Duff Gordon writes of seeing one go through this way. So the rich man must give up his riches, humble himself on his knees and accept salvation through the suffering and merits of Christ alone.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

CHOLERA IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

A CABLE dispatch from the Turkish Capital announces the gloomy news that cholera is alarmingly prevalent in the city. It appears that for several months past the disease has raged in the poorer quarters, and not much attention was paid to it. During the past few days, however, it has made its appearance in districts where the wealthy classes live, and has caused a panic. One of its victims was Calliadi Bey, a councillor of State, who died within a few hours of his seizure. A death also took place in the Legation of the Greek Government, the victim being a servant of one of the attaches. The legation has now been removed to Therapia, a town seven miles distant, and other foreign legations are preparing for flight. The Turkish Government is being urged to take vigorous measures to prevent the further spread of the disease, but little result is expected from any measures it may take. Something more than a spasmodic ablution is necessary to put Constantinople in good sanitary condition. Many of its streets are steep hills, similar to the one shown in our illustration, and are paved with rough blocks graded like a staircase. The houses thirty years ago were chiefly of wood and mud, but latterly there have been many fires, and when a house has been burned, a stone mansion has been built on its site. The city consequently presents the strange appearance of magnificence and squalor side by side. The streets are extremely filthy and foul-smelling, as the inhabitants fling their refuse into them. The only active scavengers are the dogs, of whom thousands, ownerless and homeless, prowl about the city, obtaining a precarious subsistence from the food thrown out of the houses into the open streets. The conditions are favorable for the development of cholera, and for its spread, it brought into the city from the Sultan's Asiatic provinces. Should this outbreak become epidemic, the fatalistic Turk will probably regard it as a judgment from Allah, and appeal to him for its removal, rather than exert himself to cleanse the city and establish sanitary regulations. Many men regard moral maladies in the same way, attributing their subjection to vice to the natural depravity of a fallen nature, overlooking the fact that by negligence and voluntary exposure to evil associations, they have contributed to their own fall. The advice of the prophet applies to both cases: "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well." (Isa 1: 16.)

A Million Dollar Tomb.

A remarkable will was offered for probate in New York last week. It was that of an aged widow who died on April 1, and it was signed only two days before her death. It devised the whole of her estate, valued at a million dollars, in trust to the trustees of Woodlawn Cemetery for the purpose of erecting a mausoleum in their grounds. The will directs that the mausoleum shall be for herself and her husband, and father and mother, the bodies to be disinterred and placed in the mausoleum on its completion. It is said that the widow derived the bulk of her property from her mother, whose only child she was; her husband also was wealthy and he left her all his property. Shortly before her death, she told an acquaintance that there had been an agreement between herself, her husband and her mother, that they should leave their respective estates to each other on condition that the survivor erect the most costly mausoleum in the world for their joint occupation. The will was drawn up in fulfillment of this agreement. The widow was childless, but has two aunts and several cousins still living who may contest the will. Their plea will doubtless be the usual one that the testator was of unsound mind. Whether the will alone is a sufficient proof of mental aberration may be questioned. She merely directed that her money be spent after her death as many perfectly sane people spend theirs during life—in lavish and foolish display. The difference in folly is only one of degree. Whether the courts decide that the woman was sane or insane is matter of small concern to her now. The momentous fact for her and all who like her use their money for their own gratification, is that he who is the Judge of all the earth has characterized them as fools. (Luke 12: 20.)

A Clergyman's Hotel Bill.

Among the recently published reminiscences of Dr. Tappan, the agent of the American Home Missionary Society, is one of a pleasant surprise which the good old preacher had in a country village during one of his journeys. He was on a long tour in Pennsylvania, and one afternoon dined at an inn at Mattawaukeag. He was advised to remain there to sleep, as there was but one hotel in the town next on his route, and that was kept by a man who was noted for his irreligious life, who disliked preachers and might not treat him courteously. Dr. Tappan, however, was not easily scared and he was anxious to proceed with his journey, so he went forward. He reached the hotel and encountered the landlord, who showed him no antipathy, but gave him a good room. What surprised the clergyman more, however, was that when the hotel was closed for the night, a message was brought to his room from the proprietor asking him if he would conduct worship. Dr. Tappan gladly consented, and, going downstairs, found the family, guests and servants assembled. He read a chapter and prayed, to the evident satisfaction of all present. He was asked to hold another service in the morning, which he did. He then packed up his traps and went to the desk to settle his bill. "Already settled," said the proprietor. "You've paid. When butchers and drovers and peddlers stay with me I make a point of trading with them. I've done the same by you. I had your commodity, and, although I don't set up for a judge in such matters, I considered it a good article. You've paid. Good-morning, sir. Glad to see you on the same terms whenever you are in this neighborhood." Many like the hotel-keeper appreciate what he somewhat irreverently referred to as Dr. Tappan's "commodity," who also like him do not know how valuable it really is. If they did, they would not rest until they had secured their own personal interest in it. (John 4: 10.)

A Forsaken Daughter.

Inquiries are being made for the relatives of a girl who, in 1876, was left in the convent of Hochelaga to be educated. Her mother was an invalid who spent the summer of that year in Canada, in the hope that the bracing climate might restore her health. She made little progress, however, and being about to take a long journey, she left the child in the convent, prepaying her expenses for a year. She told the Superior that if the funds left were exhausted before her return, to write to an address in New York and money would be promptly remitted. Nothing more was seen of, or heard from, her. At the end of the year, application was made to the firm in New York, and a reply was received to the effect that the lady had died suddenly, without making any provision for the child. Her husband was wealthy and was, at the time, somewhere on the Pacific coast, but his exact address was unknown to the firm. The convent made no further inquiries, but sent the child to a charitable institution, where she was educated and ultimately a situation was obtained for her as a domestic servant. She drifted from place to place, and is now in Montreal. Her employer is a kindly lady, who has taken an interest in her case, and is aiding her with means to discover her father. If she succeeds, it is doubtful whether she will gain much by the discovery. A man who has made no effort in eighteen years to trace his child, is not likely to prove an affectionate parent. It may be hoped that the girl will be led to seek her heavenly Father.

but a similar fate has often befallen nobler beings. Men whom God made capable of soaring to his presence, have been dragged down by the wealth they secure and being unable to relinquish it, have died eternally. (Matt. 19: 22.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, son of the editor of this journal, was installed as pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Pittsburg, Pa., on Thursday, April 19. Dr. Talmage preached the installation sermon.

The liberality of the Chinese native Christians is very marked. In one town 66 converts were baptized lately, and gave contributions to the value of $750.

It is computed that the Number of Protestant missionaries, male and female, now on active service in heathen lands is nearly seven thousand.

The Report of the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church shows an income of $57,553, of which $70,000 were collected from the Sunday Schools and churches.

Col. Charles H. Banes has been Elected Corresponding Secretary of the American Anti-Slavery Publication Society to succeed the late Dr. Griffith, and he has accepted the position.

Union Evangelistic meetings of the Methodist, Baptist and Congregational Churches in Portland, Mich., under the lead of Mr. A. H. Rauton, resulted in more than 200 professed conversions in two weeks.

The next General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, North, will meet in the First Presbyterian Church, Saratoga, N. Y., Thursday, May 17. The opening sermon will be preached by the retiring moderator, Willis G. Craig D.D.

General Mellinet, of the French Army, who lately died the age of ninety-five years, had throughout his life abstained from stimulants of all kinds, and did not know even the taste of wine. To the last he was healthy and vigorous.

Great success attended the services conducted by the Rev. B. Fay Mills in Montreal. Hundreds professed conversion, and those whose memory carries them back many years affirm that never before has that city been so stirred.

Two eminent missionary families are to have a new bond of union. A marriage, which will be celebrated at Shanghai, China, at the end of this month, is announced of Howard Taylor, M. D., son of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, to Miss Geraldine Guinness, daughter of Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, of the Congo Mission.

Dr. E. Payson Hammond has recently been holding a series of meetings in Springfield, Ill., where twenty-eight years ago he conducted revival services. Many who were then children and were converted came now with their children, and the evangelist had the great pleasure of hearing one after another testify to the good work done so many years ago.

A New Work on Prophecy by Mrs. M. Baxter, whose articles on the Sunday School Lessons appear week by week in this journal, has just been published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is entitled, "The Lord's Coming," and its fifteen chapters cover the period from the Parousia to the Millennium. 104 pages; paper cover. May be obtained, price fifteen cents, by application to this office, 91-95 Bible House, New York.

The Parliamentary Election in Japan shows the decadence of the party which was so bitterly opposed to foreigners; and it is noticeable that a profession of the Christian faith has not been a hindrance to the candidacy of two or three of the ablest men who have been elected to the body, and against whom the charge of their foreign religion was made. It is expected that the choice of a presiding officer will fall upon a Christian.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has been holding successful meetings at Canton, Ohio. Three churches united in the movement. The local journals say that on Sunday, April 8, no less than five thousand persons were present, and over three hundred gave in their names for special prayer, and expressed earnest desire for salvation. Afternoon meetings have been held each day in the First Methodist Church, and each evening at the three churches simultaneously.

The Roman Catholic Church is having trouble with one of its most distinguished teachers of a similar character to that of the Presbyterian Church with Prof. Briggs. A work written by Dr. Hulst, Rector of the Catholic University in Paris teaches that the Bible is really inspired only in matters of morals and faith, and in other respects it cannot lay claims to absolute inerrancy. It is said that Dr. Hulst has a large following among the Roman Catholic priests of France, Germany and England.

The American School of Christian Philosophy will hold its annual session at Chataqua, N. Y., July 3 to 12. Among the speakers are Dr. Amory H. Bradford, Professor Purves of Princeton, Dean George Hodges of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary, Cambridge; Vice-Chancellor MacCracken, of New York; President H. M. Booth, of Auburn; Professor Graham Taylor, of Chicago; President W. G. Ballentine, of Oberlin, and Dr. George Dana Boardman, of Philadelphia.

The revival work in New York maintains its interest and its success. Many out-of-town people were among the converts last week. The noon services at N.Y.'s Theatre were continued, and Mr. and Mrs. Wilson sang their Gospel songs to large audiences. Every afternoon at 3.30 a song service was held in the Masonic Temple which was largely attended. This week the meetings in the Masonic Temple are continued, and Tr. A. C. Dixon will preach each day except Saturday. His subject is, "The Lights and Shad. of City Life," and includes sermons on "The Home of the City," "Bread Winners," "Streets of the City," and "Amusements."

Contributions for the Relief Fund from the following, are acknowledged:

Liberty Falls, N. Y., 1 pkg. clothing; J. P. Wilson, North Hardyston, N. J., 1 b g clothing; Mrs. Maer, New York City, 1 pkg. clothing; Mrs. J. L. Roe, West Milford, N. J., 1 bag clothing; Mrs. E. C. Knapp, Glenham, N. Y., 1 pkg. clothing; A. H. Johnston, Milford, N. H., 1 b c clothing; Mrs. D. O. Eagle Mills, N. Y., 1 bag clothing; Mr. John P. Willard, North Hardyston, N. J., 11 bags of onions; 1 lbs. of potatoes; 1 box clothing, no name; 1 barrel clothing, no name.

THE CHOLERA'S MARCH—A STREET SCENE IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

ther, of whom the Psalmist said: "When my father and my mother forsake me, the Lord will take me up." (Ps. 27: 10.)

An Eagle Drowned by a Fish.

A remarkable incident, which occurred at the mouth of Octoraro Creek, is reported by the "Baltimore Sun." It states that four miles above Port Deposit, there is a bed of gravel, where shad, rock and herring go to spawn. In the spring and early summer large schools of fish go to this locality, and bald and gray eagles flock to the vicinity for the purpose of preying on them. The water on the Cecil county side is about ten feet deep, and being clear the fish are readily seen by their winged enemies. A gray eagle saw a rockfish in the water and pounced upon him, sinking his talons deep into the sides of the fish. When the bird attempted to arise, he found the load more than he could carry. He could not release his hold, either. Finally he was dragged under the water and drowned. The current carried the eagle and the fish into a fishpot, where the bodies were found, with the hold of the eagle unrelaxed. The bird measured six feet from tip to tip of the wing. It was an inglorious death for the king of birds to die:

SERMONS WORTH READING

Helpful Discourses for the People.

THE DIVINE DRAWING.

A Sermon Preached in Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, by Pastor

A. J. Gordon, D.D. Text: John 6: 44: "No man can come to me except the Father which sent me draw him."

HERE are two sayings in the Gospel of John which constitute a kind of twofold cord of redemption—"No man cometh unto the Father but by me," says Jesus, and "No man can come to me except the Father draw him." Jesus Christ is the mediator between God and man. In him alone does the current of human love rise high enough to reach the throne, and through him alone does the divine love descend low enough to touch the lowest point of the footstool. The full bucket let down into the well is certain to lift the empty one against which it is balanced. The full heart of Jesus Christ coming down from heaven can alone lift the empty heart of the sinner up to heaven. Human love is not sufficient of itself and never can be to love God with all the heart and with all the mind and with all the strength. And, therefore, Christ came to strengthen and to reinforce it. In other words, we need a higher love than our own to enable us to love the Most High. We need God's love in our hearts to enable us to come to Christ and love him. We need Christ's love in the heart to enable us to love God and to come to him.

The Help Needed.

1. I wish to remind you then in the first place that by nature we are fallen and cannot even come to Christ without God's help. I know that this a very humbling doctrine. It is the sharpest blade of the two-edged sword of truth and one most likely to cut off the hearer's ears when it is wielded. But the truth is always the most wholesome thing to hear. If a man has fallen out of his nest in Paradise and broken his wings and dislocated his limbs, it is not a kindness to go to him and tell him that he has nothing to do but to exert the strength that is in him and that doing so, he can "mount up on wings as eagles, he can run and not be weary and walk and not faint." If our wings of spiritual desire and power are broken, he is our best friend who tells us so.

But thank God this is not all we have to tell men. If it were, our Gospel would not be glad-tidings but sad-tidings. The moment we utter the unhappy truth that we are by nature fallen sinners, we are to add the blessed truth and repeat the sweet words of God, "Ye have seen what I did and how I bore you on eagles' wings and brought you unto me." I go out into my garden after a terrific storm and find that my grapevine which for years had climbed into the sunlight and basked in its beams has fallen down, its leaves all torn and its boughs all bespattered with mud. And I began to talk to my vine, "Oh, vine you need to be pruned and enriched. I must put ashes about thy roots, and pour water above thee to cause thee to revive. And then you will lift yourself into the light and warmth." Then I do my best at pruning and enriching, but each day as I walk in my garden I see the vine lying there. It stretches up its tendrils indeed like supplicating fingers to the sky; but because it can find nothing upon which to lay hold it can only still creep on the ground.

Suppose that instead of talking any more to my vine I build a trellis upon which it can lift itself into the sunlight. Ah, that is Christ's method! He casts a glance of pity upon us and says: "Not simply, 'I am far above, ye are from beneath.' 'No man can come to me except the Father draw him.' But listen. 'I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee,' saith Jehovah. But how O, Father? 'I have drawn thee with the cords of love and the bands of a man.' But what love? and what man? I will tell you, 'This is my beloved Son, hear ye him.' And the Son says: 'I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me.' The Cross is the divine trellis for lifting men's affections to God. The heart that was striving in vain to love the Father, and was only falling back to earth beaten and baffled after each effort finds at last its firm support. "The preaching of the Cross is to them that perish foolishness, but unto us which are saved it is the power of God." It is the power which draws me to Christ and through him to the Father. The holy Christ dazzles us but he does not draw us. I believe that if while we are sinners we could have a sight of the spotless and awful holiness of Christ, we should be more likely to run from than to fly to him.

Drawing by Invitation.

2. Observe, secondly, that God in inviting us to be disciples of Christ draws us while he calls us. We cannot conceive of such a thing as possible that God should say "Come to Christ, but you cannot come except I draw you, and I have not chosen to draw you." That would be to bar the door while calling us to enter it; to hold us off with one hand while beckoning us near with the other. No, God's invitations are always furnished with attractions—the most direct and powerful that can be brought to bear. The promises of Scripture are not guide-boards pointing to heaven. Just see how it is. The great evangelical promise is: "He that believeth on the Son shall not perish but have everlasting life." But what is the basis of the promise? "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." Here is the divine fact that energizes this promise and gives to it its magnetic power.

Every one who preaches or repeats this promise must have something of the divine attraction in himself in order to succeed. If an invitation were all that is necessary, God might have ordered that the Gospel be placarded upon marble tablets in our churches, or graven in deep-cut letters over the porches of our sanctuaries. But he has required the Gospel to be preached by consecrated men, that through them God might draw while he invites. A minister may have a brilliant intellect and a sonorous voice and a graceful delivery, and thus furnished he may preach the Gospel for years without winning a soul to Christ. God must dwell in him by his Spirit in order that when he says, "Come," he may draw as well as invite. Fenelon had such communion with God that his very face and presence were magnetic, and when Lord Peterborough, a polished sceptic, had spent a night with him at an inn, he rushed forth in the morning, saying, "If I stay in this man's presence any longer, I shall become a Christian in spite of myself." Fenelon said "Come to Christ," and the Father who dwelt in him drew so strongly that it was well-nigh impossible to resist the attraction. President Finney was once visited with such power of the Holy Ghost that he seemed literally "to be filled with all the fullness of God," and then when he went forth to preach and the people were drawn to him from miles around, as to a sort of spiritual lodestone. He said "Come," and the Father that dwelt within him drew him. That is what God wants us all to be, me in the pulpit, you in the pews—spiritual Magnets to Draw Men.

And we must constantly beware that through our worldly associations we do not become demagnetized. You can see the difference in Peter as he appears on two memorable occasions. As he stood warming himself at the fire in the High Priest's palace on the night of his Master's trial, he was simply demagnetized. Instead of drawing any to the Lord, he was himself drawn away from him into denial and sin. But on the day of Pentecost he had been remagnetized, and as he stood up the people could not resist him, and three thousand were drawn to Christ under a single sermon. Ah, here is the lesson which we want to learn—to make our life and example reinforce our words, so that when our mouths say "Come," our conduct shall not say "Go."

Preaching was never more universal than to-day. Ministers are preaching and laymen are preaching: young men are preaching and young women are preaching. The Scripture is fulfilled. The Spirit and the bride say "Come," and every one that heareth is saying "Come." But in spite of this no man can come except the Father draw him. And his way is to draw through consecrated unworldly, self-denying, sincere Christians. The want of the church and the demand of God is the same, "ministers that can draw," but except God be in us of a truth, our drawing will be quite as likely to be away from God as to him.

The Chief Attraction.

And lastly the great attraction is Christ crucified. He who cries "come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden," shows himself heavy laden with our sins, and laboring in agony and bloody sweat for our redemption. Here is a blessedly safe attraction, one which separates while it saves; which rebukes our sins while it forgives them, and so guards the purity of God against intrusion. As the rose attracts by its fragrance and wards off with its sharp thorns, and so protects itself against the destroyer, Christ's cross condemns sin in the flesh by the penalties of a violated law there poured forth, and so keeps off the false and the insincere. But it sets forth also all the blessed love of God, and so draws the penitent and sorrowful.

I desire now to remind you, my hearers, of these three unquestionable facts:

1. God has been drawing you all your life, though you may not have recognized the fact. God's attractions are for the most part invisible and unrecognized till the time comes for us to note them. I saw one day a little boat following in the wake of a great ship. I watched it for some time, curious to know why it kept on so steadily and strongly in the track of the big vessel. Huge waves would strike it, causing it to careen for a moment; the motion of the ship would sometimes throw it almost out of the water, but still with astonishing pertinacity it kept on. A sudden lurch of the great steamer, however, made all clear. Under the water, hidden hitherto from view, was a rope attaching the boat to the ship. It was all plain now. There was that held the boat in tow and carried it forward in spite of itself. Some of us have lived long enough to realize the same thing in our own lives. God has had us in tow for years, though we knew it not, and in spite of sinful obstructions, in spite of opposing currents, in spite of the resistance of our own selfish hearts, God has been drawing us. If you are a moral man or woman, unstained by the grosser vices of the flesh; or if you are a Christian, delighting in spiritual things, ask yourself this morning why it is so. Is it because of your persistence in following God or of God's persistence in drawing you? Oh, God, thou hast saved me in spite of myself, and drawn me against my resistance and made me willing contrary to my will." So have I said to my heavenly Father again and again. Have you found no occasion to say it?

An Invisible Bond

2. God has been drawing us by the things that we considered most against us. It seems a strange way of attracting us to obstruct our pathway with Trials and Disappointments.

"I find it extremely hard for me to believe that there is a God when he allows me to suffer so," said one to me not long since. "If God would win me, why does he not hear my prayer for my children, for my husband, for my friends," asks another. Are God's repulsions to be interpreted as attractions? Are his trials to be named his caresses? Are his judgments to be regarded as his comforts? These are difficult questions, and can only be answered satisfactorily as we get towards the end of life's chapter. I know this much, that the broken stones by which a highway is covered, greatly hinder the travel and hurt the feet of the pedestrian; but when trodden down they make the hardest and smoothest road. So the best of life is a macadamized road, in which stones of stumbling and rocks of offence have been bravely trodden under foot, so that on stepping stones of our dead selves we have been steadily rising to higher things. Let us be patient, and not say impatiently, "all these things are against me," because of trials and hardships and disappointments. "For if God be for us, who can be against us?"

3. You have, many of you, been resisting God for years. You may deny this statement, but it is really so. Just as on the one hand God's desires are his drawings, and his invitations his attractions, so your indifference is your opposition. For what constitutes opposition? It is really a question of will. Not to will is to will not. If a man weighing two hundred pounds does not will to go up stairs, then he throws just two hundred pounds weight against going. He need not kick or stamp or resist. Inertia is resistance; indifference is opposition. God says: "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving kindness I have drawn thee." What is that loving kindness with which he has drawn us? It is not the love of complacency or of amiable indifference. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son." Here was the intensest and most concentrated act of human will. It was a love which expressed itself in omnipotent activity and omnipotent suffering. When God gave his Son to die on a tree, he drew us up with the cords of love and the hands of a man, a love stronger than death and cords mightier than the grave. If you do not yield to that love, you throw all the weight of your indifference and your unbelief against it. Therefore I beg you to resist no more. Resist not by resistance; resist not by indifference. For who hath resisted his will and prospered?

A MISSIONARY'S TRIALS.

From the new settlement at Unkung, China, Dr. J. W. Carlin writes to the "Baptist Missionary Magazine" a cheering letter in spite of the trials and annoyances he has had to bear during his first month's residence. In the course of his letter, he says:

We have been overcrowded with all sorts of people, including thieves, spies and drunkards. So many came it was not possible to control them, and our situation became alarming. We decided to close the outer doors and keep the heterogeneous multitudes out, but as they congregated by thousands outside, we decided to let them in, for should they break in, we feared that one act of violence might encourage to another. They formed a column of from fifty to one hundred persons to break down the doors leading into our dwelling, but as the door was giving way, three of us managed by pushing against the side of the column to shunt it off to one side and drag out one who had already entered. We did not appear to the multitude to recognize this as an unbecoming act of violence, but as a kind of matter-of-course incident upon the assembling of so many people, and that we were equal to the demands of the occasion.

We are in a better way to live now, and instead of the struggle we are having only skirmishing, though the crowds are as large or larger than ever. The daily attendance is so great we have not opened the chapel, for no considerable part of the people could get in, though I had the chapel enlarged; but we have continued to preach in the open yards.

I happened to hear one cause of antipathy toward us. It had been bruited abroad, that I was an emissary of the "King of the United States," to draw the people away from their allegiance to the Emperor of China and attach them to the "King of the United States." An official happened to ask me how often I had to report statelily to my king; then he got his eyes opened, and I suppose he reported to other court officials, both civil and military, and those people began to visit me in throngs the very next day, which visiting they have kept up ever since, and I have neglected no opportunity to disabuse their minds of that awful slander and dangerous misinformation. The officials are all very friendly now; some have called several times and demeaned themselves with becoming dignity; and the two highest officials, as well as many other officials, have applied to me for medicine. The "literati," all, I suppose, have been to call on me, for hundreds have called. The common people, seeing the officials and "literati" visiting me, were pacified. They are admitted cheerfully under a guard of brethren, whereas two weeks ago they were admitted by constraint lest they should break in, and then they were only admitted to the open court whilst the doors were locked all around, but they could look in through the windows which they did constantly.

THE GRAFT AND THE BACKSLIDER.

THE other day I was chopping fire-wood in my yard and hard at work. The wood was apple-tree—some branches I had cut from my orchard. (You know it is necessary sometimes for us farmers to prune our trees.) These branches I was cutting up were of quite a size, and the wood was pretty tough. I had split a stick in two and turned the halves over on the block to cleave them again; but just then my eye caught sight of something curious in one of the pieces, and my axe fell without a blow. I picked up the stick, examined it, and found it to be a natural curiosity. It seemed that many years ago a small branch on one of my apple trees had been grafted, that is, a small twig or scion had been inserted in the branch that it might derive food from the larger stock and grow into a branch of itself. But right alongside of this graft had grown what learned people call an offset—some farmers call them suckers—that is, a branch or stem growing on the parent stem and which should not be allowed to remain on the tree. This had pushed itself up right in the way of the graft, but it had more life than the young scion, and so grew more rapidly. Well, it became so obtrusive that it crept up around the little branch and, in course of time, absorbed it completely, and there it was now, perhaps fifty years after, grown to a large stick (the one I'd split) and inside it was the little branch and the graft all dead. You understand this, I hope. To me it was quite interesting.

Just as I was done looking at the stick, I cast my eyes out to the road and there was Thomas Boggs passing by, and I called out to him to come in. Now, Thomas was a man who had joined the church the winter before, during a time of revival, but he had since grown rather careless, sort of slidden back, you know, and didn't seem to be getting on very well in the Christian life. He'd kind of hardened himself, and so I thought I'd have a little, plain talk with him. Quick as a flash it came into my mind to use my stick of wood as an illustration.

Well, by this time, he'd got into the yard. "Good morning, Thomas," I says, and then I went right to the point. "Thomas, you haven't been to church lately. What's the trouble?"

"Oh," he says, "I'm all right."

"Well," I told him, "I hope you are, but I'm afraid you ain't."

You see, he didn't know what was the matter with him. "Look here, Thomas, do ye see this stick?" and I showed him my curiosity. He saw at a glance what it was, and after he'd examined it, I drove the nail right home. Says I, "Do you know, Thomas, that that stick is something like you?"

He looked at me kind of amazed to see what I meant.

"Thomas," I explained, "Last winter when we had a revival in the church you got grafted like this branch here. You got grafted with a new faith and belief and trust in the Lord, and we all hoped that the graft would grow, and for a while it seemed as if it did. But by and by, there was a sucker of worldly cares and affections grew up alongside of this new graft and crowded against it and absorbed it so completely that it about killed the graft of faith. You see how it was with this stick, and I'm afraid its about the same with you."

Tom didn't get mad, though I was pretty blunt. He stood looking at the stick, and I saw by his face that he was thinking pretty seriously. Say he, "I believe you're right," and went away.

But last prayer-meeting night, will you believe it, Thomas Boggs was the first on his feet, and he says that by the grace of God he'd been regrafted, and this last graft is growing sure. I tell you I was glad I'd come across that stick of wood, for it was the means of waking up one poor backslider and showing him just where he was.

That's a profitable orchard of mine.

Round Hill, N. S.

—A. W. F.

WHEN WRITING TO THIS OFFICE
In order to secure the promptest attention for your communications, please bear in mind that the business of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is divided into the following three departments, and that communications intended for any one of these departments should never contain matters of interest to any other department: Subscription Department in which only new subscriptions or renewals are handled. Address Department where all changes or rectifications of name, address or date are made. Complaint Department in which only complaints of irregular delivery receive attention. Communications to two or three departments each written on a separate sheet, may be enclosed in one envelope, but each separate sheet should have reference only to one of these departments. Always address the envelope

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York

My Saviour and my All.

FANNY J. CROSBY.

"Christ is all, and in all."—Col. 3: 11.

ROBERT LOWRY.

1. My trust-ing heart looks up to Thee, And this my dai-ly song shall be,
2. On Thee I cast my every care, With Thee my soul communes in pray'r,
3. My heav'nly Guide, my precious Friend, Do Thou my onward steps attend;

That Thou didst give Thy-self for me, My Sav-iour and my all.
And finds its sweet-est com-fort there, My Sav-iour and my all.
Be with me till this life shall end, My Sav-iour and my all.

My Sav-iour and my all, . . . My Sav-iour and my all;
my all, my all;

My hope, my joy, my righteousness, My Sav-iour and my all.

Copyright, 1893, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From SUNNY-SIDE SONGS, by permission of the Publishers.

THE OLIVE WOOD'S LESSON.*

BEAUTIFUL Olive Wood, often Thoughts shalt thou bring to me, Of the dear Saviour who wandered 'Lone, neath the Olive tree. Breathing a prayer for his loved ones, Sweeter than perfume rare, Loved ones, that down through the ages, Bring to him all their care.

List, he is now interceding, There at the Father's throne, For all who e'er shall believe him, Dear ones that are his own. Praying our faith should not fail us, Lasting for aye, so true, Loving, believing, and trusting Him who has died for you.

Olive Wood, teach me the lesson, Taught by my Saviour dear, Working and praying for others, Wiping away the tear.

*Thoughts upon receiving a gift of Olive Wood from Dr. Talmage for a subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Soft to the heart of the mourner, Whispers of love's sweet balm, Just from the heart of the Saviour, Wafting a holy calm.

Ever thou'lt speak of the Master's Voice, as he says to me, "Tell all the loved ones, I'm calling, Come, I'm awaiting thee. Linger no longer in sorrow, I'll wipe away thy tears, Dream not of storms that await you, I'll drive away thy fears."

Davenport, Iowa.

MRS. M. D. SNYDER.

A PRAYER IN TROUBLE.

(Written for The Christian Herald.)

O H, Thou who once on Galilee ' Spake peace unto the troubled sea, Speak now unto my soul, And bid its troubled waters rest, The raging tempest in my breast— The stormy wind control.

Amanda, O.

S. A. GORTNER.

THE MILLENNIAL PEACE.

The Golden Age of Christ's Reign to be an Era of Peace.

BY REV. W. MAUDE.

HOW blessed is the assurance of the prophetic Word that a time shall come when men shall cease ruthlessly to shed each others' blood, when the deadly and cruel instruments of war shall be laid aside, and the universal and lasting reign of peace be inaugurated. That such a time awaits the world is explicitly revealed. Thus Isaiah declares, "He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many peoples: and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Isa. 2: 4.)

The Word of God, distinctly reveals the coming of such a blessed time when universal peace shall reign. And inspiration does more than this—it tells us how this consummation is to be reached; basing it, not on empty dreams, but on the assured fact of the coming of him who is the Prince of Peace. There will be no lasting peace for the world till the kingdom of Christ is established by his glorious Advent. This is the uniform teaching of Scripture. Are men to "beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks?" Yes; but it is only "in the last days, when many people shall go and say, Come ye, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us his ways, and we will walk in his path." (Isa. 2: 2-4.) Is "war to cease unto the end of the earth, and the bow be broken, and the spear cut in sunder, and the chariot burned in the fire?" Yes; but it is not until "He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth." (Ps. 119.) Shall neither savage beasts nor savage men "hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain?" Yes; but not until he is set upon earth's throne, who "shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears." (Isa. 11: 3, 4, 9.)

Yes; peace—peace which no earthly or infernal power may disturb: peace based on Divine and righteous government: peace, not such as man makes, but such as God gives, shall be one characteristic of Christ's millennial kingdom.

All the glories of the kingdom cast before them an intervening darkness,—that darkness being the antithesis of the dawning light: the proverbial darkest hour before the coming dawn. Thus, when the voice cried out of Seir, "Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? The reply was, "The morning cometh, and also the night." That is to say, "The morning will shortly dawn, but the night—though far spent—is not yet over: its last and darkest hour has yet to be passed through." So it is here. The kingdom of peace is coming, but it will be preceded by war—war of the most terrific character, and on the most gigantic scale. Hence our Lord's warning—which in no wise contradicts Isaiah's prediction, if only we distinguish the times and so harmonize the Scriptures—"And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled; for these things shall come to pass, but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows (lit. 'birth-pangs')." (Matt. 24: 6-8.)

Hence the going forth of the "red horse," after the Church of the first-born ones is seen in heaven. (Rev. 6: 3-4.) And hence the awful summons of the prophet Joel: "Proclaim ye this among the nations; prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the mighty men draw near; let them come up. Beat your ploughshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears. (Joel 3: 9-12.) Language this, which plainly anticipates the vision of the Book of Revelation. (Rev. 16: 13-14.)

Truly then, "the morning cometh, but also—and previously—the deeper, darker night." That which immediately awaits the world is not peace, but that tremendous outbreak of war—which is to terminate this present age. But as it were in the pauses of the dread conflict, the ear of faith listens for the joy-bells of the universe, ringing joy over the end of the long reign of violence and bloodshed; and, through the smoke of the final battle, the eye of faith descries the form of him whose "name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

LESSONS OF MISSIONARY LIFE.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Commencing May 6.

DEFINITIONS and descriptions of missionary life are unnecessary here. Every member of a Christian Endeavor Society knows with more or less detail what the characteristics of such a life are. He knows that the missionary abandons his opportunities of winning wealth, power, honor and fame in his own land; abandons civilization, home associations, family ties, the protection of his own government, and expatriates himself with no prospect of earthly reward; that he devotes his life to the work of carrying the news of salvation to a people who generally know nothing about it, and often have a distinct wish not to know anything about it. The most conspicuous lesson of such a life is that love of Christ and love of man are mighty forces. We are accustomed to speak of self-interest as the most potent force in life. Self-preservation, self-gratification, self-advancement, are regarded as innate and controlling motives. The devil is reported to have given it as the result of his observation of the human race that "all that a man hath will he give for his life." He must have mixed with a very low class of society to have formed such an opinion. Apart from religion there are many men who would not give to save their lives, their families, their good name, their principles, their patriotism, or their honor. But these are personal possessions. In the missionary we find a higher order of man. He sacrifices ease and comfort, and voluntarily risks his life for something apart from himself. Love of Christ and concern for Christless people, when once they take root in a man are stronger than love of ease or any selfish consideration.

Another lesson is the profound faith in the power and value of the Gospel which must be the basis of such a life. The missionary believes that the news he carries will transform the lives of those who receive it. He gives his life to proclaiming the news and he has no greater success in view than in getting people to receive it. He knows that, if it obtains an entrance into the heart, it will abide and bear fruit. The consecration of his life to the work is the strongest proof of his faith in the power of the Gospel, that he could give. A third lesson is that the world does not recognize the true hero. What honor has it ever paid to Carey, to Morrison, to Duff, to Judson, to Moffat, Livingstone, Brainerd, Williams, Saker, Vanderkemp, and a host of others who gave health, labor, suffering, and life itself to the service of their fellows? They were men of magnificent courage, of marvellous endurance and of splendid achievements; yet they did not get the recognition that is given to the soldier, the statesman, or the millionaire. There is, therefore, another lesson involved which is that from the standpoint of this life the life of the missionary is a failure. He gets no reward in wealth, or power, or fame. He may be the means of other men becoming happier and better but he gets nothing for himself, or for his family. He is like a candle which is consumed in giving light to others. The last lesson is that it is rash to pronounce any life a failure until the final consummation is reached. The missionary will one day stand in the presence of Him in whose service he has spent his life. What will that Being say to him? The successful men, as the world estimates success, have, as Christ said, had their reward. The statesman has had the power he desired; the avaricious man has had the wealth he strove for; even the popular preacher has had the fame he sought as his highest good; but this man who has borne the burden and heat of the day—what has he had? His reward awaits him. Christ said, "He who loseth his life for my sake shall find it," and long before, the decree went forth, "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

THREE B. Y. P. U. LEADERS.

The various organizations of young people have done one good service, among many others, in enlarging the circle of Christian acquaintanceship. Twenty years ago the young people did not know each other as they do now. The societies and unions and orders have been

REV. FRANK M. GOODCHILD.

MISS ANNA M. PHILLEY.

Of the Fort Wayne, Ind., B. Y. P. U.

THREE BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION LEADERS.

MR. D. J. DAVIS.

the means of introducing to each other personally, or by correspondence, or by the link of fellowship, young people animated by the same spirit, moved by the same motives, with identical aims, and working in a common cause. They have thus encouraged many who were depressed by the sense of weakness and stimulated them by the feeling of comradeship. We are co-operating in this desirable result by introducing this week to our friends of the Baptist Young People's Union, the three leaders whose portraits appear on this page.

Miss Anna M. Philley is one of the prominent workers in Indiana. She has been for some time President of the Fort Wayne Union, and has been active in the organization and development of the State Union. She is a descendant of the Rev. U. B. Miller, who is famous in the Baptist records of Indiana as one of the early pioneer preachers of early days. Miss Philley is a professor in the Westminster Seminary at Fort Wayne, and a member of Rev. S. A. Northrop's Tabernacle Church.

Rev. Frank M. Goodchild is the President of the Philadelphia Union. He is a native of Philadelphia, and is now pastor of the Spruce Street Baptist Church. He is thirty-four years old and has been seven years in the ministry. His work in his native city has been singularly successful. The church has grown rapidly, and he has added to its aggressive work many useful agencies. Besides the Young People's Union, there is a Young Men's Association, a Boys' Brigade, an Industrial School, and a Women's Society. Mr. Goodchild puts all his energy into any work he undertakes, and the Philadelphia Union is to be congratulated on his acceptance of the Presidency.

Mr. D. J. Davis is the President of the Sacramento, Cal., district. He is the son of a successful minister, who preached the Gospel throughout California from pure love of the work. In early days a sailor, and subsequently a ship-captain, he was converted and without any hesitation gave himself to the work of declaring to others the glad tidings. His was not a profound or scholarly exposition of religion, but that most telling and effective of all preaching, the testimony of what God had done for his own soul. His son, whose portrait we give, made profession of faith when in his fifteenth year. He has been active in Christian work ever since. In the Sunday School and other departments he has done excellent service. He was active in the B.Y.P.U. from the beginning and has been now for two years the President of his district.

THE EPWORTH GUARDS.

Among the criticisms on the Boys' Movement from various quarters comes one authoritative voice on the other side. The Cabinet of the First General Conference District Epworth League pronounces formally in its favor. At its recent meeting in Boston University it directed that the following resolutions be entered on the minutes:

"The cabinet heartily and unqualifiedly endorses the modern movement for interesting boys in the church by manifested by the demands made upon it, always readily and sympathetically responded to. The scheme of Bible study introduced by the American Institute of Sacred Literature has met with general favor, and is likely to be warmly taken up in more than one colony. The feeling is that to be grandly strong for service we must be mighty in the "Word," and everything that will help to this end is gladly welcomed and adopted. In South Australia the ex-secretary, Mr. A. S. Wilson, has been devoting himself to Christian Endeavor evangelistic mission work with very great acceptance and much blessing. Throughout Australia there seems to be a strong conception of the need and responsibility of winning souls for Christ.

AMONG THE ORDERS.

Nine hundred English clergymen have promised to preach in their churches on June 3 sermons to young men in celebration of the Jubilee of Young Men's Christian Associations.

The Christian Endeavor Society in the Central Congregational Church at Winnipeg, Man., has undertaken to give relief to sick and needy active members and to provide for the burial expenses in the case of needy members.

The Kansas City Christian Endeavor Union, which has been accomplishing so much through Gospel meetings, has appointed a good citizenship committee, and will make a strong effort at the coming city election to bring about the overthrow of the ring now controlling the city.

The Pacific steamer "Inderlyen" carries on board a Floating Endeavor Society, numbering eleven members. At a farewell service held with this society by the Endeavorers of San Francisco, just before the boat left the wharf, there were two conversions, and three who had been careless Christians pledged themselves to renewed activity.

A C.E. society in Ireland is divided into bands that by turns are responsible for maintaining four cottage prayer meetings every week. In each band there are tract distributors, who circulate notices of the meetings and welcome those that come.

We are glad to learn from Mr. Le Grand L. Baldwin, President of the Y. M. C. A. of Lincoln, Neb., that the Association, a picture of whose building appeared in this journal on March 28, is rapidly increasing in numbers and influence. Since the statistics on which our article was based were compiled, the membership has passed the one thousand line. When it is remembered that in November, 1893, there were only two hundred members, the progress that has been made seems truly phenomenal.

It is largely due to the untiring work and inspiring influence of the Secretary, Mr. John K. Dean.

Over three hundred regular delegates attended the recent Epworth League Conference at Medina, Ohio. Thirty-seven Chapters with 2,501 members reported. There are twenty-seven Junior Leagues with 1,400 members in the district.

Three prize banners will be awarded at the Toronto B. Y. P. U. Convention for the best state of provincial records of local society work for the year 1893-94 in the Christian Culture Courses. Merit to be determined in each case by the number of societies represented and the number of successful examinees.

The Central India Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church gave an emphatic and enthusiastic endorsement of the Epworth League at its recent meeting, and urged pastors and presiding-elders "to utilize to the fullest extent the great advantages which the League offers; and by thorough organization, judicious administration, and earnest prayerful effort to make it a moral power throughout all our borders."

means of simple military drill, appealing as it does to their natural instincts for such harmless tactics.

"Further, the cabinet sees in the features, always made prominent, of the Bible and Flag exercises, a most useful way for inculcating a love for the Scriptures and our country. These virtues of reverence for things sacred, of obedience to superiors, and of patriotism, are all fostered by this movement. "Recognizing possible abuses, the cabinet nevertheless believes the advantages far outnumber the disadvantages, and that in careful hands the movement may be productive of greatest good."

AUSTRALIAN CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

An encouraging report of progress in Australia is sent to the United Society by Rev. J. W. L. Closs, whose portrait was published in this journal on Feb. 7. From his letter in the "Golden Rule," we extract the following: Christian Endeavor on this side of the world still maintains its rate of advance and development. Societies continue to be formed with almost bewildering rapidity and the movement is more and more making itself felt. That it is being regarded as a strong and helpful ally is abundantly

In a Premier's Garden.

Mentmore, the Beautiful Country-Seat of Earl Rosebery, Prime Minister of England, and its Surroundings.

UNDER the tropical skies of Spain, Italy, or our own Sunny South, horticulture is an art that can be brought to the highest perfection. The gardens of Florida are unsurpassed by any in the world, both for beauty and variety. Mexico, too, has its famous gardens, and those of Brazil, like the historic garden of the Khedive, near Alexandria, are noted for the exuberance of their foliage and the superb richness of their display of color. The Czar's gardens in the grounds of the imperial palace at Peterhof, are among the most beautiful and costly in Europe, full of rare plants, rich with dazzling parterres and with artistic ornamentation that cost many fortunes. Still another famous garden is that of the Shah of Persia at Ispahan, called by the people of that country the "garden of Sa'adabad," with its acres upon acres of rare flowers, its seas of blossoms and its noble palms and poplars, sparkling fountains and avenues of sculptures, while through it flows a clear stream which the Persians call the "River of Life." Berlin, Madrid and Rome are each noted for the lavish horticultural display in the gardens of royal or aristocratic families.

England, too, although the climatic conditions are somewhat restrictive, has its famous gardens, not the least among them being that at Mentmore Towers, one of the country-seats of Earl Rosebery, the new British Premier and successor of Gladstone. Baron Meyer de Rothschild, the great banker, in 1857, engaged one of the leading architects in Europe to design the beautiful building, which is shown in the illustration. It lies on the edge of the vale of Aylesbury, in one of the prettiest pastoral localities in England and is a strikingly fine example of Anglo-Italian architecture. The interior of the mansion is rich in art treasures, the collection of which was almost a passion with the late Countess Rosebery, Hannah de Rothschild. Mantels from the house of Rubens, the celebrated painter, tapestries that once belonged to Mazarin and wonderful chandeliers that formerly hung in the ball-room of the Doge's palace in old Venice, are there; but the Prime Minister cares more for his beautiful gardens than for anything else at Mentmore. These grounds were laid out under the personal direction of Lady Rosebery, who cared little for the pleasures of society and loved rather to be visiting among her poor, or arranging the plants in her extensive conservatories, than spending the time in gilded show or fashionable frivolities. The quaint design of the gardens, and the skilful arrangement of flowers and plants together produce a most artistic effect. On the grounds is a great orchid-house, full of rare and costly plants brought from the East by Lady Rosebery, eight years ago. This orchid-house, the dairy, and the pretty aviary which contains well-nigh everything that is curious in bird-life, had for her a great interest.

Many very distinguished parties have been entertained at Mentmore in former years, but the Towers and gardens, though scrupulously kept in order, have not lately been the scene of pleasant social gatherings, as of yore. About one hundred and twenty persons are employed on the Home Farm, and the neat cottages occupied by these laborers, with their attractive gardens, show the new Premier to be an employer who takes thought for the comfort and happiness of his people.

The Folly of Self-Indulgence.

Self-indulgence makes heavy drafts upon one's income. It is an enemy of thrift and economy. It leads one to extravagance in living, to the gratification of appetites and desires without regard to the future. It is no slight strain on a young man's resources, for example, when he smokes, as is often the case, four or five expensive cigars a day. The large amount thus spent in smoke encourages the young man to expend a heavy percentage of his income on selfish gratifications, and such a habit unchecked, is sufficient to prove any man's financial ruin. The disposition to self-indulgence is, however, exceedingly common. It is sure to grow if gratified, and when allow-not merely in a natural way, but you make them feel that men are really brothers, and made to help one another. Not only is that feeling agreeable in itself, but it will be apt to prompt them to carry out the principle themselves. Put yourself into all you do, and let others feel that you are there. Do not only contribute to a charitable object, but go yourself and help. It may seem an inconvenience at first, but soon you will come to consider it worth any inconvenience."

Concerning Flirts.

Society is brim full of gallants and man milliners and carpet knights and coquettes, writes Dr. Talmage, and those most God-forsaken of all wretches—flirts. And they go about drawing-rooms and the parlors of watering places, simpering and bowing and scraping and whispering, and then return to the club-rooms, if they be men, or to their social gatherings, if they be women, to chatter and giggle over what was said to them in confidence. Condon punishment is apt to come upon them and they get paid in their own coin. I could point you to a score whom society has let drop very hard in return for their base traffic in human hearts. As to such men, they walk around in their celibacy after their hair is streaked with gray, and pretending they are naturally short-sighted when their eyes are so old in sin that they need the spectacles of a septuagenarian, an eye-glass about No. 8, and think they are bewitching in their stride and overpowering in their glances, although they are simply laughing-stocks for all mankind. And if these base dealers in human hearts be females, they are left after a while hearts are so light, and their laughter is so free, and their cheeks are so ruddy, and that their expectations are so radiant.

FRIENDS IN HEAVEN.

WHERE the faded flower shall freshen,
Freshen never more to fade;
Where the shaded sky shall brighten,
Brighten never more to shade;
Where the sun-blaze never scorches,
Where the star-beams cease to chill;
Where no tempest stirs the echoes
Of the wood, or wave, or hill;
Where the morn shall wake in gladness,
And the noon the joy prolong;
Where the daylight dies in fragrance
'Mid the burst of holy song—
Brother, we shall meet and rest
'Mid the holy and the blest.

Where no shadow shall bewilder;
Where life's vain parade is o'er;
Where the sleep of sin is broken,
And the dreamer dreams no more.
Where the bond is never severed—
Partings, claspings, sob and moan;
Midnight waking, twilight weeping,
Heavy noontide—all are done;
Where the child has found its mother;
Where the mother finds the child;
Where dear families are gathered
That were scattered on the wild—
Brother, we shall meet and rest
'Mid the holy and the blest.—BONAR.

PRESENT HAPPINESS.

USE some of the good things of life as you go along, says a philosophic writer. There is so much that is bright and helpful to our souls and that will make the present what it should be that we cannot afford to miss it. Let us make our humble home as cheery as possible, instead of waiting for a better. How many people say: "Oh, we are just living here until we can get a better house." Who knows when that better house does come whether it will bring the expected happiness.

We have known some of the humblest homes where every day was one of happiness. It is not policy to hoard and scrimp through all the best years of your life that you may be generous in your bequests. Life is so uncertain, and it is better to make your children happy while they are with you.

Make the best of everything. The robin does not wait for the morrow to pour out his song, to-day he makes the woodland ring with his melody. Do not live in the kitchen and keep the parlor closed for fear that sunshine, dust or the boots of your boys will soil the carpet. Take time to read, to study and to enjoy the company of friends. Be careful with your children. Make home a blessed place and they will not want to leave it. Extract honey out of every circumstance in life, enjoy what every day brings, trust in the Heavenly Father, and you will find that life will have a fuller meaning and your heart a deeper joy.

Education in the Home.

Education does two things for the household: it gives a certain amount of information that is of direct service, and it gives a training that is of indirect, but even greater value. The information immediately gained comes through the study of art, chemistry, economics, physiology, and psychology. The study of art should enable the housekeeper to build and furnish her house with taste; of chemistry, to provide for its sanitary construction and for the proper preparation of all food materials; of physiology, to study the physical development of her children; and of psychology, to observe their mental growth and base her training upon it. If this were all, it might well be said that for a young woman contemplating the care of a household the best possible preparation would be a four years' college course. But these gains are on the side of formation. There are constantly arising in every household emergencies, for which the housekeeper is, and must be, totally unprepared as regards the amount of available information she possesses. There are demands made every hour, every moment, for the exercise of reason, judgment, self-control, alertness, observation.

MENTMORE TOWERS, PREMIER ROSEBERY'S COUNTRY SEAT.

ed its way, drains the very life-blood. When such self-indulgence takes possession of a community, becomes the fashion and at last is the habit of a nation, it is a sufficient cause for hard times. Unquestionably this self-indulgence is a national characteristic. Who can estimate the amount spent in theatres and on club-houses and club-dues in a year. Our yacht clubs and sporting clubs of all sorts spend immense amounts. Many undoubtedly can afford these outlays, and yet for every one who can there are a dozen straining every nerve to imitate him, and going more and more beyond their means. The fact that so many live up to the extreme limit of their means and often beyond, is one great cause of these hard times.

The Habit of Generosity.

Don't put off doing a good work, until it is too late. George W. Childs, whose whole life is an illustration of the value and importance of doing things now, instead of waiting till you are dead, once said in a speech to young men: "I think the habit of generosity may be cultivated, like other habits. No one can administer your gifts for you as well as you can do it for yourself. It is a great pleasure to be brought into personal relations and make people feel that you are interested in them and care for their welfare. In that way you benefit them severely alone, striving in a very desperation of agony of cosmetics to get back to the attractiveness they had when they used to brag how many masculine affections they had slaughtered. Forsaken of God and honest men and good women are sure to be all such masculine and female triflers with human and yet immortal affections.

Home Amusements.

There is a way of making our homes a hundred-fold more attractive than many of them are now. Parents cannot expect to keep their children away from outside dissipation unless they make the domestic circle brighter than anything they can find outside of it. Do not sit in your home surly and unsympathetic, and with a half-condemnatory look, because of the sportfulness of your children. You were young once yourself; let your children be young. Because your eyes are dim and your ankles are stiff, do not denounce sportfulness in those upon whose eyes there is the first lustre, and in whose foot there is the bounding joy of robust health. Thank God that in our drawing-rooms and in our parlors there are innumerable games and sports which have not upon them the least taint of iniquity. Light up all your homes with innocent hilarities. Do not sit down with the rheumatism, wondering how children can go on so. Rather thank God that their

CHAPTER XIV. (Continued.)

I HAD nearly forgotten something which our excellent rector asked me to pass over to you this evening, Miss Paull," he said in the rollicking way which men of his calibre confound with well-bred ease. "It frightens me to think what might have happened had I carried it home in my pocket. I dare say, now, you would never have spoken to me again—maybe would have put me out in my best solo next Sunday."

Marie had listened politely up to this moment, her fair face composed and serious. The swift change that swept over it as she saw the superscription on the envelope extended by his pudgy hand, left him dumb and staring.

"It was more like a flash of lightning than anything else," he said to his wife when he got home. He did not even recollect whether or not she had thanked him by more than a bend of the head in passing him on her way to the gallery-stairs. "I shouldn't wonder if 'twas from her sweet-heart abroad. The handwriting was a man's, and the postmark some outlandish place with a foreign stamp on it."

The rain was falling fast when Marie reached the street; the car which she hailed and boarded was full to both platforms. In obedience to the conductor's "Step forward there, please!" room was made for her just inside the rear door. She leaned, weak and sick, against the casing, the letter clutched tightly in her hand. It was addressed in her father's well-remembered handwriting to "Miss Marie Roche Paull. In care of Rev. Dr. Egbert Lee, Rector of St. Gudule's, New York City, N. Y., United States of America."

In the ten blocks that lay between the church and Mrs. Marcy's door, she had time to review the futile attempts she had made to open communication with the exile since she had posted that first letter in Brooklyn to "Mr. Paul Morgan, Nice, France."

Carrie Storrs's device of setting the United States consul at Nice upon the track had elicited a civil reply from Mr. Oliver's secretary, to the effect that no American of the name she had given could be found in Nice. An Englishman, calling himself "Ernest Morgan," had passed a winter there, then gone on to Monte Carlo. A guarded letter of inquiry to the far-famed gambling resort met with even less success, no reply being returned. Baffled and despairing, Marie desisted from other efforts until Carrie herself went abroad a year ago, engaging not to abate her energetic attempts to find Mr. Paull, until she could put his address in his daughter's hand. The rattle-brained, warm-hearted ally wrote regularly and at surprising length, for a traveler, to her whom she facetiously dubbed "Telemacha." Always hopefully (it is so easy and pleasant to hope to all lengths when we have little at stake ourselves!) always to no purpose, so far as the object of her search was concerned.

"If I had dared take papa into confidence, something might have been done through the police," she said to poor Marie upon her return. "But that would never have done, you know."

Marie did know as well as if her only confidante had imparted the further information that once when she "wondered" tentatively to her father "if they might not run over Mr. Paull in their travels," he retorted tartly for a good-natured and well-trained American father—that "nothing was less likely—or, for that matter, less desirable."

It argued a depth of devotion which was pathetic in view of the unworthiness of the object and the scant food that kept it alive, that the daughter's faith and love never wavered through all these eventless months. She had believed that her father still lived and loved her; affection and fancy hung fadeless wreaths above the visage enshrined in her heart of hearts; idealized him into a stainless hero, an uncomplaining martyr. Her life had but one purpose, to make amends to him for all he had suffered, to repair with her young life the wreck his enemies had made of his. It was monomania, flourishing the more rankly, and striking its roots more deeply, for the shade in which she kept it.

Here was her reward! Clutching the letter still more tightly, she sprang from the car at Mrs. Marcy's corner, ran through the rain, without raising her umbrella, to the sidewalk, and up the steps, let herself in with her latch-key and flew up two, three flights of stairs to her room to fall upon her knees and tear open the precious missive. She must read it thus—for God had sent it to her—at last! at last!

"My own, sweet daughter!"

"I knew it! I knew it! oh, my darling! my noble, suffering angel! she cried aloud, kissing the words over and over. "O, God! give me strength to read it all!"

It was long, although, as he said, he was uncertain whether or not it would ever meet her eyes. He had seen in a New York paper a notice of the appointment of "Miss Marie Paull, daughter of the late Ernest Paull"—to the position of organist in the church of St. Gudule's, Rev. Egbert Lee, D.D., Rector. He had written to her before and repeatedly, letters which her silence proved to him had not reached her. This was one more crumb cast upon the waters. Perhaps the well-meant surveillance of her lawful guardians might extend even to communications sent under cover to a stranger. He prayed her, should she receive this, to tell him of herself—his best beloved—of her brothers and Gladys—(blessings on the baby who must, by now, have forgotten her unhappy father!) and of the mother for whom he had not a word of censure.

"I, who know her Spartan integrity, her rigid sense of what she believes to be duty, her steadfast adherence to the road which she conceives is laid out by Right—expect nothing from her clemency. Believing, as she does, in the clever fabrications of my persecutors, she cannot act differently. I name her daily in my prayers as one of the noblest of women. It is not her fault, but that of the adviser who has her ear, that we are parted by half the breadth of the globe. I hope that your brother, as her favorite child, is the comfort and help she used to prophesy he would prove. If so, she misses me no longer. I am persuaded other things of you, my precious child, the little Marie who promised to marry papa when she should grow up—my household fairy!"

"You might not care to renew that promise now, could you see how gray I am, and what lines care, toil and longing have engraved in the face you once loved to kiss. I have worked hard and against odds in strange lands, and am poorer now than when I left my native shore. I should not like to have my bonny bird see where and how I live, and how shabby are my clothes. The hunger and the husks are mine, but not the riotous living. The vision of your innocent eyes, if nothing else, would prevent that. And there is no earthly home for the exile whom you, at least, will never believe to be a prodigal. The knowledge of this should make the thought of the rest that remaineth the sweeter. I shall see you there—if never again here."

CHAPTER XV.

"That heart better than hath two or three mountains to grace upon, that a little bee that feeds on dew or manna, and lives upon what falls every morning from the shroudbourne of heaven, clouds and providence!"—Jeremy Taylor.

"Drop thy ill dews of quietness,
Till all our strivings cease;
Take from our souls the strain and stress,
And let our ordered lives descend
To the beauty of Thy Peace!"

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

"Wake up, boys! and see what a white Christmas we have!" called Mrs. Paull from the foot of the stairs.

She was answered by the rush windowward of four naked feet upon the floor overhead, and shrill, joyous outcries from two pairs of healthy lungs. She opened the front door and stepped out upon the porch where Lanier's shovel and Elspeth's broom were at work. It had snowed, not fast, but perseveringly, for fourteen hours. At three o'clock on Christmas morning the cold became too intense for any further downfall. The wind did not rise with the sun—nor did the thermometer.

Mrs. Paull looked out upon a smooth expanse of what might have been down from a curlew's breast, soft, light, and delicately dyed into the purest shade of pink. The ice-chained lake was a spotless plain into which the lawn sloped by imperceptible degrees; the naked branches of the deciduous trees were outlined to the tiniest tip with the feathery fall; the pines bowed in dumb majesty beneath the weight of royal ermine. The still, keen air was a luxury to the respiratory organs, and stung faces and fingers with the prick of electric needles. Every mountain was a Mont Blanc against the fleckless azure of the vast hollowed firmament; from the laden roofs of a dozen farm-houses arose steady columns of smoke that caught the flush of the eastern horizon in clearing the shadow of the hills.

"Such a white Christmas!" repeated Mrs. Paull in an ecstasy of enjoyment. "And such a gloriously beautiful happy world!"

Lanier tossed his last shovelful of snow upon the mastiff—whom ozone, or some instinctive sense of unusual hilarity in the moral atmosphere, moved to extraordinary yelps and bounds—and joined his mother in her rapid promenade of the paved floor.

"A pink Christmas, I should call it. Your glorious world is one huge, full-blown Maiden-blush rose."

"Just now—yes! In ten minutes the blush will be gone. It is fading now. Why should I be reminded of what the royalists said of the winter funeral of Charles I? 'And so went our white king to his burial.'"

"A gruesome association for Christmas-day!"

"Hardly that, when one recalls what he escaped. But we will have nothing but Christmas-day talk to-day. Breakfast will be ready at eight—did you say, Elspeth? Mr. Lanier here is ravenous already. We will have luncheon, my son, at half-past twelve, that you may meet Marie at the two o'clock train. Do you know"—linking her hands upon his arm as they walked—"I accept her consent to keep Christmas with us as an augury of better things? She has looked happier, and spoken more gently when I have seen her lately. She sent no gifts for the tree except a book for each of the boys, and a doll for Gladys, but you and I prize more than expensive presents the signs that we are gaining back the dear, affectionate, winsome Marie of long ago. In his own good time all that is wrong comes right."

"For right is right since God is God,
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

"And there is no place in God's world on this white Christmas-day—see, it is all pure white now—for faltering or for disloyalty."

Her eyes sparkled, her face was aglow with the dry, sweet coldness of the air; her step was as light and swift as her son's.

He stooped to kiss her, and meeting her arch glance, caught her around the waist, and waltzed with her to the other end of the piazza. The mastiff leaped and barked, Elspeth leaned on her broom to chuckle, and Gladys, appearing in the door, screamed with glee and clapped her hands.

"Mamma is dancing! Come, Nurse, and look at her!"

"Was there ever another such boy?" ejaculated Mrs. Paull, freeing herself at length, and putting her hand to head, breathless with mirth and exercise. "I am not quite sure that my hair is on my head, and my head upon my shoulders."

"There ain't many such—and more's the pity!" said Nurse Williams from the doorway. "And such mothers are even scarcer, Mr. Lanier. You are real smart to make the most of yours. You can't make too much."

She had been a guest at Pinehurst for a fortnight.

"The first out-and-out holiday I've had in ten years," she told Lanier the night before, while he and she were trimming the Christmas-tree. "And it has built me right over again. I've had a right tough pull of it since last August. First off—two typhoids in New York—in Mr. Stevens's parish. When you've said that you may be sure they had swallowed enough sewer-gas and stale vegetables—not to speak of decayed fruit bought cheap Saturday night, on account of not keeping over Sunday—to give them typhoid as was typhoid. The two were in the one house. Mr. Stevens he come over for me on his own two feet. He couldn't trust the telegraph, he said. He waited until I could rush some things into my bag, and took me back with him. When he's on what he calls 'the king's business,' he has no manner of patience with 'fuss and frills.' That's the name he gives to pretences of all sorts, whether its pretending to be too busy, or not well enough, or not competent to roll up your sleeves, as it might be, and go to work. I've heard it said that he has lettered on the inside of his watch—'The night cometh!'"

"He borrowed that idea from Dr. Johnson, Nurse," said Lanier, banteringly. "He had the motto engraved in Greek upon his watch-case. But, go on!"

He was never better amused than when he got the good soul mounted, and in full canter, upon one of her hobbies. He said she took such comfort in all sides of her life that it refreshed him to listen and to look. They were prime friends.

"Was he a medical, or a minister doctor?"

"Neither. A doctor of philosophy and letters, and a dictionary-maker."

"Oh!" placidly concerned. "Then I suppose he had to talk Greek—poor gentleman! That 'Tales from Shakespeare,' is for Master Edwin's branch, I think. 'Historic Boys' is for Master Tom. Their sister sent them—and handsome books they are. Very improving, too, I guess."

"So, after the typhoids were up and 'round—and they accounted for six solid weeks—measles set in in our church. I had five children in one family. One of 'em complicated with mumps, and the other with rheumatism for quite a spell. You wouldn't believe how often one disease lies in wait for another. There's nothing in nature, I verily believe and attest, more trying to patients and doctors than complications. It's like getting out of the woods to find yourself up to the waist in a ma'sh. And then there was that poor young married lady that had her skirts set afire with the stump of her husband's cigar he had thrown down on the hearth, thinking it was out, and he a-reading aloud from the newspaper to her, and she braiding a smoking-jacket for him, and neither of them mistaking a thing amiss until she was in a blaze. She will be lame for life, but she didn't die, and he promised her never to touch another cigar. He said he'd had a 'sickener' that would last him for a hundred years.' By the time she was able to walk about her room, I broke down clean for the first time since I put out my sign that I'd 'nurse,' etc." Mrs. Barnes she made me laugh when she come to see me on my back with a different sort of ache in every bone in my body, by saying that the 'and so forth had been too much for me at last.' Such a flow of spirits as that blessed woman has! Between ourselves and the post, Mr. Lanier, (though what the post has to do with two people and a secret, I could never make out), her it was that put your mother up to dropping in upon me on the 10th of December, and nothing would serve her but I must bundle right up, without any more words, and come up here with her."

"She made me laugh, too, and cry together."

"It's the King's business I'm on, Mrs. Williams," says she funny and yet solemn. "Pinehurst is the cup of cold water I'm sent here to offer you, my fellow disciple."

"It's a drink that has put new life into me. Ah, Mr. Lanier! don't you fall into the way so many people have—specially young people who haven't the sign of a scar of trouble upon the skin of their hearts—of talking of this world as a sink of sin, and of their fellow-beings as worm-eaten by selfishness, from A to Amperzand. There's loads of specked fruit lying on the grass in the Lord's orchard, but it's oftentimes the sweetest that's gnarly, or rotten on one side. I think the time will come when the Master, walking in the garden in the cool of the day, will cut off for his own use the good part and throw the bad away."

"As for your mother, she's sound and ripe and fine-flavored, through and through. It's an education in grace and faith just to be with her from day to day."

(To be Continued.)

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD FOOD FUND.

Additional Contributions for the Relief of the Destitute in New York City.

Albright, Mrs E H	100	Jr League of M E Church,	100	A girl	100
Anonyms, 37	100	Hammondsport, N Y	100	A W P West Chelmsford, Mass	200
Butler, Virginia	100	Jeans Lake, Vineland, N J	200	Miss B W B Winterbrook, Mass	100
Bancroft, Jane	100	John, N Y	100	Centerburg, Ohio	100
Brown, Miss L and friends	100	Krouse, Frances	100	Massera, N Y	100
Burling, C W	100	Kirk, Mrs C R	100	Constableville, N Y	300
Boothby, H E	100	Kenworthy, A M	100	West Indianola, Kan	200
Bryan, Mr and Mrs	100	King, Mrs P E	100	Tannton, Mass	200
Boothby, Mrs F L	200	Kimble, Mary M	100	Alleghany, Cal	100
Barker, Mr and Mrs Isaac	200	Kearley, Jessie	100	Petoskey, Mich	100
Black, Wm	200	Krumm, L V	200	Kan	100
Bunn, Joe R and family	500	Lamhorn, F H	200	A poor widow, Whitehouse, N J	100
Blatchford, Rev T W	375	Lyons, Mrs C N	100	A Christian Endeavorer,	100
Brown, John J	100	Leeper, J M	100	Bridgeport, Conn	100
Berner, Mrs Geo E	200	Leeper, Marion and Lizzy	150	Agard, mother, East Troy, Pa	300
Blair, Neil	200	Loyal Temperance Legion,	100	The Widow's mite, Brandon,	100
Beatty, Princeton, N J	100	Nashville, Pa	100	Wis	100
Bailey, Mrs C	100	Lathan, Mrs Ann	100	Brown, Mrs W C 26c; Bishop, Mrs	100
Brierly, Mrs James	100	Lemmer, Mary E	100	R H 58c; Bixler, Frank 50c; Bab-	100
Ballard, De Val	200	Martin, Mrs D	100	cock, A J 50c; Brock, Mrs Julia 50c;	100
Close, L B	200	Miller, Mrs M J	300	Bailey, Mrs E H 50c; Bates, Mrs	100
Cairns, Cornelia	100	McGee, Mrs H H	500	Libley, Mrs C 50c; Bailey, Mrs L C 75c;	100
Carrington family	100	McKee, Mrs J	100	Cooper, Annie, 90c; Cook, F M 50c;	100
Cater, Mrs J M	100	McComb, Mrs Geo	100	Crossman, Flora and Florence, 50c;	100
Carle, Mrs Chas	100	Morton, Mrs S, assisted by la-	100	Children's Mission Band, Rock Pres	100
Cutler, Edna	100	adies of Waldo, Fla	100	Church, Md, 50c.	100
Cutler, Mira	100	Moyle, E	100	Edsall, Orville and Jesse 20c.	100
C E Society of Montague C'y,	450	Mahon, Mrs Mary A	100	Fall, Maggie 25c; Friend, Penn	100
Mass	375	McNaughton, Mrs	100	Yan, A, 25c; Friend, City A, Neb.	100
Chr E Society, Burlington	375	McGee, R	100	Morrison, Mrs C, City, Mo, 30c;	100
Hr Endeavor Sister, Pa	300	McGee, Mrs Belle	100	Friend, Que, Can, 50c; Friend, Pleas-	100
Chr Endeavorer, Neche, N D	325	Mumma, Mrs	100	antville, Pa, 30c; Five little girls,	100
Conscience	200	Mothers and daughter, Port-	300	Hastings, Neb, 30c; Farun, Mrs M	100
Davoll, Julia R	200	ville, N Y	300	50c; Friend in Christ, DeKalb 25c.	100
De Lancett, Louise	100	Norris, Miss G E	100	Harrison, Mrs Jas, 25c; Holt, J E,	100
Doney, Henry	250	Noysch, Mrs	200	50c.	100
Davis, Mrs Henry	250	New Shnr, Great Neck, L I	100	In His Name, Westminster, Vt.	100
Eller, Thos A	200	Orr, Mrs D W and daughter,	200	50c; In Christ's Name, City A, Neb.	100
Ewin, F E	500	Owens, Owen H	150	Johnson's T G, Little hoy, 12c.	100
Enare, Adele	100	One of His children, Malden,	500	Klett, Little Roy 25c; Kempthorn,	100
Edson, Mrs G E	200	Mass	500	T 75c; Kenedy, Geo 5c.	100
Evans, Mrs Pauline	100	Perry, Mrs Addie	100	Lautner, Mrs S M, 50c; Lusk, Mrs	100
Eastman, L H	300	Preston, Mrs J	100	A, 50c; Lusk, Robert, A 10c; Lusk,	100
Engler, Mrs	100	Payne, Mary L	100	Robt 25c; Leopold, Princeton, N J,	100
Edwards, Wm C	100	Packet, Mrs	200	25c; Lonise, Mass 50c.	100
Elliott, Mrs Robt	100	"Ponchockie"	200	Miller, Barbara, 5c; Moon, Silas,	100
Evelyn and Kitty, M	100	Pugh, Mrs Mary E	100	25c; Minthorn, Tennie, 10c; Mains,	100
Funk, A Paul	100	Price, Mrs Eliza	100	M, 25c; Mershon, Miss L J, 75c;	100
Funk, Mrs J T	100	Rees, Mrs H F	300	Marks, Ivy 25c; Mackey, James, 50c;	100
Freeman, C E	250	Reed, Crayton, Ray & Minnie,	200	Montfort, Mrs O T, 50c; Matthews,	100
Funk, Mrs Chas	300	Ryle, J C	100	Mrs Dr, 30c; May, Mrs M, 10c;	100
Fonkles, B A and Millia	300	Reader, Yankton, S D	200	Maynard, Miss M J, 50c; "Mite,"	100
Funk, Mrs M E	150	Reader, Milford, Conn	100	Lockport, NY 30c; Marshall, Sam 6c;	100
Friend, East Lebanon, Me	200	Reader, Lakeville, Cal	100	May, Mrs M A 25c; May, Mr L P,	100
Friend and Snbr	100	Stackhouse, Mrs E J	200	25c; Miller, Mrs Frances, 57c; Mc-	100
Grand Rapids, Mich	917	Stagnar, A M	200	Donald, Mrs E G 50c; Murray, Ella,	100
For the needy, Chesaning, Mich	100	Stagnar, Mrs D G	700	50c; McCartney, Mrs I, 25c; Mill-	100
From a sailor who loves Jesus,	200	Stagnar, Mrs A	500	Shub, Mrs M A, 50c; Mother and	100
Barbados	200	Snell, Mrs A	500	daughter, Mayfield, N Y 50c; Mite,	100
Friend, Morris, Mich	200	Symes, E H	100	Lexington, Tenn 50c.	100
"Engfield, Mass	150	Synth, Sammel	100	Newton, Florence V, 10c; Nickoles,	100
"St. Albans, Vt	150	Sniley, Mrs J W	100	John & wife 50c; Nelson, Henry 25c.	100
"Weatherfield, Conn	200	Subr, Milford, Del	100	O'Kell, Nettie, 10c; Ottowa, F C,	100
"Kaukaake, Ill	100	Subr, Van Ormer, Pa	100	25c.	100
"Tolana, Ill	100	Subr, Morris, Ill	150	Parker, Master Harry, 15c; Poor	100
"Caten, N Y	100	Synth, Morris, Ill	150	Woman, Newport, Ct, 10c; Park-	100
"Pendleton	100	Synth, Morris, Ill	150	hurst, Mrs, 10c; Patton, Geo 5c;	100
"East Hebron, Me	300	Synth, Morris, Ill	150	Patton, Chas 10c; Patton, D L, 50c;	100
"and snbr, Buffalo, N Y	100	Spencer, E	100	Pryor, T J, 50c; Palmer, Mrs J M,	100
"Galt, Can	100	Subr, East Cambridge, Mass	100	50c; Pansy Society of W Windham,	100
"Summerville, N Y	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	N H, 40c.	100
"East Berne, N Y	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Replogle, May 25c; Replogle, C	100
"Argosy, N Y	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	N 25c; Matland, R, Vt, 10c; Roberts	100
"N Y	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	St M E Epworth League, Fargo, N	100
"of the poor, Perry, 50c; O	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	D, 75c; Ross, Nathad, 25c; Redmon,	100
"of the poor, Earl	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Blanche, 25c; Rhea, T F 25c; Reidy,	100
"of the poor, Dexten, N Y	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Hannah, 25c; A reader of the C H,	100
"of the needy, W Fair-	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Durham, Ia, 50c; Roberts, Harvey,	100
field, Pa	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	15c; Riley, Hugh N and Hamp, 15c;	100
"and reader, N Y	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Ray, So Blood, N Y, 25c.	100
"and husband, Charles-	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Smith, Shotty and Annie, 20c;	100
ton, Tex	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Smith, Grace and Mary, 15c; Sku-	100
Friends, Goodhue, Minn	150	Tauscher, Lydia	100	can, Billy, 30c; Smith, Susie, 50c;	100
"of Atlanta, Mich	13	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Smith, Dick, 50c; Schwan, Ada, 25c;	100
"Beloit, Kan	150	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Shnr, Hopkins, Mo, 75c; Subr, Big	100
"Columbiana, Ala	125	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Rapids, Mich, 50c; Schild, Mound-	100
"Dover, N C	50	Tauscher, Lydia	100	ridge, Kan, 10c; Singleton, Maggie,	100
"Undercliffe, Col	25	Tauscher, Lydia	100	50c; Strong, Mrs E, 75c; Subr,	100
For Jesus' sake, Jarvis, Ont	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Jennie, 25c; Strong, E, 50c; Shat-	100
Four little sisters, Mt Moriah,	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	tnck, Mrs S H, 50c; Subr, Merced,	100
Mo	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Cal, 50c; Shut-in, Minn, 20c; A Shut-	100
Goode, D P	500	Tauscher, Lydia	100	in, N H, 25c; Spurrell, Flora 25c;	100
Gilbert, F	688	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Swan, Howard 10c; Shoaff, Bertha	100
Gilbert, H M	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	30c; Subr, West Grove, Ore 25c;	100
Gough, Ralph	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Shnr, Chaffield, Minn 30c; Subr,	100
Grace, Postville	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Hopkinson, Iowa, 30c; Subr, Peters-	100
Hend, Miss J	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	horo, N H, 50c; Schoonmaker, R D,	100
Hilbert, Mrs E	300	Tauscher, Lydia	100	50c; S S teacher & class, Enid, Pa,	100
Hawthorn, G W	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	50c; S S class of Sarah E Toucks, 60c.	100
Harper, Mabel and Helen	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Thornton, Mrs H A, 50c; Tom,	100
Howard, Mrs M H	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Mrs, 50c; Tom, Sallie, 5c; Talbot,	100
Hardy, A S	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	May, 5c; Two friends, Duryea, Pa,	100
Hitchcock, Mary	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	60c; Two seamstresses, N Y, 50c;	100
Harris, Ada I	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	True sympathizer, Ashland, Va, 50c;	100
Holmes, A M G	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Thompson, Mr C, 25c; Two Chris-	100
Herrick, Mr and Mrs A P	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	tian classes, Pilot Knob, Tenn, 50c; Two SS	100
Hankins, Mrs	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	classes of Pres Church, Barleyville,	100
Hall, Mrs Etie	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	Kan, 60c; Three little boys and	100
Hall, C W	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
Harrison, Wm N	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
Hall, Jas C	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
In His Name, Warren, Pa	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
"Florence, Mass	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
"Tallman, Mich	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
"Colton, N Y	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
"Paradise, Kan	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
"Presque Isle, Me	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
"Nasau Valley, Cal	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
"Williamstown, Ky	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
"Gambier, O	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
In His Name, A B D	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
Le Raysville, Pa	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
In Christ's Name, Blk'shear, Ga	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
In Jesus Name, Troy, N Y	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
In as much, Winfield, Kan	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
Jones, Hugh W	200	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
Johnson, Miss Alice	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
Johnson, Mrs A A	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
Jr S P, Port Chester, N Y	225	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
Jr S C, Kelley's Island, O	100	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100
Jr Class SS, New Westfield, Me	110	Tauscher, Lydia	100	friends, 30c; Three little boys and	100

A KING AND A SABBATH OBSERVER.

The conscientious observance of the Sabbath is the subject of many anecdotes. One of these is the following: "An English king was having some repairs made to one of his palaces. Every day the king came to see the progress of the work and watch the workmen. One Monday morning he was there as usual, and missing one of the men, whose activity had attracted his attention, inquired where he was. He was at first answered evasively by the workmen; at last they said that not being able to complete a particular job on the Saturday night they had returned to finish it on Sunday morning, and that as the man had refused to accompany them, he had been dismissed from his employment. 'Send him back immediately,' said the king. 'The man who refuses to work on the Lord's Day is the man for me.'"

A Valuable Addition to the culinary list is Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream, an absolutely pure, unsweetened condensed milk so carefully prepared that it keeps indefinitely and is always available for every recipe walking for milk or cream.

THE RELIGION OF THIBET.

"Miss Annie Taylor, who has just set out for Thibet, gives the following description of a scene she witnessed in that where the Gospel has never been preached. "I was staying at a place called Tsing-sing, just on the Thibetan border, and visited a large temple some distance from there called Jhare Kum Bum, or the monastery of the hundred thousand idols. There was a very large fair held at the time I was there. I went with the people into one of the temples to see what kind of idols they worshipped, and I saw the people worshipping among other things the image of the devil. The devil was represented very much as he is represented in our children's story books—copper colored with horns, and in the place round him were represented flames of fire. Before this image, with lamps and incense, men and women were worshipping. I have seen in Thibet two lamas, or priests, dressed up in the most hideous dress and hideous mask, dancing to entertain the devil. Those who say that heathens have a religion and it suffices for them, surely cannot know that the greater part of heathen worship is simply devil worship."

Good Advice Quickly Followed

Cured of Rheumatism by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.: "I was taken down with rheumatism over a year ago. I was sick for over six months. Often I would have such pains that I could hardly endure them. A friend came to me and advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I took him at his word and got a bottle of it, and since have taken eight bottles of it."

It Has Cured Me

When the doctors could do me no good whatever. After being benefited so much from this medicine I describe Hood's Sarsaparilla as a wonderful medicine. I also advise every one who is troubled with rheumatism to try without Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am a farmer, and the medicine has given me much energy and strength to perform my work." GEORGE W. TLEY, Benjamin, Missouri.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Hood's Pills are hand made, and perfect in proportion and appearance. 25c. a box.

PARSON'S PILLS.

Make New Rich Blood.

"Best Liver Pill Made"

Positively cure PILLOWNESS and SICK HEADACHE, Liver and Bowel Complaints. They expel all impurities from the blood. Delicate women find great benefit from using them. Price 25c. five $1.00. Full particulars free. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., 22 Custom House St., Boston, Mass.

No local dealer can compete with us

WALL PAPER

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy" in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples.

Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.

We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 25 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS,

30-32 W. 13th St., NEW YORK. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

Swiss

Lozenges,

For curing Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, &c.

Price, 25 cts. a Box Mailed

H. EDWARD WENDEL,

S. E. cor. 3d and George Streets, Philadelphia

WALL PAPERS

Send 10c. for postage & a beautiful line of samples and book of instructions how to paper. We retail at wholesale prices. Agents and paper-hangers send $1.00 for large books.

R. B. BRADLEY, 704 Grand Ave., New Haven, Conn.

CURED

Our Book on Piles—Free

Bacon Medicine Co., Richmond, Va., U.S.A.

PRINTING OFFICE 15c

A large font of Type (over 44) with Figures, Holder, Indelible Ink, Pad, Tweezers, Corkscrew, etc., as shown in cut, complete in use. Best Linen Marker Card Printer, Regular Price $1.00. Sample postpaid for 15c. to introduce, with Catalogue of 150 new names. CAT. FREE.

INGERSOLL & Bro., 63 Cortland St., N. Y. City

"A fair face cannot atone for an untidy house." Use

SAPOLIO

Positively you have the genuine De Long PATENT Hook AND EYE if you see on the face and back of every card the words:

See that hump? Richardson & De Long Bros., Philadelphia.

FREE!

DEAF A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.

MAIZE, Kas., Jan. 28, '94.

For many years I suffered from Catarrh of the head and throat, which destroyed my hearing, and for twenty-five years I was so deaf that I could not understand conversation at all. Could not hear a clock strike by holding my ear against it. I had tried every known remedy, and nothing had ever given me the slightest relief. Last summer I obtained Dr. Moore's treatment, and had not used it three weeks until my hearing began to improve, and has steadily improved ever since, and now I can hear common conversation across a room without difficulty; can hear a clock strike in an adjoining room, 30 feet away, with the door closed, and I think I am entirely cured and my hearing permanently restored. I urge all who are afflicted as I was, to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment.

EDWIN COLEMAN.

A GREAT SHIP CANAL.

ONE of the greatest engineering projects the world has ever known, has lately been brought to successful completion in England. The Manchester Ship Canal, which was opened recently, is a remarkable work, and has been accomplished in the face of many obstacles, both financial and engineering. Originally estimated to cost $50,000,000, its construction has involved the expenditure of $75,000,000. The first step was taken in 1887, and on Nov. 25, last, the canal was, for the first time, filled with water. The building of this canal, only thirty-five and a-half miles in length, has involved an enormous amount of work. There were 100 steam excavators of various kinds at work, 173 locomotives, 104 steam and other cranes, 182 portable and other steam engines, 209 steam pumps, 6,300 wagons, and 59 pile engines. There were 223 miles of temporary railway, while 16,361 men and boys were employed, and the consumption of coal amounted to 10,000 tons a month. The total amount of excavation is estimated at 76,000,000 tons. There are 175,000 cubic yards of brickwork, which involved the use of 70,000,000 bricks in the entire structure.

A SECTION OF THE NEW MANCHESTER CANAL.

The canal was the outcome of the competition between Manchester and Liverpool. The latter, being a seaport, enjoyed a monopoly of the cotton carrying trade, while Manchester, though the greatest centre of the cotton industry in the world, had no outlet for its manufactures, except through Liverpool, and had to suffer in consequence. The canal will make the supremacy of Liverpool a thing of the past as far as the cotton carrying trade is concerned. The canal, a great part of which runs alongside the river Mersey, is excavated throughout its whole length to a minimum width of 120 feet at the bottom, and averages 172 feet at water-level. The upper portion is 170 feet wide at the bottom and 230 feet at water-level. At the various locks the canal is considerably wider, and will admit of vessels turning. Large steamers can pass each other at any part of the canal, and where works are built on the side of the canal, it is widened to allow of shipping lying alongside wharves, without interfering with the passage of vessels up and down the canal. It has seven bridges, worked by hydraulic power. There are nearly 40,000 shareholders in the canal, which ranks in commercial importance with those of Suez, Nicaragua, Panama and other great engineering projects of the present century.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS OF THE WORLD.

The following figures in reference to the Sunday Schools in this country and in the world were given at the recent meeting of the International Sunday School Committee: Number of schools in the United States, 121,977; officers and teachers, 1,303,254; scholars, 9,688,566—total 11,113,557. In the whole world there are: Schools, 224,563; officers and teachers, 2,239,738; scholars, 20,268,923—total, 22,732,224.

POLYCARP'S LAST PRAYER.

Polycarp was the martyr who, when advised to curse Christ and live, replied: "Six and eighty years have I served him, and he has done me nothing but good. How could I curse my Lord and Saviour?" While the crowd was gathering fuel to burn him with, he calmly prayed: "Thou God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom I have received the knowledge of thee! O, God of the angels and powers and of every living creature, and of all sorts of just men that live in thy presence, I thank thee that thou hast graciously vouchsafed this day and this hour to allot me a portion among the number of martyrs, among the people of Christ, unto the resurrection of everlasting life; among whom I shall be received in thy sight, this day, as a fruitful and acceptable sacrifice! Wherefore, for all this I praise thee, I bless thee, I glorify thee through the everlasting High Priest, Jesus Christ, thy well-beloved Son; to whom, with thee, the Father, and the Holy Ghost, be all glory, world without end. Amen." He was martyred A.D. 166. He had been taught by John.

CHRISTIANITY AND BUDDHISM.

In reference to a question which has been often mentioned in the secular press, Rev. S. B. Partridge, D.D., of Swatow, China, writes to the Baptist Missionary Magazine: "I have read with interest the reports which our home papers have been giving us in regard to 'The Parliament of Religions,' and have been amazed at the reception which was given to Buddhism. A Buddhist priest is reported to have asked, at one of the sessions, how many of those present had ever read the life of Buddha. Five persons responded by show of hands. The priest exclaimed 'Five only,' and added, '475,000,000 of people accept our religion.' Had I been present, and had questions been in order, I would have asked the priest how many of the 475,000,000 Buddhists had themselves ever read the life of Buddha. I am confident that five in the company which was before him was a larger percentage than he would find in an equally large company of the followers of Buddha. The Burmese are Buddhists, and Burmese nationality is practically extinct under British rule. The Siamese are Buddhists, and in their recent submission to the demands of France, I see the beginning of the end.

The Buddhist priest spoke of Buddha as one "who discovered the first truth of the universe, who has saved, and will save by his teachings, the millions and millions of falling human beings."

A more utterly false statement it would be impossible to make. Christ offers salvation to all Buddhists who will accept it through him, but Buddhism has nothing whatever to give to Christianity. Possibly there are Christians who might learn something to their advantage from the lives of some of the Buddhists, but Christianity can learn nothing from Buddhism. I speak that which I know, and testify of that which I have seen."

A HELPFUL NEIGHBOR.

"There's a man," said a gentleman, speaking of a village carpenter, "who has done more good, I really believe, in this community than any man who ever lived in it. He cannot talk very well in prayer-meeting, and he does not often try. He isn't worth two thousand dollars, and it is very little he can put down on subscription papers for any other object. But a new family never family never moves into the village that he does not find them out, to give them a neighborly welcome, and offer any little service he can render. He is usually on the outlook to give strangers a seat in his pew in church. He is always ready to watch with a sick neighbor, and look after his affairs for him; and I've sometimes thought he and his wife kept house-plants in winter just for the sake of being able to send little bouquets to invalids. He finds time for a pleasant word for every child he meets, and you'll always see them climbing into his one-horse wagon when he has no other load. He really seems to have a genius for helping folks in all sorts of common ways, and it does me good every day, just to meet him on the streets."

Horsford's Acid Phosphate,

If you are Nervous, and cannot sleep, try it.

An Asthma Cure at Last

European physicians and medical journals report a positive cure for Asthma, in the Kola plant, found on the Congo River, West Africa. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending free trial cases of the Kola Compound by mail to all sufferers from Asthma, who send name and address on a postal card. A trial costs you nothing.

O'Neill's

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street,

NEW YORK.

Importers and Retailers.

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Cloaks,

Costumes, Fancy Goods, etc.

Special.

A Good Seasonable Tailor-made Suit (same as cut) of All-Wool Cheviot Serge, black or navy, Alexandra waist, skirt four yards wide, extreme sleeves, turn-over collar, double breasted waist, lined and stayed, all silk sewed, for

$7.98

When ordering by mail, please mention Bust and Sleeve Measurement, also length of Skirt in front.

Send for our Illustrated Catalogue

Now Ready.

Mention The Christian Herald when ordering.

All purchases delivered by express, free of charge, at any point within 100 miles of New York City.

H. O'NEILL & CO.,

6th Ave., 20th to 21st St., New York.

DEXTER SHOE CO. (Incorporated, Capital, $1,000,000.) 149 Federal St., Boston, Mass.

GET WINNOWN SONGS.

257 songs; $35 per 100, in Boards. Many of the leading Sunday Schools in the land have adopted this book.

The Bigelow & Main Co. The John Church Co.
70 East Ninth St., New York. S.E.C. 4th & Elm, Cincinnati.

FREE COMET FOUNTAIN PEN

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this Hard Rubber Fountain Pen. Warranted a perfect writer & impenetrable. Bureau Catalogue, for use to cover postage.

SECURITY HOSE SUPPORTER

Sold Everywhere—Made by Warner Bros., N. Y. and Chicago.

Chautauqua
June 30-Aug. 27, 1894.
The Famous Summer Town.
"Change of occupation, not idleness, is true recreation."
NOT ONE DULL DAY.
Classes, Lectures, Concerts, Entertainments, Outdoor Sports, Illuminations, and Fireworks.
AN IDEAL FAMILY RESORT.
Free Kindergarten, Boys and Girls' Clubs, Vacation Schools, etc., etc.
Hotel Athenaeum—of the first rank.
Cost of Living at the Minimum.
W. A. DUNCAN, Sec'y, Syracuse, N. Y.

Tailor-Made Gowns

READY OR TO ORDER.

We call particular attention to our different lines:

In Covert Cloths—Brown, Tan, and Gray—$22.00 to $55; ready-made from our own workroom, or they will be made to order at short notice for the same price.

Whipcord Suits, $28, $35, $40, $42, and $55.

Outing Suits in Covert Cloth—all Colors—$15.00 to $18.00.

Outing Suits in Serge—Blue and Black—Cutaways, Blazers, and Coats, $11, $15, $17, $18, $22, $25, $28, and $32, according to style and finish.

In the same department, Coats, Jackets, Capes, and all varieties of Spring Wraps, at most moderate prices.

James McCreery & Co.,

BROADWAY & 11th STREET,
NEW YORK.

Arnold
Constable & Co.
London and Paris Made
COSTUMES.

Tailor-Made Suits,

Riding Habits.

LACE TRIMMED DRESSES,

Evening Toilets, Costumes,

GARMENTS, CLOAKS,

WRAPS, MACKINTOSHES,

STORM COATS.

Broadway & 19th St.

NEW YORK.

LOOK AT THE CROOK

Can't slip—Can't cut
Metal work covered up

Sold Everywhere—Made by Warner Bros., N. Y. and Chicago.

SOLOMON'S SPLENDOR.*

THE principal palace of Solomon was thirteen years in building. It was situated on the eastern brow of the upper or ancient part of the city, at a point opposite to the citadel and palaces of David on the west, and overlooking the temple on the east. When completed it was connected with the temple area by a causeway spanning the Tyropean valley. As yet the work had been in progress but four years, or since the completion of the temple. The only portion finished was the house of the daughter of Pharaoh, which was at the south end of the great court and extended around to the Hall of Judgment, on the side toward the city. At the northern end was yet to be built "the house where the king dwelt," or the great palace for the royal harem, with its interior courts. On the east side, toward the temple, was to rise the magnificent hall of state, known as the House of the Forest of Lebanon. This hall received its name from the forest of lofty cedars supporting its roof. Its walls, like those of the other edifices, were of sawed stone, which rose white and glistening in that eastern sun, one of the chief landmarks of Zion. The interior was wainscoted with tiers of various-colored, polished marbles, surmounted by a fourth course carved to represent leaves and flowers. Above, the plastered walls, richly colored and gilded, were pierced with windows which afforded to the hall an ample light. Other were to come wondering embassies from distant lands, depositing their gifts and looking through the maze of columns at the dazzling throne guarded by lions, where sat the monarch in all his splendor. From this palace, when the acme of his splendor and luxury should be reached, the king would roll forth in state to visit the royal pleasures. One of the most famous of these was far to the north, under the shadows of Lebanon. Another was at Bethany, near Bethlehem, a morning's ride from Jerusalem. Josephus has given us a picture of the pageant, as the king set forth in early dawn for the latter resort in one of his gorgeous Egyptian chariots. He tells us of the splendid routine of attendants, of the youths, of the body-guard with flowing air powdered with gold, of the train of mounted archers resplendent in gold and purple. We see the monarch in his pride, his glittering crown and the gems that stud his lustrous robe flash back the sun. As if receiving the homage of nature, he reclines at ease and drinks as his own the cool air of the morning.

How like a vision out of another world must the pageant have seemed, as it swept past the cottage of some humble Israelite whom toil and taxes kept grinding from dawn to dusk, doing his part to support such pomp!

Though that stage of luxury and adulation was yet a decade away, the bent of king and court was already taken in that direction. The official residence was still the old palace at the citadel amid modest surroundings. But at the house of the Egyptian princess, the monarch was enjoying all that the world could suggest of luxurious indulgence. Already the twelve chief purveyors at the court were important personages. The great household officers hardly bowed before the princes of the tribes. All was in train for a typical Oriental despotism. Darius, a wealthy Corinthian Christian, Paul the Apostle, having at his side his

THE GREAT ARGUMENT.

It is in the month of February, in the year of Christ 38. In a room in the house of amanuensis Tertius, addresses himself to write to the converts of the mission at Rome. For himself, the apostle is about to close his three months' stay at Corinth; he has heard of plots against his life, and will in prudence decline the more direct route from Cenchreae by sea, striking northward for Philippi, and thence over the Egean to Troas. Jerusalem he must visit, if possible before May is over, for he has by him the Greek collections to deliver to the poor converts of Jerusalem. Then, in the vista of his former movements, he sees Rome, and thinks with a certain apprehension yet with longing hope about life and witness there. A Greek Christian woman is about to visit the city, Phoebe, a ministrant of the mission at Cenchrea. He must commend her to the Roman brethren; and a deliberate letter to them is suggested by this personal need.

*From The Son of a Prophet, by George Anson Jackson. A vivid picture of life in the time of King Solomon; pp. 294; cloth covers; price $1.50. Houghton Mifflin & Co., New York and Boston, publishers.

†From The Expatriate's Bible: The Epistle to the Romans, by Prof. Handley C. G. Moule, M.A. Of all the books of the Bible, the one on which the ordinary reader needs light most is the Epistle to the Romans. The argument is so subtle, the point of view is so remote, that although we understand enough to wonder and admire, we are conscious of the existence of depths which we cannot sound and heights that we cannot attain. It is well that this volume, which deals with the epistle was committed to a scholar so learned and so reverent as Prof. Moule. Pp. 437; price $1.50. Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, 51 East Tenth street, New York.

He had been just engaged also with the problems of Christian life, in the mission at Corinth. There the main trouble was less of creed than of conduct. In the Corinthian Epistles we find no great traces of an energetic heretical propaganda, but rather a bias in the converts towards a strange license of temper and life. Perhaps this was even accentuated by the popular logical assent to the truth of justification taken alone, isolated from other concurrent truths, tempting the Corinthian to dream that he might "continue in sin that grace might abound." If such were his state of spiritual thought, he would encounter (by his own fault), a positive moral danger in the supernatural "Gifts," which at Corinth about that time seem to have appeared with quite abnormal power. An antinomian theory, in the presence of such exaltations, would lead the man easily to the conception that he was too free and too rich in the supernatural order to be the servant of common duties and even of common morals. Thus the apostle's soul would be full of the need of expounding to its depths the vital harmony of the Lord's work for the believer and the Lord's work in him: the co-ordination of a free acceptance of both the precept and the possibility of holiness. He must show once for all how the justified are bound to be poor and humble, and how they can so be, and what forms of practical dutifulness their life must take. He must make it clear forever that the ransom which releases also purchases; and the Lord's freeman is the Lord's property: that the death of the Cross, reckoned as the death of the justified sinner, leads direct to his living union with the Risen One, including a union of will with will; and that thus the Christian life, if true to itself, must be a life of loyalty to every obligation, every relation, constituted in God's providence among men. The Christian who is not attentive to others, even where their mere prejudices and mistakes are in question, is a Christian out of character. So is the Christian who is not a scrupulously loyal citizen, recognizing civil order as the will of God. So is the Christian who in any respect claims to live as he pleases, instead of as the bond-servant of his Redeemer should live.

CATALOGUES RECEIVED.

Scott's Roses and other Beautiful Flowers: a Handy Catalogue for the Gardener; pp. 64; paper covers; illustrated. Issued by Robert Scott & Son, Philadelphia.

Rare Florida Plants and Fruits: a Manual for the Use of Horticulturists and others; pp. 64; illustrated; paper covers. Issued by Pike & Ellsworth, Jessamine, Pasco county, Florida.

Burpee's Farm Annual for 1894: a Comprehensive Guide to the Seed and Plant Buyer; pp. 172; paper covers; fully illustrated. W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia, publishers.

Injurious Insects, and the Use of Insecticides: by Frank W. Semper, Director of the Fordhook Laboratory. A new handy Manual on Noxious Insects with Methods for their Repression; especially valuable to Farmers and Horticulturists; copiously illustrated; pp. 116; paper covers. W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia, publishers.

The Good & Reese Co., Illustrated Catalogue and Price-list of flowers and seeds. Contains everything necessary for the farmer, gardener, or florist. A superb variety of seeds. Issued by the Good & Reese Co., Champion City Greenhouses, Springfield, O.

Vick's Floral Guide for 1894, comes this year in a suit of gold with illustrations in eight different colors. Contains full descriptions of the latest varieties of flowers and complete price lists. Issued by James Vick's Sons, Rochester, N. Y.

Good News—Wonderful Cures of Catarrh and Consumption.

Our readers who suffer from Lung Diseases, Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption, will be glad to hear of the wonderful cures made by the new treatment known in Europe as the Andral-Proca Discovery. Write to the New Medical Advance, 67 East 6th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and they will send you this new treatment free for trial. State age and all particulars of your disease.

When people inquire about your health and you answer with a jeremiad about your ills you make them sick. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla and you will lose your tale of woe and gain health.

Send it Back

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearlina." IT'S FALSE—Pearlina is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearlina, be honest—send it back. 499 JAMES PYLE, New York.

There's no Danger to be feared, even if you do use too much Pearlina in the washing. If there's any danger of damage at all, it's when you use too little. In that case, you'll have to begin that dreadful rubbing—and carloads of Pearlina couldn't do as much damage to your clothes as that will.

Follow the directions on the package—that's the best way of all. But remember, too much won't hurt anything. It's only a waste of good Pearlina.

THE—...:..: COLLEGE ..OF.. MUSIC ..OF.. GINGINNATI

(An Eleemosynary Institution, incorporated by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio.) Ample endowed. Entire income devoted to instruction.

Furnishes a complete Education in Vocal and Instrumental Music, Literature, Elocution and Oratory.

Large corps of able and experienced Professors.

Open throughout the year.

Summer Term—June, July, August. Students can enter any day.

Normal Classes, Chorus Classes, Prima Vista Classes, Ensemble Classes, Orchestra Classes, Lectures, Recitals, Recitals, &c., are among the free privileges.

SPECIAL DEPARTMENT for Teachers of Music in the Public Schools. Send for Catalogue.

PETER RUDOLPH NEFF, President.

HIRES' Rootbeer

makes the home circle complete. This great Temperance Drink gives pleasure and health to every member of the family. A 25c. package makes 5 gallons. Be sure and get the genuine.

Sold everywhere. Made only by The Chas. E. Hires Co., Philada.

Send 2c. stamp for beautiful Picture Cards and Book.

"B & H" Lamp

Has the Double Centre Draught.

IS AS EASY TO LIGHT AS GAS.

ALL FIRST-CLASS DEALERS SELL IT.

Send for our Little Book.

BRADLEY & HUBBARD MFG. CO.,

NEW YORK.—BOSTON.—CHICAGO.

FACTORIES: MERIDEN, CONN.

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS.

OPERA AND ASSEMBLY CHAIRS.

THE GRAND RAPIDS SCHOOL FURNITURE CO. GRAND RAPIDS MICH.

"Ability Increases Salary."

THE SPEED SECRET.

A new book for stenographers and typewriters. A short cut to rapid work in shorthand and typewriting; containing the most practical and complete system for gaining speed and accuracy that has ever been devised. Something entirely new. Adapted to all systems. A gain of 100 words a minute made in less than 3 weeks by those who have used it. It never fails. It cannot fail. It is simply perfection. Paper cover, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents, postpaid. Agents wanted.

Excelsior Publishing House, 33 Beekman st., N. Y.

A Day With Birds and Flowers,

New Songs, Recitations, Hymns, Scripture Readings.

A BEAUTIFUL 16 PAGE SERVICE,

Floral Praise FOR CHILDREN'S DAY,

No. 12, By HUBERT P. MAIN.

$4 per 100; 5 cents each by mail.

THE BICLOW & MAIN CO.

76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago

CHILDREN'S DAY

Summer Blossoms,—5 cts. ea.
Sunshine,—3 cts. ea.
The Children's King,—5 cts. ea.
Grateful Offerings,—5 cts. ea.
Gems for His Crown,—5 cts. ea.

Five excellent services complete with Carols, Resp. Readings and Recitations. Send 20 cts. in stamps for samples of the five. Cantata: FATHER TIME. For young people, very fine, price 30 cts. SEND THE LIGHT. A missionary service, price 3 cts.

Geo. F. Roscoe & Co., 340 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps.)

THE HUMAN HAIR,

Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedies.

By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F.R.S., London.

D. G. LONG & CO., 1013 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"Every one should read this little book."—Athenaeum.

AMERICAN STEM-WINDER $2.00

Not French, German or Swiss, but AMERICAN. Made at the rate of a watch every minute—1.40 per day, in our New England factory, equipped with $100,000.00 worth of new machinery. Not simply "Guaranteed"; Each Watch containing a movement of one year guarantee as an accurate Time-keeper, over our signatures, same as given with a Waltham or Elgin. American Lever Movement; 16.4 Plate; 18 Size; Quick Train; Lantern Pinion; Regular Stem-wind and Set; Dust Cap over Movement; Solid Gilt or Nickel Case, plain or beautifully engraved. Elegant Chain and Charm with each. Will keep perfect time for 10 years. Fully the equal of any Watch made.

Send it before paying, send 25c. with order & pay $1.75 C.O.D. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BROS., 65 CORTLANDT STREET, N. Y.

MONUMENTS

Don't buy Marble or Granite until you investigate WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,

76-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

YOUR OPPORTUNITY, LADIES

We absolutely give away China Sets, Clocks, Watches, Silverware, etc., to agents handling our Teas, Spices, Baking Powder, Extracts, Soaps, Perfumes, etc. LADY AGENTS wanted everywhere. No money required. Sell goods and premium received. Particulars free. THE HOWELL TEA CO., Cincinnati, O.

WONDER CABINET FREE. Pack Tricket Cards, 2 Magic Keys, Devil's Bottle, Clocks, Latest Wire Puzzle, Book of Slight of Hand, Total Value 60c. Sent free with names enclosed of 10c. Remittance for 10c. for postage. INGERSOLL & BROS., 65 Cortlandt Street N. Y.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 17.

COPYRIGHT 1894, BY LOUIS KLOPSCHE.

NUMBER 18.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, MAY 2, 1894.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

THE GOSPEL IN JERUSALEM.

Rev. A. Ben-Oliel, the Converted Jewish Preacher, and his Evangelistic Labors in the Holy City—A Christian Work of Faith, in which Wife and Daughter assist.

PRAY for the Peace of Jerusalem:
They shall prosper that love thee.

There is no spot on the wide world in which Christians are more deeply interested than in Jerusalem, "the city of the great king," the scene of the most important events in the life of our Lord and Saviour, and of the grand drama of his atoning sacrifice and man's redemption. In the future, as in the past, Jerusalem is the focus of Christian hope and expectation. The scene of His ascension will also be that of His return in majesty and the ancient metropolis which has given to the world its perfect prophets, apostles and martyrs will again be filled with the glory and blessedness of His presence.

When the great Commission to preach the Gospel to every creature was first issued, the divine mandate directed that the work "begin at Jerusalem," and that to "the Jew first," the heavenly message should be presented. This injunction, which was followed with rare fidelity by the early fathers of the faith, seemed in these later days to have been almost lost sight of. Although it is to the highest interest of the Church of Christ that the Jews should be evangelized, other fields have attracted larger Gospel effort. But the ancient people have not been forgotten either in their own native Palestine, or in other parts of the world where they are scattered. Hebrew-Christian missions have been founded in many countries and even in Jerusalem, where Moslem authority grudgingly gives consent to the exercise of other religions than Mohammedanism—there is a Christian Union Mission, doing most excellent service in the ingathering and regeneration of the Hebrews in that city. It is under the spiritual care of Rev. A. Ben-Oliel, its founder, who with his wife and daughter has labored in Palestine for many years with most blessed spiritual results.

Abraham Ben-Oliel was born at Tangiers, Morocco, in 1826. He there attended the Rabbinic schools, learning Spanish at home, Arabic out of doors, and Hebrew and Chaldee at school. When eighteen years of age, he read the New Testament for the first time; and, though his father took it away from him, it left a deep impression on his mind, and a spirit of inquiry was aroused. While visiting at Gibraltar, in 1847, he became acquainted with a Christian friend who assisted his inquiries by the loan of books. The study of the "Pilgrim's Progress," and of "Keith on Prophecy," convinced him that Jesus is the Messiah and the only Saviour of man. Having found peace to his own soul, he became most anxious to impart the knowledge of the riches of Divine grace to others; and, in order to qualify himself more fully for preaching the Gospel to others, he came over to England in 1847 to study. The Committee of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, offered to send him out as a missionary to his brethren at Gibraltar and North Africa; and in 1848 he was designated to the work, and entered upon it at once. During a visit to England in 1850, he translated St. Luke's Gospel into Judeo-Spanish, and also a number of tracts in Hebrew and Spanish. In 1852, he was ordained to the ministry at the Orange Street Chapel, London, by twelve ministers, representing the Presbyterian, Con-

ried to a daughter of the Rev. B. Lewis, a devoted Baptist volunteer minister of London. She died in 1861.

In 1856-58, Mr. Ben-Oliel was employed by the Committee of the Jewish Scheme of the Established Church of Scotland in Turkey, where he was instrumental in opening missions at Thessalonica and Smyrna. In July, 1859, he rejoined his old friends of the British Society, and went out again to North Africa—Oran, Algeria, being the central station. In 1867, he was called to Algiers on an errand of deep and touching interest. Few servants of God were more signally blest than he in bringing their own immediate relatives to the Saviour. He had reason brother Moses, after steadfastly enduring a long course of trials for the truth's sake, declared himself on the Lord's side, and was baptized, with his children. Mr. Ben-Oliel's three surviving brothers and his sister are not only Christians, but all in the service of the Master. One is minister of an Episcopal Free Church at Addiscombe; one is serving the Bible Society; the third is an evangelist in Spain; and his sister is the wife of the Rev. J. Villiesid, a missionary to Spain. Mr. Villiesid himself was born to spiritual life under Mr. Ben-Oliel's roof, and through the prayers and teaching of his wife.

In Spain it was Mr. Ben-Oliel's privilege to be the first Evangelical minister that preached the Gospel of salvation at Linares, near Cordova, and at San Fernando, Isla de Leon, the chief naval arsenal of Spain, at the earnest petition of the people themselves. He organized churches at Cadiz and San Fernando, and assisted in the organization of the Jerez church. In Spain, Mr. Ben-Oliel, after nine years of solitary life since the death of his first wife, in 1870 married Miss Agnes Seeley, an English lady, sister of the Revs. Edward and Henry Seeley, and cousin of Professor Seeley, of Cambridge University, the celebrated author of "Ecce Home."

Their union was blessed with nine living children, the three eldest being devoted helpers in mission work. His congregation at Cadiz grew rapidly, frequently numbering over 1000. He opened schools for both sexes, which eventually contained nearly 350 pupils. He superintended the labors of evangelists, colporteurs and Bible-women and gave special instruction to candidates for membership. His success provoked the opposition and animosity of the Romish priests who started a newspaper, published on Sundays, to abuse and vilify him and his work, and controvert his teaching, which priests were sent constantly to hear and report. In various other ways, they annoyed and persecuted him, but he labored on earnestly and successfully, despite opposition.

Mr. Ben-Oliel was appointed as missionary to Jews and Spaniards, in the expectation that the Sephardi Jews would have flocked to Spain to settle there again; but though small numbers visited Spain on business during the republic, none took their families there to settle, and Mr. Ben-Oliel's conscience revolted against spending money given for the spiritual regeneration of his brethren to the benefit of the Gentiles, and he was, therefore, directed to go to his old field, Oran, Algeria, and he did so. At Oran, where his brother Moses is laboring for the British and Foreign Bible Society, Jews and Spaniards flocked to his house to hear the Word of God; but he had not sufficient accommodation for them. He prevailed on the French Protestant Pastors to let him use their "Temple" for the Sabbath evening services, they having only one weekly service on Sunday forenoons. Soon the "Temple" began to be crammed with Jews, Jewesses, and Spaniards, &c., and the pastors got alarmed, knowing that the government, on whom they depended for their salaries, is strongly opposed to propagandism—proselytism they called it—and with-

(Continued on page 282.)

THE JERUSALEM MISSION—REV. A. BEN-OLIEL, ITS FOUNDER AND CONDUCTOR, WITH HIS WIFE AND DAUGHTER.

(Photographed specially for "The Christian Herald".)

gregational, Wesleyan, Baptist, and Lutheran churches. Shortly afterward he was recognized by the Presbytery of Edinburgh as a member and ordained a missionary of that church. The same year he was married to a daughter of the Rev. B. Lewis, a devoted Baptist volunteer minister of London. She died in 1861.

In 1856-58, Mr. Ben-Oliel was employed by the Committee of the Jewish Scheme of the Established Church of Scotland in Turkey, where he was instrumental in opening missions at Thessalonica and Smyrna. In July, 1859, he rejoined his old friends of the British Society, and went out again to North Africa—Oran, Algeria, being the central station. In 1867, he was called to Algiers on an errand of deep and touching interest. Few servants of God were more signally blest than he in bringing their own immediate relatives to the Saviour. He had reason

WRESTLING WITH THE SUPERNATURAL.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday at the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Text: "And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day. And when he saw that he prevailed not against him, he touched the hollow of his thigh; and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint as he wrestled with him. And he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh. And he said, I will not let thee go except thou bless me."

THE dust arose from a traveling herd of cattle, and sheep, and goats, and camels. They are the present that Jacob sends to gain the goodwill of his offended brother. That night Jacob halts by the brook Jabbok. But there is no rest for the weary man. No shining ladder to let the angels down into his dream; but a fierce combat, that lasts until the morning, with an unknown visitor. They each try to throw the other. The unknown visitor, to reveal his superior power, by a touch wrenches Jacob's thigh bone from its socket, perhaps maiming him for life. As on the morning sky the clusters of purple cloud begin to ripen, Jacob sees it is an angel with whom he has been contending, and not one of his brother's coadjutors. "Let me go," cries the angel, lifting himself up into increasing light, "the day breaketh."

You see, in the first place, that God allows good people sometimes to get into a terrible struggle. Jacob was a good man; but here he is left alone in the midnight to wrestle with a tremendous influence by the brook Jabbok. For Joseph, a pit; for Daniel, a wild beast den; for David, de-thronement and exile; for John the Baptist, a wilderness diet and the executioner's axe; for Peter, a prison; for Paul, shipwreck; for John, desolate Patmos; for Vashti, most insulting cruelty; for Josephine, banishment; for Mrs. Sigourney, the agony of a drunkard's wife; for John Wesley, stones hurled by an infuriated mob; for Catherine, the Scotch girl, the drowning surges of the sea; for Mr. Burns, the buffeting of the Montreal populace; for John Brown of Edinburgh, the pistol-shot of Lord Claverhouse; for Hugh McKail, the scaffold; for Latimer, the stake; for Christ, the Cross. For whom the rocks, the gibbets, the guillotines, the thumb-screws? For the sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty. Some one said to a Christian reformer, "The world is against you." "Then," he replied, "I am against the world."

I will go further, and say that every Christian has his struggle. This man had his combat in Wall street; this one on Broad street; this one on Fulton street; this one on Chestnut street; this one on State street; this one on Lombard street; this one on the Bourse. With financial misfortune you have had the midnight wrestle. Red-hot disasters have dropped into your store from loft to cellar. What you bought you could not sell. Whom you trusted fled. The help you expected would not come. Some giant panic, with long arms, and grip like death, took hold of you in an awful wrestle, from which you have not yet escaped, and it is uncertain whether it will throw you, or you will throw it. Here is another soul, in struggle with some bad appetite. He knew not how stealthily it was growing upon him. One hour he woke up. He said, "For the sake of my soul, of my family, and of my children, and of my God, I must stop this!" And behold he found himself alone, by the brook Jabbok; and it was midnight. That evil appetite seized upon him, and he seized upon it; and oh, the horror of the conflict! When once a bad habit has aroused itself up to destroy a man, and the man has sworn that, by the help of the eternal God, he will destroy it, all heaven draws itself out in a long line of light, to look from above, and hell stretches itself in myriads of spite to look up from beneath. I have seen men rally themselves for such a struggle; and they have bitten their lip, and clenched their fists, and cried with a blood-red earnestness, and a rain of scalding tears, "God help me!"

From a wrestle with habit I have seen men fall back defeated. Calling for no help, but relying on their own resolutions, they have come into the struggle; and for a time it seemed as if they were getting the upper hand of their habit; but that habit rallied again its infernal power, and lifted a soul from its standing, and with a force borrowed from the pit, hurled it into utter darkness. First, I saw the auctioneer's mallet fall on the pictures, and musical instruments, and the rich upholstery of his family parlor. After awhile I saw him fall into the ditch. Then, in the midnight, when the children were dreaming their sweetest dreams, and Christian households are silent with slumber, angel-watched, I heard him give the sharp shriek that followed the stab of his own poniard. He fell from an honored social position; he fell from a family circle of which once he was the grandest attraction; he fell from the house of God, at whose altars he had been consecrated; he fell—for ever! But, thank God, I have often seen a better termination than that. I have seen men prepare themselves for such a wrestling. They laid hold of God's help as they went into combat. The giant habit, regaled by the cup of many temptations, came out strong and defiant. They clenched. There were the writhings and distortions of a fearful struggle. But the old giant began to waver; and at last, in the midnight, alone, with none but God to witness, by the brook Jabbok, the giant fell; and the triumphant wrestler broke the darkness with the cry, "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." There is a widow's heart, that first was desolated by bereavement, and since, by the anxieties and trials that came in the support of a family. It is a sad thing to see a man contending for a livelihood under disadvantages; but to see a delicate woman, with helpless little ones at her back, fighting the giants of poverty and sorrow, is more affecting. It was a humble home, and passers-by knew not that within those four walls were displays of courage more admirable than that of Hannibal crossing the Alps, or the Pass of Thermopylae, or Bala-klava, where, "into the jaws of death, rode the six hundred." These heroes had the whole world to cheer them on; but there were none to applaud the struggle in the humble home. She fought for bread, for clothing, for fire, for shelter, with aching head and weak side, and exhausted strength, through the long night by the brook Jabbok. Could it be that none would give her help? Had God forgotten to be gracious? No! contending soul. The midnight air is full of wings, coming to the rescue. She hears it now, in the sough of the night wind, in the ripple of the brook Jabbok,—the promise made so long ago, ringing down the sky: "Thy fatherless children I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in me!" Some one said to a very poor woman, "How is it that in such distress you keep cheerful?" She said, "I do it by what I call cross prayers. When I had my rent to pay, and nothing to pay it with, and bread to buy and nothing to buy it with, I used to sit down and cry. But now I do not get discouraged. If I go along the street when I come to a corner of the street, I say, 'The Lord help me!' I then go on until I come to another crossing of the street, and again I say, 'The Lord help me!' And so I utter a prayer at every crossing; and since I have got into the habit of saying these 'cross prayers,' I have been able to keep up my courage."

Learn again from this subject, that people sometimes are surprised to find out that what they have been struggling with in the darkness is really an "angel of blessing." Jacob found in the morning that this strange personage was not an enemy, but a God-despatched messenger to promise prosperity for him and for his children. And so many a man, at the close of his trial, has found out that he has been trying to throw down his own blessing. If you are a Christian man, I will go back in your history and find that the grandest things that have ever happened to you, have been your trials. Nothing short of scourging, imprisonment, and shipwreck, could have made Paul what he was. When David was fleeing through the wilderness, pursued by his own son, he was being prepared to become the sweet singer of Israel. The pit and the dungeon were the best schools at which Joseph ever graduated. The hurricane that upset the tent, and killed Job's children, prepared the man of Uz to write the magnificent poem that has astounded the ages. There is no way to get the wheat out of the straw but to thresh it. There is no way to purify the gold but to burn it. Look at the people who have always had it their own way. They are proud, discontented, useless and unhappy. If you want to find cheerful folks, go among those who have been purified by the fire. After Rossini had rendered "William Tell" the five hundredth time, a company of musicians came under his window in Paris and serenaded him. They put upon his brow a golden crown of laurel leaves! But, amid all the applause and enthusiasm Rossini turned to a friend and said, "I would give all this brilliant scene for a few days of youth and love." Contrast the melancholy feeling of Rossini, who had everything that this world could give him, to the joyful experience of Isaac Watts, whose misfortunes were innumerable, when he says:

The Hill of Zion yields
A thousand sacred sweets,
Before we reach the heavenly fields,
Or walk the golden streets.
Then let our songs abound,
And every tear be dry,
We are marching through Immanuel's ground,
To lazier worlds on high.

It is prosperity that kills, and trouble that saves. While the Israelites were on the march, amid great privations and hardships they behaved well. After awhile they prayed for meat; and the sky darkened with a great flock of quails; and these quails fell in large multitudes all about them; and the Israelites ate and ate, and stuffed themselves until they died. Oh, my friends, it is not hardship, or trial, or starvation that injures the soul, but abundant supply. It is not the vulture of trouble that eats up the Christian's life; it is the quails! it is the quails! You will yet find out that your midnight wrestle by the brook Jabbok is with an angel of God, come down to bless and save.

Learn again that, while our wrestling with trouble may be triumphant, we must expect that it will leave its mark upon us. Jacob prevailed, but the angel touched him and his thigh-bone sprang from its socket, and the good man went limping on his way. We must carry through this world the mark of the combat. What ploughed those premature wrinkles in your face? What whitened your hair before it was time for frost? What silenced forever so much of the hilarity of your household? Ah! it is because the angel of trouble hath touched you that you go limping on your way. You need not be surprised that those who have passed through the fire do not feel as gay as once they did.

Do not be out of patience with those who come not out of their despondency. They may triumph over their loss, and yet their gait shall tell you that they have been trouble-touched. Are we Stoics, that we can, unmoved, see our cradle rifled of the bright eyes and the sweet lips? Can we stand unmoved and see our gardens of earthly delight uprooted? Will Jesus, who wept himself, be angry with us if we pour our tears into the graves that open to swallow down what we love best? Was Lazarus more dear to him than our beloved dead to us? No. We have a right to weep. Our tears must come. You shall not drive them back to scald the heart. They fall into God's bottle. Afflicted ones have died because they could not weep. Thank God for the sweet, the mysterious relief that comes to us in tears! Under this gentle rain the flowers of corn put forth their bloom. God pity that dry, withered, parched, all-consuming grief that wrings its hands, and grinds its teeth, and bites its nails unto the quick, but cannot weep! We may have found the comfort of the Cross, and yet ever after show that in the dark night, and by the brook Jabbok, we were trouble-touched.

Again: we may take the idea of the text, and announce the approach of the day-dawn. No one was ever more glad to see the morning than was Jacob after that night of struggle. It is appropriate for philanthropists and Christians to cry out with this angel of the text, "The day breaketh." The world's prospects are brightening. The Church of Christ is rising up in its strength to go forth, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." Clap you hands, all ye people, the day breaketh. The bigotries of the earth are perishing. The time was when we were told that if we wanted to get to heaven, we must be immersed or sprinkled; or we must believe in the perseverance of the saints, or in falling away from grace, or a liturgy, or no liturgy; or they must be Calvinists, or Arminians, in order to reach heaven. We have all come to confess now that these are non-essentials in religion.

During my vacation, one summer, I was in a Presbyterian audience, and it was sacramental day, and with grateful heart I received the Holy Communion. On the next Sabbath I was in a Methodist Church, and sat at a love-feast. On the following Sabbath I was in an Episcopal Church, and knelt at the altar and received the consecrated bread. I do not know which service I enjoyed the most. "I believe in the communion of saints and in the life everlasting." "The day breaketh."

As I look upon this audience, I see many who have passed through waves of trouble that came up higher than their girdle. In God's name I proclaim cessation of hostilities. You shall not go always saddened and heart-broken. God will lift your burden. God will bring your dead to life. God will staunch the heart's bleeding. I know he will. Like as a father pities his children, so the Lord pities you. The pains of earth will end. The tomb will burst. The dead will rise. The morning star trembles on a brightening sky. The gates of the east begin to swing open. The day breaketh.

Luther and Melancthon were talking together gloomily about the prospects of the church. They could see no hope of deliverance. After awhile, Luther got up and said to Melancthon, "Come, Philip, let us sing the forty-sixth Psalm of David: 'God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled; though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Selah.'"

Death to many, nay to all, is a struggle and a wrestle. We have many friends that will be hard to leave. I care not how light our future hope is. It is a bitter thing to look upon this fair world, and know that we shall never again see its blossoming spring, its falling fruits, its sparkling streams, and to say farewell to those with whom we played in childhood, or counseled in manhood. In that night, like Jacob, we may have to wrestle, but God will not leave us unblest. It shall not be told in heaven at a dying soul cried unto God for help, it was not delivered. The lattice may be mended to keep out the sun, or a book set dim the light of the midnight taper; or the room may be filled with the cries of phanage and widowhood; or the Church Christ may mourn over our going; but if Jesus calls, all is well. The strong resting by the brook will cease; the hour death's night will pass along; one o'clock in the morning: two o'clock in the morning: four o'clock in the morning; the day breaketh.

So I would have it when I die. I am in no haste to be gone. I have no grudge against this world. The only fault I have found with the world is, that it treats me so well; but when the time comes to go, I must be ready, my worldly affairs all settled. If I have wronged others, I want, then, to be sure of their forgiveness. In that last wrestling, my arm enfeebled with sickness, and my head faint, I want Jesus beside me. If there be hands on this side of the flood stretched out to hold me back, I want the heavenly hands stretched out to draw me forward. Then, O Jesus, help me on and help me on. Unfearing, undoubting, may I step right out into the light, and be able to look back to my kindred and friends who would detain me here, exclaiming: Let me go—let me go! The day breaketh.

REAPING IN CONGO-LAND.

In a letter from Dr. W. H. Leslie, who is laboring at Banza Manteka, on the Congo, he says: "Between 200 and 300 souls have been added to the church here since last March, which means a great deal when it is considered that each one of them has passed through a number of rigid examinations, and their lives carefully watched for manifestations of the workings of God's Spirit before they were accepted as church members."

"These poor people support their own poor, and also support a native missionary, who is doing a grand work in a town about two days' journey from here. The evangelists (native) of this church are about ten in number, supported, some by Young People's Christian Endeavor Societies of America, some by individuals. We have a school, in which these workers are taught for a portion of each year. The Lord is abundantly blessing their labors; their reports remind one more of apostolic than modern times. Men, seemingly, dare not lay their hands on them, although they at times are desirous of doing so. They defy the State soldiers to commit acts of cruelty."

"An incident occurred a few weeks ago that deserves mention. An influential chief had opposed the work for a long time, and at last threatened to punish any one who would come out to hear the Gospel. The preachers, nothing daunted, took the case to the One who is able to remove the greatest obstacle or bring low the proudest head. Believing that he had heard them, they came out and preached Jesus to the chief. At first he refused to listen, but after a time became quiet, and then showed personal interest. He was impressed and convicted, and at last asked the old question, 'What must I do?' The way was unfolded from the Word. The man said—'That's good, tell me more.' So the rest of day was spent in slaking the thirst of this awakened soul at the fount of life, and when the sun was set the only candle was burnt to render further reading possible; and deep was the regret when it flickered and went out. Before dawn had matured to daylight, the man was at the teacher's hut, waking him from sleep to 'tell him more.' This chief is now holding up Jesus to his own people."

TWO CHRIST-LIKE LIVES.

Services Rendered to Christ and Humanity by Prof. and Mrs. C. W. Knudsen.

FEW weeks ago the death of Prof. C. W. Knudsen of South Norwalk, Conn., was announced in these columns and mention was made of the unostentatious but extensive work that he and his devoted wife had been doing for many years for the advancement of Christ's kingdom. It is now our sad duty to record the death of Mrs. Knudsen, who survived her husband only twenty days. She had been his hearty and cordial adviser and helper in all his Christian work and had maintained besides, a number of religious and philanthropic enterprises which had originated in her own loving, helpful soul and were executed either with her own hands, or by her trusted and honored friend, Rev. D. M. Heydrick. It was characteristic of her, that when death took away her beloved husband, she did not abandon herself to idle grief, but promptly took up the burden he had laid down and made plans for carrying on his special work in addition to her own. She believed that in no way could she honor the memory of her husband so well as in continuing the benefactions of his life. But it was not so to be. The Lord had need of her and he "has taken her to his own home."

It was a singularly beautiful and Christ-like life that these two modest workers lived. Seeking no notoriety, asking for no recognition, requiring no gratitude, they went on helping the needy and ministering to the Lord's poor, content if some brother or sister in Christ found life a little easier, the work for the Master somewhat less difficult through their efforts. Mrs. Knudsen was remarkably devoted to this sphere of helpfulness, giving pecuniary aid to students in schools and colleges, supplying material comforts to many, and devoting constant thought and abundant means to ministering to spiritual needs. She expended thousands of dollars in sending Bibles, and tracts, and leaflets to needy districts, in supplying poor ministers with Christian literature that they needed to help them in their work and in replenishing the libraries of struggling colleges. Nor were her gifts confined to these. She had many friends among the wealthy and honored classes of this and other lands, for whose conversion her soul yearned. Whenever she found some book or paper that seemed to her likely to appeal to such persons, she would order a large number of copies which she sent to them with earnest prayers that God's blessing would rest on the effort. Missionaries in the cities and towns of our own land and those in heathen lands were to her, objects of special solicitude. She encouraged them to report their needs and many were the gifts which reached them from her. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was largely used by her in this way.

THE LATE PROF. C. W. KNUDSEN.

Again and again she would send to this office lists of missionaries and Christian workers, who, she believed, could not afford for his skill as a teacher, and for the originality of his methods of education. Mrs. Knudsen was also a famous educator. For many years before her marriage she conducted, in company with her sister, Miss Lucy M. Green, a well-known school on Fifth avenue, New York, which was highly esteemed, not only for the thorough education it afforded, but for the high Christian principles inculcated there. Her sound judgment, forbearance and consideration for the EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS AT SOUTH NORWALK, CT.

(Founded and Established by Prof. and Mrs. Knudsen.)

to subscribe for it, but who would value the assistance it renders to the earnest laborer in the Lord's vineyard. She would pay for a year's subscription for them and many of them never knew to whom they were indebted for the welcome weekly visitor. Many of her other benefactions were done in this unobtrusive way. Only two days before her death she made up a list of hundreds of valuable books which she ordered to be sent to thirty missionaries who had recently gone to various fields of labor. Besides these kindly services, Mrs. Knudsen took an active interest in local Christian work. She and her husband maintained at their own expense a missionary in South weaknesses and foibles of others, were her characteristics from early girlhood, and enabled her to give wise counsel to the perplexed girls and grown people who came to her for advice. She married Mr. Knudsen in 1864, and in 1869, removed with him to South Norwalk, where for a quarter of a century, she led her life of Christian helpfulness and beneficence. Mrs. Knudsen, whose maiden name was Mary Ruggles Green, was a member of a famous old colonial family, many of whose representatives have done conspicuous service for the state. One of her brothers is Mr. Andrew H. Green, whose services as Comptroller of New York, the city still remembers with gratitude. Another, Dr. Samuel F. Green, was for more than twenty years a medical missionary in Ceylon, whose numerous works are the standard medical literature of the Tamil people of Ceylon and Southern India.

SECRET DISCIPLES IN INDIA.

In the fifty-fifth report of the Wesleyan Mission in the Mysore Province, we read: "No one who studies Indian religions will ever suppose that these figures of church membership represent the whole or any large portion of the real results of our labors. Here and there, in the various sections of the detailed reports from the several circuits, there are references to sincere and devoted, secret disciples of the Lord whom we serve."

"Thus the senior missionary at Mysore city, writing of a carefully organized tour, says: It was cheering to meet in remote places those on whom the truth has by different means begun to make its impression. In one village we met a respectable and well-to-do man whose mind seems fully made up as to the claims of Christ. He has entirely forsaken his idols, and is now seeking earnestly to bring his wife and only son to see things as he sees them. On one of our walks back to camp we met a religious procession halting by the side of a stream. An offering had just been made in fulfillment of a vow, and the remains of the offering were being committed to the stream."

"We spoke to the whole procession, and afterward got into private conversation with two of the men. We were surprised to hear them speak regretfully about the ceremony which had just been performed. They said they took no interest in it, but were compelled to join in it on account of the mothers and wives and old men of their household. They then told us that they belonged to a small group of men in an adjacent town, who for some time had been meeting secretly to read the Gospels together. Lastly, a Mussulman whom we have known long and conversed with frequently, came and announced his belief in Jesus as the Son of God, and his desire to leave all and follow him. The case is a difficult one. We have no reason to doubt his sincerity. But if he is faithful to his purpose he will have to leave his present appointment, and will expose himself to a persecution which is sure to be very savage."

MRS. C. W. KNUDSEN.

Norwalk who went from house to house visiting the poor and the sick. They built a large hall near their own residence which has proved a blessing to the neighborhood. There religious services were held in English and German, alternately, and the pure Gospel, unmingled with sectarian teaching, was preached. The hall was fully equipped with educational appliances, and free lectures were given there and classes for several branches of study were conducted. An astronomical observatory is connected with it, which was thoroughly appreciated by the people.

Mr. Knudsen was a Dane by birth. He was born in Copenhagen in 1818, was educated at the Military College and the Royal Academy of Fine Arts. At the conclusion of his college course he spent a few years in England, and in 1852, he came to this country, where he established himself as a Professor of Drawing. He soon became fa-

ISRAEL'S BONDAGE IN EGYPT.

S. S. Lesson May 13. Ex. 1: 1-14. Golden Text, Ps. 124: 8. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

JOSEPH'S sun had gone down on Egypt, and the light of his godly life was no more shining before his brethren; but the promise of God remained, that in Abraham and in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blest. Yet, for four hundred years after the death of Joseph, God had no such witness as he had been in the earth, and the seed of Abraham were neither blest nor made a blessing in the full sense of the promise. Numerically they "were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied and waxed exceeding mighty and the land [of Egypt] was filled with them." They were becoming "as the sand which is upon the seashore." But they were far from resembling "the stars of the heaven" for they, the chosen witnesses of God in the earth lapsed into idolatry. It is explicitly stated by the Lord himself: "In the day when I chose Israel, and lifted up mine hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and made myself known unto them in the land of Egypt. . . . Then said I unto them: Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt: I am the Lord your God. But they rebelled against me, and would not hearken unto me; they did not every man cast away the abominations of their eyes, neither did they forsake

The Idols of Egypt:

Then I said, I will pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt." Joshua, too, in his last days, exhorted the people: "Now, therefore, fear the Lord, and serve him in sincerity and in truth; and put away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt; and serve ye the Lord." (Josh. 24: 14).

Thus it came to pass that the people, who, through Joseph's witness for God, enjoyed honor and prestige in Egypt, were suffered by the God who loved them to sink into servility and to be afflicted "four hundred years" as God had foretold to Abram. While God thus vindicated his name which they had polluted among the heathen. His patience waited until the iniquity of the Amorites had reached its full measure, and he could be justified in giving their land to his people whom he would deliver from idolatry and slavery. How wonderful is God's economy! During all this time he waited patiently until he could find another man who could truly respond to him. His purpose remained unaltered, but Israel did not know, his people did not consider, the great thoughts which he had in his heart for them. Meanwhile, in the chronicles of Egypt, and in the tradition of the families, it would be told how the God of the Hebrews had sent Joseph, his servant, to deliver them in providing against the time of famine, and the idolaters of Egypt would have wondered how the people of such a God could have succumbed to the influence of the Egyptians, and how public opinion could have overcome their allegiance to him. The cause of God was losing instead of gaining through those who were the posterity, but only the earthly seed of the father of the faithful. And God waited and did not destroy! Yet things were preparing for a crisis.

And God is waiting now. The so-called believers, the would-be children of Abraham are multiplying as never before. It is fashionable to be religious; churches, chapels, mission halls, spring up on all sides; of quantity there is a superabundance, but of quality—of that quality of heart which understands God—how little! God be praised for all the preaching of the Gospel, but how much of the Spirit of the world there is mixed up with it! Stnfe, envy, jealousy, self-importtance, covetousness, unreality, self-indulgence, are to be found everywhere in the church as in the world; and the name, the character of Christ is "polluted" among the unsaved by the un-Christlikeness of the saved.

The time of which God had spoken to Abraham was nearly elapsed; deliverance was approaching. But with God day comes out of night, life out of death, deliverance out of oppression. Thus it came to pass that the children of Israel must first feel keenly their bondage before God could bring them out of it. A new dynasty came into power, and the family of the ancient Pharaohs became extinct. Seti I., who associated with him in the kingdom, his son, Rameses II. (both whose mummies have been discovered and photographed), came to the throne. They instituted against the people of the Hebrews which grew so mightily in their midst. They consulted with their people thus: "Behold, the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we; come, let us deal wisely with them: lest they multiply, and it come to pass, that, when they falleth out any war, they also join themselves unto our enemies, and fight against us, and get them up out of the land. But Pharaoh had not calculated that the same God, who had worked so wondrously with Joseph, must be taken into account by any who would touch or oppress his people. These Pharaohs knew not Joseph and cared not to know Joseph's God. They set over the Hebrews, task-masters to afflict them with their burdens, and, as though in mockery of the storehouses in Joseph's time, they made them build treasure cities for the Egyptians, Pithom and Raamses. But their policy was ineffectual, the people thrived upon affliction; "the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew." The kings increased their oppression, and "made their lives bitter with hard bondage," but this did not diminish their number; they were made to serve with rigor, but the purpose of the Pharaohs was still unaccomplished, while all they did furthered God's purpose to prepare his people for a coming deliverance. Up to this time there was more trouble among the Egyptians because of the power of the oppressed than there was in Israel because of their oppression: "The Egyptians were grieved because of the children of Israel." But God would allow the oppression to increase until all self-help, all help from man, all the false comfort which they might derive from heathen superstition, broke down, and they would remember again the God whose people they were. It was as a last resource, and not at the beginning of their need, that the children of Israel sighed by reason of bondage, and their cry came up unto God by reason of the bondage.

A Policy of Repression

This is ever God's way. We, in our shortsightedness, are apt to be in a hurry to get people out of their difficulties, and has prepared the way. Thus much which we do has to be undone, or done over again. Only God can know when the discipline which he permits has done its work, and his children are ripe for blessing. God can afford time to let things ripen, he is never in a hurry, and "he that believeth" is like him, he "shall not make haste."

We Act Before God

The children of Israel had become used to bondage; this generation had grown up in it, they knew nothing better: their chains must be drawn tighter and must gall them, before they would awake sufficiently to appeal to the God whom they had neglected and dishonored. "The hurt of the daughter of his people" must not be healed slightly. And another purpose of God must be served. Had the children of Israel followed up the testimony of the life of Joseph, and their moral power been equal to their numerical power, idolatry might have been almost, if not totally overthrown in Egypt. They had had the opportunity to be blest in being a blessing, and they had lost it. Now God must withdraw from them, and take into his own hands the testimony of himself, and must prove by judgments, which should first visit both the Egyptians and the Hebrews, that he was the Lord.

The Pharaohs, baffled in their attempt to diminish the number and the power of Israel, by what would now be called "sweating," tried another expedient. They sent for the Hebrew midwives, and commanded them to kill every male child which the Hebrew women should bear. But again the Pharaohs were baffled. God has his witnesses in all times, often where they would least be sought for. These women were almost alone in their generation as God-fearing women, they obeyed God rather than man, yes, rather than kings; and God cared for them. It would have been an easy matter for the Egyptian kings to compass their death, but God, who keeps watch over his own, did not permit it.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

HE difficulty of reckoning dates and periods in this portion of the Bible is at present insurmountable. Various ingenious schemes of chronology have been arranged but none is entirely satisfactory. The records on the Egyptian monuments appear to imply that the Egyptians had no era at this time, but identified a year by its number in the reign of the king. All these difficulties may disappear at any time by the discovery of some monument, or the deciphering of some newly found inscription. Some Egyptologists believe that the Pharaoh who oppressed the Israelites was Thothmes III., of the eighteenth dynasty; but the general belief is that the oppression commenced under Seti I. of the nineteenth dynasty and increased under his son Rameses II., and that the exodus took place under Menepthah I. These kings belonged to a different dynasty from that of the Pharaoh who advanced Joseph and probably were its rivals and conquerors. Between the closing words of the last chapter of Genesis and the passage which is the subject of the lesson there was a period, the length of which has not been accurately ascertained. It was probably about sixty-four years. This added to the seventy-one previous years since Jacob went to Egypt and the eighty subsequent years before the exodus would give two hundred and fifteen years as the length of time the Israelites were in Egypt. This mode of reckoning agrees with the statement in I. Kings 6: 1, and Paul's in Galatians 3: 17, which computes the time from the call of Abraham to the giving of the law at four hundred and thirty years. It does not agree with a statement in Exodus 12: 40, but that passage is probably incorrect. The proper rendering is doubtless that of the Septuagint which runs: "The sojourning of the children and of their fathers which they sojournd in the land of Canaan and in the land of Egypt was 430 years." This would allow about half the period for the time when Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were sojourners in the land before Jacob went to Egypt.

The treasure cities mentioned in the eleventh verse were a mystery until about ten years ago, when a ruined city was uncovered near Ismailia. It was built of bricks marked "Pi-tum," some of which are in the Metropolitan Museum in New York. The city was enclosed in walls twenty-two feet thick and was evidently a stronghold. The majority of its buildings were without doors or windows, the entrance being from the roof. They were evidently not used as dwelling houses, but would be convenient for the storage of grain or treasure. The bricks vary in quality, some containing chopped rushes and sedges in place of the straw used in the others. Bas-reliefs still existing, show men half-naked making bricks, and overseers with whips in their hands examining the work and counting the bricks.

A king who knew not Joseph. He might have learned all about him had he desired to do so, for Joseph had been dead only sixty-four years, and there must have been many who could have told him how much the monarchy and the country were indebted to the great Hebrew. Probably he had heard, but kings are often guilty of ingratitude. When Charles II of England was an exile, the bishops and clergy were the most earnest and self-sacrificing in their efforts to effect the restoration of the Stuart family. Charles was restored, but when his brother, James II, came to the throne, he forgot all the services the clergy had rendered to his house. He heaped indignities upon them, took away their benefices, persecuted them and imprisoned the bishops. Like Pharaoh he learned to his cost, when he was driven out of the kingdom, what comes of ingratitude.

Let us deal wisely with them. After the ten plagues and the loss of the Egyptian army in the Red Sea, they were able to judge whether the course adopted toward the Hebrews had really been wise. Bunyan has an illustration of the futility of fighting against men whom God is supporting and protecting. He says: "I saw in my dream that Interpreter took Christian by the hand and led him into a place where was a fire burning against a wall, and one standing by it, always casting water upon it to quench it; yet did the fire burn higher and hotter. Christian was puzzled till the Interpreter said, 'I will show you the reason of that,' and took him behind the wall where was a man with a vessel of oil in his hand of the which he did also continually feed the fire."

Taskmasters to afflict them. The people were so comfortable and prosperous in Egypt that they might have remained there and eventually become absorbed in the Egyptian nation if this trouble had not fallen upon them. Their work would never have been done, and the great place they were to occupy would not have been filled if they had been let alone. God has often purified and energized a man and a people by some crushing trial. The plan is compared in Deuteronomy 32: 11 to an eagle stirring up her nest to compel the eaglets to use their wings. Naturalists tell us that the eagle disturbs the fledglings when they nestle down upon the soft lining of the nest. She plants a thorn in the side of the nest to make them move about, and if this does not force them out of the nest, she crowds them out and off the edge of the cliff and lets them fall; but the mother bird watches and spreads out her great maternal wings beneath them to catch them when they are weary with their first effort to use their wings, and receives the little trembling birds and bears them back to the eyrie rocks. They have been terribly scared, but they have learned something, and after a few such experiences, they are able to fly.

Made them to serve with rigor. The phrase indicates the extreme cruelty with which they were compelled to labor. And they received no wages. That is the kind of service men often submit to who have Satan for their master. A preacher, who was very successful in his work among miners, used to draw a striking picture descriptive of such lives. He represented two mines near together, in one of which the men were ill-treated, but there was a good deal of drunkenness, although there was no money on Saturdays. In the other, the men were well-treated and punctually paid. He represented himself as working in the former mine and going to the latter on pay-day to get his wages. He was asked if he worked there, but he replied no, he worked at the other mine. Then why did he come there to be paid? He answered that he came because the wages were better there than in the mine where he worked. "Ah," said the paymaster, "if you want our wages you must work in our mine." The preacher asked his hearers if that was fair and they all replied that it was. "Then," said he, "if you want to get God's pay and go to heaven when you die, don't give your lives to Satan nor work for him."

The more they afflicted them the more they multiplied. That is the uniform experience in persecution. It has come to be a proverb that the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church. An instance occurred not long ago in Uganda. Twenty young men were condemned to death for being Christians. They were first inhumanly tortured and were then burned. That night several young men who had witnessed the execution, went to the missionaries and desired to be enrolled as Christians. They wanted the religion which had enabled their acquaintances to suffer and die with songs of joy on their lips.

Shopping in Syria.

ur Traveler Describes Some of the Damascus Bazaars—A Wordy War Over Prices—How an Oriental Woman Buys.

"LAUGHING IN THE DOORWAY."

THAT week we spent in Damascus as I mentioned in a previous letter, was full of incident. While we were among the bazaars, one day, and as the sound of a procession was heard in the direction of "the street called Straight," a fat pursy Englishman, who fairly exhaled his nadonality, so obtrusive were his round crowned hat, mutton-chop whiskers, red face and tweed suit, was crowded against us, and had the benefit of our explanation: "Rayly?" he utters, coolly. "Now, do you know I took it to be a sort of Eastern salvation Army, don't you know? The armorines, drums, and all, look like it." The roar is not even a whisper by this time. Besides ourselves, and our Briton, nobody seems at all interested in the doings of the clamorous crowd. The fine-looking Turk, sitting cross-legged upon the counter of his stall over the way, has dropped the lids upon his dark eyes with as fine an expression of boredom as could be achieved by an English exquisite at the height, or depth, of a London season. At the stall to his right, a customer is beating down the price of a narghileh, (or water-pipe), with an amber mouthpiece, with no more apparent consciousness of the passage of the mob than of our observation of himself and his actions.

"This is the Oriental calmness of which we have heard, all our lives," we soliloquize, "and these narrow, dirty lanes are the great bazaars!"

"These are the poorer bazaars, of course?" we pronounce, in cheerful certainty of the reply.

The Damascus guide does not catch our meaning. The question is put in a different form:

"There are broader streets and finer shops in Damascus than these?"

To prepare ourselves for this expedition we have been reading a chapter in "Mirage," a strangely sad story published perhaps a score of years ago, and a sentence is freshly distinct in our minds:

"They were deep in the bazaars of Damascus—deep in those cool, dim, vaulted spaces, with the lustre of silks, the gleam of metal and porcelain about them, and the odor of guns and curious spices filling the dusty air."

Certainly the air is dusty, after the rush of the not-clean mob described in a former paper, and there is an odor—there are more than a score of odors—that fill the vaulted space. If there be one sense which the traveler in the East comes to regard as superfluous and inconvenient, it is that of smell. If I refer repeatedly to this fact, it is because the pressure of the truth is never absent from us. Being told that the scene before us is a favorable specimen of what we are here to see, we resign ourselves to the Oriental odor, "curious" to the uninitiated, but freighted with no spice or germ with which our olfactories are acquainted, and set our eyes to work instead.

We are in a network of narrow streets, none of which are twenty-five feet in width. Low, arched roofs cover them: the light breaking, here and there, through slits in the arch, in a deliberate, dreamy fashion essentially oriental. As the sight becomes accustomed to it, we see that the glints brought out by the intermittent rays came from stalls piled and hung with silverware of every description.

"The street of the silversmiths," Abraham observes. "The trade is in the hands of the Christians. The man over there has the same shop which his grandfather kept. The Christians, in former times, could not hold such property as cattle, houses and orchards, for it was often taken from them or destroyed by—those who were of a different race."

Again we notice the scrupulous avoidance of the word, "Mohammedan," or "Moslem" in a public place, and speculate as to whether prudence or courtesy dictates the custom.

Therefore, Christians, usually are in trade—manufacturers, and like that.

What are dignified by the name of shops are really stalls, such as line our markets at home, but enclosed on three sides. A movable door, a sort of wooden shutter, sometimes in one piece, sometimes in several, closes the front at night. When this is taken down, the shop is opened without other ceremony. A big window of one of our great dry goods stores would hold the entire stock-in-trade of any of these recesses, and leave room to spare. Upon the counter, or upon a divan behind it, the proprietor has tucked his slipped feet away in the folds of the baggy cloth trousers which, I insist, are the reverse of graceful, and pulls slowly at the yards of flexible tube connecting the amber mouth-piece between his lips with a vessel exactly like the carafe, or water-bottle used upon our dinner-tables, with the exception of the tobacco-pipe at a chimney.

We are collecting—with the rest of the travelling "foreigners"—souvenir spoons, and mean to procure some in Damascus.

The expression of the intention, is all we have to do for the present. David steps to the front as the coveted articles are produced. The prospective vender is an acquaintance, nay more, a friend, for they kissed one another just now, and the Damascan addresses him as "Abou Nassar," the "Father of Nassar." When a man becomes the proud owner of a son, he is thenceforth known among his intimates as that boy's father. Ten daughters may have preceded the youngster, and six brothers may follow him, but the parent continues to rejoice in the title of father of the first-born son.

These are two friends, as I have said, but as the buyer's representative, the dragoman is transformed forthwith, until the sale is concluded, into the bitter enemy of his countryman.

"Never give the first price named!" is the first lesson taught the foreign visitor. It may sound reasonable to us, but a cardinal principal of Eastern shopping is to believe and hold for certain that it is iniquitous, and the universal practice is to beat it down to, at least one-third less. It matters nothing to our honest representative, who would not cheat his worst enemy of a penny, that the sum involved is only a franc, or at the most, two. Figuratively, he girls up his loins, and rolls up his sleeves, and "pitches in" for a wordy duel. The voices of both combatants rise, their gestures threaten each others lives; one-tenth of the noise in an American shop would call in the police in force.

Quite aware that it is all sound, and no fury, we lean back in the rush-bottomed chairs, set outside for us, in the open street—for sidewalks, there are none—and give ourselves up to contemplation of the vistas, stretching away from us on four sides.

After the shadeless glare of the Damascus sunshine, we recognize the cool half-lights as grateful, and the occasional streams of radiance through the apertures in the roof bring out picturesque features in merchandise and costumes. At the far end of the street are shops wherein are manufactured the various stuffs here offered for sale.

One street is given up wholly to the display of these rugs; another to a bewildering succession of rings, curios, brass-trays, cups, bowls and the like, another to mother-of-pearl tables of divers sizes, patterns and heights. A principal avenue exhibits on both sides "Franji." The manufacturers' term, in universal use in this country, and referable, I think, to no known language, covers whatever smacks of European or other occidental usage, and is freely applied to all sorts of innovations. It signifies in the present instance French, English, German, Italian and even American goods—calicoes from Manchester, tinware and cutlery (cheap) from the United States; colored glass from Baden-Baden, and every variety of knick-knacks from Paris. Several streets away from where we are awaiting the result of the pitched battle of Arabic tongues, are the meaner quarters devoted to the sale of second-hand clothing—it is needless to say in what hands.

"WE NEED NOT SAY IN WHOSE HANDS."

It may gratify their American sisters to know that those whose lot seems to us hard enough without such a barbarous restriction are not debarred from doing their own shopping in Damascus.

Old as is the beclouded "Pearl of the East"—the "inferior six"—has the advantage in this particular over Nazareth, Nablous, Gaza, Genen and Jaffa, where native women, veiled or unveiled, are never allowed to visit shop or market-place. Even the Christian matrons and maids must apply to this occupation, so dear to the feminine heart, the injunction of the Great Bachelor (or widower?) of Tarsus, and ask their husbands at home concerning the latest sweet thing in jewelry, and the "Franji" gown-patterns put up in decorated boxes in Paris, and sent eastward at the end of the season for the delectation of harems and Greek or Roman Catholic, or Prote tant households.

How do they support existence in such circumstances?

Fathers, brothers and husbands, in unconscious prevision of Mr. Edward Bellam's "Looking Backward," select and bring home samples of cloth, silk, etc., and the secluded wife, daughter or sister chooses from among these such stuffs as she imagines, from the bits laid before her, would be handsome and becoming. Those who know how unlike the sample is to the effect of the fabric when seen "in the piece," especially as displayed by the cunning hands of a trained salesman, can guess how frequent and sore are the disappointments when the purchases are unfolded in the women's apartments.

That tall woman, whose muffings cannot conceal the outlines of a figure uncommonly good for a land where corsets are unknown, and a "neat fit" almost as rare—makes as serious a business of her bargaining as if she had the interest of a brace of defenceless "foreigners" upon her conscience. She stands all the while, we note. The uncompromising rush-bottomed chair would seem to be reserved for foreigners. She haggles over a pair of silver filigree bracelets, fitting them upon a round, brown wrist, and slipping them excitedly up and down, chattering volubly in Arabic in a voice so dissonant that her "mundul" shivers, rather than wavers, before the torrent. It is dark blue with red poppies, larger than life, "powdered" over it. All that we see of her face is the indication (to use a technical phrase) of two big, black eyes in the upper part. She can discern clearly, not only the countenance of her natural enemy, the tradesman, but defects in the workmanship of the trinkets she is trying on, for she calls his attention sharply to a misshapen link, tears them from her wrists, tosses them disdainfully upon the counter, gathers the voluminous "izzar" about her and turns away with the air of one resolved to endure no more imposition. She has taken two or three steps when the merchant, picking up the discarded ornament, says something quietly and indifferently. As indifferently she pauses and answers him over her shoulder.

A minute later she is again at the counter: the salesman is folding the bracelets lets in tissue-paper, and she—still as if would rather leave than take them—is extracting from her purse the sum finally agreed upon between them.

The affair is a farce throughout, and is repeated often enough to lose all novelty, not to say charm, were the disposition to make a bargain less obstinate in the human breast. The buyer knows perfectly well that the "asking-price,"—a term with which one speedily becomes familiar over here—is as much above the real value of the article offered, as what he, on his part, proposes to give for it is below it; he is also certain that somewhere between the two will be the final point of settlement.

The responsive yawn is arrested midway by David's abrupt termination of hostilities. He has pushed aside the spoons, and, generous indignation in ever line of his visage, motions us to follow him.

"But"—expostulates one of the unsophisticated—"since they are what we want, and not really dear, would it not be better to pay his price?"

"Like the rest of them"—enunciates the dragoman, judicially, without specifying who are included in the pronoun—"he thinks travelers are made of money. You will get the spoons. He will call us back."

The spoons are in my trunk, and are probably worth a franc apiece less than was paid for them after the profuse expenditure of breath, nervous force and minutes. Shopping, always wearisome work to busy people, gathers new horrors from such accessories. By the time we have halted here fifteen minutes, and there twenty, and somewhere else ten, we are thankful to be out of the covered arcades, and to see the unobstructed blue overhead in a street where we meet one wing of the boyish troop who passed us an hour ago. They march more soberly now, but still chant the sing-song, "Praise the Prophet!"

The sun is low and red upon the horizon as we, for the second time, drive in at the eastern gate of the aged city. A single camel is left in the open space without, where we saw the caravan at noon. He lies so prone and abject upon the earth, his neck stretched out to a length so incredible, that we are divided between the desire to pity and to deride him. His acknowledged master stands above him brandishing a pair of shears; one side of the forlorn beast is already so naked as to put Sterne's shorn lamb to the blush, and as the crimson sunlight strikes athwart him, the "stranded ship of the desert" looks abnormally and inconceivably hideous—even for a country camel.

MARION HARLAND.

BURDEN-BEARING.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Commencing May 13. Galatians 6: 1-5.

EVERY man has a burden. Not the same burden in its nature, origin or development, but a burden peculiarly his, however much it may resemble those borne by others.

With some, the burden is poverty; with others, continual pain; with others, domestic trial; with others, remorse; with others, a physical nature, prone by heredity, or early habit, or vicious association, to fall into sensuality; and with others, some other burden from the large assortment which nature and circumstances have produced for human shoulders to bear. The burden is there and it must be borne, patiently and bravely, or with complaining and resentment. Now as to these burdens, it appears that Christ has a law. It is needless to inquire what it is. Proceeding from him, we know beforehand what will be its character. He who laid down his life for men, had one supreme message on such subjects for his people. His law would surely be one of self-renunciation and helpfulness. So we learn that if we would fulfil the law of Christ we must bear one another's burdens. True, every man must bear his own burden, but that does not prevent others helping him. We cannot relieve him of its weight, but we can give him help in other ways. Sympathy, kindness, encouragement are all helps. Even silent companionship is a help. The struggler, up the thorny hill, conscious of his weakness, and doubting if he will succeed, is a new man after some brother has taken him by the hand and bidden him God-speed. There are men to whom others naturally go in any trouble. They are not always—not often—rich men, but they help men. The burden seems lighter after they have spoken. Gough used to say that he would never have maintained his resolution to fight against the drink demon, if at the crisis of his struggle a kindly man had not uttered a few words of sympathy and good cheer. The expressive phrase we use of "standing by a man," indicates the help we can give. In standing by another, we give him moral support and so bear his burden. It may be reproach, or it may be sorrow, but in either case the pressure may be relieved. The work costs—there is no doubt of that. Spurgeon used to say that after talking with people in spiritual darkness and despair, his own soul was cast down. Men who interest themselves in some case of oppression, or misfortune; who go around with subscription papers to start a widow in business; who go from one to another to get employment for some impoverished man; who take up the difficulties and misfortunes of others to remedy them, are not men who have an easy life. But they are men whom the world can ill afford to spare for they are they who fulfil the law of Christ.

CITY PURIFICATION.

Christian Endeavor has taken a hand in the arduous work of the moral cleansing of the city. A correspondent of the "Golden Rule" says that the Christian Endeavorers of York, Penn., have been doing effective work lately in the interests of good citizenship. One of the greatest scourges of that little city was its dance-halls. Regarding the iniquities there carried on the Christian public was ignorant or indifferent. The authorities did not concern themselves about the matter. Decided measures were called for, and a member of the Christian Endeavor Society visited one of the halls, and described it at length in the Christian Endeavor or department of both the morning dailies. The article excited great interest. The good people of the city were shocked and aroused. The matter was brought to the attention of the proper authorities, and the mayor, district attorney, city detective, and chief of police visited the dance-hall, where the statements of the Endeavor article were more than verified.

Now a decree has been promulgated forbidding all such assemblies in the future, and the town is rid of one of the worst curses of city life. This reform could never have been carried out if, in the first place, there had not been some Endeavorer clear-headed enough to see the need, and brave enough to do the work necessary to be done. It could never have been carried out, either, if the union had not had a press committee and controlled regular departments in the daily papers. This union has, since this episode, appointed a good-citizenship committee, and doubtless it will find much work lying ready to its hands.

GROUP OF Y. M. C. A. SECRETARIES.

The Origin of the International Y. M. C. A. Committee and the Valuable Work already Effected Through Its Agency.

ON the opposite page is a picture of a group of Young Men's Christian Association workers, which is of special value at this time when we are nearing the date set for the assembling of the great World's Jubilee Conference in London to celebrate the fiftieth birthday of the organization. That conference is to meet in Exeter Hall on June 1, and it is expected that fully two thousand delegates will be present. They will hail from all quarters of the world, and will represent all branches of Association work. That such an assemblage is possible is largely due to the labors of the International Committee, whose chairman and secretaries are pictured in our illustration.

This committee, whose functions and labors are little understood by the general public, had its origin in a suggestion thrown out at the Conference of the Young Men's Christian Associations which was held at Buffalo, N. Y., in 1854. It was the first Conference of the kind ever held, and it demonstrated the advantages of an organized bond of union between the Associations. The mutual advantages to be gained from intercourse, consultation and suggestion were obvious. Weak Associations would be strengthened and enthused, difficulties might be considered and overcome, and suggestions as to modes of work might be made and discussed. In short, all the help which comes to the isolated worker from association, would come to the isolated association from affiliation. So much was apparent, and the suggestion was made that a committee be appointed to arrange such a federation.

Since that time the committee then appointed has passed through several changes of name and constitution, developing finally into its present shape as the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations. At first it consisted of eleven members, five of whom were stationed at the Committee's headquarters in Washington, and the other six were distributed in the cities of Boston, Cincinnati, New York, St. Louis, New Orleans and Toronto. From year to year its work grew; it succeeded in organizing many new Associations where none existed before; it developed the work in existing Associations, and without obvious interference, succeeded in adjusting difficulties which inevitably arise in the work. New departments also grew out of its study of the field, such as the College work, the Railroad branch, and the Associations of foreign nationalities. No paid agents were at first employed; but in 1868 at the convention at Detroit the attention of the Committee was called to the many towns springing up along the line of the Pacific Railroad, and a resolution was adopted authorizing it to obtain the services of an energetic, consecrated man who should endeavor to organize Associations in the new towns. The need was urgent, for in these places there was seldom any church, and young men were being ruined by the vicious resorts which were the only places of public social intercourse. Mr. R. Weidensall (whose portrait is No. 21 in the group on the opposite page), was appointed, and the results of his efforts amply justified the selection. The next appointment was Mr. R. C. Morse (No. 9 in the group), as secretary of the committee, and editor of its monthly magazine. Mr. Morse devoted himself heart and soul to the work, visiting extensively among the associations, attending State conventions and making himself thoroughly acquainted with the field and its needs. A little later Mr. Thomas K. Cree (No. 18 in the group), who had done valuable volunteer work in thoroughly canvassing the South and reorganizing associations which had disbanded, was induced to give up his office of General Secretary of the Pittsburgh Y. M. C. A. and devote himself exclusively to the service of the International Committee. A more valuable agent the committee has never had. His energy and tact and indomitable persistence have won victories where defeat seemed inevitable and he has succeeded in lifting many a burdened association into a condition of prosperity and usefulness. The pioneer State work in Pennsylvania was largely the result of his untiring efforts. His latest achievement was the settlement and extensive development of the Y. M. C. A. in the French capital, with its beautiful new building costing $210,000. Mr. Cree worked unceasingly for this result and the greater part of the necessary funds, he was instrumental in obtaining.

Among other members of the group whose services have made them conspicuous are Mr. L. D. Wishard (No. 5) who has devoted himself to the college work; Mr. Henry E. Brown (No. 11), who has charge of the work among colored young men and has organized more than thirty Associations; Mr. Claus Olandt, Secretary of the German Department; Mr. C. L. Gates and Mr. C. J. Hicks, who have charge of the Railroad Department, and Dr. Luther Gulick of the Physical Culture work. Besides these the Committee has four Secretaries in the foreign mission fields of India, Japan, and Brazil.

It is largely due to the efforts of these earnest consecrated workers, and to the devotion of the International Committee which directs their efforts that the United States and Canada surpass all other lands in the efficiency of Y. M. C. A. work as well as in the number of organizations. At the approaching Conference in London the value of such united effort as they have succeeded in organizing will be fully perceived and its merit acknowledged.

THE LEAGUE IN CHINA.

Greetings from an Epworth League in China to sister Leagues in America are sent through the "Epworth Herald," by Dr. J. F. Scott, physician of the Methodist Hospital at Tsinhua. The letter is as follows: "To our friends in the United States of America: We want to tell you about our Epworth League. We want to thank you for your kindness in sending to our country so many good men and women, who have brought to us the 'Jesus doctrine,' and in whose lives we have seen the love of Jesus Christ. We are learning to know about the love of Jesus Christ, that he has made it possible for us to have an Epworth League in our new chapel here at Tsinhua. Our Epworth League was started about two months ago by our presiding elder, Rev. W. T. Hobart, who is president of the League. We now have over sixty members, and meet every Sunday evening, using the same topics as you do. The first Sunday of each month we have a consecration meeting. At the last one the roll was called, and each member responded with a verse of Scripture. We have left our idols, that never did us any good, and our lives are made happier since we know the true God. We may never see you here on earth, but we shall hope to meet you in heaven some day. We are trying to help one another, and to bring others into the light of the Gospel. Many of our people are very poor. They only get from five to ten cents of your money for a day's work, but from this little sum they are giving. We have raised a sum of money to help the most needy in our midst. Won't you pray for us, that we may know more and more of God's truth, and that our lives may be filled with love divine? Pau Kuo Jung, Hui Tzu Tsin, Pau Tai Tai."

Dr. Scott has this to say of the writers of the letter: "Pau Kuo Jung is the first assistant in the hospital here. He spent several years in the medical work in Peking before coming here, and is a very competent young man, and I believe is a thorough Christian. Hui Tzu Tsin is a boy from the intermediate school here, a bright fellow. Pau Tai Tai is the wife of Dr. Pau. She is the daughter of a successful native preacher, and is a graduate of the Peking school—a bright, intelligent woman."

AMONG THE ORDERS.

A Junior Epworth League with over sixty members has been organized at Baraboo, Wis. The Epworth League at that place now numbers over 100 members.

Christian Endeavor is flourishing in Birkenhead. Since 1892, when the first society was formed, twelve societies have sprung up, five new societies having been enrolled in February. A union of all the societies is now to be organized.

The Florida Christian Endeavor Society at their recent State convention at Tampa, made some emphatic protests against prize fights and the lottery, two evils by which special disgrace has been brought upon the State, and which call for suppression.

Among the speakers at the Michigan Christian Endeavor convention were Judge C. B. Grant of the Supreme Court on Christian Temperance, Mr. W. H. Frost of the China Inland Mission, and Miss Ben-Oliel whose portrait appears on our first page.

The Young Women's Christian Association of Sidney, Australia, reports:—Our employment agencies are in great demand, and the Institute is very busy, while the boarding accommodation is in great request. Our evangelistic meetings are well attended.

The Christian Endeavor Society at Fairhaven, Mass., meets every week in rooms hired in the poorest quarter of the town. These rooms are also open in the afternoon once or twice a week, that the women who live near may gather there, bring their work and receive practical help about it.

Members who attend the approaching Y. M. C. A. Jubilee Conference in London next month will have the pleasure of meeting again Mr. David McConaughy, who will sail from Madras, India, for London on May 6, with his family. He will return to India after the conference.

The following are the statistics of the Epworth Leagues in Michigan: Charges, $52; chapters, 306; new chapters, 54; active members, 14,586; associate members, 4730; total, 19,316; increase, 2,099; average attendance at devotional meetings, 11,910; Junior Leagues, 113; members, 6,039.

The Epworth League of Prospect South Church at Gloucester, Mass., numbers one hundred members, the majority of whom are hard workers. They recently tendered a reception to the elderly members of the church which was mutually enjoyed. Carriages were sent for the guests and a collation was spread for them on their arrival. Addresses, readings, recitations and music made the evening pass pleasantly for all.

The King's Daughters of Hurley, Wis., have taken hold of the work in Silver street, which the Y. M. C. A. was compelled to abandon. There is no place in the country where such work is so urgently needed. Dens of drunkenness and vice abound and their doors are always open, but there is no place of rival attraction except the Silver street rooms. Money is wanted badly to pay current expenses. Contributions may be sent to Mrs. Ida Paddock, Hurley, Wis.

The fourth National Convention of the English Y. P. S. C. E. Movement will be held in London at the Metropolitan Tabernacle from May 12 to May 15. The conventions which have been held at Crewe, Chester, and Bradford have drawn together thousands of young people from all parts of the United Kingdom, and it is anticipated that the 1894 convention will be the largest hitherto held in that country. Beside the fact that London is central, the phenomenal growth of the organization more than warrants the expectation of a large gathering. There are now no less than 1240 registered societies in Great Britain alone, this being nearly treble that of last year. Of this number more than 130 are in the London district

22 W. A. HUNTON.
23 LUTHER GILLES.
24 GEO. B. HODGE.

19 S. A. TAGGART.
20 H. S. NIXON.
21 R. WEDDESSALL.

16 EDWIN L. HAMILTON.
17 CLARENCE J. HIGGS.
18 THOMAS K. CHIL.

13 H. P. ANDERSEN.
14 OTIS J. GATES.
15 E. B. MONROE, JR.

CHAIRMAN AND SECRETARIES OF THE INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE OF Y. M. C. ASSOCIATIONS

10 LOGAN H. ROOPER.
11 HENRY E. BROWN.
12 P. AUGUSTUS WIELING.

7 JOHN R. MOTT.
8 C. K. OVER.
9 RICHARD C. MORSE.

4 GEORGE L. LEONARD.
5 L. D. WISHARD.
6 ERSKINE UILL.

1 E. LAWRENCE HUNT.
2 F. S. BROCKMAN.
3 CLAUD OLANDT, JR.

1915 N.Y.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

To be With Talmage
EDITOR.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash or postal notes.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

MAY TRIBULATIONS.

THE first of May is to many the beginning of the year. From that are dated the breakages, the social startings, the ups and downs of domestic life. One half of the moving population of our great cities are moving into smaller houses, the other half into larger. The past year's success or failure decides which way the horses of the furniture wagon shall turn their heads, days before the work of packing commences. It is astonishing how many boxes and barrels are required to contain all your wares. You come upon things you had forgotten, too good to be thrown away and too poor to keep. Old faded carpet-bags, that would arouse the mirth of the town if you dared to carry them into the street. Straw hats out of the fashion. Beavers that you ought to have given away while they might have been useful. Odd clothes, shoes, coats and slips of carpet that have been the nest of mice, and a thousand things that you laid away, because you might some day want them, but you never will.

For the last few days in the old house the accommodations approached the intolerable. Everything is packed up. The dinner comes to you on shattered crockery which is about to be thrown away, and the knives are only painful reminiscences of what they once were. You can upset coffee without soiling the table-cloth, for there is none. The salt and sugar come to you in cups, looking so much alike that you find out for the first time how coffee tastes when salted, or fish when it is sweetened. There's no place to sit down, and there is no time to do so, if you found one. Bedsteads are down and you roll into a corner at night, a self-elected pauper, and all the night long have a quarrel with your pillow, which persists in getting away from you, and your foot wanders out into the air, feeling for greater length of covering. If the children cry in the night, you will not find the matches nor the lamp, nor anything else save a trunk, just in time to fall over it, getting up with confused notions as to where you are, unless there be some friendly voice to hail you in the darkness.

The first of May dawns. The carts come. It threatens rain, but not a drop until you get your best chairs out of doors and your bedding on top of the wagon. Out at twelve you must be, for another family is on your heels, and Thermopylae was a very tame place, compared with the excitement which arises when two families meet in the same hall, this moving out, this moving in. Farewell, old house! It did not suit us exactly, but thank God for the good times we had in it! Moving day is almost gone. It is almost night. Tumble everything into the new house. Hungry, are you? No time to take food until the crockery is unpacked. True enough, here they come. That last jolt finished the teacups. The jolt before that fractured some of the plates, and the hired girl drops the rest of them. Paradise of crockery merchants is moving day. Seated on a box you take tea. Children who thought it would be grand sport to move are satiated; and one-half of the city at the close of May day, go to bed worn out, sick.

WOMAN'S INDUSTRIAL SPHERE.

AS no boy ought to be brought up without learning some business at which he could earn a livelihood, so no girl ought to be brought up without learning the science of self-support. The difficulty is that many a family goes sailing on the high tides of success, and the husband and father depends on his health and accumen for the welfare of his household; but one day he gets his feet wet, and in three days pneumonia has closed his life, and the daughters are turned out on a cold world to earn bread, and there is nothing practical that they can do.

My advice to all girls and to all unmarried women, whether in affluent homes or in homes where most stringent economies are grinding, is to learn to do some kind of work that the world must have while the world stands. I am glad to see a marvelous change for the better, and that women have found out that there are hundreds of practical things that a woman can do for a living if she begin soon enough, and that men have been compelled to admit it. You and I can remember when the majority of occupations were thought inappropriate for women; but our Civil War came and the hosts of men went forth from North and South, and to conduct the business of our cities during their patriotic absence, women were demanded by the tens of thousands to take the vacant places, and multitudes of woman who had been hitherto supported by fathers and brothers and sons, were compelled thenceforth to take care of themselves. From that time a mighty change took place, favorable to female employment.

Among the occupations appropriate for woman I place the following, into many of which she has already entered, and all the others she will enter: Stenography, and you may find her at all the reportorial stands in our educational, political and religious meetings. Savings banks, the work clean and honorable, and who so great a right to toil there? for a woman founded the first savings bank, Mrs. Priscilla Wakefield. Copyists, and there is hardly a professional man that does not need the service of her penmanship, and, as amanuensis, many of the greatest books of our day have been dictated for her writing. There they are as florists and confectioners, and music teachers and stationers and book-keepers, for which they are specially qualified by patience and accuracy; and in wood engraving, in which the Cooper Institute has turned out so many qualified; and telegraphy, for which she is specially prepared, as thousands of the telegraphic offices would testify. Photography, and in nearly all our establishments they may be found there at cheerful work. As workers in ivory and gutta-percha and gum-elastic and tortoise-shell and gilding and in chemicals, in porcelain, in terra cotta, in embroidery. As postmistresses, and the President is giving them appointments all over the land. As keepers of light-houses, many of them, if they had the chance, ready to do as brave a thing with oar and boat as did Ida Lewis and Grace Darling. As proof-readers, as translators, as modellers, as designers, as draughts-women, as lithographers, as teachers in schools and seminaries, for which they are especially endowed, the first teacher of every child, by divine arrangement, being a woman. As physician, having graduated after a regular course of study from the female colleges of our large cities, where they get as scientific and thorough preparation as any doctors ever had, and go forth to a work which no one but women could so appropriately or delicately do. On the lecturing platform, for you know the brilliant success of Mrs. Livermore and Mrs. Hollowell and Mrs. Willard and Mrs. Lathrop. As physiological lecturers to their own sex, for which service there is a demand appalling and terrific. As preachers of the Gospel, and all the protests of ecclesiastical courts cannot hinder them, for they have a pathos and a power in their religious utterances that men can never reach. Witness all those who have heard their mother pray.

Young women of America, as many of you will have to fight your own battles alone, do not wait until you are flung by disaster upon the world; until your father is dead, and all the resources of your family have been scattered, but now, while in a good home and environed by all prosperities, learn how to do some kind of work that the world must have as long as the world stands. Turn your attention from the embroidery of fine slippers, of which there is a surplus, and make a useful shoe. Expend the time in which you adorn a cigar case in learning how to make a good, honest loaf of bread. Turn your attention from the making of flimsy nothings to the manufacturing of important somethings.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

A number of readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have already sent in their names to be enrolled in the list of Volunteer Christian Workers, to do service "In His Name" among the destitute. Some of these letters come from distant parts of the country. Among them are the following, which are fairly representative of the cordiality with which the proposition have been received:

Englewood, N. J., April 23.—Please send me the address of R—, No. —, E. 4th street. G. S.

Sharon, Mass., April 21.—Enclosed please find one dollar to be used for the poor in Jesus' Name. M. M. G.

Brooklyn, New York, April 19.—Please give me the number in Eighth avenue, of Mrs. K.—the old lady you mention in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 18. E. H.

Northampton, Mass., April 19.—In response to your article on "Practical Christianity," I send $2 requesting you to use for "God's Poor" as you see fit. T. B.

Glen Ridge, N. J.—I would like to become interested in some worthy destitute family. Can give ten dollars a month. Would be happy to hear from you. C. E. B.

White Haven, Pa., April 20.—Kindly furnish me with the address of B—, E. Twelfth street, which you have placed in the "Mail-Bag" column in your issue of the 18th inst. N. G.

W. Woodstock, Conn., April 23.—Mother and I enclose two dollars for B—, E. Twelfth street, the deserted wife with five children. Please let us know more about them. M. C. & J. C.

Germantown, Pa., April 23.—I am a subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Enclosed a dollar. Please send it to Mrs. C. N. W., Seventeenth street. It is only a little mite; but may it do much good. R. W.

Hardwick, Vt., April 19.—After reading my CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 18th the "Mail Bag" column, I wish to do something "In His Name" for those deserving ones referred to. I will be glad to do what I can to aid those so destitute. M. E. T.

Salem, Ia., April 18.—I have been reading in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of those poor Christian families who will suffer so much by discontinuance of the Food Fund, and feel moved to send the enclosed money order for five dollars. Please place it where (in your judgment, it is most needed in relieving one or more of those cases. E. S.

New York City, April 21.—I would like to know the addresses of the following suffering ones: R. E. Fourth street, woman with cancer, 4 children; Mrs. S. W. Eighteenth street, husband dying with consumption, 4 children; Mrs. C. W. Twenty-second street, husband dying, 4 children.

If these have been attended to, please send me the addresses of the neglected cases, and oblige. Mrs. F.

Fargo, N. D., April 16.—Having read in the "Mail-Bag" the plea for the establishment of a relief society to relieve the distress of the needy, I hold up both hands in favor of such an organization, and I will pledge a regular contribution in monthly installments of at least sixty cents per month, and may make it $1.00 per month if it is required to establish a fund to relieve the suffering poor at any time, especially the Lord's poor. C. L. H.

New York, April 22.—Seeing a number of cases of "God's Poor" specified in the last number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I would like to do a little toward their comfort. Send me the name and number of the aged couple in Waverly Place, and I will visit them and help them in any way I can. I am a widow of 72 with limited means, but take great pleasure in helping those who are in need. Yours in Christian fellowship, M. W.

These are only a few of many such earnest and enthusiastic letters that have been received. All have been promptly responded to and the writers are now actively engaged in the work. With the nucleus of membership already secured, this new Christian Aid movement will go forward to greater strength and larger effort. Every reader who feels called to help, should send name and address to the publisher of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD without delay.

M. T. Kite, Redding, Cal. In our Sunday School the ten commandments are recited every Sunday; are they blinding on Christians?

Read them over and see if you think there is one among them that a Christian could violate with a clear conscience. The Christian is not under law, but under grace; nevertheless, such elementary morality as the ten commandments demand, ought surely to characterize him. But he is expected to render higher service and not be satisfied with the mere negative goodness the Decalogue requires.

Mrs. Thomas Laidlaw, Gates Centre, Kan. Where do we get the authority that Paul was beheaded?

Caius of Rome, Eusebius, Tertullian, Jerome and others of the early Christian writers are among the authorities for the statement.

Subscriber E. W., Illinois. If God and Christ are one, as stated in John 14: 10, why does Christ speak of going to his Father, as mentioned in John 16: 28?

The Holy Trinity is beyond human comprehension. We have to exercise faith and wait for complete knowledge until we reach the spiritual state after death. The two facts are revealed that Christ was God and was also man and we believe them, although we cannot understand them, any more than we can understand the distinctions between the trinity of body, soul and spirit in our own being. The expression used by Paul (2. Cor. 5: 19) that "God was in Christ" may help you to a partial solution of your difficulty.

Mrs. S. L. Smith, North Hector, N. Y. Where do you get the authority for the names of the two thieves who were crucified with Christ? Was it the one on the right or the left who said: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom?"

The names, as preserved by legend and tradition, vary according to different writers, and there is no absolutely authentic record on the subject. One early writer (in the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus), gives the names of Demas or Dismas—as the penitent, who hung on the right hand of the Saviour—and Gestas as the impenitent. Bede gives the names of Matha and Joca, respectively, as those that prevailed in his time. The first, however, have been preserved and in the hagiology of the Syrian, Greek and Latin churches, Dismas is recognized as the penitent malefactor. Bengel asserts the belief that Dismas was a Gentile, and Gestas a Jew.

G. W. K., San Marcos, Tex. In the course of a recent campaign, the Prohibition party, in self-defense, adopted methods which my friend, a strict church member, did not approve. He refused to contribute to the campaign fund, but was willing to pay out of his own pocket the entire expenses of a certain orator, thus helping the Prohibition side and relieving the party of the expense of that orator. Was he not just as much involved in responsibility as if he had paid into the general campaign fund?

We think not. As he paid his money for a definite object and did not pay it into the fund which was to be used for the purposes you describe he cannot be held responsible. The effect on the treasury of the party may have been the same, but he was not accountable for the way in which the party spent the money they contributed and collected. He was accountable only for the way he spent his own money and is not responsible for the methods or conduct of people who were working for the object for which he also was working.

S. G. N., North Branch, N. H. How can a person tell whether he is saved? If having been sorry for leading a sinful life, having asked God for Christ's sake to forgive the past and help him to live right in future, and doing this with full confidence that God is able and willing to give pardon and grace—if after this the person feels just as dark and gloomy as before, is that a proof that he is unsaved?

Dark and gloomy feelings are never a proof that a person is unsaved. They come to very eminent Christians at times and they often have a physical origin. No man is saved by his feelings. If a man trusts in God's promises, has given himself wholly to Christ, determined that Christ shall be his King whom he will serve all his life, and strenuously tries to live as Christ would have him live, relying for power to do so on the strength God will give—then he need be under no apprehension about the safety of his soul. It will be saved because it will be worth saving. Gloom and sorrow may come because of failure and it is right to feel them; but they are signs of spiritual life. People who are not right with God do not sorrow on that account. If a king issued a proclamation of amnesty to such rebels as would lay down their arms and be loyal citizens, a rebel would not have much difficulty in ascertaining his position. If he had complied with the conditions, he would trust the king's word for the rest. The repentant sinner must do the same.

Lydia A. Haddock, N. Y. Write to Rev. A. B. Simpson, 602 Eighth Avenue, N. Y.—Mother, Susan and I, three N. Y. The first plan would be to send him to the "Dearest Inebriates' Home." Your physician or pastor can doubtless inform you where such an institution is to be found.—Mrs. J. W. McCullough, Colorado, Md. Write to American Sunday School Union, Bible House, N. Y.—C. F. Yoder, Hiawatha, Kan., wishes to be informed where he can find a good description of the last days of Benedict Arnold.—The beautiful poem, "Stand Still in Jordan," which appeared in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, was written by Mrs. Carrie Ellis Breck, of Vineland, N. J., several of whose fine poems have already been published in these columns. The name was inadvertently omitted.—L. T. Send to Mrs. Christina Markle, 36 Lafayette St., Schenectady, N. Y.—C. S. M. D. C. Dodgeville, Wis. The general opinion is decidedly opposed to it, as unfavorable to spiritual growth.—J. H. Gay, Folkstone, Ga. The word "Schah" is a musical term, indicating a pause or rest.—Mrs. H. B. Fall, Harrisonville, Mo. We know of no book on the subject.—Mrs. M. A. Hall, Wentworth, N. H. Write to Cook's Tourist Agency, Broadway, N. Y. Marion Harland can be addressed care of "CHRISTIAN HERALD."—Mrs. G. W. S., Sauk Centre, Minn. Mrs. Bella Cooke's address is 492 Second ave., New York.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

THE ROYAL WEDDING PARTY.

COBURG, the little town on the Itz, which serves as a capital for the duchy of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha has been the scene of a gathering of Imperial and Royal personages more numerous than has been witnessed for many years. The occasion was the wedding of the daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, to her cousin the Grand Duke of Hesse. As the bride is a niece of the Czar of Russia, and, like the bridegroom, a cousin of the Emperor of Germany, as well as a grandchild of the Queen of England, these reigning houses were all interested and were duly represented at the ceremony. The Emperor and the Queen were present in person and the Czar sent his eldest son and heir to represent him. The ceremonies were on a magnificent scale and were conducted with imposing grandeur. The distinguished party was entertained in the Schloss, where the bride's father holds his miniature court, and the marriage was solemnized in the little chapel connected with it, in which Queen Victoria's parents were married seventy-six years ago. An additional event of interest which was not down on the programme, but was much more important than the wedding, occurred during the festivities. This was the betrothal of the Czar's son to the Princess Alix of Hesse, a sister of the bridegroom. As this lady will, if she and her future husband live, be Empress of Russia, the significance of the arrangement is fully realized in European courts. It creates a personal bond between the reigning houses of Russia, Germany and England, which will probably operate in the interests of peace. With a German Princess on the Russian throne, there will be less danger of that alliance between Russia and France against Germany, which has lately been the dread of European statesmen. When we consider how much power is still vested in monarchs, and how often in the past their personal quarrels have involved the loss of multitudes of lives, it is reassuring to learn that they are forming personal alliances with each other which may eliminate dynastic antipathy from the causes of war. The time will come when there will be better grounds for the preservation of peace; for we have the promise that the Prince of Peace shall be the Supreme Ruler on earth, and in that day none shall hurt or destroy for he shall judge among the nations and make war to cease. (Isa. 51: 4.)

A Monument to a Hero.

A local journal states that a monument is to be erected in Shelby County, Mo., to the memory of Hiram Smith, who died there during the war. Accounts differ as to the exact details of Smith's death. It is generally agreed, however, that it was the voluntary self-sacrifice of a brave man to save his friend. It appears that in September, 1862, a party of Southern troops under Col. Porter were making raids around General McNeil's quarters. A man who had been active in scouting parties, and on whom McNeil placed great reliance, disappeared, and McNeil believed he had been captured by Col. Porter's party. He accordingly issued a notice demanding his surrender. The man was not returned, and McNeil, in his exasperation, declared that if he was not brought back in ten days he would put to death ten of the Confederate prisoners then in his camp. No one believed the threat would be executed, but on the expiration of the tenth day ten prisoners were, by McNeil's orders, led out to be shot. Among the doomed men was one named Humphrey, a married man with a family. One of the prisoners who was not selected for execution was Hiram Smith, who was an old friend of Humphrey's. He was a single man, and when he heard that his friend was to be murdered, he volunteered to suffer in his place, so that Humphrey might be spared to his family. He actually suffered, and it is to his memory that the monument is now being erected by a son of Humphrey. Many will be surprised that so noble a deed has been suffered to go unmemorialized for more than thirty years, yet there may have been sufficient reasons for the delay. That it is now to be fitly commemorated is more than can be said for some who have not yet fulfilled their own duty; "for scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die; but God commendeth his love towards us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." (Rom. 5: 7, 8.)

Saved by a Grip.

An extraordinary escape from death is described by one of the government clerks in the Railroad Department of the Postal Service. He says that he was traveling in the mail car one night last summer over the Alleghany Valley Railroad, when as the train was nearing Oil City, Pa., he suddenly missed his fellow clerk. As he was not anywhere in the car, he looked outside and there to his horror saw him hanging by one hand to the crane which is used for catching the mail pouches at the way stations. The crane was quickly swung into the car and an attempt was made to lift the man from it. That was not, however, easily done. He had grasped the crane so tightly in his hand that its hold was firmly set and it was some time before it could be sufficiently relaxed to loose it. The man, being unconscious, could give no account of his being in that position, but it was easy to understand how it occurred. He must have been leaning out of the door of the car, as the train sped along at the rate of forty miles an hour, nuisance, and superstitious people have given it the reputation of being haunted. It is sad that while there are so many homeless people, a good house should stand empty and idle and infested by rats; but it is infinitely more sorrowful to see, as we often do, a human being who might be a habitation for the Holy Spirit, doing no good in the world and given over to passions and vices as repulsive as the rodents in the Brooklyn house and infinitely more destructive. (1. Cor. 6: 19.)

An Automatic Gate.

A novel invention to prevent accidents at level railroad crossings was submitted recently to the inspection of several gentlemen connected with the management of various railroads. It is the invention of a wealthy manufacturer who some months previously had a narrow escape from being killed while driving over a crossing. After working out his theory, he invited the assistance of a mechanical engineer, who constructed the apparatus for a test. The gates open and close by the running of a weight of five hundreds pounds. When it is suspended, the gates are open, but when it is released and falls, it turns a shaft under the tracks, which closes the gates. The weight is controlled by electricity, operating through a magnet which slides in a groove. The wire runs through a tube to two points, one five hundred yards above and one the same distance below the crossing. At these points there is a projecting button on the track, which, on being pressed by the wheel of an approaching engine, completes an electric circuit. This sounds a gong at the crossing, and moving the magnet two inches forward, releases the weight which sets the shaft in motion and closes the gate. When the engine reaches the button beyond the crossing the action is reversed, the weight rises and the gates open. The test the other day was satisfactory in all respects, and it is thought the device will be accepted. The inventor pregnated with a deadly poison, while the other side, which was of silver, was harmless. He was of course careful to keep the wholesome half of the peach himself, while giving the half that the gold had poisoned to his victim. Such a man would be more dangerous than a violent, brutal murderer against whom people would be on their guard. His victims would naturally think that the fruit would not harm them, as it did not harm him. The same kind of reasoning has led many a young man to his ruin. As the novice is sure to lose, in an apparently fair game, if his opponent is a professional gambler, who employs tricks in his play, so one who lacks self control or has an inherited propensity to some form of vice, may receive irreparable injury from an indulgence which does no mischief to a more wary companion. (Prov. 1: 10.)

BRIEF NOTES.

A Jew in London recently Confessed Faith in Christ and was baptized. His family had a funeral card printed and circulated, announcing that his death took place on a certain day, which was the day on which he was baptized.

The Number of Persons in Receipt of Relief from the many public funds in London, exclusive of those dependent on private charity and funds raised by churches and philanthropic societies was last month, 99,885, an increase over the number in the corresponding month of 1893 of 6,818.

Messrs. Hunter and Crossley have Closed a series of revival meetings in Brockville, Canada. The services were largely attended, and many were enabled to obtain admission. The evangelists denounced card-playing, dancing, theatre-going, drinking, and other evils in strong terms.

Efforts have been Made for Several Years past to effect a federal union of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the Reformed Church in America, the Reformed Church in the United States, the United Presbyterian Church, the Reformed Presbyterian Church, the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and the Associate Reformed Synod of the South. A meeting of accredited representatives of each of these bodies was held recently at Philadelphia, at which a plan of union was submitted, and after being amended, was approved, and copies are to be sent to the Synods and assemblies of the respective churches for examination and ratification.

The Moravians, According to statistics published, have in the American province 12,535 communicants, an increase of 374 over 1892; 1,283 non-communicants, and 5,678 children. Of the communicants 20,318 are in the Northern and 2,217 in the Southern district.

A Woman who Went to the Court of Common Pleas in Baltimore, Md., on April 10, to get a pedler's license, while waiting for her turn to be heard, picked up the Bible which is used for the administration of oaths. She read a few verses and asked the clerk what book it was. The clerk, finding that she had never seen the Bible before, made her a present of a copy.

Several Hundred Persons have made profession of faith at the meetings Rev. B. Fay Mills has been holding in Norwich, Conn. Sixteen churches—Congregationalist, Baptist, Methodist and Universalist—united in the movement, and services were held in each of the church buildings, and in the Broadway Theatre. On the last day of the services, all the stores and factories, and even the saloons closed, and great crowds thronged the meetings in the theatre and the churches from morning till night.

A Cincinnati Journal Publishes the Statement that in that city are two lovers who are anxious to be married, but the ceremony has been delayed by the involuntary seclusion of one or the other party. During the whole period it has never happened that both have been out of prison at one time.

The Work in Liberia of the Protestant Episcopal Board of Missions and other Protestant Missionary Societies is being seriously embarrassed by the action of the French Government. Reports have been received that the French have threatened to destroy the churches and mission buildings and force the natives to give up their religion for the Roman Catholic faith. An appeal is to be made to President Cleveland to interpose and secure through our minister in Paris an order from President Carnot restraining the French commander in Africa from interfering with the American Missionaries.

The Revival Services in New York are Continued and it is expected they will be held throughout this month. Services of song and lecture at noon in Niblo's Theatre and are followed by addresses by Rev. C. C. Dixon, D. D., Rev. George C. Ner-dham, and others. Another service is held at 3:30 P. M. in the Metropolitan Hall in Fourteenth street, and in the evening at various churches. Last week the Evangelists who took part in the meetings included Mr. Leonard Weaver, Rev. Samuel Alman, and Rev. S. V. Robinson. This week Mgr. Bouland, the famous converted Roman Catholic priest, who has held high office in the Papal service, is assisting in the revival. On last Sunday night he preached to a large congregation in the Masonic Temple. The congregations at Niblo's Theatre each day number over a thousand persons. Money to continue the hire of buildings is urgently needed.

Contributions of clothing for the Relief Fund have been received from the following:

A. V. S., Tennessee; A. Fri-m-i, Philadelphia, Pa.; "Garrett," Baltimore, Md.; Hately street, Brooklyn; W. S. Sargent Wick. O.; A friend, Spangle, Wash.; Unknown; Mrs. A. E. Torrey, Oxford, Pa.; King's Daughters, London, N. H.

THE ROYAL MARRIAGE—COBURG, THE SCENE OF THE HESSE-COBURG WEDDING.

and have come in contact with a bridge or some other object which knocked him from his exposed position. In falling, his hand would touch the crane, and he must have grasped it with all his might and held on instinctively even after he became unconscious. He owed his life to the presence of mind which led him not to struggle but to concentrate all the strength of his body in that grip on the crane. His example may be commended to all who are in danger of losing their souls. In the rush of business life, and under the stress of fierce temptation, he alone is safe who clings to Christ and depends solely on his support. (John 10:28.)

A House Left to Ruin.

In a busy street in Brooklyn is an imposing house which is well furnished throughout, but is unoccupied and is slowly going to ruin. It belonged to an eccentric man who lived in it with his only daughter for many years. He died some time ago, and in his will he left the house to his daughter for her own occupation. He wished her to live in it, and stipulated that the house should never be sold or rented, either by her or her heirs. Two years after his death, the daughter left the house and has not returned to it. As she can neither sell it, nor rent it, she refuses to spend any money on it in repairs, or in keeping it in habitable condition. The furniture remains in it as in her father's time, but the windows and doors are never opened. Rats swarm in the house and have undisputed possession of all its rooms. Although it is a substantial and well-constructed house, the neighbors regard it as a acted wisely in not resting satisfied with an arrangement that would merely sound the warning gong. In also arranging for the automatic closing of the gates, he provided for the protection of people who might not heed the gong. There are such people, although the number who would risk losing their lives under a train is not so large as those who risk the loss of their souls in spite of the warnings of the Bible and God's servants. (Ezek. 33: 5.)

A Strange Poisoning Case.

The record of an ancient criminal trial has recently been unearthed by an eminent author, who has published it. He states that the recent trial and execution of a man who had committed several unprovoked and apparently purposeless murders, excited his curiosity and he searched the criminal records, ancient and modern, to see if there had ever been a case before this, of a man committing murder without cause. In the course of his search, he came upon the record of such a case, in which the criminal adopted a crafty method of procedure. It was observed that several persons had died after eating a peach with him. He would take a peach, cut it in half with his knife, eat one half himself and hand the other half to his victim, who, having eating it, soon afterward died. It was difficult to understand how he could have poisoned any one with a peach, half of which he had eaten himself and he would have escaped detection but for a surprising discovery. On examining his knife, it was found that one side of the blade was of gold and was im-

THE GOSPEL IN JERUSALEM.

(Continued from first page.)

drew their consent. Thereupon, Mrs. Ben-Oliel made an appeal for funds to purchase or build an Evangelistic hall, to which personal friends responded most liberally. Owing to a deficit in the Foreign Mission funds of the United Presbyterian Church to the extent of somewhere about £12,000, the Oran Station was reluctantly given up in 1879; Mr. Ben-Oliel returned to England, and the donations for the hall were returned to the givers.

In 1883 he was appointed to work in Rome where the Lord blessed his labors by the conversion and baptism of several Jews; and just when he was breaking ground among the higher class of Jews, the question was addressed to him, "Would he go to Jerusalem?" His first arrangement was to labor for his Parent Society, but soon, finding himself free to do so, and encouraged thereto by men of God of the Evangelical Churches of England, the U. S. A., Canada, Australia, &c., and particularly by the late Rev. Dr. A. DeWelles Miller, of Charlotte, N. C., he established a mission of his own in the Holy City. Of his successful labors there since 1890 it may be said the whole evangelical world is now fully cognizant, for the religious press of almost all lands publish copious notices of his work, and also that of Mrs. and Miss Ben-Oliel in the City of Redemption.

Mr. Ben-Oliel has supplied three crying wants in Jerusalem: 1. A laborer who can converse in Hebrew with Rabbis and learned Jews, so numerous in the Holy City, and who is familiar with Hebrew literature and dogma. Hebrew is becoming again a living tongue in Jerusalem and Palestine, as is proved by the fact that the only newspapers published in Palestine are two weeklies in Jerusalem, both in the sacred tongue of Moses and the Prophets; and lately, the first monthly juvenile magazine, also in Hebrew, has appeared. 2. A laborer who can preach and discuss freely with the Sephardim (Spanish Jews) in their dialect—Judeo-Spanish. They are the most ancient Jewish inhabitants of Jerusalem since the dispersion; the most civil, pious and learned, and, withal, the most easily accessible to the Gospel messenger. 3. He has provided the Holy City with an "Upper Room," where evangelical Christians of all denominations, travelers or residents, can meet to worship God, and where their ministers, for the first time in long ages, can have the highly-prized privilege of witnessing for Jesus in the City of Redemption. Several of the brightest Jewish families are among Mr. Ben-Oliel's converts. They visit the Mission house constantly to hear the evidences of Christ's Messiahship; and not only the "common people," but Rabbis, and the wealthy and influential, including the greatest men of the Jewish community, are among such visitors.

This work has been going on since August, 1890, purely as a work of faith and trust in the Lord, being supported wholly by the voluntary offerings of Christian friends who feel interested in its progress. Many of its supporters are in America, and Mr. Ben-Oliel has lately come over, with his wife and daughter, to make more widely known the field and its needs, and to enlist the prayers and practical interest of God's people everywhere throughout the Union. A few hours after reaching the port of New York, Mr. Ben-Oliel was addressing the Bible Class in the Hebrew-Christian Church. Shortly afterward, he attended and spoke at no less than fourteen Bible classes in Brooklyn, Bethlehem, Stroudsburg, Belvidere, Easton, Allentown, Philadelphia, Coatesville, Pottstown, Baltimore, York, Wilmington, Harrisburg and Germantown. He is a most interesting and instructive speaker, being thoroughly conversant with the customs and manners of the people of the Holy City; giving specimen readings from the Law and Prophets, exhibiting rolls of the Law, Phylacteries, etc., and giving an interesting account of the result of recent excavations in Palestine. In addition to these labors he has preached in Boston, Pittsburg, Binghamton, Saranton, Montrose, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and other cities, every where meeting with encouragement and evoking deep interest in the Jerusalem Christian Union Mission. Wherever there are Jews he has preached to them in mission rooms, sometimes to five or six hundred at a time, hundreds at the close coming forward to shake hands and thank him for his addresses. Mrs. Ben-Oliel, too, frequently addresses her Christian sisters on the work which she has taken up as the living labor of her life.

Holy Spirit.

F. J. CROSBY.

REV. ROBERT LOWRY.

1. Ho - ly Spir - it, heav'n - ly Dove, Rest up - on us from a - bove;
2. In our days of ear - ly youth, At the fount of sa - cred truth,
3. In Thy word may we de - light, In Thy work may all u - nite;

May Thy bless - ing, ere we part, Fill with praise each grate - ful heart.
May we give our - selves to Thee, Thine in life and death to be.
For Thy king - dom may we live, To Thy name all glo - ry give.

CHOIRS.

Ev - er - last - ing Three in One, God the Fa - ther, God the Son,

God the Spir - it, hear our prayer; Make us all Thy bless - ing share.

Copyright, 1893, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From SUNNY-SIDE SONGS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS, by per. of the Publishers.

Miss Ben-Oliel also is a very interesting and effective speaker, and, since coming to America, has been in active demand by churches and Sunday Schools, to which she relates her experiences in visiting the homes of the Jewesses in the Holy City. She was frequently appalled at their poverty and ignorance. As an opportunity of helping and teaching them the Gospel, mothers' meetings were held there which have been greatly blessed. While in England Miss Ben-Oliel was invited to speak of this work to branches of the Y. W. C. A., with the result that a young woman to assist in this part of the work will be supported by them. In this country she is also speaking in their behalf. Recently, when invited to Detroit to speak at the Student Volunteer and Christian Endeavor Convention, she gave thirty-five talks in twenty-two days. She recently addressed the Sunday School at the Brooklyn Tabernacle. At the suggestion of Mrs. Bottom, President of the King's Daughters, Circles are being formed to assist the Jerusalem Mission.

The Ben-Oliels are likely to be in this country till the end of July. They may be addressed care of Rev. Dr. Rice, Secretary of the American Tract Society, 10 East 23d street, New York.

HE CARETH FOR YOU.

AS hies the hunted bird to rest,
Hie to thy Lord;
Shelter and loving care to all
Doth he accord.
Who full surrender freely make,
Trusting his Word.
In him thy rich provision find
From day to day;
That all thy care he'll bear for thee
Believe, and pray,
When ye are Christ's as Christ is God's,
All, yours away.

So, for thy way, shall light be sown
Springing anew;
Though densely o'er some shadowed path,
Flower trees of yew,
In deepest glooms of dungeon night
Shall love shine through.

Goldshara, N. C.

—LOUISE S. DORR.

THE MILLENNIAL REIGN.

Christ's Reign on Earth During the Thousand Years to Be a Time of Universal Righteousness.

BY REV. W. MAUDE.

HAVING viewed in previous articles the millennium as a kingdom of peace and light, we come now to look at it in its aspect of a kingdom of righteousness. But what is righteousness, and how shall we define it? It comes from two old Anglo-Saxon words signifying right or straight, and wise or prudent. Righteousness, therefore, is keeping to the straight line, pursuing the straight path and avoiding all deviations therefrom. So much for the grammatical meaning of the word; but morally, perhaps no nobler or more exhaustive definition of "righteousness" could be given than that embodied in the great word of Christ: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." (Matt. 7: 12.) But we have only to apply such a criterion as this to what the Apostle calls "the course of this world" to perceive at once, how, throughout its entire history, and in all the departments of human life, the reign of unrighteousness has obtained; and that in such a degree that even the Christian's faith has often been for a moment staggered, and he has been tempted to ask himself, "Is there indeed a reward for the righteous; is there in truth a God that judgeth the earth?" Putting aside the flagrant vices which in their habitual and world-wide prevalence, disgrace and degrade our common humanity, such as drunkenness, uncleanness, robbery, and murder, we see that it manifests itself both in the sphere of government, and in the sphere of social relation. It is in the midst of the most Christian nations that misery has assumed its most hopeless and concentrated forms. There is one hope for humanity, and only one, the coming of the Lord and the establishment of his righteous government. Let us note, then, some of the great forces which will "make for righteousness" in that millennial kingdom of righteousness and peace whereof we speak.

The supreme and universal power and rule will be absolutely and divinely righteous. "Behold," says Isaiah, "a King shall reign in righteousness." And this King is none other than the Lord Jesus himself; for Zechariah says, "And the Lord shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one." (Zech. 14: 9.) Of his solemn investiture, Daniel had a sublime revelation when he "saw in the night visions, and, behold One like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom." (Dan. 7: 13-14.)

Now concerning this King it is said, "He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. And righteousness also shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins." (Isaiah 11: 3-5.) While of him the Psalmist sings, "The Lord shall endure forever, he hath prepared his throne for judgment; and he shall judge the world in righteousness, he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness. The Lord also will be a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in time of trouble." (Psalm 9: 7-9.) And if this were all, what an unspeakable blessing it would prove to the world!

Again, how it would affect the conduct of men towards their fellows, whether inferior or superior in station, to know that there was on earth and within reach a Supreme Authority, not only armed with irresistible power, but whose decrees were infallibly true and incorruptibly righteous; and which was moreover accessible to the poor as well as the rich, to the servant as freely as his master, nay, which made the former his special care, seeing that it is written, "with righteousness shall he judge the poor," and will be "a refuge for the oppressed." What a blessing, I say, would this be to the world; how completely would it alter the complexion and constitution of all human society. "I appeal unto Cæsar," said Paul, when he feared that justice was not to be had at a lower tribunal, though Cæsar did not rule in righteousness. But when the poorest and humblest shall be able to say, "I appeal to the King of kings," how will injustice shrink back appalled and selfishness hang its head in confusion!

(To be continued.)

Home Life in Samoa.

A Pacific Paradise, Where All Might Be Happiness, if it Were Not For Man's Passions—Native Dress and Customs.

HERE is no more delightful place in the wide world, as to climate, scenery, healthfulness and the productive variety of the soil than the little island group known as Samoa. Yet this tiny cluster of islands in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, far from the troubles and distractions of older and greater countries, and with no near neighbors to vex and annoy, is continually torn by internal warfare, and its progress in civilization retarded by quarrels among its rulers and petty chiefs. Its present king, Malietoa, had a most excellent training in a mission school, but even he seems to have yielded to the strange love of blood and slaughter that is a trait of the savage nature in all men. Though there has been a great deal of war in these beautiful islands, the natives are really a peace-loving people and would gladly follow a simple, peaceable hospitable, and generous mode of life if allowed. They are moral and self-respecting, too, and are in nearly all matters of personal behavior, superior to the population of other Polynesian groups: They are, as a rule, truthful and humane, and since the introduction of Christianity, they have abolished all their idols, although they still cling to the heathen practice of tattooing—a custom that prevails so extensively that the business of tattooer is the most lucrative in the kingdom. The simple "lava-lava" or native waist-cloth has been gradually replaced by garments more in accord with civilized ideas, and now European and American calicoes are used, the highest form of official dress for men being a linen shirt and a long full-skirted "lava-lava" of light brown material. Both sexes are inordinately fond of bright colors and love to deck themselves in anything that will make their fellow-Samoans stare. Short bodies of colored cotton and sometimes of richly-hued silk, satin or velvet, with colored "lava-lavas," would constitute the very richest wardrobe for the wife or daughter of a chief. Turbans of siato or native cloth are occasionally worn, and sometimes "trade hats," shipped from Europe or America; but usually the head is bare, save for the decoration of flowers which seems to be an almost universal custom. A native has fifty ways of dressing her hair, but flowers are never out of place.

The illustration on this page shows a Samoan home of the class found in the smaller villages on the islands of Upolu, Tutuila and Savaii. At such large settlements as Apia and Pango Pango, the general character of the dwellings is, of course, greatly superior. Native house-building is a serious and expensive undertaking, the owner being compelled to pay the workmen at certain stages even if he has to beg the money, and meanwhile being obliged to feast all his friends. As both men and women help in house-building, the work is something in the nature of a prolonged jubilee or ceremony, varied with axe-dances, and singing. In a purely native house there is not a single nail, all the joints and fastenings being made with the sinnet or native string, made from cocoa-nut fibre.

One of the prettiest customs in Samoa is the welcome that is accorded to visitors to a native settlement. In the centre of each Samoan village there is usually a big building, called the "fale-tele," which is utilized as a council-house, and also as a place for the hospitable entertainment of strangers. When it becomes known in the village that strangers are on the way thither, there is a buzz of preparation, and the new arrivals, when they appear, are escorted to the "fale-tele," where they are received by the chief and his daughter, or by some other young woman who shall represent the hospitable ing robes for the girls, wreathed and garlanded with flowers, while on their necks are garlands of the sweet-scented "musu-ae" (a fragrant native plant) and their tresses are interwoven with bush-flowers of many colors. The men are garbed in white and also quite liberally ornamented with flowers, though not so profusely as the women. Such costumes are worn on the event of any great festival, and if the proceedings include a feast, as they usually do, the gathering has a remarkably picturesque and interesting appearance.

The Evils of Card-playing.

A gentleman one afternoon met an acquaintance, writes Rev. Elijah Brown, and said: "Come to my house to-night, and let us have a good social time in playing whist." "I shall have to disappoint you on that line," remarked the friend, "for I cannot play whist." I have never had a pack of cards in my hand." "Well, come down and learn, for you don't know how much you have missed." "I have the best reason in the world for not wanting to know how to play," was the response. "And what is that?" the other asked. "It is this, Jesus Christ never played a game of whist, and his life is my example whenever it comes to a question of doubt." "Well, it wouldn't have hurt him any if he had," was the quick retort. "Perhaps not," returned the Christian slowly, "but only think of how much he would have hurt the world. Every saloon would have had a picture of him hanging up behind the bar with a pack of cards in his hand, and every evil that young man will be a clerk a long time unless he happens to have parents with money to set him up in business, and even then he is at a disadvantage, for he is always afraid he will do what does not belong to him to do.

SINCE MOTHER WENT AWAY.

NO sunbeams fall about our door,
To kiss the drooping flow'rs;
No perfumed zephyrs as of yore,
Breathe out the evening hours.
The flitting bird sings at the pane,
His gleeful song, all day;
But 'tis to me a sad refrain
Since mother went away.
Why is my poor heart troubled so,
And will not be consoled?
My tear-brimmed eyes begin to flow
And cannot be controlled.
How shone the verdant landscape o'er,
In summer's sunny day;
No cloud it's velvet bosom wore,
Ere mother went away.
But now, the fragrant rock-rose dies
Upon the cold gray lawn:
The with'ring violet faded lies,
It's lovely charms withdrawn;
And sullen clouds of sombre hue
Wrap earth in gloom to-day;
But heaven is nearer, dearer too,
Since mother went away.

Danville, Pa.

N. B. BOWSER.

A BEGGAR CHILD'S FAITH.

DURING his recent evangelistic tour in Great Britain, Rev. George F. Pentecost had a very interesting experience in a Scottish city. At the close of a meeting, a little ragged, elf-like creature came up to him and pulled at the skirt of his coat. She was apparently a mere child. He bent down toward her and inquired what she wanted: "I want to be saved!" was the earnest reply. "Well," said the preacher, "Do you think I can save you?" "Na, na!" she said eagerly, "but Jesus can." "But tell me how he can do it? What has he done to save you?" Again the lips to my ear, and again the eager whisper—if possible more pathetic and tender: "Oh, sir, he died for me." "Then he is dead, is he? How can he save you if he is dead?" The little thing sprang up and again those eyes, just a moment ago suffused with tears, flashed upon me. No whisper now, no putting of lips to my ear, but her voice ringing out as once before: "He is not dead! Jesus is not dead! He died for me, but he is not a dead man. He is God's Son. Man, did you not tell us this vera nict that God raised him from the dead? He was dead, but he is no dead noo. Oh, man, I want to get saved;" and her voice dropped into the old pathetic tones. "Do not fash me, but tell me a' about it and tell me how I can be saved."

I had preached that night from the text, "He was delivered for our offences and raised for our justification." Here was a little theologian who had grasped the whole blessed Gospel. Now she knew she was a sinner—she knew that only Jesus could save her. He had died, but God had raised him from the dead, and now he was able to save.

I need not say that the little one soon went away glad and happy. And I went away glad and happy. "He is no dead." "He did for me; he is no dead."

How often these words have come back to me, as I think of the little Scotch girl and her terrible earnestness about salvation. "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast ordained strength." Here was surely an illustration in point.

A TYPICAL NATIVE HOME IN SAMOA.

side of Samoan society, as the chief is supposed to represent the official side. There is a short period of speechmaking and compliments and then the real business of welcoming the strangers begins. A refreshing draught of kava, a non-intoxicating liquid, is handed to the travelers. Meantime the youths and maids of the village assemble a little distance from the "fale-tele," and then march towards it, in single file or two abreast, singing a chorus of welcome. As they near the place, all the people of the settlement in gala costume, join in the procession and swell the chorus. Every one is provided with some gift for the strangers, even if it be simply a cocoa-nut, or a taro. As the paraders arrive, they deposit their gifts, with a shout, in front of the guests, and then retire to a comfortable distance. Sometimes great quantities of food are presented at these ceremonies. Occasionally, when the guests are to be specially honored, "papalagi" (foreign) costume is worn by the natives, consisting of long, white flow-grows out of gambling could have pointed to him in reproach."

Every father who plays cards in his home will be able to see from this how his example in this one thing may be to his children a great curse. God help us to get our eyes open and look at this thing right.

Don't Shirk.

There seems to be a fear on the part of a good many people, and some really conscientious Christians, too, of doing more than their share of the work in which they are engaged. It seems to be wonderfully human and very natural for a great many to shirk responsibility, to leave whatever does not belong to their particular work to some one else. How often have we seen a young man enter a store with an excellent opportunity before him, perhaps with a sense of fairness and only doing what was fair and what was his share, fail to make the progress he should, fail to be to his employer what he might have been. Such a CHAPTER XV. Continued.

NURSE WILLIAMS was a goodly sight in herself on this holiday, than which no whiter had stood in her calendar for many a long year. The wholesome fare, bracing air and cordial cheer of Pinehurst had, as she said, restored her to her normal self. Her cheeks had the bloom of a Spitzberg apple, her laugh was the merry gurgle her patients found irresistibly contagious; her comfortable visage was an illuminated demonstration of "peace on earth, good-will on earth." Over her gray gown was tied what was surely the smoothest apron in all the world where white muslin aprons are the badge of notable housewifery. She had been downstairs for over an hour, dusting the parlor, dressing the breakfast table with ground-pine and bitter-sweet berries, and, in the kitchen contriving to help, without hindering, Elspeth—not always an easy undertaking in another woman's kitchen.

When, at half-past seven, the household assembled in the parlor for prayers, she supplied a harmonious contralto to the soprano in which Mrs. Paull led the quaint old hymn that peals and echoes on one morning of the year around the globe:

While shepherds watched their flocks by night,
All seated on the ground,
The angel of the Lord came down
And glory shone around.

What a Christmas-keeping that was! From the pink rising of the sun to the crimson going down of the same, there was not one false note in the guileless mirth of childhood, not a sharp tone in the voices of their elders. Nothing went wrong. At breakfast the generous rivalry of Elspeth's spongy muffins and Mrs. Williams' smothered chicken added zest to the discussion of both; the clear black coffee in the cups of the grown people was mantled by whipped cream of like quality with that which slid slowly down inside of the glasses from which the children drank their milk.

Before anybody dreamed that the forenoon was half-gone, the luncheon was served. A luncheon which the children averred was quite as much fun as the Big Patch picnic; toasted bannocks and yellow buttermilk and home-made cream cheese, as smooth as butter, and far better than so-called Neufchatel, and hot corn-bread and wafery slices of coraline ham, and doughnuts. An early meal that Lanier might set out betimes for Peddlington, which Marie would reach by the one o'clock train from New York. She could not get away earlier on account of the morning service at St. Gudule's. It was in voluntary compliment to her that her little brothers, and even Gladys, begged not to have the large parlor, where the tree stood, opened until the afternoon. They had hung up their stockings overnight and enjoyed overhauling the fruit, bon-bons and other trifles with which they were distended by morning. The Tree—the anniversary's Crown and Event, should not be touched, or so much as looked upon before "Sister's" arrival.

Everything went upon velvet that day. The sleek roadster attached to the trim cutter which was Uncle Roger's Christmas present to his sister, actually arched his neck, curvetted and "stepped out" with an air a thoroughbred might have emulated, when Lanier got in and took up the reins. Not a capful of wind had dislodged the trim coping of snow from the top of the stone walls. The steady, still cold had held on, although the sun shone brightly. The four-inch-thick covering of the earth had not melted, but settled into compactness, making the sleighing excellent, without need of cutting roads in any direction. As the cutter spun out of the gate—"spun" was not too strong a word in the boys' opinion, for the gallant way in which bay Prince carried off the new equipage—the dry snow spurned by his hoofs hung in the air like silver dust.

"I wonder if it's too dry to make a snowman with?" speculated Mrs. Williams, squeezing a handful in her strong fingers.

That was the inception of the famous statue of Santa Claus which was erected at the right side of the piazza-step under the shelter of the porch "ready to shake hands with anybody who called," said Gladys.

He was almost built, when Mr. Morse drove around the corner of the house, the jingle of his sleigh-bells unheard in the clamor of talk and laughter, until he was abreast of the busy group. Wrapped up to their eyes, with just room between the folds of their comforters for the escape of clouds of eager breath, with thick gloves protecting hands that would else have been frosted, the boys brought and emptied upon the floor basketfuls of snow. Mrs. Paull and Mrs. Williams, also muffled beyond recognition but for eyes and voices, acted as sculptors-in-chief. Mr. Morse's companion was his Philadelphia brother-in-law, Dr. Lyell, a frequent and favored visit at Pinehurst.

"Don't stop! Let us take a hand!" called the pastor, gaily, as the sleigh dashed on to the stable for shelter for the horse.

They were back in three minutes, and took a hand with a will equal to that of the most zealous, and skill that threw the best efforts of their predecessors into the back-ground.

"Mould and pose are really classic!" observed Mrs. Paull, withdrawing to a suitable distance for contemplation while the boys swept up the snow scattered about the base of the statue. "The Knickerbocker saint is classic by now, isn't he?"

"I flatter myself that his cloak has a togaesque droop," said Dr. Lyell, his head on one side, his hand funnelled artistically. "But the beard—of which Mr. Morse was sole architect—is the master-piece. I wish we could borrow him as a figure-head for the big sleigh to-night!"—was the adroit introduction to a petition the two had come to prefer.

The parsonage was full of frolicsome young people from Philadelphia and New York, for whom the Morses had planned a moonlight sleigh-ride. Would Mrs. Paull spare her son and daughter for a few hours? The party would call by for them at half-past seven and return them in safety before midnight. Mrs. Morse was to matronize the affair, and Mr. Morse would allow nobody but himself to act as charioteer. They were to take supper at a hotel ten miles away, situated in the very heart of the snow-girt mountains, and renowned for excellent fare. This was the programme unfolded by Mrs. Paull over the Christmas dinner served at five o'clock that the children might have time to digest it before bed-time.

Marie sat at her mother's right hand, dressed as was her custom, simply in black. No conventual costume could have hidden the fact of her beauty to-day. Her nectarine bloom, the golden sheen of her luxuriant hair, the eyes, violet-blue in color, and eloquent in the expression of every fluctuation of emotion, would have made a pretty, even a brilliant-looking woman of her, had her features been less regular. In the holiday mood in which she indulged herself, she was bewitching in the sight of others as well as her mother, whose prideful love as she looked and listened to her wayward daughter, gave watchful Mrs. Williams a heartache.

"She's taken lots of stock in that girl, in spite of all that's passed," she meditated. "Up to date, it isn't paying stock either, but, there! the love a mother puts into her children is most generally to be considered in the light of a permanent investment. There's no calculating what the dividends will be of shares that are below par sometimes six days in a week, and that a smile or a kind word can send up on the seventh day to thribble what they're worth."

Marie's eyes danced for one unguarded moment and the nectarine bloom was heightened at hearing of the prospective frolic, but her reply was demure.

"I should like to go if Lanier is to be one of the party. Perhaps, however, mother would rather have us stay at home this evening?"

It was spoken carelessly, but the starved heart of the parent responded to the slight indication of regard for her wishes.

"By no means, love," she hastened to reply. "I shall have you with me all day to-morrow. If I were ten years' younger and had not played the sculptor so hard this afternoon, I should ask for a seat in the sleigh. The idea is simply enchanting."

"You would be the handsomest woman there, if you went!" said loyal Tom.

"That's so!" Edwin backed up his senior.

"And the youngest!" put in Mrs. Williams.

"And the most fascinating!"—this from Lanier.

"And the best and sweetest!" Gladys carried on the eulogy, reaching over from her chair at her mother's left hand to clasp her arms behind her neck.

"Certainly the richest!" responded Mrs. Paull, trying to laugh while her eyes swam in a happy dew. "When I have all my children about me, I can say with all my heart that I do not envy the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, or Queen Cressus—if there was such a personage."

She said the same in substance, again, as having seen the big sleigh, heaped with furs and happiness, drive from the door, and listened until the last tinkle of the bells lost itself among the hills, she heaved a satisfied sigh in returning to the fireside with Mrs. Williams.

"My cup is very full to-night. The paths I have not known have brought me out into a wealthy place. These anniversaries are hill-tops where it is lawful to rest awhile and look back over the road we have traveled. How lovely Marie has been to-day! Don't you think so?"

"We are not the only people of that opinion. Unless I am mistaken, there's a young man of that party who could give us a point or two upon the subject."

Mrs. Paull had taken up a stick of wood to lay on the fire. The sentence arrested her. Still holding it, she looked around quickly: "Do you mean Dr. Lyell?"

"Just that!"

The hostess adjusted the stick carefully in its place, brushed up the hearth, and pulled forward two chairs, one for her companion, one for herself.

"I have never thought of such a possibility," she said, slowly. "She seems such a child to me."

"In her twentieth year—isn't she?"

"She was nineteen in October. Quite too young to be married."

"She looks and acts and feels like a woman of twenty-five. You won't take it amiss if I say what come into my head, seeing them two together? Before that, in fact, for the notion popped into my brain this afternoon while he was helping and talking to you over the snow-man. I think when he was holding snow in his hand to soften it enough to make a nose, and you begged him not to do it. 'I'd rather Santa Claus should have a snub nose, than that you should freeze your fingers,' says you in your nice, motherly way. And he flashed his eyes up at you so quick and grateful and affectionate-like—just the look I've noticed in other young men in talking to women they wished were their mothers-in-law. That set me on to watch him with Miss Marie. He looked too happy to see her, and she made too much of an effort to behave to him exactly as she did to Mr. Morse, not to mean something out of the common. Mr. Morse, he may not have understood it. Ministers are the salt of the earth, as we all know, that is, the right sort are. (Salt that's lost its savor ain't to be compared in trashiness with the wrong kind!) But I've noticed a many a time that most of them—even the saltiest, as you may say—have got so into the habit of being put first that they kinder squirm when they are put second. Maybe it's the praise and reverence of the women in the congregation that's responsible for it. Maybe, again, it's being stood up above the people so constant, in pulpits and upon platforms and things. Anyhow, it's more than likely Mr. Morse took it as quite natural that Miss Marie squeezed his hand in both of hers, and said, 'Mayn't I please sit up there by you?' quite as if she meant it. His wife had different eyes and her own notions, so she had a fat elderly man on the raised front seat, and snuggled Miss Marie in the one just behind, 'out of the wind,' she said, and between her and Dr. Lyell."

"Is that 'the notion' you hoped I would not mind you telling?" asked Mrs. Paull, smiling.

She was versed in her old friend's manner of leading up to a delicate subject.

"Well, then, it isn't, 'though it has a good deal to do with it, when you come down to the truth. This was what I was thinking of: The best way to get one thing out of the mind is to fill it with another thing. Ever since I knew her, Miss Marie has had her head and heart taken up with one idea. If this nice young gentleman, who, from what I can judge, is what he ought to be, could work himself into her favor—why, it would be a safer and happier filling up of her heart and her life than the other. You'll forgive me if I've gone too far, Mrs. Paull? Nobody knows better than me, ma'am, that some wounds ought not be meddled with, even after they're healed over. No matter how light they are touched they inflame, and like's not, break out again. I've carried such a tender spot about me for nine and twenty years."

"Forgive you, dear friend!" said Mrs. Paull's mildest tone. "After all you have done for me and mine, could I take exception to anything you might say, even if my judgment did not tell me you are in the right, as it does in this instance? I could ask no better earthly blessing for my deep-hearted girl than to see her the happy wife of an honorable man—be it Richard Lyell, or anybody else. Pure love of a worthy object is a sovereign cure for morbidness. Next to this, I place active industry for others' good—something to do, and to be doing it."

"You are in the right there. But for my work—my profession as some call it—I don't, but we mean the same thing) work that's laid right down before me, and me to ask no questions, and to slight nothing—day's work, cut and carved and measured out, same as the tale of bricks was to the Is'ra'elites, but by another sort of overseer—I'd 'a' been in my grave, or in the lunatic asylum, ages ago. And since I've known and walked in The Royal Road, the yoke has been easy and the burden light. It's like day unto day uttering speech, a-whispering one to the other, of the following of goodness and mercy, and angels coming to minister unto me in my darkest nights."

The sweet surounding
Of thine angels' banding wings.

Yes, I can truly say that the songs I have had in the house of my pilgrimage since I was let to understand what pilgrimage is, and the house but a 'moving tent pitched each night nearer home'—are more and joyfuller than in the days when, as one might say, my corn and my wine were increased."

"And you, too, have had a great sorrow?"

The question was scarcely above a whisper.

"Such a sorrow as has made every other seem light to me. Hark! they can't be back already?"

The clash and chime of sleigh-bells were loud and close at hand. With the instant apprehension that some accident had befallen the revelers, both women hastened to the outer door.

A livery-stable sleigh and a pair of horses were there; a tall man threw back the robes and alighted, as the lamp-rays from the hall streamed out upon the welcoming figure of Santa Claus.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Everlasting Arms! I think of that whenever rest is sweet. How the whole earth and the strength of it, that is almightiness, is beneath every tired creature to give it rest; holding us always! No thought of God is closer than that.

—Adeline D. T. Whitney.

In God's world for those who are in earnest there is no failure!

—F. H. Robertson.

For him the silver ladder shall be set:

His Saviour shall receive his latest breath;

He walketh to a fadless coronet

Up through the gate of death.

—Anonymous.

"Don't be frightened, Alice!" said the unexpected visitor. "I am only a Christmas trick."

"Roger! my blessed brother!" was the glad outcry with which the sister sprang to his arms. "This is a joyful surprise! I only needed it to make our white Christmas 'round and perfect as a star!'"

Voice and limbs tremulous with excitement, she stood in the embrace of his left arm, while he gave orders to the driver to put up at the village hotel and come for him at nine o'clock next morning. His sister interrupted him:

"So soon, brother! It has been so long since you were here!"

(To be Continued.)

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD FOOD FUND.

Additional Contributions for the Relief of the Destitute in New York City.

Avon, N. Y.	1 00	Mrs K. Mangin St.	1 00	Ill. 75c; Mrs O. 25c; C H reader,
Anderson, W and family	2 00	M T Stillwater, Okla.	1 00	35c; A sympathizer and friend, Col-
A R A.	2 00	Norton, Nathan	1 00	orado Springs, Col, 26c; "A daugh-
Boothby, Mrs Sarah M.	4 00	One, though poor, contributes		ter of the King." Westminster,
Bridgman, Thos.	2 00	her mite, Montreal	1 00	Mass, 50c; Box 112, Galt, Ont,
Campbell, Ethel and Eddie	1 00	Rhoads, Mrs W H.	1 50	50c; Primary S S class of U B Ch'ch,
Dum, G B and wife	1 00	Reader, Beaver, Pa.	1 00	Gillingham, Mrs. 50c; A little boy 5
Dugan, E R.	1 00	Somers, J B.	1 00	years, old, Castle Rock, Minn, 50c;
Derrick, Emma	1 00	Shepherd, Mrs Maggie C.	2 00	A sister in the Lord, N. Y, 50c;
East Union S S of San Joaquin		Stockstill, T B.	5 00	Mother and daughter, 50c; A well-
Co, Cal.	1 45	Sanborn, Mahel	1 00	wisher, Narrows, Tenn, 25c; A poor
E. Millville, Mass	1 00	Tiffin Local Union C E, Tiffin, O	12 46	laborer, Hanover, Me, 50c; A Kan-
Edmonstone, Mrs S	5 00	T J M, Portsmouth, Va.	2 00	sas reader, 50c; Mrs A R Nichol's S
Fourth School District, Har-		West Rockport, Me.	1 00	S class, Ann Arbor, Mich, 30c; A
winton, Conn.	3 15	Winchester, Ky.	1 50	widow, Hanover, Pa, 25c; L H,
Friend, Spokane, Wash	2 00	Brown, Mrs, 50c; Barnes, E R, 30c.		Brewer, Me, 40c; A E M, Wilming-
Friends, Little Genesee, N Y	1 50	Crow, Hettie M 50c.		ton, Del, 50c; Mrs W M Waupun,
Friend, Elizabeth, Ill.	1 00	Friend, Charlestown, Ind, 50c.		Wis, 50c; L P R, Melker, Colo, 50c;
Friend, Lewisburg, Pa.	5 00	Houston, Mrs Curtis S 75c.		J R, Can, 25c; Weston,
Friend, Minneapolis, Minn.	2 00	In His Name, Shiloh, Mich 30c.		Neb, 25c; White Haven, Pa, 50c;
Friend, Port Royal, Va.	1 00	Murray, May K, 50c; McAllister,		A A, Harvard, Neb, 25c; A B, Ho-
Friend, Baltimore, Md.	1 00	N F, 50c; Mamma and Jamie, Hamp-		mer, N Y, 95c; Nesco, N J, 10c; C T
Friend, Grangeville, N Y.	1 00	ton Falls, NH 50c.		Eddy, 25c; Norfolk, Va
Friend, Northfield, Conn.	1 00	Naylor, Mrs A R, 25c.		15c; Farmdale, O 50c; Ce-
Friend, Beaver Creek, N Y.	1 00	Patten, E L 50c; Pratt, Mrs B, 10c;		darella, Fla, 50c; One who wants to
Friend, Westbrook, Me.	1 00	Basser, Cy, 9c.		help, Michigan Valley, Kan, 40c;
Farington, J E.	3 00	Subr, 10c; Schooling, Clarence, 25c.		Middlebury, Vt, 50c; A B,
In His Name, Binghamton, NY	1 00	Welch, Mrs, 25c.		Plankinton, S Dak, 20c; M A B,
Jones, Mrs C A.	5 00	Y P S C E, Bingham Mich 75c.		New Hampshire, 35c; Mrs A B,
Kinnan, Mrs E G.	1 00	Oran, Mo, 10c; Parkers-		Michigan, 25c; Nordhoff, Cal,
Mrs F A C, Cortland, N Y.	2 00	burg, Iowa, 50c; Bath, Mich,		95c; Bucyrus, Ohio, 25c; J G,
Mrs C A.	1 00	25c; Chambersburg, Penn,		Adrain, Mich, 50c; Widow's mite,
Miller, C.	1 00	30c; Middle Farms, N Y, 15c;		Drakes Mills, Tenn, 25c; M R G,
Martin, Jessie E.	3 00			Monroe, Ia, 50c.

Venerable "King's Daughters."

A Circle whose Members are all over 70 and one is 101 Years of Age.

TWO weeks ago, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published the wonderfully interesting story of Millie Jefferson, of New York, the one hundred and nine year old colored woman, whose Christian life and beautiful faith are exerting a wide influence in the district where she lives. To-day, we give the portrait of "Aunt Jane Brown," another Christian woman of great age, who resides in the sister city of Brooklyn. She is an inmate of the Home for Aged Colored Women, on Atlantic avenue, in that city. In the Home, a Circle of King's Daughters has been organized among the inmates, no member of the circle being under seventy years of age, and several bordering on the century mark. Aunt Jane is the oldest, and is the President of the Circle. She bears the burden of her years very lightly, retaining the use of the faculties almost unimpaired, except that of sight. Even in her blindness, however, her patience and beautiful faith are well illustrated in her familiar answer to inquiries about her health: "I'm just as well as I can be, thank you, and I'm just waitin' till my place is ready or me." Aunt Jane is a staunch Baptist, but has a love that embraces all Christian denominations. Among her associates she is a great favorite, and visitors to the Home find, in this aged Christian's example and conversation, an incentive to increased faith and multiplied zeal in the conduct of their own lives.

"AUNT JANE."

A King's Daughter at 101.

MOSLEM WOMEN AND THE BIBLE.

Mos Lillian Dietrich, a missionary in India, writing to the "Missionary Link," from Cawnpore, relates the following interesting incident:

"As I was leaving Cawnpore to take the train for Muthra, the home mail came in. I brought a paper with me, expecting to read during the long wearisome journey, but I had scarcely opened it after the train started, when a sweet-faced Mohammedan woman, who had come closely veiled into the zenana railway carriage which I was in, asked me if I had with me a Bible, and if I would mind reading a little from it to her. She said she had always been very strict in observing the requirements of the Mohammedan religion, observing all the fasts, praying five times a day, etc., but had found no rest for her soul, and felt her need for something she had not found in her religion, for which she was seeking. She had been in the habit each day of reading the Koran, the only book her husband would permit her to read, and while she had heard of our Saviour and our Bible, she was afraid to have it found in her possession, as her husband was so severe and strict in his watch over her. As soon as I began to read, all the other women in the compartment crowded about me, and I soon had a very interested and interesting audience. A number of the women asked me if I had Gospels to sell, and as I had some with me in Hindi and Urdu, they found a ready sale. The Mohammedan woman looked very wistfully at a Gospel, but said she was afraid of her family, should they find any of our religious books with her. I asked her if she would not like to commit a verse or so to memory, so that she could have it in her heart and meditate upon it. She was very much pleased, and before leaving the train had perfectly learned St. John 3: 16."

TIBET SOON TO BE OPEN.

The real object of China urging Tibet to persist in its policy of exclusion, is that it desires to keep the trade of Tibet in its own hands. In a very short time, however, that mysterious country will be opened to the merchants and traders of the civilized world. There is little agriculture in Tibet, beyond a few cereals and roots, the climate being that of the Alpine peaks. The wealth consists in thousands of sheep, the only manufacture being woollen cloth, but gold, silver, mercury, musk, fur, hides and wool are also exported. The imports consist of tea—the plantation sweepings pressed into bricks—rice, sugar, cotton cloth, leather, satin, porcelain, clocks and musical boxes, the last being much appreciated. The Tibetans are totally ignorant of Europeans, and very averse to foreigners, a feeling the Chinese cherish for their own purposes. At the close of the Sikkim war, the Lamas asked the Emperor for his advice. A big document was returned with a little one inside. The big one said, "Don't fight the foreigners; let them enter Tibet." The private one said, "Don't let the foreigners enter Tibet; fight them, or you will rue it;" the latter advice being, of course, followed. Tibetans actually think that Mohammedanism is the religion of the "Piling-in" or Europeans, and credited Miss Taylor with witchcraft, believing that she was taking stock of the gold and silver in the mountains for a future occasion. The people were much impressed by our kindness to prisoners of war, and astounded at our cannon balls. "Fire," they said, "came down from heaven in burning balls." The Russians seem to be the chief European travelers in Tibet, and most favored by the Chinese. The Sikkim-Tibet Convenion, just signed permits foreigners to reside and trade in the border towns, under certain conditions. It only wants a conference of nations, Miss Taylor thinks, and a little firmness on our part, to divert the Tibetan trade to India, to the great advantage of Tibet.

THE ARGUMENT OF A LIFE.

"When I was young," said a good old man, "I did not care for the concern of eternity, and was very different from what I afterwards became. Aye, there was an infidel once who used to come and argue with me about religion, and one day I turned to him and said, 'You knew me as I used to be before I gave my heart to God; now tell me, was I a better man then, nay, was I half as good a man as I have been since,' and the skeptic had not a word to say." There was no answering this plain argument. The skeptic knew what a sad, sinful young man this old man had been before he was brought to Christ, and could not deny the change that had been wrought. A changed life is indeed one of the hardest arguments for an infidel to answer. There he sees the power of God unto salvation.

THE ANGEL OF PATIENCE.

To weary hearts, to mourning homes, God's meekest angel gently comes; No power has he to banish pain, Or give us back our loss again; And yet in tenderest love our dea And heavenly Father sends him here.

There's quiet in that angel's glance, There's rest in his still countenance! He mocks no grief with idle cheer, [ear; Nor wounds with words the mourner's But ills and woes he may not cure He kinnly trains us to endure.

Angel of Patience sent to calm Our feverish brow with cooling palm; To lay the storms of hope and fear, And reconcile life's smile and tear; The throbs of wounded pride to still, And make our own our Father's will.

For All Stockings

worn by ladies and children

there is only one hose supporter which cannot cut the stocking. All genuine Warren

Hose Supporters are made with Warren Fasteners with Rounded Rib on Holding Edges—all other supporters must cut the stocking. For sale everywhere.

Made by George Frost Co., Boston.

PIMPLES AND FRECKLES

A TRIAL BOTTLE of treatment for pimples, blackheads, oily skin, freckles, tan, unnatural redness of the nose or face, hair and scalp; rough and scaly skin, sent by mail for 60c. Dr. Atkins' Complexion Soap at dealers or postpaid 25c., or three cakes, 65c. N. Y. Dermatological Institute, L. R. ATKINS, M. D., President, 304 W. 30th St., New York.

PRINTING OFFICE 15c

A large font of Type (over 4A) with Figures, Holder, Indelible Ink, Pad, Tweezers, Corkscrew, etc., as shown in cut, complete in neat case. Best Linen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Regular Price 50c. Sample postpaid for 15c, to introduce, with Catalogue of 1000 new articles. CAT. FREE. INGENSOLL & Bro, 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City

Swiss Lozenges

For curing Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, &c. Price, 25 cts. a Box Mailed. H. EDWARD WYNDEL, S. E. cor. 3d and George Streets, Philadelphia

TAPE-WORM

Expelled alive in 60 minutes with head, or no charge. Send 2c stamp for circular. Dr. M. Ney Smith, Specialist, 721 Olive St. Louis, Mo.

WALL PAPER

New designs. Artistic effect. Harmonious colorings. Great value for little money. 100 samples, Ceilings and Borders to match, 10c. William Wallace, 1625 Pine St., Philada., Pa.

WALL PAPERS

Send 10c. for postage & we will mail you a beautiful line of samples and book of instructions how to paper. We retail at wholesale prices. Agents and paper-hangers send $1.00 for large books. B. B. BRADLEY, 704 Grand Ave., New Haven, Conn.

2c. WALL PAPER.

Gilt paper 3 1/2 cts. up, Embossed golds 10 cts. to 1 1/2 cts. per roll. 100 New Samples mailed FREE for 8 cents postage. Good Quality, Fair Dealings. KEEL WALL PAPER CO., 193 ELM ST., CINCINNATI, O

JOHNSON'S LINIMENT

ANODYNE ESTABLISHED 1810.

SOOTHING HEALING, PENETRATING

For INTERNAL and EXTERNAL Use.

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT will cure Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cramps and Pains. Relieves Summer Complaints, Cuts and Bruises like magic. 115¢ per 4¢ pamphlet free. Sold everywhere. Price 35 cts. Six bottles, $2.00. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

No local dealer can compete with us

WALL PAPER

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples.

Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.

We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS,

80-82 W. 13th St., NEW YORK. 186-188 W. Madison St., CHICAGO.

"A good tale will bear telling twice."

Use Sapolio! Use

SAPOLIO

THE FLOWER IN THE PRISON.*

SCARCELY were the commands of the Empress issued, that no farther obstruction should be offered the young stranger, when the brilliant crowd opened, to yield a passage to Teresa Girardi, who appeared in the midst of the throng, in a suppliant attitude, as if scarcely aware of being released from the detention of her captors.

But on a sign from Josephine—a gracious sign, instantly recognized by those around as a token of indulgence—the young Piedmontese was set at liberty; and, on finding herself free, Teresa rushed to the foot of the throne, breathless with agitation, and, bending low before the Empress, proceeded to unfold a handkerchief which she had taken from her bosom.

"A poor prisoner, madam," said she, "implores the clemency of your majesty." But, with every disposition to indulgence, it was impossible for the Empress to divine the meaning of the strang looking handkerchief which Teresa Girardi, sinking on one knee, tendered to her hands.

"Have you a petition to present to me?" demanded Josephine at last, of the trembling girl, in a tone of encouragement.

"This, madam, is a petition; this is the memorial of an unfortunate captive!" persisted Teresa, still holding up the handkerchief. But tears of terror and anxiety flowing down her cheeks, almost concealed the smile which the gracious affability of the Empress had for a moment called into existence.

"Rise, my poor girl, rise!" said Josephine, in a tone of compassion. "You appear deeply interested in the welfare of the petitioner!"

Teresa blushed, and hung down her head. I have never even spoken to him, madam," she replied; "but he is so deserving of pity. If your majesty would deign to read the statement of his misfortunes—"

Josephine now unfolded the handkerchief, touched to the heart by the evidence of misery and destitution conveyed in such a substitute for writing-paper. Pausing, however, after she had perused the first line of the petition, she exclaimed, "But this is addressed to the Emperor!"

"And are you not his wife?" cried Teresa. "Deign, deign to read on! Every moment is of consequence. Indeed there is no time to be lost!"

The fight was now at the hottest! And it was while all was proceeding around her, that the Empress attempted to give her attention to the following lines.

Sire: The removal of two stones from the pavement of the court of my prison will scarcely shake the foundation of your empire; and such is the favor I presume to ask of your majesty. It is not for myself I appeal to your protection. But in the stony desert in which I am expiating my offense against your government, a single living thing has solaced my sufferings, and shed a charm over my gloomy existence. A plant—a flower, springing spontaneously among the stones of Fenestrella, is the object of my solicitude. I admit, sire, that this poor plant has softened the vengeance doomed by your majesty to fall upon my devoted head; but it has also subdued my pride, and cast me a suppliant at your feet. . . . I do not complain of captivity. I support my sentence with resignation. Be its duration as that of my own life, but spare, oh, spare my plant!

*From Piccola, the Prisoner of Fenestrella or, Captivity Captive, by X. B. Saintine, pp. 221, artistic binding, illustrated, price $1.50. D. Appleton & Co., New York, Publishers.

For Dyspepsia

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. O. G. CHURCH, Boston, Mass., says: "I have used it very extensively, and with the most remarkable success in dyspepsia, and in all cases where there is derangement of the liver and kidneys."

A Wonderful Discovery—Catarrh and Consumption Cured.

There is good news for our readers, who are victims of Lung Disease, Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption. In the wonderful cure made by the new treatment known in Europe as the Andral Broca Discovery. Write to the New Medical Advance, 67 East 6th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and they will send you this new treatment free for trial. State age and all particulars of your disease.

Real faith never grows weak by having to wait. Sufferers taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for chronic complaints should be patient, and the result will be all that can be asked.

Teresa Girardi, meanwhile, attentive to every gesture of the empress, felt instantaneously reassured by the soft smile of sympathy which overspread the countenance of Josephine while perusing the petition. With a beating heart, she stooped to imprint a graceful kiss on the hand extended towards her, a hand how puissant amid all its fragile fairness, for on its slender finger glittered the nuptial ring of Napoleon!

BOOKS RECEIVED.

If Christ came to Chicago! by William T. Stead. Pp. 472; price 50c; published by Laird & Lee, Chicago.

Bible Class Expositions: the Gospel of Luke, by Alexander Macclaren, D.D. Pp. 337; price $1; published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, 51 E. 10th St., New York.

Broken Bread for Suffering Disciples, by Mr. and Mrs. Geo. C. Needham. 224 pages; price $1; published by the Fleming H. Revell Co., Fifth Ave., New York.

The Bible in Private and Public, by Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. Pp. 50; price 25c; paper covers; published by the Fleming H. Revell Co., Fifth Ave., New York.

The Political Economy of Natural Love, by Henry Wood. A most instructive work for Teachers and Students. Pp. 305; English cloth; price $1.25. Lee & Shepherd, Boston, publishers.

The Epistle to the Romans, by Handley C. G. Moule, M. A. The latest addition to the valuable series of volumes in the Expositor's Bible. 437 pp.; price $1.50; published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York.

Entom: A Story of the Great Rebellion, by John R. Musick. The twelfth volume of the Columbian Historical Novel Series; pp. 505; illustrated; cloth covers; price $1.50. Funk & Wagnalls, New York, London and Toronto, publishers.

Be Perfect; A Message from the Father in Heaven to His Children on Earth, by Rev. Andrew Murray. Meditations on spiritual things for a month. pp. 156; cloth covers; price 75c. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York, publishers.

The Measure of History, Sacred and Secular: The Standard Scale of Chronology, by Prof. Charles A. L. Totten. Uniform with the "Our Race" Series; paper covers; pp. 302; price 75 cents. Our Race Publishing Co., New Haven, Conn., publishers.

Oily, Sallow Skin.

"After using your Complexion Brush for six weeks, I have surprised myself and friends with a healthy complexion."

Wrinkles.

A lady sixty years old has succeeded in removing the wrinkles from her neck, and many other ladies have caused them to disappear from their faces by using our Complexion Brush regularly.

"I have used your Complexion Soap with the Rubber Complexion Brush, and find my complexion much improved. I shall recommend them both."

"After a trial of your Complexion Soap I am happy to say that it is the best soap for cleansing the skin I have ever used."

The above is what Ladies tell us BAILEY'S RUBBER

Complexion Brush

and SOAP has done for them, and it will do as much for you.

Bailey's Complexion Soap, 25 cts.

Bailey's Rubber Complexion Brush, 50 cts.

For sale by all dealers in toilet goods, or mailed upon receipt of price. Catalogue mailed free of everything in Rubber Goods.

C. J. BAILEY & CO.,

22 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

Please mention "The Christian Herald."

Dress Linens and Linen Ducks.

Ladies' Costumes of these materials will be ultra-fashionable for mountain and seashore this Summer.

An importation, just received, contains the very best qualities, in the choicest colors: Natural, Ecru, Tan, Butcher-Blue, Lavender, Pink, and Azure.

These were made from our special order in Belfast, and are now displayed in our Linen Department on the main floor.

James McCreery & Co.,

BROADWAY & 11th STREET,
NEW YORK.

GEO. A. FRENCH,

IMPORTER OF

New DIAMONDS.

Manufacturer of Diamond Jewelry.

If you contemplate purchasing any article in Diamond Jewelry should be pleased to hear from you. A full line of diamonds mounted in artistic designs, always on hand. Goods sent with privilege of returning if not satisfactory and money refunded.

RUBIFOAM
Cleanses,
Preserves, and Beautifies
THE TEETH.
Price, 25 cents.
Sample Free.

E. W. HOYT & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.

FACE TO FACE.

The pleasure of a confidential chat is doubled by the sweet breath that goes with a well-ordered system. And that is always insured by Ripans . Tabules.

Sweet breath, bright eye, clear complexion.

Ripans . Tabules.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

—OR—

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely
pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

The Great CHURCH LIGHT

Frank's Patent Reflectors for Gas, Oil, or Electric, give the most powerful, softest, cheapest, and best light known for Churches, Stores, Banks, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular a estimate. A liberal discount to churches and the trade. Don't be deceived by cheap imitations. L. P. FRANK, 51 Pearl St., N. Y.

ANKLE SUPPORTERS

FOR CHILDREN AND ADULTS
No child should learn to walk without them. Recommended by physicians as best appliance for weak or deformed ankles. Price 45c. up. Send for circular. R. H. Golden, So. Norwalk, Conn.

THROUGH THE YOSEMITE,

an historic description and some tour through the YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, the new wonderland of the world, rapidly nearing completion. To secure a copy of the first edition, forward 25 cents, coin, to the author, Ernest L. Ingersoll, Paris, Stark Co., Ohio.

$1000. for MS.

Desiring to secure a Life of Christ of superior merit for young people, we hereby offer ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS for the best MS., as stated below. PURPOSE.—To make the life and teachings of Christ as real and practical as if he lived and taught in our streets to-day, that the reader may catch the truest and highest conception of the revelation of God in Christ, and of God's ideal life for man as shown in him. To enrapture the soul with the beauty and grandeur of his life and teachings. To bring the reader into such close, loving relationship with him as to care only for his companionship. The fullness of it all to be "one" with him, as he is one with the Father. To be changed from glory to glory in his glorious presence. To make the Christian life joyous, majestic, conquering.

SPECIFICATIONS.—MS. must be received by Oct. 1st; not over 60,000 words nor less than 40,000. Not merely a descriptive life, but a story in which the experiences of the supposed characters bring them into intimate relations with Christ and his disciples, his circumstances, experiences and teachings. Style, simple and plain, such as will hold the interest of children from eight years and upwards.

PARTICULARS.—Each MS. numbered as received. Receipt acknowledged to the author, with number given. Manuscripts submitted, without names of authors, to three judges. Judgment based upon merits as stated. Payment on completion of examination, and not later than October 30th.

WHY UNDERTAKE THE BOOK.—It is not a long one. Most books are written first and a publisher sought afterwards. You have the additional chance of securing a good price for the book from us. As the time is short, many cannot compete. Few at this season can spare time. A choice book of this kind will always meet with ready sale. There is nothing now in the market which fills the place.

Further particulars and suggestions on application. Address MS. and communications to "Book Department, DAVID C. COOK PUBLISHING CO., 36 Washington St., Chicago."

Faultless Fit and Graceful Figure
Four Million women are to-day wearing Dr. Warner's Corset. Are you?

Warner Bros. Makers, New York and Chicago.

If you want the LATEST SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOK by H. B. SANKEY, GET WINNOWER SONGS.

257 songs; $35 per 100, in Boards. Many of the leading Sunday Schools in the land have adopted this book.

The Bigelow & Main Co. | The John Church Co.
76 East Ninth St., New York. S. E. C. 4th & Elm, Cincinnati.

A Day With Birds and Flowers,

New Songs, Recitations, Hymns,
Scripture Readings.

A BEAUTIFUL, 16 PAGE SERVICE,

Floral Praise FOR CHILDREN'S DAY,
No. 12,

By HUBERT P. MAIN.

$4 per 100; 5 cents each by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

CHILDREN'S DAY

Summer Blossoms,—5 cts. ea.
Sunshine,—3 cts. ea.
The Children's King,—5 cts. ea.
Grateful Offerings,—5 cts. ea.
Gems for His Crown,—5 cts. ea.
Five excellent services complete with Carols, Resp. Refrains and Recitations. Send 50 cts. in stamps for samples of the five. Cantata: FATHER TIME. For young people, very fine, price 30 cts. SEND THE LIGHT. A missionary service, price 5 cts. Geo. F. Rosche & Co., 940 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate WHITE BRONZE.

It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
76-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

Just Out! 50 Cts.

"COMING OF THE BRIDEGROOM"
Sacred Cantata by C. F. Hanson, auth. T. J. Quinn. In order to introduce this Cantata at once, we will give as a premium on sample order only, a Album of 25 fine views of the world's famous places, worth 40 cts., or "Lays of Sweden" worth 20 cts.

C. F. HANSON & CO., 317 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

ADDRESS ON IMPROVING THE MEMORY

MAILED FOR TEN CENTS

MEMORY LIBRARY 643 BROADWAY NEW YORK

WONDER CABINET FREE. Tuck Trid Cards, 2 Magic Keys, Devil's Bottle, Push Camera, Latest Wire Traps, Book of Sleight-Hand, Total Value 60c. Sent free with immediate order of 100c. for postpaid. Write to J. H. B. & Co., 408 Cortland Street, N. Y.

LIFE OF CHRIST

Desiring to secure a Life of Christ of superior merit for young people, we hereby offer ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS for the best MS., as stated below. PURPOSE.—To make the life and teachings of Christ as real and practical as if he lived and taught in our streets to-day, that the reader may catch the truest and highest conception of the revelation of God in Christ, and of God's ideal life for man as shown in him. To enrapture the soul with the beauty and grandeur of his life and teachings. To bring the reader into such close, loving relationship with him as to care only for his companionship. The fullness of it all to be "one" with him, as he is one with the Father. To be changed from glory to glory in his glorious presence. To make the Christian life joyous, majestic, conquering.

SPECIFICATIONS.—MS. must be received by Oct. 1st; not over 60,000 words nor less than 40,000. Not merely a descriptive life, but a story in which the experiences of the supposed characters bring them into intimate relations with Christ and his disciples, his circumstances, experiences and teachings. Style, simple and plain, such as will hold the interest of children from eight years and upwards.

PARTICULARS.—Each MS. numbered as received. Receipt acknowledged to the author, with number given. Manuscripts submitted, without names of authors, to three judges. Judgment based upon merits as stated. Payment on completion of examination, and not later than October 30th.

WHY UNDERTAKE THE BOOK.—It is not a long one. Most books are written first and a publisher sought afterwards. You have the additional chance of securing a good price for the book from us. As the time is short, many cannot compete. Few at this season can spare time. A choice book of this kind will always meet with ready sale. There is nothing now in the market which fills the place.

Further particulars and suggestions on application. Address MS. and communications to "Book Department, DAVID C. COOK PUBLISHING CO., 36 Washington St., Chicago."

BE.

Be ye clean that bear the vessels
In the service of the Lord:
Let your garments be unspotted,
As ye haste to do his word.
"Be ye holy—I am holy—"
Beautiful is this command,
That we may be like the Master,
Holy in his sight to stand.

Be ye perfect—take your standard
From the word the Lord hath given,
Nearing ever—yet not reaching
To the Blessed One in Heaven.
Be ye filled with his own spirit,
How inspiring is the thought!
Be enlarged—be growing ever
In the truths the Lord has taught.

Be ye faithful—failing never,
Till the hour of death shall come,
And the crown of life is waiting,
When the Master calls "come home!"
Watchful be, and strengthen hourly
All the trusts left in his care,
Guarding every sacred treasure,
Keep all safe with wish and prayer.

Be ye fruitful—lives full laden
For the glory of the Lord,
Sweet with fruits of love and mercy,
Harvests from his precious Word.
Of good comfort be ye ever,
Of one mind in love and peace,
Then the God of Love and Comfort,
Surely all your days will bless.

PHEBE A. HOLDER.

Berlin, Mass.

INFLUENCE OF A HYMN.

A gentleman in China, entrusted with packages for a young man from his friends in the United States, learned that he would probably be found in a certain gambling-house. He went thither, but not seeing the young man, he sat down and waited, in the hope that he might come in. The place was a bedlam of noises, men getting angry over their cards, and frequently coming to blows. Near him sat two men, one young, the other forty years of age. They were betting and drinking, the older one giving utterance continuously to profanity. Two games had been finished, the young man sat lazily back in his chair, while the other shuffled his cards. The man was a long time dealing the cards, and the young man, looking carelessly about the room, began to hum a tune. He went on, till at length he began to sing the familiar hymn of Phoebe Cary, "Nearer Home." The words repeated in such a vile place, at first made the other man shudder. A Sabbath school hymn in a gambling den! While the young man sang, the elder stopped dealing the cards, stared at the singer a moment, and throwing the cards on the floor, exclaimed, "Where did you learn that tune?" "What tune?" "Why, that one you've been singing." The young man said he did not know what he had been singing, when the elder repeated the words with tears in his eyes. The young man said he had learned them in a Sunday School in America. "Come," said the elder, getting up, "here's what I won from you; go and use it for some good purpose. As for me, as God sees me, I have played my last game and drank my last drop. I have misled you, and I am sorry. Give me your hand, and say that you will quit this business." It was afterwards learned that the older man had become a hard-working Christian man, while the younger had renounced gambling and its attendant vices.

A THIEF'S REPENTANCE.

In a recent address, Rev. B. Fay Mills related the following incident: "There was a young man in Ohio engaged by an express company. Twenty thousand dollars were missing. He was suspected, tried, but acquitted. Owing to the suspicion, he left the place and moved west; but he found no rest. He came to Chicago; heard Mr. Moody. After two or three nights he remained to speak to Mr. Moody and several gentlemen who were with him. He told them that he must confess to them that he had committed the crime for which he had been tried; and then he asked them what he must do. 'Restore the money,' they replied at once. He told them that it was hidden under a plank in the office. Then he said, 'What now shall I do?' They prayed about it. At last he rose and said, 'Gentlemen, pray for me. I know what I shall do.' He went back to the town where he had worked; came to the court. The judge who had tried him was on the bench. 'Judge,' he said, 'you remember me?' 'Yes,' 'I committed that crime.' 'Well, you ought to suffer for it.' 'I know I should,' was the humble reply. 'But I can't try you again,' the judge argued. 'Can't you try me for perjury?' 'Yes, we might.' He was tried and convicted, and sentenced to three years in the State prison. When he went behind the stone walls of the prison, for the first time for years he was a free man. Before his term expired, he was pardoned. He went out in time to stand by the bedside of his dying father, and by his words, his father was led to Christ, and died in triumph. He also led his brother to Christ.

MONEY RECEIVED.

Since our last acknowledgment, the following sums have been received and applied to the various funds indicated by the senders:

E. Shearman, $25 each for the Temporary Shelter in Varick Place, N. Y.; the Barefoot Mission and the Door of Hope. Willing Helpers, Scranton, Pa., $20 for Mrs. Jamal's Training School in Jerusalem: King's Daughters, Utica, N. Y., $1 for the Bethesda Home. Mary A. Hites and Mary E. Neward, 25 cents each for the Mary Washington Fund.

For THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School Missionary in the Southwest: E. Shearman, $25; Sarah Sprague, $2; F. Sprague, $2; M. M. Pratt, $1. Previously acknowledged, $204.67. Total, $234.67.

For the Bethany Lodging-House for Homeless Women: Henry W. Marks, $1; R. L. Edwards, $4.

For Mrs. Bella Cooke's Work: E. Shearman, $25; Mrs. G. T. W. Larry's Creek, Pa., $1; Mrs. M. A. M. Wylie, $5.

For Sister Charlotte's Home: Friends of the Cause, Philadelphia, $2; [Mrs. Lydia E. Wheeler, $1.

Raised on a Bottle.

Raised from infancy to healthy, happy childhood, upon the only perfect substitute for mother's milk—MELLIN'S FOOD. This food contains all the nutritive properties of breast milk, without any of the injurious farinaceous substances found in many other infants' foods.

Mellin's Food

will make the weakest infant happy, robust and vigorous.

Our Book for the instruction of mothers, "The Care and Feeding of Infants," will be mailed free to any address, upon request.

DOLIBER-GOODALE CO. Boston, Mass.

AGENTS wanted in every town. Something new. $75 a month. Write quick. Sherman & Butler, 26 W. Lake St. Chicago

If you value your life or the lives of those nearest and dearest to you Read!

"What I have seen of God's healing power through you demands of me that I speak for the good of others."

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your Balsamic Elixir. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.

Yours heartily,

Spurgeon.

"Westwood," Beulah Hill, England.

FOR YEARS MR. CONGREVE has been entreated to make his remedies known in America, but his time being too fully absorbed by his English patients would not permit of his doing so. Now, however, he has been enabled to extend his organization so as to bring America under his personal observation, and those interested in preserving their own lives and the lives of those nearest and dearest to them, can obtain his book on Consumption—300th edition, containing full particulars of his treatment, together with details of 400 fully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours—price 25 cts., post free—by addressing him at 4 Wooster St., New York, or it will be sent free with every first order of a $1.00 trial bottle of BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

THE ARGUMENTS IT CONTAINS commend themselves to the judgment of any impartial reader, for whilst the fallacies of some theories are laid bare, the author dispels the prevalent notion of the hopelessly fatal character of this dire disease, and proves beyond doubt that by proper means Consumption is Curable.

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION

MODENE

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.

Discovered by Accident.—In CONSUMPTION, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CANNOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied over and over again. MODENE REMOVES ALL UNDESIRABLE HAIR.

Recommended by all who have tested its merits.—Used by people of refinement. Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in Modene, which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail in safety mailing cases, postage paid, (securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. Correspondence sacredly private. Postage stamps received for the same.

LOCAL AND GENERAL AGENTS WANTED. Manufacturers of the Highest Grade Hair Preparations.

We offer $1,000 FOR FAILURE or the SLIGHTEST INJURY, EVERY BOTTLE GUARANTEED.

FREE—A Grand Offer—FREE.

Mme. A. RUPPERT'S FACE BLEACH.

Mme. A. RUPPERT says: "I appreciate the fact that there are thousands and thousands of ladies in the United States that would like to try my World-Renowned FACE BLEACH; but have been kept from doing so on account of the price, which is $2 per bottle, or 3 bottles taken together, $5. In order that all of these may have an opportunity, I will give to every caller, absolutely free, a sample bottle, and in order to supply those living outside of city, or in any part of the world, I will send it safely packed, plain wrapper, all charges prepaid, on receipt of 2c., silver or stamps."

In every case of freckles, pimples, moth, sallowness, blackheads, acne, eczema, oiliness or roughness or any discoloration or disease of the skin, and wrinkles (not caused by facial expression) FACE BLEACH removes absolutely. It does not cover up, as cosmetics do, but is a cure. Address all communications or call on MADAME A. RUPPERT (Dept. V), No. 6 E 14th St., New York.

any part of the world, I will send it safely packed, plain wrapper, all charges prepaid, on receipt of 2c., silver or stamps."

In every case of freckles, pimples, moth, sallowness, blackheads, acne, eczema, oiliness or roughness or any discoloration or disease of the skin, and wrinkles (not caused by facial expression) FACE BLEACH removes absolutely. It does not cover up, as cosmetics do, but is a cure. Address all communications or call on MADAME A. RUPPERT (Dept. V), No. 6 E 14th St., New York.

any part of the world, I will send it safely packed, plain wrapper, all charges prepaid, on receipt of 2c., silver or stamps."

In every case of freckles, pimples, moth, sallowness, blackheads, acne, eczema, oiliness or roughness or any discoloration or disease of the skin, and wrinkles (not caused by facial expression) FACE BLEACH removes absolutely. It does not cover up, as cosmetics do, but is a cure. Address all communications or call on MADAME A. RUPPERT (Dept. V), No. 6 E 14th St., New York.

any part of the world, I will send it safely packed, plain wrapper, all charges prepaid, on receipt of 2c., silver or stamps."

In every case of freckles, pimples, moth, sallowness, blackheads, acne, eczema, oiliness or roughness or any discoloration or disease of the skin, and wrinkles (not caused by facial expression) FACE BLEACH removes absolutely. It does not cover up, as cosmetics do, but is a cure. Address all communications or call on MADAME A. RUPPERT (Dept. V), No. 6 E 14th St., New York.

any part of the world, I will send it safely packed, plain wrapper, all charges prepaid, on receipt of 2c., silver or stamps."

In every case of freckles, pimples, moth, sallowness, blackheads, acne, eczema, oiliness or roughness or any discoloration or disease of the skin, and wrinkles (not caused by facial expression) FACE BLEACH removes absolutely. It does not cover up, as cosmetics do, but is a cure. Address all communications or call on MADAME A. RUPPERT (Dept. V), No. 6 E 14th St., New York.

RUPTURE CURED

WITH our Improved Elastic Truss. Worn with ease night and day. Retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain. Examination free. Lady in attendance for ladies. Send for pamphlet.

IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO., 822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

TYPEWRITERS.

Unprejudiced advice given. All makes half-price. Shipped anywhere for examination. Exchanging a Specialty. Monthly payments. 62-page cat. free.

THE TYPEWRITER, 45 Liberty St., New York.

REASONS: 225, 186 Monroe St., Chicago.

any part of the world, I will send it safely packed, plain wrapper, all charges prepaid, on receipt of 2c., silver or stamps."

In every case of freckles, pimples, moth, sallowness, blackheads, acne, eczema, oiliness or roughness or any discoloration or disease of the skin, and wrinkles (not caused by facial expression) FACE BLEACH removes absolutely. It does not cover up, as cosmetics do, but is a cure. Address all communications or call on MADAME A. RUPPERT (Dept. V), No. 6 E 14th St., New York.

any part of the world, I will send it safely packed, plain wrapper, all charges prepaid, on receipt of 2c., silver or stamps."

In every case of freckles, pimples, moth, sallowness, blackheads, acne, eczema, oiliness or roughness or any discoloration or disease of the skin, and wrinkles (not caused by facial expression) FACE BLEACH removes absolutely. It does not cover up, as cosmetics do, but is a cure. Address all communications or call on MADAME A. RUPPERT (Dept. V), No. 6 E 14th St., New York.

PILES CURED

Our Book on Piles—Free. Bacon Medicine Co., Richmond, Va., U.S.A.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

anywhere to anyone at Wholesale Prices without paying one cent in advance. We pay freight. Buy from factory. Save deal: $15.50 Carriage for $9.25, ery profits. Large $12.00 " " $5.95, illustrated catalog $2.00 " " $2.75, free. Address Cash Buyers' Union, 164 West Van Buren Street, B 29, Chicago, Ill.

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

FOR TABLE LINEN.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI.

Model 37
Columbia,

Price, $150.

This beautiful machine marks the extreme limit to which regular bicycle construction has thus far gone, in lightness combined with strength and durability. It is a semi-racer, built for track work, and for road racing under reasonable conditions, but it will afford the highest satisfaction as a regular mount for light and careful riders who are willing to do without brake and coasters. Weight with wood rims, 21½ pounds.

POPE MFG. CO.,

Boston, New York, Chicago, Hartford.

Call on any of our agents and get a Columbia catalogue free, or send us two two-cent stamps and we will mail it.

THINK 2 THINKS

IN CHOOSING DRINKS AND

HIRES' Rootbeer

WILL LINK YOUR THINKS.

Deliciously Exhilarating, Sparkling, Effervescent. Wholesome as well. Purifies the blood, tickles the palate. Ask your store-keeper for it. Get the Genuine.

Send 2 cent stamp for beautiful picture cards and book.

THE CHAS. E. HIRES CO., Philadelphia.

At church the deacon raised the tune
With nasal twang first low, then louder;
At home his good wife raised the cake
With some of Cleveland's Baking Powder:
'Twas vainly hoped his tunes he'd make
One half as good as her fine cake.

LEWIS' 98 % LYE
POWDERED AND PERFUMED
(PATENTED)

The strongest and purest Lye made. Unlike other Lye, it being a fine powder and packed in a can with removable lid, the contents are always ready for use. Will make the best perfumed Hard Soap in 20 minutes without boiling. It is the best for cleansing walls, pipes, disinfecting sinks, closets, washing bottles, paints, trees, etc.

PENNA. SALT MFG CO
Gen. Agts., Phila., Pa.

A DELICIOUS CUP OF TEA, MAHARAJAH.

To introduce this choice INDIAN-CEYLON TEA, we will send you a sample by mail for 10 cents, with prices for large or small quantities. Try it. The quality and price will surprise you.

PURE FOOD SUPPLY CO., 105 Hudson St. N. Y. City.

EAT BICYCLES

Without Charge.
A.W.GUMP & CO., Dayton, O.
I will send you a list of new and second-hand Bicycles, showing a saving of from $20.00 to $50.00, or for 10 cents they will send you a Candy Bicycle Transparency, good to eat but better to hang in your window.

1894 HIGH GRADE BICYCLES Shipped C. O. D.
Anywhere to anyone $25 Bicycle for $12.50
All styles and prices, $75 " $37.50
Save dealer's profit $125 " $62.50
Send for large illustrated Catalogue free
CASH IN YEN - UNION, 162 W. Van Buren St., B 33, Chicago, Ill.

FREE!

Our large 24-page catalogue of Organs, also our new and elegant catalogue of Pianos, containing 16 pages. We have the largest manufactory in the world, from which we sell direct to the consumer at wholesale prices, thus saving the profits of the dealer and the commissions of the agents.

We furnish a first-class Organ, warranted 20 years, with stool and book, for $27.50 only.

NO MONEY REQUIRED

until instrument has been thoroughly tested in your own house. Sold on instalments. Easy payment.

We positively guarantee every organ and Piano twenty years. Send for catalogue at once if you want to obtain the greatest bargain ever offered on earth. Write your name and address plainly, and we will send by mail same day letter is received.

As an advertisement, we will sell the first Piano of our make in a place for only $175.00. Stool, Book and Cover Free. Regular price, $350.00.

Beethoven Piano and Organ Co., P. O. Box 741 Washington, N. J.

EVERY WATCH GUARANTEED NO KEY REQUIRED

NEW $1.50

AMERICAN WATCH & CHAIN

The cut exactly represents our new 1894 American Lever Watch and Chain. It is not an imported watch, but entirely American produced in this country by the best skilled mechanics. Neither is it a clock, but a perfect watch of ordinary size, 2 1/2 inches in diameter, 1 1/2 inches thick. It is perfect in mechanism and we furnish with each a POSITIVE GUARANTEE as an accurate time keeper for one year. Our factory produced last year nearly 600,000 watches and we have proven beyond doubt, that America can make not only the BEST but the CHEAPEST watches. Do not be deceived by its low price or your past experience with other watches. Though cheap, it is good. The publisher of this paper will tell you that our guarantee may be relied on. DESCRIPTION: The movement is regular American. Lever, Lantern pinion; 240 beats to minute; keyless or stem wind and set; 24 turns runs 24 hours; steel pinions; all parts of great durability and perfectly adjusted; patent escapement and regulator; dust proof case, handsomely finished in nickel or gilt. Weight of watch 2.5 oz. diameter 2 1/2 in. fully GUARANTEED one year - same as an Elgin or Waltham. SAMPLE post paid with HANDBOOK and catalogue $1.50; a for $4.00; 12 for $15.00 by Express. ADVERTISERS and Storekeepers apply at once. Mention Paper. R. H. INCERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLAND ST., N. Y. CITY

FREE CURE.

Kidney

Liver & Urinary Diseases.

AL-KAYIN is a positive cure for Kidney, Liver and Urinary Diseases. It is from the new Polynesian shrub, KAYA-KAYA (botanical name, Piper Methysticum) described in New York World, Feb. 8, 1893, and Medical Gazette, of Dec. 1892. Endorsed by the Hospitals and Physicians of Europe as a sure Specific Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Brick-Dust deposits, Rheumatism, Liver Disease, Female Complaints, pain in back, etc. Sold at Two Dollars a Bottle. Descriptive Book sent free to all, or if you will send us Ten Cents (postage stamps will do) to pay express charges, we will send you one bottle by express, prepaid, FREE. We know AL-KAYIN is a Positive Cure, and we send it Free in principle. Its wonderful effects. Give your Post-office and nearest Express Office. Address, THE CHURCH KIDNEY CURE CO., 415 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Many Old Worn-Out FARMS

require so much fertilizing that farms and gardens The rich, loamy soil of Michigan Farms produces a fine crop of climate and freedom from cyclones, blizzards, together with good society, churches, etc., make Michigan Farms the best in the world. Write to me and I will tell you how to get the best farms on long time; low rate of interest.

Won't Produce a Profit.

O. M. BARNES, Land Commissioner, Lansing, Mich.

GENUINE BARGAIN ONLY 99c

HOW WE ARE ABLE TO DO IT!

These spoons were made up especially for the World's Fair trade, by THE ONEIDA COMMUNITY LTD., and were left on their hands, in order to dispose of them quickly. We make this unheard-of offer. SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS, after dinner coffee size HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED, with GOLD PLATED BOWLS, each spoon representing a different building of the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased, showing lead of Columbus, and dates 1492-1893 and wording "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, making one of the first souvenir collections ever produced. Sold during the Fair for $9.00; we now offer the balance of this stock at ONLY 99c. Sent in elegant push line case properly packed and express prepaid to any address. Send Postal Note, or Currency. Money cheerfully refunded if goods are not as represented. LEONARD MFG CO., Sole Agents, Dep. A 203, 20 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

*These spoons have been submitted to us, and we are sure that those who send for them will be exceedingly gratified to receive such dainty and useful souvenirs of the World's Fair as these spoons are. The Leonard Manufacturing Company will promptly and without question return the money sent in payment if the spoons fail to give satisfaction. We do not believe, however, that they will ever be called upon to do so.

COMPLETE 2 SETS. $5.00

ELECTRO-MAGNETIC TELEPHONES

Our "FREELESS" $5.00 outfit comprises two Combined Transmitters and Receivers, two Electric Call Bells, two Batteries, 200 ft. Wire, extra wire box, per 100 ft. 6 Porcelain Insulators, complete connections and instructions. Price $5.00 by express, sent C. O. D. $1.00 to accompany order. Everything fully GUARANTEED; Not a single set, but complete, both ends. Simply perfect for all short lines, 1-4 mile and under. Send for catalogue for long lines. AGENTS wanted everywhere. Sample in carrying case $5.00. R. H. INCERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLAND ST., N. Y. CITY.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

Does our 2 drawer walnut or oak Improved High Arm Sewing machine. Newly finished, nickel plated, adapted to light and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 years with Automatic Bobbin Winder, Self-Threading Cylinder, Shuttle, Self-Setting Needle and a complete set of Steel Attachments shipped any where on 30 Day's Trial. No money required in advance. 75,000 now in use. World's Fair Medal awarded machine and attachments. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits. (Cut This Out and send today for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and glimpses of the World's Fair. OXFORD MFG. CO. 342 Wabash Ave. CHICAGO, ILL.)

43 Year Old Class Hatch

THE WORLD'S FAIR

Highest Awards. MEDAL and DIPLOMA, on our IMPARTOR and HATCHER combined. If you are interested in poultry it will pay you to send 4 cents in stamps for 12 page catalogue, giving valuable points on Poultry Culture. Address: Reliable Incubator Co., Quincy, Ill.

100 Egg Black Class Hatch

INVINCIBLE HATCHER

Self-Regulating, Guaranteed good as the Best, and only $12. Send 4c. stamps for No. 60 Catalogue to BUCKEYE INCUBATOR CO. BRIDGEVILLE, OHIO.

SPRAY YOUR FRUIT TREES & VINES

Stahl's Double Acting Excelsior Spraying Outfits prevent Leaf Blight & Wormy Fruit. Insures a heavy yield of all Fruit and Vegetable crops. Thousands in use. Send 6c for catalogue and full treatise on spraying. Circulars free. WM. STAHL, Quincy, Ill.

WIRE ROPE SELVAGE

FENCING

WIRE ROPE SELVAGE. WOVEN WIRE. MCMULLENS. POULTRY AND RABBIT NETTING. Railroad, Farm, Garden, Cemetery, Lawn Fencing. Prices down. Freight paid. Cut a free. McMullen Woven Wire Fence Co., Chicago.

SEELEY'S HARD RUBBER TRUSSES.

Cure RUPTURE.

Send for book of particulars. J. B. SEELEY & CO. 255 N. 11th St., Phila.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 17.

COPYRIGHT 1894, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

NUMBER 19

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, MAY 9, 1894.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

A LIFE SPENT FOR CHRIST.

Rev. Wm. M. Thomson, Preacher, Scholar, Statesman and Missionary—His Labors in Syria and his World-Famous Writings on the Holy Land.

PERHAPS there could be no greater illustration of the value to Christianity and the world of a single noble life, with high spiritual aims and purposes, than is furnished in the career of Rev. Wm. McClure Thomson, who died in Denver, Colo., recently. It was in many respects, one of the model missionary careers of a century which has abounded in noble and consecrated men and women, who have given up all—wealth, position, talents, even life itself—for the sake of the Master they loved and served.

Dr. Thomson was born in Springdale, Ohio, in 1806. He graduated at Miami University in 1826, studied at Princeton during the next two years, and in 1831 was ordained an evangelist by the Presbytery of Cincinnati. In 1832, he was sent as a missionary to Syria and Palestine, and labored in that field until 1849, when he came home for a short vacation. He returned, however, in 1850, and for twenty-six years thereafter, with the exception of a brief respite in 1858, remained in the Holy Land.

Missionary work in Syria began in earnest about the latter part of the first quarter of this century. In 1823, two American missionaries, Revs. Isaac Bird and Wm. Goodell, with their wives, arrived there, and after a general survey of the social and moral condition of the field, they decided to make Beyrout the centre of their operations. They were soon reinforced by other missionaries—some of them coming from England—and schools were opened at Beyrout which were continued successfully until the violent persecution of 1828 compelled the workers to close them for a time. In 1830, the storm having blown over, they returned and resumed their labors with redoubled energy. That year saw the establishment of a Christian printing press in Beyrout, the first in all Syria, by Rev. Eli Smith and tracts and pamphlets were published and a translation of the Bible into the common Syriac begun. Shortly after this, further reinforcements came from America, including Revs. Dr. Thomson, Nathaniel A. Keys, Samuel Wollcott, Mr. Whiting, Mr. Sherman and Dr. Van Dyck. When the old and new school Presbyterians of the United States were united the Syrian Mission was handed over to the Presbyterian Board. The work was not materially affected by the change. Since 1870, the progress of the mission has been very great and its resources as well as the number of its native adherents have been trebled in that time. Among the other workers identified with this important mission were Revs. Samuel Jessup, W. K. Eddy, Ira Harris and Harvey Porter.

Dr. Thompson's missionary career, was characterized by a marked adaptability to the manners and social life of the Syrian people with the result that he was welcomed by all classes, even among those most hostile to his mission work. By his many years' experience with Oriental habits of thought and feeling, he came to exercise an influence among them which made his name widely known throughout all Syria. For more than thirty years of his life in that country, Syria had been almost constantly the scene of civil or of foreign war; and the work which he did in endeavoring to mediate between the contending parties, or in relieving suffering will long be remembered. Just after the frightful massacre of the Maronites by the Druses and Turks, in 1860, he organized a relief committee at Beyrout for the purpose of aiding the 2,000 widows who were congregated there. This course was strongly commended by Lord Dufferin, who had been deputed by the British government to proceed to Beyrout to investigate the situation. The Maronites are a community or sect of Christians in Syria, numbering somewhere about 150,000, and who are located in the northern part of Mount Lebanon. They are said to be of very ancient origin. The sword. These troubles culminated in the great massacre of Christians by the Mo-and proscribed people, and endeavored to ameliorate their condition by education and otherwise. His work was recognized and commended by the leading native statesmen and highest officials in Syria, and it was believed that his greatest individual success—in a life that had many brilliant triumphs—was in the outcome of his labors for the people of Mount Lebanon.

THE CITY AND PORT OF BEYROUT, SYRIA.

Prof. Thomson took a deep interest in the subject of higher education for the Arabs, who are pre-eminently a people with literary tastes, and it is their literature which dominates the vast Mohammedan world. Recognizing this fact, Dr. Thomson first conceived and initiated the formation of the Syrian Protestant College at Beyrout, which has been carried forward to its present success and high promise by American friends and professors, so that it bids fair to exert an important influence on the future of the East. It has three departments—preparatory, collegiate and medical—with over two hundred students from all parts of Syria, Egypt and Cyprus. The theological seminary of the mission was built and equipped under the leadership of Dr. James S. Dennis, its president. Since the establishment of the mission press at Beyrout, the quantity of printed Gospel tracts and leaflets issued has increased yearly. In 1880, the output was 25,000,000 pages. With a very large part of the work, and especially with its inception, upbuilding and development, Dr. Thomson was closely identified. His missionary influence was essentially educational and was productive of the most valuable results. His whole life and labors in Syria furnish the most complete argument in refutation of the charges that foreign missions are not sufficiently productive of results to warrant the cost. In a land where scholarship is universally esteemed, he won the respect and the love of the people no less by his profound learning, than by his singularly pure and upright life and the example of a character that commanded their admiration, even while its efforts were directed against their traditional beliefs.

With Rev. Daniel Bliss, his active coadjutor, Dr. Thomson vigorously pushed the work of the Beyrout College, and the result has been a moral and intellectual development and enlightenment in a large part of the Turkish Empire that would otherwise have been impossible.

(Continued on page 301.)

THE LATE REV. WM. M. THOMSON, D.D.
Missionary, Author, and Founder of the Beyrout College

Druse fanatics in great numbers attacked and slew thousands of the almost defenceless Maronites in May and June, 1860. Towns were sacked and abandoned, and almost the entire male population put to the hammedans of Damascus in July of that year. Dr. Thomson exerted himself successfully in helping the Maronite refugees. During the remainder of his life in Syria, he devoted special attention to these persecuted

THE GENERATIONS.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday at the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Text: Eccl. 1: 4: "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh."

ACCORDING to the longevity of people in their particular century has a generation been called a hundred years, or fifty years, or thirty years. By common consent in our nineteenth century, a generation is fixed at twenty-five years.

The largest procession that ever moved is the procession of years, and the greatest army that ever marched is the army of generations. In each generation there are about nine full regiments of days. These 9,125 days in each generation march with wonderful precision. They never break ranks. They never ground arms. They never pitch tents. They never halt. They are never off on furlough. They came out of the eternity past, and they move on toward the eternity future. They cross rivers without any bridge or boats. The six hundred immortals of the Crimea dashing into them cause no confusion. They move as rapidly at midnight as at noon. Their haversacks are full of good bread and bitter aloes, clusters of richest vintage and bottles of agonizing tears. With a regular tread that no order of "double quick" can hasten, or obstacle can slacken, their tramp is on, and on, and on, and on, while mountains crumble and pyramids die. "One generation passeth, and another generation cometh."

This is my twenty-fifth anniversary sermon, 1869 and 1894. It is twenty-five years since I assumed the Brooklyn pastorate. A whole generation has passed. Three generations we have known: That which preceded our own, that which is now at the front, and the one coming on. We are at the heels of our predecessors, and our successors are at our heels. What a generation it was that preceded us! We who are now in the front regiment are the only ones competent to tell the new generation just now coming in sight who our predecessors were. Biography cannot tell it. Autobiography cannot tell it. Biographies are generally written by special friends of the departed, perhaps by wife, or son, or daughter, and they only tell the good things. The biographers of one of the first presidents of the United States make no record of the President's account books, now in the archives at the Capitol, which I have seen, telling how much he lost or gained daily at the gaming table. The biographers of one of the early Secretaries of the United States never described the scene that day witnessed when the Secretary was carried dead drunk from the State apartments to his own home. Autobiography is written by the man himself, and no one would record for future times his own weaknesses and moral deficits. Those who keep diaries put down only things that read well. No man or woman that ever lived would dare to make full record of all the thoughts and words of a life-time. We who saw and heard much of the generation marching just ahead of us, are far more able than any book to describe accurately to our successors who our predecessors were. Very much like ourselves, thank you. Human nature in them very much like human nature in us. At our time of life they were very much like we now are. At the time they were in their teens they were very much like you who are in your teens, and at the time they were in their twenties, they were very much like you who are in your twenties. Human nature got an awful twist under a fruit tree in Eden, and though the grace of God does much to straighten things, every new generation has the same twist, and the same work of straightening out has to be done over again.

A mother in the country districts expecting the neighbors at her table on some gala night had with her own hands arranged everything in taste, and as she was about to turn from it to receive her guests, saw her little child by accident upset a pitcher all over the white cloth, and soil everything, and the mother lifted her hand to slap the child, but she suddenly remembered the time when a little child herself in her father's house where they had always before been used to candles, on the purchase of a lamp which was a matter of rarity and pride, she took it in her hands, and dropped it crashing into pieces, and looking up in her father's face expecting chastisement heard only the words: "It is a sad loss, but never mind: you did not mean to do it." History repeats itself. Generations wonderfully alike. Among that generation that is past, as in our own, and as it will be in the generation following us, those who succeeded, became the target, shot at by those who did not succeed. In those times, as in ours, a man's bitterest enemies were those whom he had befriended and helped. Hates, jealousies and revenges were just as lively in 1869 as in 1894. Hypocrisy sniffed and looked solemn then as now. There was just as much avarice among the apple barrels as now among the cotton bales, and among the wheelbarrows as among the locomotives. The tallow candles saw the same sins that are now found under the electric lights. Home-spun was just as proud as is the modern fashion plate. Twenty-five years—yea, twenty-five centuries—have not changed human nature a particle. I say this for the encouragement of those who think that our times monopolize all the abominations of the ages. One minute after Adam got outside of Paradise he was just like you, O man! One step after Eve left the gate she was just like you, O woman! All the faults and vices are many times centenarians. Yea, the cities Sodom, Gomorrah, Pompeii, Herculaneum, Heliopolis and ancient Memphis were as much worse than our modern cities as you might expect, from the fact that the modern cities have somewhat yielded to the restraints of Christianity, while those ancient cities were not limited in their abominations.

Yea, that generation which passed off within the last twenty-five years had their bereavements, their temptations, their struggles, their disappointments, their successes, their failures, their gladnesses and their griefs, like these two generations now in sight, that in advance and that following. But the twenty-five years between 1869 and 1894—how much they saw! How much they discovered! How much they felt! Within that time have been performed the miracles of the telephone and the phonograph. From the observatories other worlds have been seen to heave in sight. Six Presidents of the United States have been inaugurated. Trans-Atlantic voyage abbreviated from ten days to five and a half. Chicago and New York once three days apart, now only twenty-four hours by the vestibule limited. Two additional railroads have been built to the Pacific. France has passed from monarchy to republicanism. Many of the cities have nearly doubled their populations. During that generation the chief surviving heroes of the Civil War have gone into the encampment of the grave. The chief physicians, attorneys, orators, merchants, have passed off the earth, or are in retirement waiting for transition. Other men in editorial chairs, in pulpits, in Governors' mansions, in legislative, senatorial and congressional halls. There are not ten men or women on the earth now prominent who were prominent twenty-five years ago. The crew of this old ship of a world is all changed. Others at the helm, others on the "lookout," others climbing the ratlines.

Time is a doctor who with potent anodyne has put an entire generation into sound sleep. Time, like another Cromwell, has roughly prorogued Parliament, and with iconoclasm driven nearly all the rulers except one Queen from their high places. So far as I observed that generation, for the most part they did their best. Ghastly exceptions, but so far as I knew them, they did quite well, and many of them gloriously well. They were born at the right time, and they died at the right time. They left the world better than they found it. We are indebted to them for the fact that they prepared the way for our coming. 1894 reverently and gratefully salutes 1869. "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh."

There are fathers and mothers here whom I baptized in their infancy. There is not one person in this church's Board of Session or Trustees who was here when I came. Here and there in this vast assembly is one person who heard my opening sermon in Brooklyn, but not more than one person in every five hundred now present. Of the seventeen persons who gave me a unanimous call when I came, only three, I believe, are living.

But this sermon is not a dirge; it is an anthem. While this world is appropriate as a temporary stay, as an eternal residence it would be a dead failure. It would be a dreadful sentence if our race were doomed to remain here a thousand winters and a thousand summers. God keeps us here just long enough to give us an appetite for heaven. Had we been born in celestial realms, we would not have been able to appreciate the bliss. It needs a good many rough blasts in this world to qualify us to properly estimate the superb climate of that good land where it is never too cold or too hot, too cloudy or too glaring. Heaven will be more to us than to those supernal beings who were never tempted, or sick, or bereaved, or tried, or disappointed. So you may well take my text out of the minor key and set it to some tune in the major key; "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh."

Nothing can rob us of the satisfaction that uncounted thousands of the generation just past were converted, comforted and harvested for heaven by this church, whether in the present building, or the three preceding buildings in which they worshipped. The two great organs of the previous churches went down in the memorable fires, but the multitudinous songs they led year after year were not recalled or injured. There is no power in earth or hell to kill a hallelujah. It is impossible to arrest a hosanna. What a satisfaction to know that there are many thousands in Glory on whose eternal welfare this church wrought mightily! Nothing can undo that work. They have ascended, the multitudes who served God in that generation. That chapter is gloriously ended. But that generation has left its impression upon this generation. A sailor was dying on shipboard and he said to his mates, "my lads I can only think of one passage of Scripture, 'the soul that sinneth it shall die,' and that keeps ringing in my ears. 'The soul that sinneth it shall die.' Can't you think of something else in the Bible to cheer me up?" Well, sailors are kind and they tried to think of some other passage of Scripture with which to console their dying comrade, but they could not. One of them said, "Let us call up the cabin boy. His mother was a Christian, and I guess he has a Bible." The cabin-boy was called up, and the dying sailor asked him if he had a Bible. He said, "Yes," but he could not exactly find it, and the dying sailor scolded him, and said: "Aint you ashamed of yourself not to read your Bible." So the boy explored the bottom of his trunk and brought out the Bible, and his mother had marked a passage that just fitted the dying sailor's case: "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth from all sin." That helped the sailor to die in peace. So one generation helps another, and good things written, or said, or done are reproduced long afterward.

During the passing of the last generation some peculiar events have unfolded. One day while resting at Sharon Springs, N.Y., I think it was in 1870, the year after my settlement in Brooklyn, and while walking in the Park of that place, I found myself asking the question, "I wonder if there is any special mission for me to execute in this world? If there is, may God show it to me!" There soon came upon me a great desire to preach the Gospel through the secular printing-press. I realized that the vast majority of people, even in Christian lands, never enter a church, and that it would be an opportunity of usefulness infinite if that door of publication were opened. And so I recorded that prayer in a blank book, and offered the prayer day in and day out until the answer came, though in a way different from that which I had expected, for it came through the misrepresentation and persecution of enemies, and I have to record it for the encouragement of all ministers of the Gospel who are misrepresented, that if the misrepresentation be virulent enough, and bitter enough, and continuous enough, there is nothing that so widens one's field of usefulness as hostile attack, if you are really doing the Lord's work. The bigger the lie told about me, the bigger the demand to see and hear what I really was doing. From one stage of sermonical publication to another, the work has gone on, until week by week, and for about twenty-three years. I have had the world for my audience, as no man ever had, and to-day, more so than at any other time. The syndicates inform me that my sermons go now to about twenty-five millions of people in all lands. I mention this not in vain boast, but as a testimony to the fact that God answers prayer. Would God I had better occupied the field and been more consecrated to the work! May God forgive me for lack of service in the past, and double, and quadruple, and quintuple my work in future.

In this my quarter-century sermon, I record the fact that side by side with the procession of blessings has gone a procession of disasters. I am preaching to day in the fourth church building since I began in this city. My first sermon was in the old church on Schermerhorn street, to an audience chiefly of empty seats, for the church was almost extinguished. That church filled and overflowing, we built a larger church, which after two or three years disappeared in flame. Then we built another church, which also in a line of fiery succession, disappeared in the same way. Then we put up this building, and may it stand for many years, a fortress of righteousness, and a lighthouse for the storm-tossed, its gates crowded with vast assemblages long after we have ceased to frequent them!

We have raised in this church over one million and thirty thousand dollars for church charitable purposes during the present pastorate, while we have given, tree of all expense, the Gospel to hundreds of thousands of strangers, year by year. I record with gratitude to God that during this generation of twenty-five years, I remember but two Sabbaths that I have missed service through anything like physical indisposition. Almost a fanatic on the subject of physical exercise, I have made the Parks, with which our city is blessed, the means of good physical condition. A daily walk and run in the open air have kept me ready for work and in good humor with all the world. I say to all young ministers of the Gospel, it is easier to keep good health than to regain it when once lost. The reason so many good men think the world is going to ruin is because their own physical condition is on the down grade. No man ought to preach who has a diseased liver, or an enlarged spleen. There are two things ahead of us that ought to keep us cheerful in our work,—Heaven and the Millennium.

And now, having come up to the twenty-fifth milestone in my pastorate, I wonder how many more miles I am to travel? Your company has been exceedingly pleasant, O my dear people, and I would like to march by your side until the generation with whom we are now moving abreast, and step to step, shall have stacked arms after the last battle. But the Lord knows best, and we ought to be willing to stay or go.

Most of you are aware that I propose at this time, between the close of my twenty-fifth year of pastorate and before the beginning of my twenty-sixth year, to be absent for a few months in order to take a journey around the world. I expect to sail from San Francisco in the steamer "Alameda," May 31st. My place here on Sabbaths will be fully occupied, while on Mondays, and every Monday, I will continue to speak through the printing-press in this and other lands as heretofore. Why do I go? To make pastoral visitation among people whom I have never seen, but to whom I have been permitted a long while to administer. I want to see them in their own cities, towns and neighborhoods. I want to know what are their prosperities, what their adversities and what their opportunities, and so enlarge my work, and get more adaptedness. Why do I go? For educational purposes. I want to freshen my mind and heart by new scenes, new faces, new manners and customs. I want better to understand, what are the wrongs to be righted and the waste places to be reclaimed. I will put all I learn in sermons to be preached to you when I return. I want to see the Sandwich Islands, not so much in the light of modern politics as in the light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ which has transformed them; and Samoa, and those vast realms of New Zealand, and Australia, and Ceylon, and India. I want to see what Christianity has accomplished. I want to see how the Christian missionaries have been lied about as living in luxury and idleness.

I want to know whether the heathen religions are really as tolerable and as commendable as they were represented by their adherents in the Parliament of Religions at Chicago. I want to see whether Mohammedanism and Buddhism would be good things for transplantation in America, as it has again and again been argued. I want to hear the Brahmins pray. I want to test whether the Pacific Ocean treats its guests any better than does the Atlantic. I want to see the vondrous architecture of India, and the Delhi and Cawnpore where Christ was crucified in the massacre of his modern disciples, and the disabled Juggernaut unweeled by Christianity; and to see if the Taj which the Emperor Shah Jehan built in honor of his Empress, really means any more than the plain slab we put above our dear departed. I want to see the fields where Havelock and Sir Colin Campbell won the day against the Sepoys. I want to see the world from all sides; how much it is in darkness, how much of it is in light; what the Bible means by the "ends of the earth," and get myself ready to appreciate the extent of the present to be made to Christ as spoken of in the Psalms: "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession;" and so I shall be ready to celebrate in heaven the victories of Christ in more rapturous song, than I could have rendered had I never seen the heathen abominations before they were conquered. And so I hope to come back refreshed, reinforced and better equipped, and to do in ten years more effectual work than I have done in the last twenty-five.

And now in this twenty-fifth Anniversary Sermon I propose to do two things: first, to put a garland on the grave of the generation that has just passed off, and then to put a palm branch in the hand of the generation just now coming on the field of action. For my text is true: "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh." Oh, how many we revered, and honored, and loved in the last generation that quit the earth. Tears fell at the time of their going, and dirges were sounded, and signals of mourning plucked out of the garden where they used to walk in the cool of the day. Put these old-fashioned flowers right down over the heart that never again will ache, and the feet that will never again be weary, and the arm that has forever ceased to toil. Peace, father! Peace, mother! Everlasting peace! All that for the generation gone.

But what shall we do with the palm branch? That we will put in the hand of the generation coming on. Yours is to be the generation for victories. The last and the present generation have been perfecting steam power, the electric light, and the electric forces. To these will be added aerial transportation. It will be your mission to use all these forces. Everything is ready now for you to march right up and take this world for God and Heaven. Get your heart right by repentance and the pardoning grace of the Lord Jesus, and your mind right by elevating books and pictures, and your body right by gymnasium and field exercise, and plenty of ozone, and by looking as often as you can upon the face of mountain and of sea. Then start! In God's name, start! And here is

A TRAY FROM JAPAN FOR THE "FOOD FUND"
(Contributed by Missionary Ladies in Yokohama.)

were put on; but neither tears, nor dirge, nor sombre veil told the half we felt. Their going left a vacancy in our souls that has never been filled up. We never get used to their absence. There are times when the sight of something with which they were associated—a picture, or a book, or a garment, or a staff, breaks us down with emotion, but we bear it because we have to bear it. Oh, how white their hair got, and how the wrinkles multiplied, and the sight grew more dim, and the hearing less alert, and the step more frail, and one day they were gone out of the chair by the fireside, and from the plate at the meal, and from the end of the church pew, where they worshipped with us. Oh, my soul, how we miss them! But let us console each other with the thought that we shall meet them again in the land of jubilation and salutation and reunion.

And now I twist a garland for that departed generation. It need not be costly, perhaps just a handful of clover blossoms from the field through which they used to walk, or as many violets as you could hold between the thumb and the forefinger, the palm branch. From conquest to conquest, move right on and right up. You will soon have the whole field for yourself. Before another twenty-five years have gone, we will be out of the pulpits, and the offices, and stores, and factories, and you will be at the front. Forward into the battle! If God be for you, who can be against you?

And as for us who are now at the front, having put the garland on the grave of the last generation, and having put the palm branch in the hand of the coming generation, we will cheer each other in the remaining onsets, and go into the shining gate somewhere about the same time, and greeted by the generation that has preceded us, we will have to wait only a little while to greet the generation that will come after us. And will not that be glorious? Three generations in heaven together: The grandfather, the son and the grandson; the grandmother, the daughter and the granddaughter. And so with wider range, and keener faculty we shall realize the full significance of the text: "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh."

A Gift from Far Japan.

Missionary Ladies send a Beautiful Tray to be Sold for "The Christian Herald" Relief Fund—A Consecrated Offering.

ALTHOUGH the four months' work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Food Fund is practically ended, the echoes of that great cry of Christian sympathy which it evoked from far and near, still reach us from remote quarters. A few days ago, there came by express from San Francisco a package which had reached that port from Japan by Pacific Mail Steamer. It was found to contain a very unique and beautiful gift which a number of Christian missionary ladies in Japan had forwarded to this journal, with instructions that it was to be sold and the proceeds applied to the relief of the New York poor. Accompanying the package was this letter:

This box and plate, were given into my charge at Yokohama, Japan, by some ladies connected with the Foreign Missions, to forward to Bible House, New York. Hoping it will reach you in good order. I remain, &c., J. A. GRAHAM, Chief Engineer "S. S. Elgie" Pacific Mail Dock, San Francisco.

On removing the covering a box was disclosed. It was made of very choice Japanese wood, plain and chaste in design in accordance with modern Japanese taste which runs less to the grotesque than does the Chinese. In the box was an elegant tray or salver, beautifully engraved and polished, the burnished border having inscribed in Japanese the text, John 3: 16: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." A few flowers are also engraved on the tray, the whole effect being that of a neat and really artistic piece of plate, which any connoisseur would delight to possess, and which, resting on a mat or cushion of golden-brown satin with which the interior of the box is fitted, makes an ornament at once unique and valuable, apart altogether from any merit it derives from the associations that surround it, and the source from whence it came.

This note, which was enclosed with the gift, explains how the consecrated offering came to be sent:

"This tray is to be sold and the proceeds used for the relief of the starving poor in New York City. It ought to bring at least $20.

"Its brief history is this: A few missionary ladies who have resided a number of years in Japan, enjoying the advantages of the present peaceful reign, felt that it would not only be a pleasure to them to send a small gift to the Emperor and Empress on the occasion of their Silver Wedding, which is being celebrated this 9th day of March, 1894, but also hoped that an opportunity might thus be afforded of bringing to their notice a portion of God's Holy Word. They accordingly had engraved on the accompanying little tray that wonderful epitome of the Gospel contained in John 3: 16. No difficulty was anticipated by the ladies in carrying out their purpose, as it had been announced that their Imperial Majesties would receive gifts from foreigners if presented by their representatives through the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs. They were therefore much surprised and disappointed to learn, on applying to the Legation, that the U. S. Minister could not comply with their request to forward the gift, as his instructions from Washington would not allow him to do so—"instructions not for this special occasion, but covering it and all similar ones."

"The ladies have decided that the best disposal they can now make of the little tray is to send it to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, to be sold for the benefit of the poor."

Acting in accordance with the instructions of the donors, this beautiful tray will be sold to the reader of this journal who within the next two weeks makes the most liberal offer for it, and the proceeds will be devoted to the poor. It is white metal heavily plated with silver, chased and burnished.

THE CHILDHOOD OF MOSES.

S. S. Lesson for May 20, Ec. 2: 1-10. Golden Text, Ps. 41: 15. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

FROM the moment of his birth, Moses was a child of faith. His parents were not carried away with the idolatry which prevailed among their compatriots, and, strengthened perhaps by the faith of one of the godly midwives, they "by faith" hid their little son "because they saw he was a proper [or goodly] child, and they were not afraid of the king's commandment. (Heb. 11: 23.) Faith cannot fear, it sees God above all the power of man, and rests in his faithfulness. How their child should be brought up and saved from the malicious hate of the Egyptian king, they did not enquire; faith asks no questions, but enters into rest. The time came when the child could no longer be hidden; what then? God had adopted him, and no doubt he put it into the mother's heart to think of the strange expedient of making a little floating cradle, and committing it to the brink of the river Nile, among the flags which grew there. But the watchful eye of Miriam, her daughter, was on the trail ark of bulrushes with its little burden, so precious to her, so precious to God.

The overruling hand of God brought Pharaoh's beautiful and beloved young daughter to bathe just in this part of the river where the child of Amram and Jochebed lay. The eye of the royal princess was attracted by the little rude vessel, and when one of her maidens had brought it to her, had opened it, and had found within it a little wailing babe, all the woman in her was moved, and she said: "This is one of the Hebrews' children." Oh, how slow is human nature to understand suffering, until brought into immediate contact with it! The inpatient beggar, who, while strongly smelling of ruin, pesters everyone he meets for money, does not taster in us.

"A Heart of Compassion."

But the silent, uncomplaining sufferer, hidden away in some poor cellar or attic in our back streets; with white, thin face, which looks as though the courage to live were slowly giving way,—such an one makes one almost ashamed to sit down to a comfortable meal while so many are almost dying for want of food.

Miriam was at hand, and approaching the princess, seized the opportunity: "Shall I go and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee?" "Go," said the daughter of the king, and Miriam fetched the child's mother. What a reward to Jochebed's faith! How little would she have dreamed that without reversing the king's commands, which God was utilizing to bring his unfaithful people to their knees, God could so wondrously make an exception in her favor, and make it a royal command to her to nurse that very son, who, by Pharaoh's command was doomed to death! So wondrous are the ways of God!

"And the child grew." God had so ordered it that Moses' first impressions should not be made in the midst of the life of the court of Pharaoh, but amongst his afflicted people, and in a home life, where the fear of God prevailed. But the same faith which had enabled his parents to commit him to God by the riverside, must now commit him to God in a heathen court; his mother brought him to Pharaoh's daughter and he became her son. There was something unusually attractive about him; even as a babe he was "exceedingly fair" [fair to God] (Acts 7: 20), and his royal adopted mother spared no pains or money on his education; he "was instructed in all

The Wisdom of the Egyptians

What must have been the prayer rising from the house of Amram for this son, whose education would all be on heathen lines! And what must have been the watchful care of God in answer to those prayers, which would keep him sheltered in an atmosphere, so poisonous, so deadly to spiritual life? God with a man can enable him to breathe anywhere: his presence can create possibilities of spiritual existence where all seems to be against us.

Moses knew the history of his people, and in the life of the young man who must have been the pride of Pharaoh's daughter, and who was beginning to make his mark in the land, for he was "mighty in word and deed," there must have been a great and protracted conflict. Wherever he found himself, in the halls of learning by his natural eloquence, at court by his position as the adopted son of the princess, or in the battle field Moses was a power, and he felt it; a splendid prospect seemed open before him—possibly the throne of Egypt, it was as though the world lay at his feet. On the other hand, there were his poor enslaved people, the people of God, though miserably untrue to him, reflecting no credit on him or on themselves, despised, and yet feared by the Egyptians, and deep down in his soul he knew, by the call of God himself, that he was chosen to deliver them. But

He Must make the Choice.

To take part with the Hebrews meant the utter contempt of all his learned acquaintances, the loss of his position at court, the stigma of base ingratitude from the princess who had been his patron. God must be very real to him if he could afford to suffer such a loss. The conflict was sore, God was looking on, and strengthening his servant, and ultimately the decision was made: "By faith, Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king, for he endured as seeing him who is invisible." (Heb. 11: 24-27.) "The reproach of Christ!" In some way, Moses, as well as Abraham saw the day of Christ; perhaps nothing else would have enabled him to decide thus for God.

But Moses was not yet ready for service; he did not know how much of his human knowledge must be unlearned and forgotten, and how much his power must fail, he did not know how much more acquainted with his God he must be before he was ready to his hand. Having once come to the determination to serve God at any cost, he was impatient to run any risk that he might effect the deliverance of his people; he was ready at once to work for God, but, he had much yet to learn before he could work with God. Perhaps there was more of self-consciousness even in his splendid self-sacrifice than he was aware of: "When he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel," God had called him; he had responded; what had he to wait for? He rushed forward, and without waiting for orders from God, took things into his own hands, and Miserably Failed.

He "went out unto his brethren and looked on their burdens; and he spied an Egyptian smiting a Hebrew, one of his brethren, and he looked this way and that," every way but the right way straight up to God, "and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand. And when he went out the second day, behold two men of the Hebrews strove together; and he said unto him that did the wrong: Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow? And he said: Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? intendest thou to kill me as thou killest the Egyptian?" Moses supposed that his brethren understood that God by his hand was giving them deliverance; but they understood not. It must have been an awful revelation to Moses when he found that after all he had sacrificed, now he had put his life in his hand for the sake of his people, God did not stand by him, and his brethren ignored his mission! And yet this bitter disappointment and humiliation were a lesson more difficult to learn and far more precious than many which had won him laurels in the schools of Egypt. There remained nothing for him but to beat an ignominious retreat, and the man who was "mighty in words and deeds" had to flee from Egypt as a criminal escaping justice, before he could be small enough in his own eyes, to be God's instrument of deliverance. Was it not a loss of time for him to have learned all he did in Egypt? No: God pressed all into his service later on, but for the time it profited him nothing until he had learned the more important lesson of his own nothingness.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

PHARAOH'S DAUGHTER.
(From the Sculpture on the Wall of the Great Temple.)

opened the way for the emancipation of the people and the destruction of his own army. But for that command, Moses might have grown up with his people in Goshen and have spent his life in brick-making, like his brethren. But the imperial edict interposed; and from the Nile he was taken to receive the education of a king, to become learned in all the learning of the Egyptians, and to acquire the training in military skill and the knowledge of legal statutes, which fitted him for his position as leader of two million persons. Thus God uses the cruel devices of men to accomplish his purposes. It is believed that the daughter of Pharaoh, who became the foster mother of Moses, was the beautiful and beloved Princess Nefer-ari, whose portrait from a sculpture on the walls of the great Egyptian Temple forms an initial to this article. Her mummy has been found, with that of her husband, and the presentment of her features on the mummy-case shows singular grace and sweetness of feature. The inscriptions of the king referring to her, and her own inscriptions referring to him, are exceedingly tender. She calls herself "his loving lady, his royal wife who loves him," and prays "that he may have life for evermore," and he writes of her as "his royal wife, Nefer-ari, whom he loves." The many inscriptions of this character that have been found, appear to indicate that Ramesses and Nefer-ari desired, as Miss Edwards, the famous Egyptologist, says, "to leave behind an imperishable record of the affection which united them on earth, and which they hoped would unite them forever." The finding of Moses is supposed to have occurred in the sixth year of Pharaoh's reign, when the Princess would be about sixteen years old. The sister of Moses who was set to watch the child, and who so adroitly managed to have his mother employed as his nurse, was probably Miriam, of whom we hear more during the Exodus. The "slime and pitch" used to cover the ark that was to become the floating cradle, are still used in Egypt to cover boats; they form, when melted, a composition like asphalt.

He became her son. Josephus relates a legend, current among the Jews in his day, of an incident in the early life of Moses. It is that the Princess Neferari (whom he calls Thermuthis, which is a corruption of her title, Mer-en-mut) brought the child Moses, when he was three years old, to show him to her father. She called his attention to the child's beauty and said that, as she had no child of her own, she had adopted him and hoped her father would make him his heir. The Pharaoh was pleased with his appearance, took him in his arms and in playful acquiescence with his daughter's request, put his crown on the child's head. But Moses struck it off, and, jumping from the king's arms, trod on the emblem of sovereignty. The royal scribe, who was present, declared that the act was a presage of what would happen to the sovereignty of Egypt if the boy was permitted to live, and he made a violent attempt to kill him on the spot. But the Princess snatched him away and "the king," says Josephus, "was not hasty to slay him."

Laid it in the flags by the river's brink. It must have wrung the mother's heart to do it. How bitterly she must have resented the cruelty of Pharaoh who gave the brutal order. And all the cruelty and wickedness failed of their purpose, as they always do when they are employed against God and his people. Every one has heard of the sword fish. It is a very curious creature with a long and bony beak, or sword, projecting in front of its head. It is very fierce, attacking other fishes that come in its way, and trying to pierce them with its sword. The fish has sometimes been known to dart at a ship in full sail with such violence as to pierce the solid timbers. But what has happened? The fish has been killed outright by the force of its own blow. The ship sails on as before, and the fish has fallen a victim to its own rage. This is often the result of the folly of those who oppose God. They cannot succeed. Like the sword fish, they work their own destruction.

Nurse it for me. The Princess wanted the child taken care of. Her heart went out to it as for something very precious. And what can be more precious than a child's life? Many a monarch has felt, as David did, that nothing he had was worthy of comparison in value to his child's life. It is related of the late Emperor of Germany that when he was Crown Prince he went to visit the nursery in his palace. There he found a lady connected with the court whose attention to etiquette was always most exact. She was seated on the floor with the Prince's baby in her arms. She was embarrassed by the entrance of the Prince, for court ceremony required that she should rise and make a respectful courtesy. She said simply, "Your Royal Highness, I must either disregard court etiquette or drop the court baby." The Prince laughed and said, "Madam, do as you please with court etiquette, but pray be careful of the baby."

She had compassion on him. Though she perceived the child was the son of a slave, the human heart of the Princess was touched by the infantile wail. So the heart of God is touched when his children cry to him in their trouble, and none the less because his own Son once wore the human form. A great preacher who in his early days was a teacher, had among his pupils a pretty but mischievous boy whom no reproof could subdue. One day, after his more than usually troublesome conduct, he required the little fellow to stay after school to be whipped. So the time had come for this last resource of the exhausted patience and skill of the teacher. According to directions, the little fellow held out his hand for punishment. The teacher said he looked down into the little face, and the boy looked so much like his little sister, whose conduct was all right, and who had won his love—he stayed the rod, and kissed the lips that were ready to break forth into crying, and sent the pupil home.

I will give thee thy wages. What are a mother's wages? She takes great care, gives hard toil, loses her rest and has great anxiety. What wages does she receive? Some children when they grow up, repay her with ingratitude and disrespect. The wages she likes best to receive, are love and the spectacle of her children doing well. When President Garfield, after his inauguration, turned to his mother and kissed her, she must have thought herself well paid. A distinguished United States Senator in the course of a speech at a meeting of ladies once said: "All that is of good in me and all that is good in my achievements I owe to my mother's influence. She trained me to hate intoxicants, tobacco, cards and dice, and to love the Bible. But for her work my life would have been wasted." The subject of such a public avowal could never say that she had not received her wages.

By the Sea of Galilee.

Our Traveler Moves Amid the Ruins of Capernaum—Tiberias and Bethsaida—Blue Galilee and its Memories.

"HER FAT PUPPY."

WAY from Bethsaida, the city of Andrew, James, John, Peter and Philip, we took a handful of curious shells, as black as coal. The beach is strewn with them, and they are so unlike the gray and brown we find at other points of the sea of Galilee that we cherish fanciful associations connecting them with the silent desolation pervading this coast. "City," there is none. A few half-buried stones mark the site of the town built by the Philip who married Salome a little while after she danced off the head of John the Baptist. He was the most respectable member of the Herod tribe, we recall in picking up our shells, but we look in vain for the handsome tomb built here for him, about the time that the Cross which was to draw all nations unto it was lifted up on Calvary.

Capernaum lies a short hour's ride from Bethsaida. The horses pick their way over the pebbly beds of what will be torrents in a couple of months, and eye longingly patches of coarse grass, greening where the stones are not so thick; we pass a ruined Roman aqueduct used in the days of the Herods for conveying water to the fine cities they built upon the sea called by their Emperor's name. In the immediate vicinity of Capernaum, reeds and flags must have hidden the fallen stones last spring and summer, for they rustle drearily in the wind moaning up from the sea, and tufts of dried herbage define the outline of such fragments of limestone as have not been utilized in building the Roman Catholic convent we see rising up in the background. It is unfinished, but there are no workmen to be seen to-day. By the time we have alighted, the entire population of Capernaum is drawn up in hospitable order to welcome us. Pitched where, for aught we can say to disprove it, Matthew's custom-house may have stood, is a small black tent, and from the smoky recesses emerge a Bedouin, as venerable and benign as Abraham; his wife, throwing a fold of her dark blue nondescript garment modestly over her chin as she comes; a daughter of fifteen, or thereabouts, bashful where her mother is modest, and the prettiest native child we have seen, a girl of four, whose conviction that we will covet and probably steal her fat puppy, overcomes curiosity during our stay.

The patriarch is the care-taker of the sacred precincts. The smile with which we hear his office named, is exchanged for disappointed looks upon discovering that what we especially desired to see is nowhere to be found.

"Yet it was certainly here last year," David says, his soul divided between surprise, sorrow and wrath. "If I am not mistaken, Dr. Geikie speaks of it in his book, and Dr. Talmage will have told you how impressed he was by it when he was in Capernaum, three years ago. It is more than pity that some of those thieves who are all the while hanging about such places, have stolen it. I say it—even if it has been built into those walls over there"—nodding ominously in the direction of the unfinished convent.

After a moment of painful silence, he resumes: "You see, it helped to make it all so plain, I have stood here, many times, and imagined just how he looked when he said it. It was very interesting to think that his eyes must have rested upon it often, and that he may have pointed to it when he said, 'Our fathers did eat manna in the desert'— as you will read in John sixth chapter, thirty-first verse, and again in the verse forty-ninth, 'Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. This is the bread which came down from heaven'—meaning himself. It is all about the manna and the living bread, you see. Who can doubt what put it into the mind of Christ, our Lord, to preach upon that subject in or before the synagogue that used to stand hereabouts?"

We stroll up and down wistfully, musing, while the population of Our Lord's "own city" watch us, mystified, but silent. Nobody explains to them why we have come or why we are dissatisfied. A query in Arabic has proved that they know nothing of the disappearance of the massive block of limestone, probably part of the facade of the noble synagogue now levelled to the earth. Upon it was a bas-relief of the pot of manna kept within the Ark, and afterward in the First Temple. It would have been easy, in looking upon it, to reproduce in fancy the scene referred to by our guide. "The Bible is the best Baedeker for Palestine," says Alcides, for the hundredth time, and we seek for ourselves seats upon the fallen stones to read up in our invaluable "International Teachers' Edition," the passages indicated under the head "Capernaum."

One cries out presently, "Why may not this synagogue have been that built by the centurion who loved the Jewish nation?" It is not unlikely, since the bits of carving from which we proceed to clear the dead grass, show skill and taste. The curling acanthus leaf of a Corinthian capital is embedded in a tough tussock, and there is a richly sculptured corner that may have belonged to a frieze.

"And this is the Capernaum, once exalted unto heaven by these and many other wonderful works—now—"

We gaze with new comprehension of the story and the prophecy, upon the grass-grown stones, the black tent that makes the picture more, not less, desolate, and in the background, the useless convent, where able-bodied men will patter prayers in an unknown tongue, and exalt above the Divine Son, the very human mother who broke in upon the most solemn sermon that has come down to us from his lips, by the request that he would shake off the crowd hanging upon the inspired words, and come out to speak to her. "His own city," with none to take pleasure in her stones, or to favor the dust thereof!

The folded tents, the camp-equipage and mules have gone forward toward Tiberias when we return to Bethsaida, but David and Alcides alight to survey the ground and make sure that nothing has been overlooked, consigning Dervish and Massoud to the care of Serkeese. In consequence of which misplaced confidence we have a diversion from the sober reverie that has held us since we left Capernaum. Massoud is not a colt in years. He will never be otherwise than coltish in heart. There is a clatter of hoofs among the irregular boulders and pebbles, a jocular neigh, and Serkeese stares open-mouthed after the fleeting steed, letting fall Dervish's bridle in the excess of his astonishment! No fences obstruct the gambols of the merry beast, who would have a companion in his scamper were Dervish as light of heart and heels as himself. For one mortal hour, he leads three bipeds a dance up and down the beach which none of them can forget. At every hundred yards or so, he stops to laugh in the perspiring faces of the pursuers, waiting until a hand is almost upon his bridle before he throws up head and hoofs together and trots gently out of reach. Viciousness is as far removed from the heart of the little horse as the intention to surrender himself voluntarily to any of the trio. Each mentally recalls the story of a similar escapade upon the plain of Esdrælon when the tricky creature chided capture for twelve hours, keeping the whole party waiting upon his pleasure.

He blunders at length, when even the solitary looker-on appreciates that there is a time to laugh, and a time to refrain from listen to a true tale confirmatory of the Scriptural account of the storms which overtook the "little ship" in which our Lord slept his head upon a pillow, and the boat which the toilsome rowing of the disciples could not bring to land, until, in the fourth watch of the night, the pressure of his feet stilled the billows, and his voice rebuked the "contrary" wind.

But a year ago a tempest rushed down Lake Gennesaret so fierce and sudden as to tear from their foundations and wash into the sea thirty houses from the town of Tiberias. Now, as of old, the rage of wind and wave is intense and short-lived.

Tiberias can never be comely. Seen under a dripping sky, it is repulsive. The alleys that do duty as streets, are lined, in some quarters, with booths or stalls, in others with mean dwellings, all dirty-white in the sunshine, dirtier gray when wet. The inhabitants have retreated to the rear of the shops, even where the streets are covered with matting or with leaky wooden roofs, and eye us listlessly as we pass, the horses plash through filth made liquid by the rain, and coursing in vile smelling rivulets down the middle of the street. The situation of the town, and the general noisomeness remind one of Jaffa, although Tiberias is much the smaller of the two.

Pleasant exceedingly is it to arrive at the camp pitched beyond the outskirting houses and so near the edge of the lake that the wash of the water upon the banks promises a lullaby throughout the dark hours. By the time luncheon is disposed of, the rain abates, and we sally forth for a walk upon the wet stones.

The custom of washing the bodies of the dead in the Sea of Tiberias is of immemorial antiquity, and was until recently, almost a daily occurrence. Corpses were brought from the surrounding country, and across the lake, and committed to a sect whose profession it is to prepare them for the burial by these ablutions. The details of the operation are too disgusting for publication, the process of evisceration being at once ingenious and revolting. Not until the water pumped into the body leaves it as clear as when it entered, is the work considered complete. As described to us, the business is unpleasantly like that of preparing a fowl for cooking, even to breaking certain small bones of the limbs. Our informant, a resident of the town, although a foreigner and a Christian, adds the gratifying intelligence that a strenuous movement is on foot to break up the practice altogether, and that such success has followed it, as to intimidate those who have made it a means of livelihood.

The world moves on—even in Syria.

The sun sets gloriously over the lake, some peculiar effect of refraction bringing the opposite shore nearer and nearer as the amber glow deepens. We look out upon a sea of glass mingled with fire; the white tents are washed with yellow light; there is not breeze enough to lift the American flag floating from the peak of the largest of the group, and we see in tremulous, yet distinct outline, to our right across the water the roof-shaped "steep place" down which the herd rushed violently into now placid waves.

Fish, fresh from the lake, follow the soup at dinner. The waters teem with them, as when the weight of an hundred, fifty-and-three strained, without breaking a mesh of the net cast at the Lord's command, upon the right side of the ship. We talk, over the savory mess, of the story that the hook sometimes brings up one oddly marked with a black spot upon the head and under the throat in commemoration of the grasp of Peter's thumb and finger upon the prize that yielded up the piece of money.

"A 'stater,'—in value two shillings and a sixpence," we gather from our "Palestine guide-book," and consult dragoman and John-of-the-many names, as to the authenticity of the tale.

Neither of them has ever seen such a fish. David, however, has heard of it before from Mrs. Sharpe.

"When she was Miss De Credo, of course," he subjoins, with no intention of being satirical. "She quite believed in it."

After dinner we again seek the beach. The new moon sinks below the low hills of the horizon; the swish of the wavelets blends musically to the low hum of talk from the camp behind us.

And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the sea, When the blue waves roll nightly on dark Galilee, repeats a dreamy voice. "Byron never saw Galilee. But the stars and the sheen are here." MARION HARLAND.

VILLAGERS OF MODERN CAPERNAUM.

(Photographed for "The Christian Herald" by Marion Harland.)

laughing; takes a wrong turn and is followed by David into a little pass forming what is, in sporting phrase, "a pocket."

"He cannot do justice to the subject!" quotes Alcides, aside, as, having seen his passenger again in the saddle, the dragoman receives Dervish from the hand of the abashed cause of the misadventure, with never a syllable of comment.

"A fool uttereth all his mind; but a wise man keepeth it in until afterward."

This particular wise man has something to say by and by, and, as usual, something pertinent.

"We have lost time, and shall be caught in the rain before we can get into camp."

By the time we draw rein upon the slope—green even in winter,—where tradition says our Lord commanded the five thousand men, women and children to sit down upon the grass, and fed them by the hands of his disciples with the miraculously-multiplied loaves and fishes, the sky is one cloud, dark-gray and sullen, the lake upon our left, a gloomier reflection of the pall above it, and stirring uneasily in an occasional flaw of wind. The use of the word "sea" misleads many as to the size of this, the most celebrated sheet of water upon the globe. It is, in fact, but fifteen miles in length and half as wide, and, apart from storied interest, as unremarkable as scores of mountain lakes in America whose names are not known beyond the special townships that border them.

It is here, as the surface begins to be pitted with large, slow drops of rain, that we

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

To be With Talmage
EDITOR.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash or postal notes.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

FISHERMEN AND FISHERIES.

THOSE who ply the net in river and sea need our sympathies. The Saviour of the world chose from their business some of his disciples, and he has as much interest in it now as when he called Simon and Andrew. All nations bordering on the sea have taken an interest in the fisheries, clear back to the time when the Romans made especial laws in regard to the lamprey, their aquatic favorite, and the Egyptians were required, once a year, to eat a fried fish in front of their dwellings, and their queen had from the revenue of the fisheries her private purse of $470,000 annually; clear down to the time when the Earl of Oxford, one of Queen Anne's court, was impeached for wrong notions about the fisheries, and down to this day when on the same old subject bayonets are threatened. The world has yet to learn the goodness of God in making such munificent provision for the human family in the fish of river, lake and ocean; so that, if at any time through chemical change of the soil or planetary disaster, the harvests of the land should fail, the population of the whole earth could not only be fed, but fattened, by the harvests of the water. We who live in these regions and with whom the catching of fish is a sport and the cause of more lying than any other thing, because of the sportsman's tendency to tell too large a story about the size of the trout, or the number of the shad and bluefish, can hardly understand what the New England and Canadian fisheries suggest of toil and exposure and hardship, unless some night in the thick fogs off Newfoundland, as the Cunarder swept through, he has heard, as I have, the cries of the fishermen in small boats, begging that they may not be run down, and the subsequent silence which gives you the impression that they have been engulfed. Let justice be done the fishermen, and may success spread their every sail and fill their every net. The human race needs more phosphorus and the fish is largely charged with it. Brain food of this kind all need in more or less quantities. Agassiz suggested how much it has to do with the intellectual forces when a student, lacking in mental energy, asked the great professor at the close of the lecture, how much fish he (the student) ought to eat for the benefit of his brain, and Agassiz replied, "In your case I suggest a whale!" It is a mathematical certainty that if our earth continues and the population increases at the same ratio, the time will come when the land will not be able to yield food enough for the human race. But all up and down the continents are the rivers, and all around the continents are the seas, and they could with their piscatorial treasures luxuriantly feed the world's population, though instead of the 1,000,000,000 of the present there were 10,000,000,000 people. Back of the forests for fuel are the coal mines. Back of the harvest fields and orchards for food are the fisheries. What a God we have. What a provider he is. What a table he spreads. What a wardrobe he fills. All the trouble comes from the fact that some get more than their share and others too little. If things were reasonably distributed every man, woman and child would have more than he or she could eat and more than they could wear and more room than they could occupy. At the table as God spreads it there is for every mortal a plate, a knife, a fork, a cup, a salt cellar, a pepper box, a slice of roast beef and a piece of pie as large as your hand; but some of us are so greedy we take our places at the table and spread out our elbows so wide that others cannot take their places, and then we empty their salt cellar into our salt cellar, and put their slice of beef on our own plate, and add their pastry to our already ample dessert. Haul in your elbows! Give a chance to the other fellow! The other trouble comes from the fact that there are people that will not keep their plate, or coat, or home after the Lord gives it to them. They drank or gambled away their portion. The rumsellers of this country have your beefsteak, oh, hard drinker, and they have your coat and your shoes.

Ichthyology, or the science of fishes, impresses me more than anything else with the goodness of God. Leaving to Linnæus, the Swedish naturalist, and to Bloch, the German naturalist, the classification of the anatomical wonders of the finny inhabitants of the great deep, I am most impressed with the amplitude of the divine provisions by the fact that all up and down the Hudson River swims every day more than enough healthful food to feed all the cities on both its banks from New York to Albany, and that, as most of the earth is water, the largest resource of the world's food has only been partially drawn upon. The day before Adam was created, Friday, as he was created Saturday, God opened the fish resources of the world. He knew that Adam, whom he should create the next day, would lead forth the population of many generations, and that there must be no lack of food, and so that Friday the Lord Almighty waved his hand over river and sea and the waters swirled and boiled and billowed with the starting forth of a new style of life of all sizes, from minnow to behemoth; and when on the next day Adam was created, if he looked into the waters of the Euphrates, the Gihon and the Hiddekel he found the predecessors of a race so innumerable that if all other food failed the human family, out of these crystalline reservoirs might be lifted enough to supply every market and every table and every hand and every mouth to the end of time. May the Christ who at daydawn on the banks of the Galilee breakfasted on the broiled fish, and who, in the desert, multiplied the two fishes until there was enough for 5,000 hungry people, and who told the disciples in the ship where to drop their net so as to inclose a great multitude of fishes, always help us in all worldly endeavor, and in all religious work, to cast the net on the right side of the ship.

WOMAN'S TEMPER.

THERE are men who suppose they have all the annoyances. They say it is the store that ruffles the disposition, but it they could only stay at home as do their wives, and sisters, and daughters, they would be, all the time, sweet and fair as a white pond lily. Let some of the masculine lecturers on placidity of temper, try for one week the cares of the household and the family. Let the man sleep with a baby on one arm all night, and one ear open to the children with the whooping cough in the adjoining apartment. Let him see the tray of crockery and the cook fall down stairs, and nothing saved but the pieces. Let the pump give out on a wash-day, and the stove-pipe, when too hot for handling, get dislocated. Let the pudding come out of the stove stiff as a poker. Let the gossiping gabbler of next door come in and tell all the disagreeable things that neighbors have been saying. Let the lungs be worn out by staying indoors without fresh air, and the needle be threaded with nerves exhausted. After one week's household annoyances, he would conclude that Wall street is heaven and the clatter of the stock exchange rich as Beethoven's symphony.

We think Mary of Bethany a little to blame for not helping Martha get the dinner. If women sympathize with men in the troubles of store and field, let the men also sympathize with women in troubles of housekeeping. Many a housewife has died of her annoyances. A bar of soap may become a murderous weapon. The poor cooking-stove has sometimes been the slow fire on which the wife has been roasted. In the day when Latimer and Ridley are honored before the universe, as the martyrs of the fire, we do not think the Lord will forget the long line of wives, mothers, daughters and sisters, who have been the martyrs of the kitchen.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

New Subscriber, Showell, Ind. Does the Bible contradict itself as to the conduct of Judas (See Matt. 27: 5 and Acts 1: 18)?

No, in the latter passage Peter was speaking of the general result. The Revised Version renders his words, "this man obtained a field" which is the more correct translation. He meant that there was nothing to show for the crime but the field which had been purchased with the money Judas earned by his treachery. The difference as to the manner of death supplements the account of Matthew who contents himself with recording the fact of the hanging. Apparently Peter had heard that the rope broke, with the result he mentions.

Reader, Rutland, Vt. 1. Where will Christ appear at his second coming? 2. Is the Pope Antichrist?

1. When he comes to the world to reign, he will appear on the Mount of Olives. (See Zech. 14: 4; Ezekiel 11: 23.) 2. A general view of the prophecy relating to Antichrist supports the contention of those expositors who believe that Antichrist will be a king, who, like the Roman Emperors down to the seventeenth century, will be elected by the monarchs of the kingdoms which belt the Mediterranean, constituting the old Roman world. That the Pope will support him and aid him, and also will be involved in his doom, is certain.

Addie Van Der Velde, Bellvale, N. Y. In Matthew 13: 19, the statement is made that out of the heart proceed evil thoughts; but physiologists say that we do not think with the heart but with the brain. How can evil thoughts come from the heart?

The heart is spoken of as the seat of emotions, affections, etc. But no one in so speaking, refers to the physical organ. Its position as the central organ of the physical system makes it a fit symbol for the central forces of the spiritual nature. Thus we speak of a man as being kind-hearted, tender-hearted, hard-hearted, etc., referring to his disposition. The quickening or stopping of the heart-beats under strong emotion, shows how close is the connection between the soul and the heart.

M. S. Z. Please give the concise history of the "Man in the Iron Mask?" Has the secret been disclosed? If so, who was the man?

He was a French State prisoner whose identity was carefully concealed. He was brought to the Bastille in 1698 during Louis XIV's reign and kept secluded till 1703, when he died. St. Mars, the Governor of the Bastille, took his meals with the prisoner, who always wore a black velvet mask. He was simply named "M. de Mareschal" on the prison register, but was undoubtedly a person of rank and importance. Some conjecture that he was a twin brother of Louis XIV, still others variously believe him to have been the Duke of Beaufort, a titled poisoner and conspirator against the King, a son of Cromwell, Aredick the Armenian patriarch, Ercole Mattioli, of Mantra, etc. His real identity has never been disclosed.

Subscriber, Chicago, Ill. If parents tell a child not to marry a certain person, and not to run away to get married and the child does run away, do you believe such a marriage has the Divine approval? What would you think of a person who belonged to a church doing such a thing?

Such an escapade would be a direct violation of the fifth Commandment, in setting at defiance the injunction of filial obedience, and would also be censurable on the ground of impropriety if nothing worse. For one escapade of this class that turns out well ninety-nine result badly. Marriage is a solemn sacrament not to be entered upon in the spirit of levity but as a compact and union of two souls before God. We cannot conceive of a church member even meditating such a step as a run away marriage, which can only be excusable under extreme circumstances and in very special cases.

V. G. Spencer, Waller, Iowa. 1. What is the tree of life as mentioned in Gen. and also Rev. 22: 14? 2. In what latitude and longitude was the garden of Eden? 3. Does the Bible anywhere mention an event in the life of Christ from the time he was twelve years old till he was thirty?

1. It was the tree in the centre of the garden which possessed the virtue of immortality. It was divinely endowed with qualities that healed and preserved the body from decaying with age. Various interpretations are applied to it, some treating it symbolically, others literally; but all agreeing that its presence and prominence were to be a constant remembrance of the immortal Creator himself and of his goodness to his creatures. 2. It is impossible now to identify the site of Eden. There are many conflicting opinions, some holding that it was in Armenia, others in Syria, still others in Upper India, and a few in Ceylon. Leading theological opinion favors Armenia. 3. No, it simply says he was subject to his parents. An ancient MS. recently discovered in Tibet asserts that he spent a part of his youth in India.

Subscriber. A Christian, who has been giving a tenth of his income to the Lord, becomes heavily burdened with debts. With the closest economy his income will not cover necessary expenses, and his debts are increasing. He earnestly desires to "honor the Lord with his substance," and also to obey the command, "owe no man anything." What is his duty now? Should he give a tenth of his small income to charities, as formerly, or should he use every effort to first discharge the debt to his fellow-men?

The Lord will not require you to give that which is not yours to give. "Pay that thou owest," "owe no man anything," are to-day as pregnant of truth and morality as when first spoken, and to dedicate to church work a portion of the money that rightly belonged to your creditors would be simple dishonesty. Under all the circumstances described, the immediate duty is rigid economy and hard work; absolute self-denial and the sloughing off of every unnecessary expenditure. The Lord prospers the diligent hand. It is your task to bring your expenses within your income, and you will then be able to do your full duty and give your offering with a clear conscience.

Earnest Seeker, Bald Mt., Colo. Does God take an interest in men personally or does he govern mankind as a whole, under general laws? The question is suggested by painful personal and domestic experience.

The question has often disquieted Christians under affliction. It has often appeared to the godly man, as it did to Job, that the children of God fare no better in the world than the wicked. But we are taught in a multitude of passages in the Bible, that God does know and care for the individual. Christ was very explicit on the subject. (See Matt. 10: 29-31.) The promise in the New Testament to Christ's followers is not of prosperity, but that they shall receive strength to bear their afflictions and that those afflictions shall work for good to them. Our prayers would be simple mockeries if we did not believe in God's care for the individual. The Christian like the wordling is subject to natural law and other things being equal a blow that would kill a wordling would kill him. Some of the troubles you describe belong to this category. It is often difficult to understand why so many afflictions fall to the righteous which the wicked escape, but God does not explain these particular trials. He expects us to trust him and to be assured that "he does not willingly afflict nor grieve" us, and to patiently wait the revelation which will make all things clear.

E. T. Sherlock, New York. Do you think any useful spiritual lesson can be drawn from Solomon's Song?

Undoubtedly, as from every other part of the Bible. The difficulties in regard to it, arise from the various views as to its plan and purpose. No less than sixteen of these have been advanced by expositors. Three only, however, have commended themselves to any large number of Bible students. One of them regards it as the yearning of God's people, when separated from the Temple and the ordinances of the Jewish service. A second view is that it represents, under the image of an intense love, the relation of Christ and his people. Paul uses the same symbol in Eph. 5: 22-33. This was evidently the view taken by the men who put the headings to the chapters in the King James version of the Bible, which headings have been discarded in the Revised version. The third view is the literal, which is taken by modern scholars and is growing in favor. It is that the poem celebrates the trials and triumph of a country maiden, who when carried away from her humble home and her rustic lover to become an inmate of the king's harem, rejects with scorn the magnificence and luxury offered her and remains faithful to her lover, with whom she returns. The lesson is obvious. It is the lesson of a fidelity to Christ and truth and righteousness which no offer of wealth and luxury can disturb.

Fred. Flint, Stockville, Neb. There probably was some Arab legend to that effect, which the writer repeated.—Catherine Rollberg, New York. 1. Your contribution to the Food Fund was received and will be duly acknowledged. 2. Sunday travel is sinful, unless unavoidable. 3. Not necessarily so.—(Can-stant Reader, College Grove, Wis. 1. No richer than found in the story of Genesis. 2. Geologists say it may have been the case in Madisqua, Marietta, Pa. From a business point of view, Spanish is the more important of the two. Both, however, are easily acquired, and would not take long in learning.—Inquirer. Rev. Mr. Ben-Olle's address is care of Dr. Rice, 10 E. 23rd St., N. Y.—Mrs. L. L. Howe, E. Dover, Vt. Send them to chaplain, King's County Penitentiary, Brooklyn, N. Y.—C. H. Can-ning, Bedford, Mo. We have not sufficient data to answer your questions.—W. H. Downs, Idaville, Ind. No; God has not changed. Man, however, has been led to see that slavery was sin and that it should be abolished. All other argument on the subject is beside the main question.—Maggie. A. Irish patriot who was tried for treason and executed in 1803.—Mrs. H. A. E. L. It is a proverb frequently quoted by those who wish to evade moral obligations elsewhere. Such people usually make charity begin at home and end there also. 2. You are quite right.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

ATHENS SHAKEN.

THE series of severe earthquakes which have shaken an extensive region in Greece, have caused great destruction of life and property. On April 27th, a large congregation was gathered in the Cathedral at Athens when a terrible shock agitated the great building. There would have been a panic if Premier Tricoupis had not interposed to calm the people. He begged every one to leave the building slowly and assured them that the danger would be best minimized by that course. His words had a tranquillizing effect. Men ceased struggling, women stopped screaming, and the congregation dispersed without disorder. Three large fragments were broken from the Parthenon. Telegrams received in Athens, show that the disturbance was felt throughout the country. Atlanta, a town of three thousand inhabitants, was levelled to the ground. In Thebes also, not a house was left standing. In Lima, scores of houses collapsed, and the prison in which sixty converts were confined was shaken down, and many lives were lost. The islands of Syra and Seanto also suffered heavily. The devastation is greater, because the earthquake follows so closely on that of April 20th, which weakened many buildings in various towns, but did not entirely destroy them. They utterly collapsed under the later shock. At the time of writing it is not known how many persons have been killed, but the death list was over three hundred from the first earthquake, and the later one must have largely increased it. The destruction of property is greater than that caused by the earthquake at Zante last year. There is general consternation throughout the country, for no one can tell when the shocks may be renewed. They may learn from science how the appalling disturbances are caused, but science cannot give them warning of their approach, nor tell where or when an earthquake will take place. They only are wise who, following the example of the patriarch, look for help to him who "shaketh the earth out of her place." Job 9: 6.)

A Tramp's Retort.

The characteristic reply of a tramp to a very natural question is recorded in a Detroit journal. It says that a ragged, miserable-looking man shuffled up to the door of a farmhouse near that city and asked for a meal. He was a rough, churlish fellow, but he looked miserable and hungry, so he was taken to the kitchen and the cook was instructed to give him a substantial meal. There was no doubt as to the man's hunger. In all her experience in satisfying the appetite of tramps, she had never seen a man eat as that man did. He was morose, too, and answered her questions in monosyllables or not at all. Her patience was almost exhausted before the man admitted that he had eaten enough. He got through at last, and was starting away without a word of thanks or even a "good morning," when the cook stopped him. "Here," she said sharply, "haven't you a word to say after as good a dinner as that?" The tramp looked at her stolidly and answered, "Naw; did you think I was Chauncey Depew?" He did not need the eloquence of our famous post-prandial orator to give such an expression of thanks as would have satisfied the woman. But he acted toward her as many people act toward God. Because they have not the ten talents to use in his service, they will not use the one they have. (II. Cor. 8: 12.)

A Poet's Memorial.

A cable dispatch states that a novel and striking memorial to Lord Tennyson is to be raised on the Western coast of the Isle of Wight, not far from the home where he lived for forty years. It is a granite monolith in the shape of an Iona cross and will be beautifully polished and will bear an appropriate inscription. It is to stand on the highest bluff on the coast near the village of Freshwater, a part of the Down which the poet used to visit daily. It will be visible far out at sea and will form a beacon for mariners by which they can safely steer their ships in passing down the channel or a section foreman on the railroad. A few weeks ago an old friend of her father came to visit the widow and in chatting over early days he inquired after one of her brothers. The widow said she thought he must be dead as she had not heard anything of him for more than thirty years. But the friend said she was mistaken, the brother was not dead for he had seen him at intervals of several years in the course of his journeyings, and he believed he was living in Cincinnati. During the day the visitor went for a walk and one of the first persons he met was the section-foreman whom he hailed as the brother of the widow. Taking him to the turnpike house he introduced the two and on comparing notes the brother and sister found that the man was right. For many years the brother has passed daily within twenty yards of his sister's home and has often conversed with her, but neither recognized the other or knew that there was any relationship between them. They had lost track of each other in childhood and each supposed that the other had died years ago. Doubtless, both are grateful to the man who thus brought them together and enabled them to recognize each other. It is similar service of infinitely greater degree that Christ would render to every man and woman on earth bringing it was noticed as a curious coincidence that his favorite cherry-tree showed unmistakable signs of decay. The old man had it cut down and sawn into boards which he kept in his house. Soon afterward he became so ill that he was confined to his bed. Feeling sure that he would never recover he sent for a carpenter and bade him make a coffin of the boards of the cherry-tree. It was done, and when he died he was laid in it. The cost of his funeral was paid out of the fund accumulated by the sale of the cherries from the same tree. There is something pathetic in his taking for himself in return for all the attention he had given to the tree for half a century, only a coffin and his funeral expenses. But there are many who concentrate all their mind on worldly affairs who can get no better result. As the Preacher pointed out long ago, it is a common vanity of the most empty kind, for a man to give all his thought to this life which has only a grave at the end of it, and yet there is no end to his labor, and he never asks himself for whom do I labor and beleave my soul of good. (Eccles. 4: 8.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Chinese Viceroy, Chang, has invited Dr. Mackay, a physician of the London Missionary Society, to attend him personally when sick.

Rev. F. B. Meyer is coming from England to attend the Bible Conference at Northfield, Mass. He will speak regularly all through the month of August.

Since the English Occupation of Egypt commenced, no less than 180,000 copies of Bibles and Bible portions in the native language have been sold and given away among the peasantry of the country.

The First Result of Christian teaching in Senite, Burmah, says The Missionary Link, is the willingness of the women to give up the weary load of thirty and often forty pounds of brass wire which they wear as ornaments.

The Mayor of Savannah, Ga., has put himself upon record as opposed to Sunday baseball. A league game which had been announced to take place on a recent Sunday was stopped by the police under the Mayor's order.

A Recent Letter from Japan says that at the close of last year, of the 377 churches in Japan, 78 are wholly and 299 are partially self-supporting. The additions during the year numbered 3,636. The present membership is 37,534. The larger part of these are men.

Turkey is preparing for a most radical change to bring her into closer touch with Western customs. She proposes to exchange the Mohammedan lunar calendar for the Gregorian calendar, the old style of reckoning time being found most inconvenient for business dealings.

Nearly One Thousand Cards were signed during Dr. Chapman's services at Bloomington, Ill. At the farewell meeting in the Opera House, the number unable to enter would have filled a building equally large. The Rev. J. W. Hubbel, of Mansfield, Ohio, says that at Dr. Chapman's services in that city, eleven hundred cards were signed and the good work continues.

Miss Talmage, a Niece of the Editor of this journal, who is laboring as a missionary at Amoy, China, mentions in a letter recently received that one of the women recently baptized was a maker of idolatrous paper, used for burning before the idols. She resigned her place and turned her talent to the manufacture of paper flowers. At this she does not earn more than a sixth of her former salary, but she is content. The Chinese are sometimes despised, but it is not every one among ourselves who would give up five-sixths of his income on account of religious principle.

Additional Contributions for the Relief of the destitute in New York:

A. E. P., $3; Armstrong, Mrs., 30c; An old subr Westchester, Iowa, $1; Blair, John, $3; B. G. M., Brooklyn, $1; B. C., Mich., 25c; Bancroft, Jane, 50c; Bishop, Emma Kissam, $1; Bush Creek S. S., Livermay, Kas., $1; Case, May E., 35c; Crandal, Mrs. Jos. H., 50c; Corning, Lizzie S., $1; Cheunging Charlie, 25c; Cheunging Birdie, 25c; Friend, So. Egremont, Mass., $1; Gifford, De Witt, 50c; H. F. M., Moreland, $1; In His Name, Glendale, Mass., $2.50; Jennings, Mrs. Jonathan, $1; J. A. M. P., Florence, Mass., $1; J. C. E. S. of Railroad St. Baptist Church, St. John,burg, Va., $1; Kansas girl, 10c; Ligner, Mr. and Mrs. and Vt., $1; Leith, J., $1; Monticello, N. Y., $5; Mamma, Given and Sarah, 75c; Myers, Mrs. Mary E., $1; Phillips, Mrs. P. F., $1; Smith, Mrs. C. D., $1; Sweet, Mrs. John L., $1; Sinclair Jas. A., 50c; Teacher of Jamacha School, Cal., 30c; W. K. S., Phila., Pa., $1; W. W. H., $1; 4 Pane children, 65c; Paloma, Ills., $2; Stewartstown, Pa., $1.

The following contributions of clothing to the Food Fund have been received during the week: Mrs. N. St S and Mrs. H. A., 1 box clothing, Three Well-wishers, "In Jesus' Name," 1 bbl. clothing; Unknown, 1 bbl. clothing; Mr. J. Smith, Scudder, N. Y., cabbage.

THE GREAT EARTHQUAKES IN GREECE—MODERN ATHENS, THE GREEK CAPITAL.

in entering the Needles. The government perceives its value in this respect and has decided to remove the old wooden beacon called the Nodes which has long done duty at this point and make the Tennyson memorial the recognized beacon for that dangerous part of the coast. It will be a fitting memorial of his life and work. The fact is honorable to him. Literature would be the better if every writer made it his aim to write so usefully that the most appropriate memorial of him would be a beacon to warn men from destruction. (Isa. 62: 6.)

Unconscious Relationship.

A revelation which surprised two neighbors is described by the "Cincinnati Commercial." It says that just north of that city on the Carthage road is a turnpike which has been kept by a widow for more than twenty-five years. Among her neighbors during the greater part of that period is a man named Smith who is employed as them into a bond of brotherhood in him closer than any bond of physical relationship. (Matt. 23: 8.)

Provision for a Funeral.

A curious story is connected with a funeral which took place in Webster County, Kentucky, on April 12. The funeral was that of a farmer who was in his sixtieth year when he died. It appears that when a boy ten years old playing around the farm which then belonged to his father, and afterwards was inherited by him, he was amusing himself with some cherry stones. He concluded to plant one and did so. It took root and grew into a fruitful tree. The boy took a deep interest in the tree and daily watched its growth. Every year he sold the produce, and carefully hoarded the proceeds. He continued to do so after the farm passed into his own hands and he had children of his own growing up around him. Last winter his robust constitution became impaired and ANTICIPATORY BLESSINGS.

Sermon preached in Calvary Baptist Church, New York City, by Rev. R. S. MacArthur, D.D. Text: Psalm 21: 3, "For thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness: thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head."

IN the preceding Psalm we have a prayer that David, who is going forth to war, may be victorious. In this Psalm we have a song of thanksgiving for the victory which has been won. Perowne describes the preceding Psalm as a litany before the king went forth to battle, and this one was a Te Deum on his return. The occasion which gave rise to the Psalm is variously understood. Some say that it celebrated the victory over Sennacherib; others that it is a song of thanksgiving for the recovery of Hezekiah. Still others consider it to be a song of rejoicing because of David's victory over the Ammonites, a victory which ended in the capture of the royal city of Rabbah, the crown of whose king David put on his own head. But without stopping to discuss this matter further in detail, we know that these two Psalms are complementary whatever may be the historical allusion.

Preventive Blessings.

A single remark on the word "prevent" will throw light upon its meaning in the text. Literally the word signifies to go before, to anticipate. This is the meaning alike of the Latin word from which it comes and of the Hebrew word of which it is the translation. This also was the original meaning of the English word prevent when our common translation of the Scriptures was made. We find this prayer in one of the old liturgies: "Prevent us, O Lord, in all our doings with thy most precious favor." The meaning of this petition is, that God would go before us, or anticipate us in his mercy. As we all know, the word prevent is now used as meaning to stop, to hinder, to intercept. It is a sad commentary on our fallen human nature that the word should have so changed its meaning; for the changed meaning clearly shows that men usually go before one another not to help but to hinder and to hurt. "Words are things" as the fiery Mirabeau said in the French Assembly. There is a vast amount of history wrapped up in their changed meanings. Like Adam, they have had their fall. Moral qualities inhere in duly speech. The idea in this text is that God had gone before David, and anticipated him, had prepared blessings before they were asked or needed. This truth is taught whether we limit the application of the Psalm to some signal victory, or refer it to the whole sweep of God's providential dealings with David. God's providences as related to us emphasize the same truth. This fact suggests a general law in God's relations to man; it gives us this topic: The Anticipatory Blessings of God.

In Creation.

1. Anticipative blessings are seen in creation—in creation generally, and in our own creation especially. The young of no creature comes into the world so helpless as the young of the human species; but God so anticipates this fact that gentle hands and loving hearts make provision for this helplessness. Their manifest weakness appeals to our conscious strength. It has been said that "the undevout astronomer is mad." It may with equal truth be said that the undevout anatomist is mad. It is said that Galen, the celebrated physician, was at one time atheistically inclined, but that the careful study of the human frame, the usefulness of every part, the fitness of part to part, and the wonderful beauty of the whole, led him to question the truth of atheism, and finally to believe fully in God as Creator and Lord. He was a man of vast and varied attainments. Doubtless he was justified in speaking significantly of the medical men of his time, and particularly of those in Rome, where during four years he won great applause for his skill as a practitioner, and his success as an instructor. Eighty-three genuine medical works by his hand are extant, and many are supposed to have been lost. Tried by the standards of our time, his theories no doubt would excite merriment, but for one thousand three hundred years his authority was law in the medical profession. It is said that he wrote a hymn in praise of the divine Creator. If we go for a little way into particulars in the study of

The Human Body,

we find many illustrations of God's anticipative beneficence. Think for a moment of the eye! At first it is needless, but all its parts are even then perfect. God anticipates its subsequent uses. A distinguished scholar has affirmed that an examination of the eye is a cure for atheism. Dr. Paley, whom some of us carefully studied in academic days, reminds us that the eye is lodged in a strong, deep and bony socket composed of seven different bones hollowed at their edges. It is sheltered by eyebrows, which are ingenious and beautiful arches of hair, and which render valuable service in protecting the eyes from the moisture of the face. The lid defends the eye in many ways, gently protecting it when open and then sweetly closing it in sleep. To keep the eye clean a liquid is especially provided, and to carry off the superfluous brine, a perforation is ingeniously prepared. The ear, no less than the eye, is mechanically and scientifically adapted to its office. Many writers call attention to the fact that we can find no machine in which such complicated and flexible contrivances are found as in the human neck. Think also of the contrivances in the forearm, and of the complicated arrangements to permit of the enlargement and contraction of the chest in breathing! Indeed, every joint and every part of the human system is a marvel of delicacy, power and wisdom. We are wonderfully made. But, of course, I am not giving a lecture on anatomy, and so cannot go into these matters at length. The simple point here emphasized is that at the outset all these were provided, God anticipating their subsequent use. Their relations as well as their adaptations are also anticipated. The eye is adapted to light, and the ear to sound; the wings of the bird to the air, and the fin of the fish to the water. These contrivances and designs prove the existence of the Contriver and Designer. They also illustrate the anticipatory goodness of the Designer; in a thousand ways they manifest his beneficence. He has added pleasure to the exercise of our faculties above what was necessary to their continued existence and intended function. Youth has pleasures of its own in its frolics and gambols; age, pleasures of its own, dozing in its arm-chair, or quietly engaged in its appropriate activities. God soothes the mind and comforts the eye by robing the earth in its green mantle, while he expresses his beautiful thoughts in flowers of many colors. However widely we traverse the realm of nature, we shall find that God in creation has gone before us with the blessings of his goodness.

Prospective Contrivances

2. The same law is illustrated in Revelation. Men needed a revelation from God. Nature answered many of the deep questions of the human soul; but, when confronted by some of the profoundest problems of life, Nature is silent. The dying words of Goethe, "More light," expresses our need even when standing in the brightest light which Nature can give. God is a wise teacher; the impartation of his knowledge always bears a relation to our ability to receive. Christ had many things to tell the disciples which they were unable to bear. There is always a fullness of time in God's revelation and providences. It comes to pass, therefore, that it was always at "sundry times and in divers manners," that the knowledge of God came to man. Robertson reminds us that the translation "sundry times," "is literally sundry parts—sections, not of time, but of the manner of the revelation. God gave his revelation in parts, piecemeal, as you teach children to spell a word, letter by letter, syllable by syllable, adding all at last together. God had a word to spell—his own name. By degrees he did it."

The Bible is like some ancient castle. We know that Warwick Castle viewed from the outside is an immense pile of disjointed work, of four or five centuries, and with many varieties of architecture, but within, the apartments, although each is finished in the style of its own period, form a perfect and harmonious whole, making a noble and magnificent home. Cologne Cathedral on the banks of the "wide and winding Rhine," although founded in 1248, was only recently completed. Its history is long and fascinating. The architect is unknown; probably he will never be known, but his design after hundreds of years is carried out in every particular.

One Thought Dominates

the structure in every part and harmonizes the entire conception. Such a majestic cathedral and historic castle is the Bible. It took sixteen centuries to make it; but its earlier portions anticipate and prepare for its later revelations. In the Old Testament we find the germ of those facts which blossom and bloom into precious truths, whose flower and fruitage we enjoy in the New Testament. Every portion of revelation was perfect for its place and time.

Freeman has shown us in his "Growth of the English Constitution," how the constitution of Britain up to to-day is the outgrowth of the earliest Saxon institutions of that land. So the full-blown flower revelation is the development of the bud of divine teaching in the earliest history of the race. The doctrine of the Trinity, the hope of salvation, and the glory of the Messiah are all promised or implied in the teaching of patriarchs and prophets at the very dawn of human history. Many men of many climes, and of varied degrees of intellect and spiritual culture, were employed in the preparation of the unique book which we call the Bible. Some of these men were prophets and poets; some were kings and some peasants; some were shepherds and some were soldiers. They thus represented various grades of social life and of national growth, but all had in giving to the world God's full and glorious revelation of himself. Through the lofty arches of this great cathedral the idyllic song of the shepherd floats, and the imperial voice of the king thunders; here also the blended voices of evangelists and apostles echo, and all finally unite in ascriptions of praise to him who is the Child of the Manger and the Ancient of Days.

Their Place and Purpose

The devout student discovers at every stage in this progressive revelation that God was going before men with the blessings of his goodness. There are questions, which, without this revelation, we could never answer. What shall we think of God? Is there a life to come? How shall man be just with God? These questions uninspired wisdom could never answer. God implanted within us the longing to know something of himself, and the means by which that longing can be satisfied he also furnishes. He is ever going before us along the track of history and revelation. Traversing these highways of providence and redemption, we discover the footprints of the Son of God. As the loving John said to the impulsive Peter, in the gray dawn of the morning, near the shore of the Galilean Sea on which the Master was standing, "It is the Lord;" so the Christian student can say of every divine appointment in every dispensation. Echoing through the corridors of all the centuries the devout student hears the foot-beats of Jesus Christ. Revelation joins with creation in saying, "Thou preventest us with the blessings of thy goodness."

Redemption Provided.

3. This beneficent law is illustrated especially in redemption. God is never taken by surprise; for "Known unto God are all his works, from the beginning of the world." The first promise which was given at the gate of Eden to our fallen parents, contains the Gospel as the seed contains the tree. In the garments given to cover the sinning pair was a hint at least of the spotless robe which is the righteousness of Christ. A ray of light from the distant Cross of Calvary fell on the dark pathway of our first parents as they walked from Eden's brightness. The Cross was not an unexpected remedy for an unseen calamity. We are in danger of getting into deep water at this point, and of becoming entangled in the meshes, if we may for the moment use technically theological language, of sublapsarianism and of supralapsarianism; but of this we may be sure: we ought always to have the idea of clearly in mind when we judge of the disaster which befell our race. It is certain that God anticipated the fall in the provisions of his mercy; certain that Christ was the Lamb slain before the foundation of the world; certain that God's knowledge anticipated the disaster as his loving power prepared the remedy. When there was no eye to pity, his eye pitied; when there was no hand outstretched to help, his was extended to save; before our sense of need, came his provision of help.

The Divine Remedy

And what is true of the provisions for the race as a whole, is true in the conversion of each individual sinner. We should never have sought Christ, if he had not first sought us. Christ sought Nathaniel under the fig tree, before Nathaniel sought him as his Saviour. Christ sought Matthew at the receipt of custom, while Matthew was intent only on the faithful performance of daily duty. Christ sought Zacchaeus in the sycamore tree, while he would have hid himself from the Lord behind its leafy branches. Christ sought the woman of Samaria at the well, before she sought him as the Messiah. In the woman who was a sinner, Christ sought and found the woman, although the Pharisees only sought and found the sinner. Christ was ever seeking the straying sheep. He is going before you to-day with the blessings of salvation. He came to you in the cradle. In the song prompted by a mother's heart and sung by her loving lips, he was striving to win you to himself. He came to you in your school-days, saying to each boy and to each girl, "My son, my daughter, give me thine heart." He has come to you all in a thousand ways since with his sweet message. In the blessings of health, of home, of a father's smile, of a mother's love, and of a child's trustful greeting, Jesus Christ has been coming with the blessings of his goodness. His warm love he offers you to-day. Oh, spurn not his mercy! Refuse not his anticipatory grace; but submit heart and life for time and eternity into the hands of him who has loved you with an eternal love, and who waits to crown you with the blessings of his goodness.

The Good Shepherd

4. The law of anticipatory blessing finds its illustration in Providence. All God's providential dealings are the blessings of his goodness. He waits to set a pure crown of gold on the head of every son and daughter of Adam. Our birth in this land is one of the blessings of his anticipatory love; our birth in this particular age is an indisputable proof of his goodness; indeed, all his providences are such anticipations. It is true that "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him;" it is true that "as one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you;" it is true that, "all things work together for good to them that love God." Our blessed Lord is preparing us for what he has prepared for us. We are for a prepared mansion and crown. Look over your past life, and you will see how this law has been illustrated. Observe to-day your present experiences, and you will know some day why you have had them as they are.

A Prepared People

To-day we are to sit at the table of the Lord. The ordinance of the Lord's Supper is an illustration of the Lord's considerate goodness. He knew that we would need such a help in our spiritual lives; this ordinance he gave us to be observed in remembrance of him. The Lord's baptism sets forth the beginning of the new life in Christ; the Lord's Supper the continuance of that life by his grace and power. The Lord's baptism is to be observed but once, as it is the symbol of the new birth; the Lord's Supper is to be observed often, as it is the symbol of our daily dependence upon God for strength and growth. The Good Shepherd ever goeth before his sheep and leadeth them. He leads; he never drives. There is no pathway, however thorny, which we must tread which he has not trodden; there is no cross, however heavy, which we must bear that he has not borne. Is death before us? He has gone through the valley and ade it luminous by his presence. Must we enter the tomb? There he once lay, and therefrom he came forth in triumph. Do we need a mansion in glory? He anticipates our need, saying: "I go to prepare a place for you." Do we need a friend at the right hand of God? "He ever liveth to make intercession for them." The Psalm from which the text is taken is, as we have seen, a triumphal ode. It speaks of a crown of gold. But a loftier song than this shall be sung when we chant, Thanks be to God, which giveth us the story through our Lord Jesus Christ." A bluer crown shall be worn, if we be faithful unto death and let no man take our crown, for there is laid up for us a triple crown, the crown of righteousness, the crown of life, and the crown of glory.

CHINESE HEROES.

A THRILLING story of the heroism of some Chinese converts is told by Rev. C. S. Medhurst, a Baptist missionary in China, in the "Baptist Missionary Magazine." It reports these noble men as voluntarily giving up home and friends, and in some instances, life itself, that some expatriated countrymen might hear the Gospel. Mr. Medhurst says: There was a famine in Shantung. I am not going to speak of horrors, but of its heroes. They were in our employ, receiving good wages, and either they nor their families had cause to read the famine. But hundreds of others were starving and were emigrating to the province of Shensi, where the imperial government was ready to give land to all settlers. Now these noble Christian servants of ours studied their Bibles. They read how after the death of Stephen the church was scattered by persecution, preaching the word everywhere. They came to us and told us that although there was no persecution to scatter them, they believed that the famine was intended by God to send them somewhere as missionaries. They met together and held many prayer conferences by themselves. Then they came to us again, resigned their positions, gave up their salaries, sold their lands at a great sacrifice, and went with the other emigrants to Shensi. They went, not to better their worldly prospects, but to preach Christ. We could spare their aid, but we held a farewell meeting and sent them off with many prayers. That long journey of six weeks in the middle of a semi-arctic North China winter, tried both old and young severely. They could not always find shelter at night. More than one succumbed to the unusual exposure, and drew their last breath before they reached Shensi. They were buried in nameless graves by the roadside, and the rest struggled bravely on, weak in body, but strong in faith. After the pilgrims had settled, one smart boy, who had been in our mission school, who had received an education at our expense, but who had given up all his bright prospects that he might join the missionary band, was offered by a wealthy native gentleman, the position of heir to all his property. "No," the brave lad replied, "If I become your son you will make me give up Christ. I am a Christian and cannot do it." Like Moses, that dear Chinese youth, his name little known on earth, but inscribed on the roll of honor in heaven, "refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." That child of God, that Mongolian Martyr, has since gone home to his rest. The terrible winter's march across the plains from Shantung to Shensi sowed the seeds of consumption in his lungs, and proved God's call to him to go home. My friends, are not the Chinese worth saving? Do you wonder that I love them?

But the missionary in China has his delights as well as his disappointments. I found that the spiritual horizon of the mission field was like the climate of California—it had more sunshine than cloud. Were there time, I could tell a thrilling story of a native Christian brother, with whom I have enjoyed many hours of converse, who married a blind woman out of pity for her condition, and who adopted a starving girl into his family, when he had scarcely enough to eat himself. I could tell you of a brother in the field whom I love dearly, who was so anxious to tell his countrymen of the Christ, that he preached his business away and brought starvation to his door, but he led more than a hundred of his neighbors to the Saviour.

Lead Thou me On.

FANNY J. CROSETT. Lead me in the way everlasting.—Ps. 119:24.

W. H. DOANE.

1. O Sav-iour mine, who now be-hold-est me, 'Tis heav'n be-low Thy
2. O Saviour mine, whose wings o'ershadow me, No Friend so near, no
3. O Saviour mine, how great Thy love to me! Its beams di-vine, how
4. Hold Thou me up, and, when Thou call-est me Thy robe to wear, Thy love to know; My feet with joy-ful haste would fol-low Thee; name so dear; Thou art my hope of im-mor-tal-i-ty, bright they shine! Hold Thou me up, let me a-bide in Thee;

joy to share, I'll sing and praise thro' all e-ter-ni-ty

REFRAIN.

Lead Thou me on wher-e'er I go.
Thy voice a-lone my heart can cheer.
Keep Thou my hand still firm in Thine.
Thy grace, Thy love, that bro't me there.

Copyright, 1892, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From SUNNY-SIDE SONGS, by permission of the Publishers.

DAYBREAK.

DARKLY hang the clouds around us
And the waves of care roll high,
Cruel rocks and reefs surround us
Which are hidden from the eye,
On each hand lie death and danger—
Death to go, or death to stay—
But a gracious God shall guide us
At the breaking of the day.

When the crosses which oppress us
We no longer have to bear,
And the trouble that depress us
Bring us joy instead of care,
When our crown of thorns is loosened
And our tears have passed away,
We shall enter our safe haven
At the breaking of the day.

When dear friends are there to meet us
By the crystal river's side,
And when all the loved ones greet us
As we pass beyond the tide;
When we enter in the glory
Of that blessed home to stay,
We will find but joy forever,
At the breaking of the day.

Collinsville, Ct. LOUIS E. THAYER.

OVER AND OVER AGAIN.

OVER and over again,
No matter which way I turn,
I always find in the book of life
Some lessons I have to learn.
I must take my turn at the mill:
I must grind out the golden grain:
I must work at my task with a resolute will
Over and over again.

Over and over again
The brook through the meadow flows,
All over and over again
The ponderous mill wheel goes;
Once doing will not suffice,
Though doing be not in vain;
And a blessing tailing us once or twice
May come if we try again.

The path that has once been trod
Is never so rough for the feet;
And the lesson we once have learned
Is never so hard to repeat.
Though sorrowful tears must fall,
And the heart to its depths be riven
With the storm and the tempest, we need
To render us meet for heaven.

THE MILLENNIAL REIGN.

Christ's Reign on Earth During the Thousand Years to Be a Time of Universal Righteousness.

BY REV. W. MAUDE.

Continued from page 282.

BUT this is not all. The subordinate rulers of the earth will exercise their high office in perfect accordance with the Supreme Will. Not only shall "a King reign in righteousness," but "princes shall rule in judgment." And who are these "princes?" Doubtless the risen and glorified saints. Those of whom Daniel says, "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7: 27); and whom John saw in Apocalyptic vision, as the representative elders, seated on four-and-twenty thrones, "clothed in white raiment, and on their heads crowns of gold;" concerning whom, moreover, he heard it sung in the "new song." Thou didst make them a kingdom and priests, and they shall rule over the earth. (Rev. 4: 4; 5: 1c.)

But here we need discrimination. Not all the redeemed—not even all partakers of the first resurrection—will attain the honor and dignity of kingship in the coming kingdom. It is possible—as the risen Saviour himself warns the Church in Philadelphia, for another to receive the crown which might have been ours. It is possible for the Christian habitually to violate one of the least of Christ's commands, and in consequence to find himself "the least in the kingdom of heaven." It is possible—ah! how much more than possible—for the believer, whether he be teacher, or taught, to build on the true foundation, "wood, hay, stubble;" and his work being burned, to "suffer loss," though "he himself shall be saved, yet so as out of the fire"—a veritable "brand plucked from the burning." "Know ye not," writes Paul, "that they who run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize. So run that ye may obtain."

It is not, then, even the saints indiscriminately, who are to inherit the thrones and royalties of the coming kingdom, but only the best, the noblest, the holiest; aye, and the humblest amongst them. Those who have "resisted unto blood, striving against sin," both in themselves and others. Those whose faith having been tried in the fire, is "found unto praise, and honor, and glory at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Those who are in truth "overcomers," and who can therefore lay claim to the wondrous promise, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." These, and these alone, shall be the "princes" in the coming age, the reflectors of Christ's glory, the channels of his righteousness, by whose presence the world will be enlightened and made beautiful as the garden of the Lord.

Again, restored and converted Israel will present to the world the influential spectacle of a perfectly righteous nation. This is clearly revealed both in the Old and New Testament. Thus Paul says, addressing the Gentile believers at Rome: "I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins." (Rom. 11: 25-27.)

And the provisions of this "new covenant" are thus declared by Jeremiah: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah. . . . And this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their heart: and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." (Jer. 31: 31-34.) So also Isaiah says of Israel, "Thy people shall be all righteous, they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting."

(To be Continued.)

LOVE'S POWER AND WORK.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Commencing May 30. I Cor. 13.

WHAT love does for the world can never be estimated. It is the one eternal omnipotent force which God has put here to redeem and ennoble the world. The knowledge that God is love, is the one hope of the world, which supports men in sorrow, in affliction, in perplexity. We cannot understand nature, or our own lives, or the mysteries of providence. The good suffer, the wicked prosper; virtue starves, vice flourishes; the useful and beneficent die, the evil doer lives to old age; sincerity and integrity go penniless, while hypocrisy and trickery get riches and honor. How is the world governed, then? Does not God care? God is love. Assured of that, we can wait with confidence for the time when all will be made clear. It is the one fact we needed to know. God's power we could see for ourselves; his omniscience and his omnipresence we might assume, but his love had to be revealed to us. The revelation came gradually, but its culmination was unmistakable. "God so loved the world," was the message brought by Him who was at once the expression and the pledge of that love. Even then, men did not realize the tact. Christ's immediate followers clung to the idea of a stern, angry, relentless Being, needing to be propitiated, and they closed their eyes to the revelation of his true character. In flashes and gleams, as the Holy Spirit controlled them, they imparted to us the revelation; but like them, we have not fully realized it, but have magnified ordinances and ceremonies and faith, steadily resisting the knowledge that "the greatest of these is love." In these later days, a few are beginning slowly and painfully to grasp the idea. The blinded eyes are teebly recognizing the sublimity and the grandeur and the import of this conception of God. But the clue once in the hand, infinite treasures of joy are within reach. Life is a new thing in the consciousness of infinite love. We take heart and go forward bravely in the light. We gain courage to bear and to toil as we remember that the eyes bent on us from the heavens are not those of a stern taskmaster who is waiting to condemn and punish, but of a Father whose heart is full of love and sympathy, who knoweth our frame and remembers that we are dust.

The reflex influence is potent. He who loves purely, unselfishly has in him a spark of divine essence, and is mighty for good. We might have known this long ago, for we have seen it in the family and in society. We have seen the stubborn child, whom punishment could not subdue, yield to the tenderness of a mother's love; and the criminal, sullen and morose and fierce under denunciation and duress, break down under words of kindness. Men have been saved from vice, from degradation, and despair, by the knowledge that some one loved them. Oh, yes, we knew the power of love, but we have not even yet recognized that it is the greatest power in our possession. It includes everything. He who loves God and his fellow-men, needs no law to keep him in the path of righteousness. With love supreme in the world, there would be no injustice, nor poverty, nor oppression, nor wars, nor quarrels. It is the universal panacea for the world's woe. When it gains its rightful place in the world, it will supersede all law, all punishments, all reformatory institutions, all charitable organizations, for "when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."

THE C. E. CONVENTION.

The arrangements for the great International Christian Endeavor Convention are now well advanced. It is to be held at Cleveland, O., July 11-15. The Press Committee gives the following description of the main auditorium located at the corner of Wilson and Scovill avenues: It is a square wooden building covered with staff and cost $35,000. It has eight entrances and exits, which will ensure easily and quickly filling and emptying the building. The ventilation is the best. More than one hundred large windows will admit the lake breezes, and keep the temperature well down. The seating will be so arranged that no one will be more than one hundred and twenty-five feet from the speakers. A series of small rooms other. The Park Sisters, with their cornets, and a gentleman famous for his skill with this instrument, have been secured. Famous soloists will sing.

No free entertainment being allowed at Christian Endeavor Conventions, the committee is obtaining accommodations at reasonable rates. The average rate will not exceed $1.50 per day for lodging and board, in private families, and many can be accommodated at lower rates. Hotel rates will vary from $1.50 to $4.00 per day, according to the number of delegates occupying the same room, and to the hotel occupied. Three classes of entertainment will be provided—room only, room and breakfast, and room with three meals. A detailed schedule giving definite prices will be announced later. No reservations of any kind whatever will be made for individuals. Each State has its own excursion manager, and a large number have county or district agents who are under him. If you have a county manager and wish entertainment in a private home, write him. If you have no county manager, write to your State manager, who will make all arrangements for the entire State.

THE Y. W. C. A. AND THE PRINCESS.

A handsome and appropriate gift, of which a picture appears on this page, was made recently by the Young Women's Christian Associations of Great Britain to the newly wedded Duchess of York. She is the wife of the only surviving son of the Prince of Wales, and will, if she and her husband live, be one day Queen of England. The gift is a richly bound Bible, enclosed in work of the Young Women's Christian Associations. It is stated by an English journal of some authority in fashionable matters that this is not the first time Princess May has expressed her sympathy.

AMONG THE ORDERS.

At the Detroit District Epworth League Convention, the report showed that there were in the District thirty-eight Chapters, with a membership of 3,176, and twenty Junior Leagues with a membership of 1,274.

In the New England Southern M. E. Conference there are over one hundred and seventy Epworth and Junior Leagues. The proportion of Juniors is as one to three. These Leagues report over 500 conversions.

Christian Endeavor is making rapid progress in the Midland districts of England. At the annual meeting of the Birmingham and District Union of C. E. Societies, it was reported that twenty-one fresh societies had joined the Union.

Rev. James Harper (Methodist) says that he likes his C. E. Society, "First, because it has made great improvement in definiteness of Christian life in the members; second, because it works better than any other society with which I am acquainted."

The Christian Endeavor Society of Berkeley Temple, Boston, has established a visitors' register, giving the names and addresses of visitors, with the societies from which they come. In the short time the record has been kept, visitors have been recorded from thirteen States, England, and various parts of Canada.

The executive committee of the Christian Endeavor colonial union of New South Wales, have sent a special vote of thanks to the United Society, its officers and trustees, for the Endeavor movement and all it has accomplished. It expressed deep appreciation of the constantly increasing benefits of this work in Australia.

At a recent meeting of the National Executive Committee of English Young Men's Christian Associations, the question of amusements was discussed, and the duty of the Associations in face of the demand for smoking rooms and other concessions. A strong pronouncement was made against the opening of smoke-rooms in the Associations, and the introduction of entertainments of a theatrical character as being most prejudicial and harmful to the work.

The prominent Christian Endeavor native workers, Mr. and Mrs. Karmarkar, have made a tour in Southern Concan, India, greatly strengthening the churches. Mr. Karmarkar writes: "Many were healed, many prejudices were removed through medicine, and many heard the Gospel for the first time from a Hindoo lady."

One hundred men at Rockland have subscribed $10 each for the establishment of a Y.M.C.A. Even in these times of business depression, this was an irresistible appeal to the wealthier business men of the place, who have subscribed nearly $1,000 more. As soon as the needed amount is pledged, the work will be organized with a trained secretary in charge.

The "Congregationalist" gives the following summary of the replies of pastors of Maine to questions asking for the results of their observations as to the Christian Endeavor society: Fifty-four replies were received, and of those sending the replies only one thought the separate organization of the society to be injurious to the church; only one was of the opinion that the pledge was harmful to the religious life of the young people, only one had held that the society had made the young people to prominent in religious work, while all were unanimous in giving an affirmative answer to the question, "Do you cordially endorse the Society of Christian Endeavor?"

THE BIBLE AND CASKET PRESENTED BY THE ENGLISH Y. W. C. ASSOCIATIONS TO H. R. H. THE DUCHESS OF YORK.

for committee meetings, conferences, literature tables, etc., will be provided. One large room will be set aside for "State bulletins." The building will hold 10,000 people. A walk of five minutes or less will bring one to the mammoth tent—the second auditorium. This will be 320 x 190 feet in size and 55 feet high, and will seat another 10,000. This spacious enclosure will be seated with chairs in amphitheatre style, will be lighted with electricity, and in other ways made so attractive that by many it will be preferred to the hall. Two large churches nearby have been secured for overflow meetings. Music Hall, with a seating capacity of five thousand, has been secured in case a meeting is needed in the central part of the city. Eleven of the largest churches in the city have been secured for the Wednesday night meetings.

The music will be led by two choruses, comprising one thousand young people. Mr. Percy S. Foster, of Washington, D.C., who recently led Mr. Moody's great choir of 1700 voices in that city, will be the conductor of one of them, and another good leader, yet to be secured will conduct the a beautifully carved oaken casket. It was presented to the Princess on behalf of the Associations by the Hon. Louisa Kinaird. The Bible is a copy of Bagster's miniature quarto edition, with references, notes, maps and charts. Its binding, in the style of the end of the nineteenth century, is of royal purple morocco, inlaid with rich diaper, crimson and cream: it is adorned with ecclesiastical emblems embossed in gold, and clasps, bearing the Princess' monogram, "V. M., and the coronet are also of gold, pierced and engraved. The edges of the volume are illuminated in front with the monogram and coronet, and on a scroll, above and beneath, are the sentences: "Search the Scriptures," "Thy Word is Truth," "God is Love," and "God is Light," and "Be watchful," "Be zealous." There are richly illuminated vellum pages bearing the record of the dedication. The casket to hold this volume is of exquisite workmanship. With the Bible was a volume containing the autographs of the subscribers to the fund with which the Bible and casket were purchased. The Princess gratefully accepted the gift and expressed her warm sympathy with the Burmah's Wicked Queen.

Soopyah-lat, the Cruel Spouse of Theebaw—A Modern Jezebel.

THEEBAW'S THRONE.

CONSIDERABLE attention in England India, and a large part of Asia has lately been directed to a somewhat remarkable enterprise now being conducted in Burmah under the auspices of the British government. When the notorious king Theebaw fled from Mandalay, his capital, nine years ago, he left behind him a vast amount of treasure including the crown jewels. As very little of the treasure was afterward found, it was generally concluded that he had taken it with him to China, and in the passing years it was apparently forgotten. But quite recently the truth about the missing treasure came out. A private soldier of the English army, on his death-bed, confessed to his officer that he and a comrade, who had been together at the attack on Mandalay in 1885, had "looted" the royal palace, and succeeded in securing the crown, regalia and other valuables belonging to Theebaw and his Queen, Soopyah-lat, and had buried their booty in the earth until they should find a favorable opportunity for removing it. That opportunity never came. The soldier died and his surviving comrade, having surrendered to the government the full information as to the location of the hidden jewels, is now conducting a party of searchers with the object of finding the treasure. Although searches almost innumerable have been made in Mandalay at different times in the last ten years, both by natives and foreigners, the ruby and diamond-studded crown, surmounted by its golden peacock, the emblem of Burmese sovereignty, has never been found.

From all that has come to light concerning Queen Soopyah-lat, she seems to have been a modern Jezebel. Theebaw, who began his public career as a young ruler of great promise, under her malign influence, became a tyrant and a monster. His court was a scene of frightful debauchery, and the brutalities he practiced upon his unresisting subjects were such as to arouse the indignation of the Christian world. All missionary work was forbidden, and the Buddhists (of whose order Theebaw had himself been a monk, before ascending the throne), had paramount influence everywhere. Buddhist monasteries were multiplied and the great pagodas, with their alleged sacred relics, were visited and honored more than in a half century before. The great temple at Rangoon, the Shway Dagohn Payah—"which contains the eight hairs of Buddha Gautama," say the monks—the famous shrine of Pegu and the other noted shrines and temples were crowded with idolatrous devotees. The last vestige of morality was stifled at Theebaw's court, and soon the nation was infected by the excesses of Soopyah-lat who, though queenly and beautiful, was thoroughly depraved. It was a reign that terminated in disaster, disgrace, exile, and death.

When the white troops entered Mandalay, guards were immediately placed at the gates of the palace and the doors of all the royal rooms. But the "looters" had been busy, and in an exceedingly short time had secretly taken not only the crown jewels, but a golden calf of the pure metal, weighing several hundred pounds.

One of the illustrations on this page shows the Burmese throne—a strange conglomeration of exceedingly rich and grotesquely artistic, but useless, workmanship—and the other presents the late king and his chief wives, Soopyah-lat and Soopyahgee. The two were sisters, and during their reign as consorts of royalty, surrounded themselves with all the luxuries that Oriental taste could suggest, and fabulous wealth could procure. Their palaces were marvels of architectural beauty, built of costly teak wood, and richly gilded; they numbered their servants by the hundred, and their personal adornments, especially on gala days, would almost have sufficed to purchase a city. Every collection of gems passing through Burmah was taxed, and the royal "Ruby Room" at Mandalay was famed throughout the East. The sisters' extravagance and excesses, and the brutalities of which they were the instigators, were a very important factor in hastening the downfall of the Burmese monarchy.

Ceylon's Christian Children.

An old sea-captain lately sent a communication to a London religious weekly, in whiter than their pinafores; and I said at the time, if there were no other results from mission money than this, it was worth all the money and toil that had been spent upon them in years past."

Unselfishness.

He was a strange boy. Never reasoned; did everything by instinct or impulse, without consciousness of either. When a child, sat looking out the window or into the fire, seeing the flakes or flames without questioning. Never went to see anyone or anything; saw what came to him, and that was enough; saw a bird fall from the nest, and restored it to the nest; saw a shoeless child one icy day, and went home himself shoeless; stood up when the master demanded who it was had whispered, stood up because the little fellow who had done the whispering was too little for the big stick the big brute used on all alike. This was the boy whom his father pitied, because he saw in him no looking out for Number One; whom his mother loved because she saw in him no need of looking out for Number One, since all the need or use of time to him seemed to be the unconscious living for others which was indeed the best living for himself. What should a boy like this do in a world like this? "Starve to death!" said the wise and prudent. What should a boy like this do in a world like this? "Live!" said the winged ones. "Live forever!"

Health and Outdoor Exercise.

Richard Jeffries, a famous English naturalist, writes as follows on the subject of health and exercise:

"Even since I can recollect, the work done by ladies in country houses was something astonishing—ladies by right of well-to-do parents, by right of education and and past all power of writing; who shall preserve a record of the petals that fell from the rose a century ago? The swallows to the housetop three hundred times—think a moment of that. That loveliness of seventeen is centuries old."

FAITH IN THE BOYS.

"HAVE faith in the boy, not believing That he is the worst of his kind, In league with the army of Satan, And only to evil inclined; But daily to guide and control him, Your wisdom and patience employ, And daily, despite disappointments And sorrow, have faith in the boy.

"Ah! many a boy has been driven Away from home by the thought That no one believed in his goodness, Or dreamed of the battles he fought; So, if you would help him to conquer The foes that are prone to annoy, Encourage him often with kindness, And show you have faith in the boy."

EARLY RISING.

Wrote for a paper some years ago an article insisting that people stay in bed till they get rested, and that only those can be expected to rise early who go to bed early. Several parents tell us that since our article on that subject they have more trouble than ever in getting their boys up in the morning in time for breakfast. Boys, how can you do so? You ought to be spanked. You ought to get up when the rising bell rings. Early worms, etc. You ought to do as your fathers and mothers did when they were boys and girls. Their parents never had any trouble with them. When, in the old farm-house, your grandfather used to knock on the door of your prospective father, he, your father in prospective, would, at the first tap on the door, fling the bed covers against the wall, and give one leap into the middle of the floor, crying,

"Yes, father, I am glad you called me so early." And your mother, that is, your prospective mother, used to spurn the pillow at the first call of your grandmother, and cry out, "Only too glad to come, dear mother, at your first call. Do not trouble yourself to call again;" and before the grandmother had got down stairs your mother prospective was putting the back comb through her coiled ringlets. What a pity it is that the world has so degenerated. Boys, you ought to be ashamed of yourselves. In these days we have to come to your door. At our first call you make no answer. We have to come in and shake you. Then you say "Yes," but do not act. We go down stairs, and, not hearing any stir overhead, we cry, "Are you up?" "Yes," you reply, easing your conscience by saying softly, "Yes, up stairs."

And we call again, and start breakfast without you, and you come down offering headache or a lame knee or a cold as an apology. You know your headache and cold and everything else will be gone as soon as breakfast is over and the present emergency has ceased. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves. Why are you not more affected by your father's and mother's early example? As we remember them, what pinks of perfection they were. So we all were. One reason why we would like to go back and live over again our boyhood days is that we would like to show you how persons should act in the matter of early rising. Ah, we see that would disarrange the ancestral line, and so, as it would not be best for us to go back to boyhood, we must content ourselves by reading the present generation this practical lecture on the way we used to do.

Now, boys, that will do for this time. Run off to your fun. Put in practice to-morrow morning very early what we have said. Meanwhile let us, old and young, reflect upon the fact that more important than this question of getting up early is the question as to what we do after we get up. We know persons who might better have lain abed all day and every day. The more they did, the worse for the world. We wish no one had called them, so they might have slept over which the following affecting incident is related: "I have often heard the question asked, 'Are missions a failure?' I wish to mention three cases of mission work out of many that from time to time come under my notice. After leaving Madras I proceeded to Colombo for a portion of my homeward cargo. During my stay there I was invited by the missionary to go to a Sunday School anniversary about twelve miles from that place. Nothing so pleasing have I ever seen as the Sunday School anniversary at which I had the pleasure of being present in the island of Ceylon. There were about three hundred children, parents, and friends met together under a very rude but very convenient structure. There were the palm trees growing all around and above our heads, upright and bearing fruit, even down to old age; and there were those dear little children, with their dark skins, dressed in white pinafores, as white as snow. I thought to myself, What a picture! I thought of the time when these poor souls were darker than their face; but now, washed in the blood of Jesus, they were made manners . . . Healthy children sprung from such parents, tend toward a refinement of the features. In the fifth generation beauty appears, with the features so moulded and softened by time, so worked and refined and sweetened, so delicate yet so rich in blood, that it seems like a new creation that has suddenly started into being. The fisherman's daughter ere now has reached high in the scale of beauty. Hardihood is the fisherman's talent; the wind, washed by the sea, enriches his blood; he is tribal in his ways, his settlements are almost exclusive, and his descent pure. Here are the same constant factors, the stationary home keeping, the family intact, the outdoor life, the air, the sea, the sun. From the south wind, that breathes over the green wheat; from the perfume of the growing grasses waving over honey-laden clover and laughing veronica, hiding the greenfinches basking the bees. A hundred years of cowslips, bluebells, violets; purple spring and golden autumn; sunshine, shower, and dewy morning, the night immortal; the rhythm of time unrolling. A chronicle unwritten

THE LATE KING THEEBAW AND HIS TWO PRINCIPAL WIVES.

CHAPTER XVI. (Continued.)

I MUST be off in the ten o'clock train, my dear girl," said Mr. Lanier. "As it is I shall find a pile of work that has rolled up like a snow-ball during my twenty-four hours' vacation. Hailloo!"—halting to survey the majestic snow effigy towering higher than his head. "You have a Pequod Michael Angelo, then?"

While she explained, Mrs. Williams slipped unobserved into the house. By the time he was relieved of his overcoat and muffler, and installed in an easy-chair before the roaring fire of hickory-logs, a tap at the door heralded Elspeth and the supper-tray, Mrs. Williams following with the coffee-pot.

In defiance of his remonstrances, the three waited upon him as they might upon a materialized spirit of Christmas. He began by protesting that he had no appetite, having eaten his holiday dinner in the bosom of his family at half-past five o'clock, and it was not yet nine, and had the reward of submission to his sister's solicitations in the discovery that the sharp air of the hills had enkindled and renewed genuine hunger.

"Now, I shall not dare seek my pillow until midnight!" he feigned to bemoan himself, when the remnants of the feast were cleared away, and Mrs. Williams and Elspeth had withdrawn. "I might have known that Elspeth's cookery would tempt me beyond my powers of resistance. I can hardly believe myself really here in body—the 'lark' has been such a veritable impromptu. I was sipping my after-dinner coffee in the library when Virginia regretted to me that she had promised to take the children to a Christmas picnic at her sister's, and my spirit moved suddenly and mightily within me toward my sister. 'My dear,' I said to the best and most reasonable of wives, 'I am strongly tempted to make a rush in another direction—to escape to the mountains, in fact. I have not seen Alice in a month, or the children in three months.' Her countenance cleared up on the instant, and I saw that she had been afraid that I would be pored at her sister's party. Genevieve is a fine woman, but she is not Virginia, and I had a hankering on Christmas night for my own kin and kind. So, here I am."

He looked happy and comfortable in the home he had made luxurious for the sister he loved. The chair in which he leaned back had been his father's; the cushioned stool on which his feet rested had been worked by his mother, and he was a man upon whom the claims of early association were strong. Amid the toils and temptations of such an existence as a successful business career in America entails upon him who pursues it, he had kept a clean heart and pure hands, but the ceaseless grind of the mill had told upon nervous forces. His handsome features were thinned into ethereal refinement; his dark eyes were quick and searching; the masses of brown hair pushed back from his broad forehead showed a white lining at the temples. Still he was a goodly and a stately presence—noble beyond comparison in the sight of her whose earthly saviour he had proved himself in her extreme need. Her eyes lingered fondly upon him; while they talked her hand wandered often to his knee or arm; once he turned to press his lips to it as it rested upon his shoulder. To the world, he was quiet, reserved, and self-contained; his wife and children, and the sister he ranked second only to his Virginia as the embodiment of perfect womanhood, knew the passionate depths of the hidden heart.

She could not weary of telling him what full and exquisite delight the unlooked-for visit had brought to her—"the beautiful outgoing of a perfect day"—she called it. He would have all the particulars of a home-festival, an expression of profound gratification stealing over his face as she spoke of Marie's altered demeanor.

"To be frank with you," he owned, "had I supposed that her engagements would permit her to be with you to-day, I should have hesitated before obeying the spirit-impulse I told you of. The sight of me can hardly be agreeable to her, poor child!"

Without thinking why they did it, they all called the proud, self-reliant girl that, when she was not present to be irked by their pity.

"I have heard no better news in a month of Sundays than that she is coming to herself. It is not a matter of moment that she should do my motives justice; it is a great satisfaction to look forward to the time when she shall know you, her mother, as you are, and appreciate at its true value the tender forbearance displayed toward her by you when you were yourself so sadly in need of all the love and sympathy your children could give you. I used to think, Alice, that the workman in the stony field of the world must wait until nightfall before receiving his recompense. At fifty, I am beginning to learn that if he be observant, he gets many an earnest, as he goes along, of what the final reward will be. I wish I had been on the look-out earlier. I have missed tokens which I ought to have picked up of the 'largesse' flung to his subjects by the King in passing."

"Good old Dr. George Junkin said to me once," replied his sister, "that one key to the enigma of the Father's apparently severe dealings with his children is that sin, by its very nature, must entail suffering upon the transgressor, and since there are no punitive fires in the world to come for his beloved, the chastening requisite for the purification and healthful spiritual growth must be borne here. I believe firmly that we, too, frequently miss the benefit we might gain from what you speak of as earnest of the 'reserved' treasure at which St. Peter hints. We make too little of everyday joys, of daily deliverance, of sparkles of happiness, and glimpses of beauty granted to us—not by accident, but as really 'sent' to us as the fall of manna was sent to the Israelites. What wealth of spiritual instruction there is in that story of the manna! 'He that had gathered much had nothing over, and he that had gathered little had no lack,' provided the gathering was according to the word of the Lord. It was only the hoard secreted for the morrow that spoiled into offensiveness."

Roger patted her shoulder, the corners of his mustache twitching roguishly:

"I catch the hoof-beats of your hobby, my dear! Don't rein him in on my account. I may have laughed at him and at you, in a half-hearted way, sometimes, but often and often, when I have lain awake into the small hours, revolving this scheme of adding to my store, or anticipating the dreadful details of threatening losses to me, and to others who trusted in my sagacity, I have bethought myself of your Royal Road, and acknowledged that its ways are the ways of pleasantness and all its paths are peace. If I had my life to live over again, I would curb imagination, and deny myself some of the pleasures of anticipation for the sake of knowing that peace. I would try to take God at his word, and cast at least a few tons of this load of daily care upon him who careth for me. Even for me!" he added, dreamily, with bowed head. "Even for me!"

He passed his hand over his eyes and roused to a livelier tone.

"I do not know twelve lines of poetry in all, but two of the dozen sang and hummed themselves in my ears to a sleigh-bell accompaniment all the way from Peddington. They are part of an old song our father liked to hear you sing:—

I know thou wilt not slight my call
For thou dost mark the sparrow's fall

Would it awaken the children if you were to run it over for me now?"

Her answer was to arise and go to the piano Marie had left open. Elspeth, hobnobbing over the kitchen fire with Mrs.

Williams, set the dining-room door ajar that they might hear more distinctly the rich, vibrant notes that swelled and soared through the silent chambers and empty halls:

Rocked in the cradle of the deep,
I lay me down in peace to sleep:
Secure I rest upon the wave,
For, thou, oh, Lord! I have power to save.
I know thou wilt not slight my call
For thou dost mark the sparrow's fall,
So calm I lay me down to sleep,
Rocked in the cradle of the deep.

And such the trust that still were mine
Though blasting winds swept o'er the brine,
And 'though the tempest's fiery breath
Wake me from slumber to pain and death:—
Secure in ocean's cave with thee,
The germ of immortality,
Peaceful I lay me down to sleep,
Rocked in the cradle of the deep.

When the singer resumed her seat, Mr. Lanier laid his hand upon hers.

"Thank you!" he said. "When we join the everlasting song, I shall lower my voice to listen for yours. I think I should recognize it in the Hallelujah Chorus itself."

We've lived and loved together,
Through many changing years,

"Sweet sister! (There go two more of my dozen!) In all those years and through all the changes they have wrought, have we ever exchanged a sharp word, or had a hard thought of one another?"

"Never!" she said, earnestly.

"That is pleasant to think of while we are alive upon the earth. It would be a consolation to the one left behind when the other is yet more alive in the house where changes never come. While I am in the confessional—with a little laugh—"I may as well admit that I would have been a healthier Christian had I taken and enjoyed the snatches of rest thrown into my way on the journey up-hill, instead of eating and sleeping in harness, and giving up an hour or so of Sunday, and more than an hour or so of the time that should have been spent every night in folding the hands together in slumber, in longing for eternal rest. One verse I do know by heart. I should be hopelessly stupid if I did not having repeated it some hundreds of times in the heat of the day's battle and in the night when sleep forsook my eyelids:

Oh, land of Rest, for thee I sigh!
When will the moment come,
When I shall lay my armor by
And be in thee at home?

A man gets so tired! So tired!"

"Every buckle and strap of that same armor ought to be let out," Mrs. Paul said decidedly. "Dear Roger! is such incessant toil imperative at your age, and in your circumstances? Surely you have accumulated enough to warrant this?"

"That is not the question. Riches are a responsibility, no less than a care—a responsibility one cannot delegate to another. For money—for the money's worth—I would not give that!"—snapping his fingers. "As a means of doing good, of conferring happiness, of ensuring the comfort of those I love; of enhancing the prosperity of the community in which I have made my fortune—its value cannot be overstated."

"I did not come here to talk of money and money-making, but before quitting the subject—there will be a desk in my office for Lanier when he is ready to take it. My elder boys being girls, it will be fifteen years before Roger, Jr., will be eligible for such a position. Shall we—you and I—live to read the style of the firm—'Lanier & Son'—do you think?"

"It is altogether probable. Our father lived to be seventy-three."

"It is a long time to look ahead!" with a weary intonation.

"Happily there is no need to do it,—breaking off merrily. 'The hoof-beats' again! The present is so affluent of mercies that I have no temptation to forecast the future, further than to thank you for your generous designs towards my boy. I can promise that he will serve you faithfully, to the best of his ability. He cannot serve you too well. He knows and feels this."

At eleven o'clock, hearing Elspeth moving about, shutting up the house, her mistress called her and Mrs. Williams into the sitting-room. Mr. Lanier sat at the table with the Family Bible open before him—reverent and dignified, as titled the patriarchal office.

"The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord," he read, "and he delighteth in His way."

"Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand."

"I have been young and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."

He did not finish the Psalm; closing the book upon the thirty-seventh verse:

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace."

Perhaps he did not care, on Christmas night, to direct his thoughts and those of his auditors to the antithetical doom of transgressors. His face was all peace as the tour arose from their knees after the brief prayer, direct and devout, that committed the household and all dear to it to the Father's loving care.

"Your visit is the postscript to a love letter for us all, from him who was born in Bethlehem," said Mrs. Williams, in shaking hands with him for the night. "He sent you—straight!"

"I hope so!" reverently. "But the benefit is chiefly mine. I am younger by ten years than when I left New York. Mrs. Paul has a private cellar at Pinehurst where she keeps the Elixir of Life 'on tap.' You have been treated to it, I see, Mrs. Williams. I am glad to see you looking so well. Good night! Christmas dreams to you, Elspeth!"

When his sister came back to the sitting-room after a conference in the hall with Elspeth, he was standing by the hearth, examining a photograph of Marie taken from the mantle.

"There is capital stuff in that girl," he said, kindly. "You will get a world of comfort out of her yet. Wrap yourself up warmly, and take a turn on the piazza before going to bed, if you are not too weary. I shall sleep the better for an ozone night-cap."

The weather had moderated sensibly since the sun went down. Plumes of pale vapor were streaming up slowly from behind the hills; about the moon, round as a shield and riding high in the zenith, was flung a vast halo, glittering with faintly prismatic crystals of snow.

"A far-off halo, a near-hand storm!" quoted Roger, drawing his sister's hand into his arm. "I hope it will be snow, and not rain, as my sleigh has no top. Yet a heavy snow-fall upon that which is already on the ground, would be no joke to a man who must be in New York at eleven o'clock to-morrow morning. And there is no telegraph-station nearer than Peddington!"

He looked so perturbed that Mrs. Paul tendered a morsel of comfort.

"Should you be snow-bound—and I don't believe you will be—a day of country-rest—winter-rest—would do you a world of good. I am not sure that there could be a better prescription for you, and other jaded men of affairs, than to be weather-locked for a solid week in a country-house. It would loosen the nerve-tension efficaciously."

"And loosen the credit-tension yet more effectually! No, my dear, I must stand in my office at eleven-thirty to-morrow, weather or no weather. Some exigencies are inexorable, and the law calling a business-man to his post out-Dracos Draco."

"Borrowing trouble again, you will say! I will take the present pleasure without courting to-morrow's shadow. I am conscious at this precise instant of nothing but that I was a wonderfully clever fellow to plan this frolic, and that I am more than satisfied with the result of it."

"What a benignant air your snow-sentinel wears in the moonlight! He really startled me, as we drove up to the porch; his attitude was so life-like and imposing. Do you recollect Hawthorne's charming story of 'The Snow Image,' and the scolding we got from our nurse one stormy afternoon for stealing out into the back-yard to build a little girl like that which the mother saw running about in the garden with her daughters? How we believed in things, then! There is no fiction in Child-World. There is a large hospitality in the outstretch of your Santa Claus' massive arm, and his beard is a stroke of genius. It would not surprise me out of my wits if our venerable friend were to break loose from his moorings and fall into step with us."

Chatting, now jestingly, now seriously, they paced up and down for a good half-hour, watching the rising mists gather form and opaqueness, as they invaded the clear ether of the upper heavens. The horizon lines were blurred, and in the extreme distance, blotted out; the moon grew wan and watery; there was a nearing change in the Christmas-weather. Boding murmurs ran from bough to bough of the ermined pines; occasionally a deep, irregular growl, like subterranean thunder, shuddered to them from the ice-bound lake—the struggle for freedom of imprisoned winds entrapped through some "breathing-hole" far up the gorge, and aroused to rebellion by the indications of approaching warfare in the free air above the dungeon.

(To be Continued.)

A Life Spent for Christ.

(Continued from first page.)

In 1878, when seventy-three years old, and at a time when most men would have thought of laying aside permanently the burden of their life-work, Dr. Thomson returned from Palestine to America; but he did not return to rest. In his long career in the East, he had devoted much time and attention to archaeological research, and had made personal investigation not only of nearly all the "holy places" and noteworthy localities in Syria, but had examined countless records and succeeded in unearthing much information that was both new and valuable. In 1858, he had published the results of earlier investigations in "The Land and the Book," in two volumes, and this work—the product of nearly thirty years' residence amid the scenes he describes, and written with the surrounding inspiration of the places which, of all that are in the world, are the dearest to the Christian heart—attained a popularity secured by very few publications of like character. Its leading merit, as conceded by scholars and students everywhere, is that it associates the Holy Land with the Bible, in a connection that is intimate and indissoluble. Its descriptions are both vivid and truthful, its scholarship of the ripest and the circumstances, facts, and conclusions it states with careful detail are accepted as the accurate result and outcome of a wise personal observation and a wide experience. "The Land and the Book" gave internal evidence that the author had both seen and felt what he wrote, and every line had life and truthfulness. The real value to the world of such experience was simply stated by Dr. Thomson in his preface. He wrote:

In many departments of Biblical literature the student in Europe or America, surrounded by ample libraries, is in a better situation to carry on profitable inquiry than the pilgrim in the Holy Land, however long his sojourns or extended his rambles. But it is otherwise in respect to the scenes and the scenery of the Bible, and to the living manners and customs of the East which illustrate that blessed Book. Here the actual observer is needed, not the distant and secluded student.

His enthusiasm had not died out at seventy-three, when he undertook to revise and re-edit his great literary work, which had now become a standard throughout the English-speaking Christian world. This was in 1878, and the next dozen years were devoted to the revision. While the book gained in fulness of detail and ripeness of judgment, as well as in the results of recent explorations in Palestine, there was no possibility that age could add lustre to the brilliant tone and fine enthusiasm that were characteristic of the earlier editions. As a whole, it stands as a monument of Christian scholarship, whose popularity has increased rather than diminished with the advancing years. Dr. Thomson has also written several other works, including: "The Land of Promise" and "Travels in Modern Palestine," and has contributed articles to the "Bibliotheca Sacra" and the "American Bible Repository."

Beyrouth, the scene of Dr. Thomson's principle labors in the East, is a very ancient city and is believed to be identical with the Berothah or Berothai of the Bible. It is known to have been destroyed and rebuilt one hundred and forty years before the Christian era. In a rocky ravine near the city are inscriptions in Greek, Roman, Assyrian and Egyptian, commemorating the occupation of the country by the armies of those different nations. The Assyrian sculptors are supposed to date back at least 2,500 years and the Egyptian still farther. Beyrouth was probably never so populous or prosperous as now, its greatest advance being since the establishment of the missions there. All the Christian nations have vied with each other in providing educational advantages, and the proportion of illiterate persons is smaller than in any other part of Syria. More money, energy and consecrated effort have been expended in missionary work there than in any other city of similar population in the entire East.

A MASSACHUSETTS REVIVAL.

Major Whittle has been Holding Services for two weeks in Everett, Mass. The meetings have been of marked spiritual power. The evangelist's expositions of Scripture have been especially appreciated. The converts number nearly one hundred.

Feeding the Sick.

In many instances invalids are restricted by physician to easily digestible food, usually boiled or sterilized milk is prescribed. In such cases the value of Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream, or unsweetened condensed milk is apparent. Prepared by N. Y. Condensed Milk Co.

THE OPEN DOOR.

BEHOLD! the open door,
Behold, O heart of sin!
There Jesus stands, with loving voice
And calls you to come in,
Why will you still delay,
And waste God's precious light?
Behold the harvest draweth near,
And dark will be the night.

Look at his bleeding feet,
And listen to his voice,
For though thy burdens heavy be
He makes thee to rejoice,
For sorrows never come
In that eternal home,
If we but trust in him, we'll rest
And nevermore shall roam.

There is a peaceful rest,
To burdened sinners given,
And if we suffer here below,
We find that rest in heaven. —G.

A COREAN CONVERT.

In an interesting report from Rev. Samuel A. Moffett to the Presbyterian Mission Board is the following incident which occurred during his stay at Pyeng Yang in Corea, whither he went, as he says, like a missionary nomad to open up a new field:

Those who venture to attend our services have to bear much contemptuous treatment, and are exposed to much annoyance in the way of petty persecution. They are roundly abused for being unfilial, since it is known that Christians give up ancestral worship, and they are warned that they are likely to lose their heads. One man, with whom I have the deepest sympathy, is having a hard struggle. He is an innkeeper and also a merchant, but has been a great drunkard and gambler. He is well known throughout the entire region, and has a respectable position among the Koreans. He accepted Christianity boldly, and thus became a marked man. He was the victim of practical jokes, ridicule and abuse. He took this all good naturedly and held on, but has had a hard battle with his temptations to drink. His former friends conspire to secure his fall, and beset him continually with temptations, insisting that he must drink with them, according to Korean custom, and accusing him of being false to his friends in refusing. He has often fled to my room to escape from yielding to their importunities, and has sought strength here in prayer. He has sometimes fallen, much to his own sorrow and my grief, but the Lord is helping him, and the victory is sure. The change in him is so great that his wife and brother, although they call him "crazy," and ridicule him for becoming a Christian, yet rejoice in his reformation, and look upon us as having done them the greatest favor in leading him to forsake his evil ways. His conversion has been talked about far and near, so that the Gospel has been brought to the attention of many who would otherwise have been indifferent.

PRAYING FOR A MISSIONARY.

In the course of a recent missionary journey in Siam, undertaken by Dr. Dunlap, and described in the "Church at Home and Abroad," he found whole provinces in which there was no missionary, but where there were here and there native Christians who had been converted in other provinces. He says: "At Panga we took a small coast steamer, commanded by a Malay, for the Trang Province, about 100 miles south. We were very sorry to have to pass by one Siamese Province. On our arrival at Trang we began work at the capital, and then took a canoe up the river, working in towns by the way, until we reached the main market town of the province, where we spent some delightful days in publishing the truth. The second Governor of the Province gave us free lodging in a Chinese hotel. The people received us very kindly. In this town we were glad to find an earnest Christian merchant, a Chinaman who was converted in Hong Kong. He was joyful because of our visit, and accompanied us in our work, giving up his business for the time that he might enjoy the preaching. He told us that he had been praying for seven years that Christian missionaries might be sent to the province, and now realized that his prayers had been answered. He begged us to remain, offering to contribute for our support in the work, but we could only assure him that we would try to return next year. It gave us sorrow to leave him, and he was so sorry to have us go that he accompanied us twenty miles down the river, still entreating us to remain, and the following day walked twelve miles to bid us good-bye, bringing with him a lot of provisions to help us on our way. Pray for this one Christian on the coast."

A HARVEST SABBATH.

The baptism of twenty-four adult converts in a village in the Laos country on a recent Sunday, is described by Dr. James W. McKean of Chieng-Mai, in a letter to the "Church at Home and Abroad." It appears that two months before the letter was written, a request was received from the village that a teacher be sent, as two families had heard of the Gospel from a native convert and desired further instruction. An evangelist was sent and learned that the convert referred to, was a man who had received medical attention at the mission hospital and had carried the Gospel message to his neighbors. The evangelist labored for two months and at the end of that time had twenty-four persons as candidates for baptism. They were examined and gave answers which surprised the missionary by their intelligence as well as sincerity. All were baptized and there are still more inquirers who are expecting to be baptized shortly. Dr. McKean adds: Thus one Christian home in the darkness of that heathen village has, by the divine blessing, been the centre from which the leaven spread, permeating and giving life to a large portion of the village, and the end is not yet. What may we not expect to reap from the seed so constantly sown in other places in all the years past. Surely God has great things in store for his Church in this Laos land.

Afflicted With Boils

Hood's Sarsaparilla Clears the Blood and Gives Health.

"Large boils broke out all over my face and neck. Different medicines did not effect a cure. I was at last advised to try Hood's Sarsaparilla regularly and faithfully. I yielded to his advice, and when I had taken three bottles, my face and neck were free from all eruptions. I have been perfectly cured and am now in excellent health, and confidently say that Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful blood purifier."

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

A. J. DAVENPORT, Milton, New Jersey.

Hood's Pills cure all liver ills, biliousness, jaundice, indigestion, sick headache. 25c.

PARSONS PILLS.

Make New Rich Blood.
"Best Liver Pill Made"

Positively cure BILIOUSNESS and SICK HEADACHE, Liver and Bowel Complaints. They expel all impurities from the blood. Delicate women find great benefit from using them. Price 25 cts. five $1.00. Full particulars free. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., 22 Custom House St. Boston, Mass.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Tubular Ear Cautions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold only by F. H. SOX, 853 E. 7th St., N.Y. Write for book of proof FREE.

RUBBER ROOFING

$2.00—Per 100 square feet—$2.00
State size of roof and will mail sample free.

GEO. E. GLINES, 42 West Broadway, N.Y.

On the face and back of every card of genuine
DeLong PATENT HOOKS AND EYES will be found the words:

See that

hump?

TRADE-MARK REG. APR. 19-92.

Richardson
& De Long Bros.,
Philadelphia.

DONGOLA, SOLID LEATHER, PERFECT-FITTING.

This shoe is controlled by us exclusively and cannot be obtained elsewhere.

It is worth Three Dollars and far superior to the unreliable Shoes often sold by mail. Sizes, 1 to 8, Common Sense or Opera Toe, and Opera with Patent Leather Tips; widths, C, D, E, E.E. We guarantee the shoe and will refund the money to any one who for any reason is dissatisfied. We can point, however, to thousands who stay by us because we do just as we agree. Sent express prepaid for $1.47. Let us send you "Shoe Facts," Free. You will find us and the shoe at 1088 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

MOOAR BROTHERS.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate WHITE BRONZE. It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
76-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

? Why?
Look Like This

DENT'S TOOTHACHE CUM

STOPS TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY (GUARANTEED)
Don't TAKE IMITATIONS. All dealers, or send 10c to
C. S. DENT & CO., DETROIT, M.

$17 Self-Regulating, INVINCIBLE HATCHER
Does not hatch as well as any hatcher made. Send 4c. for No. 60 Catalogue to BUCKEYE INCUBATOR CO. Springfield, O.

No local dealer can compete with us in variety or price. Our new designs and colorings are handsomer this year than ever before.

Our "Guide How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration," mailed free with samples.

Beautiful Gold Paper, 5c. per Roll.
We carry the largest stock in the country, and can save you 50 per cent. on every roll of paper you buy. No matter where you live, if you have any use for wall paper, send 10c. to nearest address to pay postage on a large package of samples. One good agent or paper hanger wanted in each town to sell from sample books, price $1.00.

ALFRED PEATS,
80-82 W. 18th St., 166-184 W. Madison St.,
NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

LOOK AT THE CROOK

Not a stitch in the web
The hold of a vice
Not a tear—Not a cut

SECURITY HOSE SUPPORTER

Sold Everywhere—Made by Warner Bros., N.Y. and Chicago.

"The best is, aye, the cheapest."

Avoid imitations of and substitutes for

SAPOLIO

UNIQUE POETRY.*

HEBREW poetry is entirely destitute of metre. It has often been supposed by scholars that they had detected what could be called rhythm, but however ingenious their theories none ever won general support or even any considerable following. The lack of vibratory movement of syllables and feet in the several words is compensated by a corresponding arrangement of clauses, called parallelism. Each separate utterance, whether narrative, doctrinal, ethical, or devotional, is thrown into an antithetical, form and thus is made a couplet or a triplet or an integral verse consisting of four, five, or six lines. The second line is often only a repetition of the first in other terms, or an utterance of its contrast, or an illustrative supplement to it, or an exceptive caution. Thus everywhere the poem is built up of members which balance each other; and they do this not because the logical development of thought require it, but because this is the established form of political composition. The same peculiarity is found in the remains of Egyptian and Assyrian literature, but not so well defined nor so fully developed as among the Hebrews. The peculiarity, apparently so arbitrary, is an immense advantage to the translator into a different language. The musical rhythm of the classic poets cannot be adequately rendered into other tongues. The sense may be given, but the charm of melody and form evaporates. Not so with the Hebrew muse. The forms into which it casts its passionate thought can be exactly reproduced even in languages at the farthest remove from kinship to what is oriental, such as our own.

The parallelism has been needlessly disregarded in the Authorized Version and in nearly all other modern translations. And it is worthy of careful attention, not only as a key to the meaning of what is ambiguous but also as showing the salient points of a passage in their true relation, and often greatly enhancing the beauty and force of the thought. "The amplifications of a given point are like the echoes of a solemn melody, the repetitions of it like a landscape reflected in the stream." As Dean Stanley says, "The rapid stroke as of alternate wings, the heaving and sinking as of the troubled heart, which have been beautifully described as the essence of the parallel structure of Hebrew verses are exactly suited for the endless play of human feeling and for the understanding of every age and nation."

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

When the average American boy "completes his education" in high school, academy, or college, what can he do for the world, either mentally or physically, that will be of service, and at the same time give him economic support? How can he stamp the regulation stock of learning, which he has acquired into the coinage of society? If he is unable to do this it will soon decay

*From Anti Higher Criticism or Testimony to the Infallibility of the Bible, a series of articles by Prof. Howard Crosby, W. Henry Green, Wm. G. Moore, and others. They are the papers read at the Conference at Asbury Park last year, which was arranged and managed by Dr. L. W. Munhall, who edits this book. The papers were designed to show that the eminent scholars who have been generally known as "the Higher Critics" were mistaken in the conclusions at which they have arrived. The extract given here is from a paper on The Book of Psalms, by Rev. Talbot W. Chambers, D.D., LL.D. The entire book contains 154 pages and is sold at $1.50. Published by Hunt & Eaton, New York.

From The Political Economy of Natural Law, by Henry Wood. Pp. 16. Cloth covers, price $1.25. Lee and Shepard, Boston, publishers.

For Over-Indulgence

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

"Thank your head in the morning after a night's hard labor and take Horsford's Acid Phosphate for speedy relief."

Good News for Asthmatics.

We observe that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, known to be a sufferer from Asthma. As before announced, this new discovery is a positive cure for Asthma. You can make trial of the Kola Compound free by addressing a postal card to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, who are sending out large trial cases free by mail, to sufferers.

from lack of exercise. As before noted, only a minority of college graduates can find places in the "professions," with journalism and teaching included.

But what of the much larger number who conclude their course of study with the common or high school, and then wish to enter the active duties of life? They find the available fields of activity all filled to repletion, and are unable to get a foothold. Pride and lack of opportunity then forbid them to begin to learn the rudiments of any industrial trade or handicraft.

The American boy after the completion of his school course finds himself stranded. He has reached high-water mark and deterioration begins. He cannot utilize the kind of education he has received; and being unable to find occupation suited to his tastes and abilities, he soon drifts toward idleness and inefficiency. Even if of affluent family he is in reality much more helpless than his foreign-born associate who has been bred to manual effort. In addition to a false pride and a spurious social standard, the American boy has to contend with lack of opportunity and an education which is a misfit.

It is certain that manual training and trade schools, established and made efficient by the State, would greatly aid in the accomplishment of two most desirable objects. It would, in a measure, supply the missing education that has been lost through modern conditions and the decay of apprenticeship, and also greatly ennoble and dignify manual employment. It would furnish a potent remedial agency for the idleness and degeneration which are becoming so serious and prevalent.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

A Complete Catalogue of the Latest Novelties in Seeds, Bulbs and Plants, and new, rare, and beautiful flowers for home adornment, for the spring of 1894; issued by J. Roscoe Fuller & Co., Floral Park, N. Y. 48 pp. Copiously illustrated; a handy and practical guide to flower, seed and bulb buyers everywhere.

O'NEILL'S

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street,
New York.

SPECIAL 300 Pieces of Black Silks

Reserved for our Mail Order Customers.

100 Pieces of Black Gros Grain.

22	Sample.	1.25	Extra Quality, worth $1.75.
inch

100 Pieces Black Armure Royal.

23	Sample.	1.25	Reversible, and worth $1.75.
inch

100 Pieces Black Peau De Soie.

22	Sample.	1.50	Reversible, and worth $2.00.
inch

An enlarged Circular with samples attached will be mailed free on application.

H. O'NEILL & CO.,

6th Ave., 20th to 21st st., New York.

Summer Vacation

described in a new illustrated book "SUMMER HOMES AMONG THE GREEN HILLS OF VERMONT AND ALONG THE SHORES OF LAKE CHAMPLAIN," containing selected addresses of the best family homes for entertaining Summer Guests at prices from $4 to $10 per week, also list of finest hotels with prices and Excursion Rates. Out-door pleasures, fishing, boating, climate and scenery, all unexcelled.

Mailed free on application to

A. W. ECCLESTONE or S. W. CUMMINGS,
S. P. A., 353 H'way, New York. G. P. A., St. Albans, Vt.

Send it Back

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 440 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Colored Dress Linens AND Colored Linen Ducks.

Ladies' Costumes of these materials will be very fashionable for mountain and seashore this Summer.

An importation, just received this week, direct from Belfast, contains the newest and choicest colors: Natural, Lemon, Tan, Navy, Butcher-Blue, Lavender, Nile, Reseda, Pink, and Azure.

These, with a large selection of Galatea and Homespun Cloths, all of the latest and best, are now displayed in our Linen Department on the main floor.

James McCreery & Co.,

BROADWAY & 11th STREET,
NEW YORK.

GEO. A. FRENCH,

62 NASSAU ST., IMPORTER OF Cor. Maiden Lane, New YORK.

DIAMONDS.

Manufacturer of Diamond Jewelry. If you contemplate purchasing any article in Diamond Jewelry should be pleased to hear from you. A full line of Diamonds mounted in artistic designs, always on hand. Goods sent with privilege of returning if not satisfactory and money refunded.

Swiss Lozenges, For curing Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, &c. Price, 25 cts. per Box Mailed. H. EDWARD WENDEL, S. E. cor. 3d and George Streets, Philadelphia

$1000. for MS. LIFE OF CHRIST

Desiring to secure a Life of Christ of superior merits for young people, we here by offer ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS for the best MS., as stated below. If he lived and taught in our streets to-day, that the reader may catch the truest and highest conception of the revelation of God in Christ, and of God's ideal life to bring the reader into such close, loving relationship with him as to care only for his companionship. The fulness of it all to be "one" with him, as he is one with the Father. To be changed from glory to glory in his glorious presence. To make the Christian life joyous, majestic, conquering. SPECIFICATIONS.—MS. must be received by Oct. 1st, not over 60,000 words nor less than 40,000. Not merely a descriptive life, but a story in which the experiences of the supposed characters bring them into intimate relations with Christ and his disciples, his circumstances, experiences and teachings. Style, simple and plain, such as will hold the interest of children from eight years and upwards. PARTICULARS.—Each MS. numbered as received. Receipt acknowledged to the author, with number given. Manuscripts submitted, without names of authors, to three judges. Judgment based upon merit as stated. Payment on completion of examinations, and not later than October 30th. WHY UNDERTAKE THE BOOK.—It is not a long one. Most books are written first and a publisher sought afterwards. You have the additional chance of securing a good price for the book from us. As the time is short, many cannot compete. Few at this season can spare time. A choice book of this kind will always meet with ready sale. There is nothing now in the market which fills the place. Further particulars and suggestions on application. Address: MS. and communications to "Book Department, DAVID C. COOK PUBLISHING CO., 36 Washington St., Chicago."

(An Eleemosynary Institution, incorporated by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio.) Ample endowed. Entire income devoted to instruction. Furnishes a complete Education in Vocal and Instrumental Music, Literature, Elocution and Oratory. Large corps of able and experienced Professors. Open throughout the year. Summer Term—June, July, August. Students can enter any day. Normal Classes, Chorus Classes, Prima Viola Classes, Ensemble Classes, Orchestra Classes, Lectures, Behaviors, Recitals, &c., are among the free privileges. SPECIAL DEPARTMENT for Teachers of Music in the Public Schools. Send for Catalogue. PETER RUDOLPH NEFF, President.

A Day With Birds and Flowers,

New Songs, Recitations, Hymns, Scripture Readings. A BEAUTIFUL 16 PAGE SERVICE, Floral Praise No. 12, FOR CHILDREN'S DAY, By HUBERT P. MAIN. $4 per 100; 5 cents each by mail.

THE BICLOW & MAIN CO. 76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago

CHILDREN'S DAY Summer Blossoms, —5 cts. ea. Sunshine, —3 cts. ea. The Children's King, —5 cts. ea. Grateful Offerings, —5 cts. ea. Gems for His Crown, —5 cts. ea. Five excellent services complete with Carols, Hymns, Recitations and Readings. Send 20 cts. in stamps for samples of the five. Cantata: FATHER TIME. For young people, very fine, price 30 cts. SEND THE LIGHT. A missionary service, price 5 cts. Geo. F. Roche & Co., 940 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps.)

THE HUMAN HAIR, Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F.R.A.S. London D. G. LONG & CO., 103 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. "Every one should read this little book."—Athenaeum

ADDRESS ON IMPROVING THE MEMORY MAILED FOR TEN CENTS MEMORY LIBRARY 243 BROADWAY NEW YORK

WALL PAPERS We will mail you a beautiful line of samples and book of instructions how to paper. We retail at wholesale prices. Agents and paper-hangers send $1.00 for large books. G. B. BRADLEY, 704 Grand Ave., New Haven, Conn.

JAPANESE GEORGE MULLER.

Jji Ishii, a Poor Youth Who Has Become a Great Christian Benefactor.

HEREVER Christianity extends, noble natures are found who by consecrated energy and unswerving devotion to the cause of Christ, make their light to shine so that all men may know that their faith is producing fruit in the saving and guiding of other souls to the truth. In a recent letter to the "Christian Alliance and Foreign Missionary Weekly," Rev. H. Lomis, a Missionary in Japan, tells this most interesting story:

Jji Ishii was born in the Province of Fuga, about thirty years ago. While still a boy his attention was called to Christianity by a picture of the Crusades in a book of history. At the early age of fifteen, he was married to one who has been a real helper to him in his spiritual life. He afterward left his native province and removed to Cayama. Up to that time he had never read the Bible, but he had learned from a Christian doctor the fundamentals. In 1884, he read of the gifts of $2.00 each from an old man and woman in America to Dr. Nishima for the establishment of a Christian college in Japan. That these poor people should thus contribute of their small means for the spread of the Gospel in a distant land, and among a strange people, was a new and most impressive thought to him. And from that time he sought how he might devote his life to others. With this end in view, he at once opened at his own expense an old Shinto shrine in his native town of Takaneba a night school for poor children. This was kept up for four years. Then he says that it was not the money alone which was required; for as often as he forgot to pray in Okayama for the success of the school, he was sure to get a letter saying, "The school is running down." Then there was earnest prayer, and soon the message would come, "All goes well." And it was not once, but many times. He found plenty of profitable work in the line of his contemplated profession, but lost no opportunity to preach the Gospel. In this way while yet a student several of his patrons and friends were induced to embrace Christianity.

In December, 1884, Rev. George Muller came to Japan and told the story of what God had enabled him to accomplish. When Jji Ishii learned of this wonderful work, his mind filled with a new and powerful impulse. From the account of Mr. Muller he came to understand as never before the "living Heavenly Father," and his love, and he then committed his life and all to his service. He rented part of a large temple, and moving into it with his family in September, 1887, quietly opened his asylum. He began with no resources but his faith in God and his own resolute spirit. The institution has grown steadily in numbers, influence and good works. It has passed through many trials, but they have only served to strengthen one's faith in the spiritual verities of life. It has not infrequently been reduced to the last strain; but the prayer of faith has brought relief, and sometimes just at the moment of their need. Mr. Ishii has never refused shelter to any needy applicant. He only does he provide for the bodily wants of those who can come under his care. He has been especially efficient in imparting to these unfortunate ones the same helpful trust. They go out in bands with trumpet and flag, like the Salvation Army, to tell the people in various towns and villages that there is a God in heaven who loves all his creatures; and if they will but repent and forsake their sins, he will bless and save their souls. As the number of children has increased, donations have multiplied, until they have now land and buildings of their own and suited to their wants. The branch asylum at Nagoya has been removed to Okayama, and there are three hundred children gathered from various parts of the country as the result of the faith and love and zeal of this one devoted man. There is no fund for their support, and no nations are solicited by Mr. Ishii himself for the maintenance of this work. But he and the children ask of God for the gifts that are needed, and in one way or another their daily wants are supplied.

THE LAOS MARTYRS.

The end of a ruler who undertook to exterminate Christianity in his dominions by killing any of his subjects who became converts, is described by Dr. McGilvary of the Laos country in his report to the Presbyterian Board. He says: The crowds that came to the mission in Laos at its very inception, and the boldness of the first converts in embracing the Gospel, showed a secret power that the viceroys could not understand, and suggested to him the plan of stopping it in its early stages. His religious zeal, combined possibly with political motives urged upon him by enemies, where the probable causes which led him to make martyrs of the converts. It was his design to compel us to leave, but people who were willing to die for the Gospel were not the ones to be deserted. An audience was held with the Chief before the whole Laos court. When the martyrdom was alluded to by one of our party the rage of the Viceroy knew no bounds. "Yes, he had killed the Christians, and would execute any of his people who became Christians. The missionaries might stay to doctor the people, or make merit in any other way, but rebellion against his god would be treated as rebellion against himself." All the court was alarmed at his rage. The audience closed. Nothing was accomplished. Apparently the mission must be relinquished. Our Laos friends were alarmed for our own safety. Next day the writer of this article called alone upon the Chief, and had a private interview. He was evidently a little anxious lest he had gone too far, and readily consented, and even advised us to remain till his return from Bangkok, for which trip his preparations were nearly complete. That gave what we wanted,—time to wait the development of Providence. In Bangkok he had an apoplectic attack. His friends were anxious that he should die in his own capital, but only his remains reached it. We had permission to remain till his return. So we are still there, even to the present hour, by the consent and advice of one who martyred Nai Sunyah and Nan Chai.

A SERMON IN A GUN-WAD.

A part of one of Dr. Talmage's printed sermons played an important part in a trial for murder in Texas recently. From a report in the "News" of Dallas, Tex., it appears that the trial took place at Canton, Tex., on April 20, and ended with the conviction of the accused. The evidence was wholly circumstantial. The murdered man had been shot at night as he stood on the gallery of his own house. Suspicion fell on a man named Coker, who was known to bear the dead man ill-will, on account of his having been a witness at a trial in which Coker's father had been sentenced to a long term of imprisonment. Coker was arrested, and an important link in the chain of evidence was discovered. When the premises of the murdered man were searched, after the crime, the police found a newspaper, called the "Comanche Chief," from which a piece had been hastily torn. In Coker's shot-pouch was a piece of newspaper, part of which had been used for gun-wads. When that piece was compared with the newspaper, found on the premises of the murdered man, it corresponded exactly. That it was a part of the identical newspaper was evident from the printing on both. A column had been divided lengthwise by the rent and the half-lines on the fragment found in the pouch completed exactly the half-lines on the newspaper found near the body. One of Dr. Talmage's sermons was printed on that page and when the two pieces were joined, these words, which in the circumstances had a new significance, were read: "Who watched you last night? Who has been good to you all your life? Methinks the goodness of God would convert this whole audience to repentance." It was a singular coincidence that the words on the sheet of paper that the stealthy murderer tore in the darkness should have been a warning of God's omniscience. When they were read in the court-room, they must have sounded in the ears of the convicted man like a prophecy that had been fulfilled. Yet they were only the statement of a solemn fact which is generally admitted but seldom realized.

Good News for Sufferers—Catarrh and Consumption Cured.

Our readers who are victims of Lung Diseases, Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption, will be glad to know of the wonderful cures made by the new treatment known in Europe as the Andral-Broca Discovery. The New Medical Advance, 67 East 6th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, will send you this new treatment free for trial. Write to them. Give age and all particulars of your disease.

Sufferers forget the sunlight when they notice the shadow to which disease has brought them. They have only to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and bright rays of health will soon be theirs.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

Goes regularly to Hot Springs for GOUT, RHEUMATIC GOUT, RHEUMATISM.—How this Water is valued there in BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEYS and STONE OF THE BLADDER.

Dr. Algernon S. Garnet, Surgeon (retired) U. S. Navy, Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Ark., says:

"My experience in the use of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is limited to the treatment of Gout, Rheumatism and that hybrid disease, 'Rheumatic Gout' (so-called), which is in contradistinction to the Rheumatoid Arthritis of Garrod. I have had excellent results from this Water in these affections, both in my own person and in the treatment of patients for whom I have prescribed it. Of course the remedial agent is its contained Alkalies and their solvent properties. Hence it is a prophylactic as well as a remedy in Nephritic Colic and forming Calculi, when due to a redundancy of Lithic Acid."

Dr. Wm. B. Towles, Professor of Anatomy and Materia Medica in the Medical Department of the University of Virginia, former Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Va., says:

"I feel no hesitancy whatever in saying that in Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatism, Stone in the Bladder, and in all Diseases of Uric Acid Diathesis, I know of no remedy at all comparable to

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

"Its effects are marked in causing a disappearance of Albumen from the urine. In a single case of Bright's Disease of the kidneys I witnessed decided beneficial results from its use, and from its action in this case I should have great confidence in it as a remedy in certain stages of this disease."

The late Dr. Wm. F. Carrington, Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Ark., Surgeon (retired) U. S. Navy, says:

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER has signally demonstrated its remedial power in Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatism, Uric Acid, Gravel and other maladies dependent upon the Uric Acid Diathesis. It not only eliminates from the blood the deleterious agent before it crystallizes, but dissolves it in the form of Calculi, at least to a size that renders its passage along its ureters and urethra comparatively easy. Send twenty cases No. 2."

Dr. T. B. Buchanan, Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Arkansas, says: "Send me five cases of

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

I have made use of this Water for Gout in my own person and prescribed it for patients similarly suffering, with the most decided beneficial results. I take great pleasure in advising Gouty patients to these Springs.

This water is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half gallon bottles $5.00 f.o.b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent to any address.

IONAS F. GOODE, Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va. Springs open June 15th.

FREE CURE.

Kidney

Liver & Urinary Diseases.

or if you will send us Ten Cents (postage stamps will do) to pay express charges, we will send you One Bottle by express, prepaid, FREE. We know ALKAVIS is a Positive Cure, and we send it FREE to prove its wonderful effects. Give your Post-office and nearest Express Office. Address, THE CHURCH KIDNEY CURE CO., 418 Fourth Avenue, New York.

THE STAY THAT STAYS

WEARS FOREVER FOREVER ELASTIC

DR. WARNER'S CORALINE DRESS STAY

In yard lengths, same as whalebone, also short lengths, maulin covered. Set for one dress by mail, 25c. Sold everywhere. Warner Bros., makers, N. Y. and Chicago.

It is Rude to Point.

Yet there can be no harm in pointing out that all manly men and womanly women ought to read

THE ETHICS OF MARRIAGE,

by H. S. Pomeroy, M.D., Boston. Of inestimable value to married and single, instructive, wise, full of interest and usefulness. Sold by HENRY G. TAYLOR, 315 West 116th St., New York, at $1, postage free. Write for it.

FREE.

The following remarkable statement to which we direct special attention, is from a Tenn. farmer.

ELI BROWN.

My age is 63. I suffered intensely from catarrh to yrs., dry scabs formed in nostrils, one or both sides stopped up continually, dryness and soreness of throat, hoarseness, intense headache, took cold easily, and had continual roaring, cracking, buzzing, and singing in my ears. My hearing began to fail, and for three years I was almost entirely deaf, and continually grew worse. Every thing I had tried, failed. In despair I commenced to use the Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of catarrh.

ELI BROWN, Jacksboro, Tenn.

MEDICINES FOR THREE MONTHS' TREATMENT FREE.

To introduce this treatment and prove beyond doubt that it is a positive cure for Deafness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send Medicines for three months' treatment free. Address, J. H. MOORE, M.D., Cincinnati, O.

DON'T GIVE UP IN DESPAIR

Because you have not been cured by ointments, suppositories or liniments.

Komchacin

Caloric

CURES

Piles, Hemorrhoids, Fissure, etc.,

by the greatest method ever devised. Our

Dry Heated Medicinal Vapor

Absorbs the ulcers and heals all affected parts. Sent post-paid. PRICE $1.00.

Send for descriptive circular with testimonials.

KOMCHACIN CALORIC CO., Office No. 4, 130 and 132 Lincoln St., BOSTON, Mass.

TO THE UNEMPLOYED. You can make $75 to $250 a Month.

Working for us in any locality. Will pay a salary or commission (as you prefer) and all expenses, monthly deposited in bank to cover same when started. If you are out of work or even wish to better your condition, we have something entirely new to offer, and if you follow our instructions you cannot fail to meet with success; the people will have our goods no matter how hard the times; our agents are reporting big sales everywhere from Maine to Mexico; all that is required is a little pluck and push and success is yours. Why stand idle; this offer may be your stepping stone to a fortune. We furnish sample outfit free. If you care to investigate write today for particulars before all valuable territory is taken. Address Standard Silverware Co., Dept., 71 Boston, Mass.

FREE COMET FOUNTAIN PEN

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE this Hard Rubber Fountain Pen. Warranted a perfect writer & immense ill. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

TAPE-WORM

Expelled alive in 60 minutes with head, or no charge. Send 2c stamp for circular. Dr. M. Ney Smith, Specialist, 721 Olive, St. Louis, Mo.

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

FOR TABLE LINEN.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO. CINTI.

Just Out! 50 Cts.
"COMING OF THE BRIDEGROOM."
Sacred Cantata by C. F. Hanson, with Tyrolean Queen.
In order to introduce it a Cantata alone, we will give as a premium on same order only, Album of 24 fine views of the world's famous places, worth 40 cts.
or "Lays of Sweden" song book, worth 40 cts.
C. F. HANSON & CO., 317 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

IT POPS.

Effervescent, too.

Exhilarating, appetizing.
Just the thing to build up the constitution.

Hires' Rootbeer

Wholesome and strengthening, pure blood, free from boils or carbuncles. General good health—results from drinking HIRES' Rootbeer the year round.

Package makes five gallons, 25c.
Ask your druggist or grocer for it.
Take no other.

Send 2-cent stamp to the Charles E. Hires Co., 117 Arch St., Philadelphia, for beautiful picture cards.

JAPANESE FINISH

PREPARED READY FOR USE.
SUPERIOR TO PAINT.

PRODUCES A BEAUTIFUL FINISH.

This Finish is designed for the interior wood-work of buildings of all classes, and for this purpose possesses qualities superior to any paint or finish.

Japanese Finish is also designed for coating or painting all kinds of household articles such as tables, chairs, picture frames, etc.

Send for sample card of beautiful tints to the TAYLOR PAINT AND OIL CO., 32 Burling Slip, N.Y.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE.

THE FAMILY WASH BLUE. ALWAYS RELIABLE.
FOR SALE BY GROCERS.

D. S. WILTBERGER, 228 N. 2d St., Phila., Pa.

A rounded spoonful of

Cleveland's Baking Powder

does better work than a heaping spoonful of others.

Bread and cake raised with

Cleveland's Baking Powder

keep their freshness and flavor.
"Pure" and "Sure."

The Columbia Bicycle Frame

is a double diamond frame exceptionally graceful in design. It is light and tough to the highest degree, and is fully guaranteed. Made under our own supervision, in our own factory, of our own finest cold drawn seamless steel tubing, with every joint and part scientifically tested, it is a worthy backbone for a famous wheel.

POPE MFG. CO.,
Boston, New York,
Chicago, Hartford.

All about Columbias in our illustrated catalogue, which you can obtain free at our agencies, or by mail for two two-cent stamps.

THE DELICIOUS FERRIS HAM & BACON

OUR TRADE MARK BACON

A LITTLE HIGHER IN PRICE. BUT—

EXACT SIZE

OF SPOONS.

GENUINE

WORLD'S FAIR CITY

ONLY 99c

FOR ALL SIX.

FORMERLY SOLD FOR $9

HOW ARE WE ABLE TO DO IT?

These spoons were made up especially for the World's Fair trade, by THE ONEIDA COMMUNITY, Ltd.,

and were left on their hands. In order to place of them quickly we make this unheard of offer. SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS, after dinner coffee size HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED WITH GOLD PLATED BOWLS, each spoon representing a different building at the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased, showing head of Columbus, and dates 1492-1893 and wording "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, making one of the finest souvenir collections ever produced. Sold during the World's Fair for $9.00; we now offer the balance of this stock at ONLY 99 cents. Sent in elegant plush lined case properly packed and express prepaid to any address. Send Postal Note, or Currency. Money cheerfully refunded if goods are not as represented.

LEONARD MANUFACTURING CO.,

Sole Agents, Dept. A 203, 20 Adams Street, Chicago, Ill.

WHAT THE "CHRISTIAN AT WORK" OF NEW YORK HAS TO SAY IN THEIR ISSUE OF MARCH 22, 1894:

"The people have been deceived, and we are sure that those who sell for them will be exceedingly gratified to receive such stability and a real success at the World's Fair as these spoons are. The Leonard Manufacturing Company will promptly and without question return the money sent in payment if the spoons fail to give satisfaction. We do not believe, however, that they will ever be called upon to do so."

AGENTS MAKE $5 a Day Greatest Kitchen Utensil invented.
Sells at 25c. 2 to 6 sold in a house. Sample postage paid FREE. FOR LEE & Co., Cincinnati, O.

PILES CURED
Our Book on Piles—Free.
Bacon Medicine Co.,
Richmond, Va., U.S.A.

FITS Epilepsy, Etc. permanently cured. Treatise, testimonials and Remedy for trial sent FREE to any sufferer. Established 23 years. Address DR. ROSS, Richmond, Indiana.

SPRAY YOUR FRUIT TREES & VINES

Stahl's Double Acting Excelsior Spray. Kills Outlets prevent Leaf Blight & Wormy Fruit. Insures a heavy yield of all Fruit and Vegetable crops. Thousands in use. Send 6 cts. for catalogue and full treatise on spraying. Circulars free.
WM. STAHL, Quincy, Ill.

WORLD'S FAIR AWARDS TWO MEDALS

and one Diploma for Beauty, Strength and Cheapness. Over 50,000 of these vehicles have been sold direct to the people. Send at once for our complete catalogue (D) of every kind of vehicle & harness, also book of testimonials. They are for ALLIANCE CARRIAGE CO., CINCINNATI.

FAT PEOPLE

YOU reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home, secretly, without starve sickness or injury, by the use of Dr. Clarke's Home Treatment. Perfected in many years practice. Causes no wrinkles or flabbiness. Stubbornness, difficult breathing, relieved by scientific methods. No experiments. Guarantee. Best references. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.
Dr. F. B. CLARKE, Drawer F3, Chicago.

$2.75 Buy our $9 Natural Finish Baby Carriage complete with plated steel wheels, 10 springs, and one piece steam heat bands. Made of best material, durable, reliable and guaranteed for 3 years. Ship on 10 days' trial. FREE if not paid, no money required. Advance, $5.00 in use. We are the oldest and best concern of our kind, reliable and responsible. Refer to our catalogue at any time. Make and sell nothing but the best. Guarantee to be as represented, sold at the lowest prices. WRITE TO-DAY for our large FREE illustrated catalogue of latest designs and styles published.
OXFORD MFG. CO., 340 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

RUPTURE CURED

WITH our Improved Elastic Truss. Worn with night and day. Retains the rupture under hardest exercise or severest strain. Examination free in attendance for ladies. Send for pamphlet.
IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO., 822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York.

PRINTING OFFICE

A large font of Type (over 44) with Platen Holder, Indelible Ink, Pad, Treaders, Corks, etc., as shown in cut, complete in most cases. SEND FOR CATALOGUE. Sample printed for 15c. to introduce, with list of 100 new catalogues. CAT. 15c.
INGERSOLL & Bro. 65 Courtland St., N.Y.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 17.

COPYRIGHT 1894, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

NUMBER 20.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., Editor.
Offices, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK, MAY 16, 1894.

PRICE, 5 CENTS.
Annual Subscription, $1.50.

A MISSION IN A THEATRE.

The Gospel Union Mission of Portland and its Work for Christ—Practical Helpfulness and Spirituality Combined. How a Revival Began.

NOT with the sounding of trumpets, but rather quietly and unostentatiously, and often against great odds and a lack of sympathy, the Lord's work begins. Evidence of Divine guidance comes in its subsequent expansion and development, and the hold it takes of men's hearts and lives.

Few American cities have passed through a more remarkable spiritual experience within a very brief period than Portland, Oregon. Six months ago, the Gospel Union Mission was organized, and an interdenominational work of the most practical Christian character was begun in the north end of that city. Since that time, an almost incalculable amount of good has been accomplished. The plain Gospel has been preached to 18,000 non-church-goers, the greater proportion of them belonging to the very lowest class. Between 400 and 500 have been converted, and substantial aid in money, meals, clothing and shelter has been extended to thousands of others who were either homeless or destitute.

To a very great extent, this remarkable work after the first few weeks, was cordially supported by the Christian people of Portland, and its suburbs who knew the good it was doing in lifting up the fallen and purging the worst portions of the city of vice and immorality. From the outset, the guiding spirit and most earnest and zealous laborer has been Superintendent Appel, of the Gospel Union Mission. Mr. Appel is a native of Ontario, Canada. At fifteen years of age he left home to make his way in the world, and in his time he has traveled much and held many different positions. While still a young man, he formed the drinking habit, and giving way to the degrading influence, he soon lost position, reputation, social standing and friends. No one cared to trust him or to employ him. There came a time, in a calmer moment, when, suddenly brought face to face with the vision of a drunkard's fate, he decided to make an effort to lead a better life. He did this, however, in his own strength and without imploring help from that source from which alone help can come, and the result was that after a period of six months, during which time he bravely forsook drink, the tempter overthrew him, and he became more a slave to the habit than ever. One evening he was attracted by the services in the Gospel Union Mission, at Los Angeles, where Major George A. Hilton was superintendent, and he entered. It seemed to him—so he afterward said—that every word uttered by the speaker was meant for him personally. The theme was the old story of the Prodigal Son, and when the speaker concluded, the poor drunkard's heart cried out, "I will arise and go to my father." In that hall he made a complete surrender of his life to Christ, and asked for divine help and grace to consecrate the remainder of his days to Christian service. The transformation from heaven in his heart, to the patient seeker after righteousness and the new life, was complete. Temptation repeatedly assailed him, but he found grace and strength to resist successfully, and soon he was once again in a good position and praying with zeal to be permitted to go to work for the Lord.

He shortly afterward went to Chicago, and took a regular course of training at the Moody Institute in that city, as a means of preparing for the mission work on which he intended to enter. This finished, he at once began active service in the field, holding meetings at different places in Michigan, and being greatly blessed with a number of conversions. One of the most notable spiritual encouragements he had in his work, was a conversion at the town of Wadhams, Mich., where, it was said, there had not

JOHN C. APPEL, FOUNDER OF THE PORTLAND MISSION.

PORTLAND'S GREAT REVIVAL—MISSION SERVICES IN THE OLD PEOPLE'S THEATRE, PORTLAND, OREGON.

the weak, vacillating inebriate, with no thought and will of his own and no hope of been a single triumph for the Gospel nor a solitary convert for Christ in forty years.

any mission such as he had in contemplation.

(Continued on page 317.)

In due time, there came a call for him to a new field in Oregon. Such an undertaking had not entered the mind of Mr. Appel, but he soon assured himself of the genuineness of the call, and began to prepare for the long journey to the west which involved the surrender of profitable business connections and the moving of his entire household. In July of last year he arrived in Portland, with no special idea as to the manner in which the work was to begin, and with no assurance from any citizen that he would be welcome among them, or in contemplation.

A CHEERFUL CHURCH.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday at the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Text: Solomon's Song 4: 1, "Behold thou art fair my love."

HIGHER criticism" says that this book of Solomon's Song is a love scene, a forlorn maiden sighing for her beau. If so it is an unclean and debauched utterance inserted in the pure Word of God and is not fit for common reading. My opinion is that it is an inspired ode setting forth the feeling of Christ toward the church and of the church toward Christ. Christ is the Bridegroom, and the church is the Bride. The same words we can utter to-day truthfully whether in regard to the church of God in general or this church in particular: "Behold, thou art fair, my love." The past week has been one of prolonged congratulation for that we have for twenty-five years been permitted to associate with each other in the relation of pastor and people. When I came to Brooklyn I found a small band of Christian disciples who from various causes had become less and less, until they stood upon the very verge of extinction as a church; and the question was being agitated from time to time whether it would be possible to maintain a church life longer. Indeed, had not those men and women been consecrated and earnest, they would have surrendered to the adverse circumstances. They marshalled a congregational meeting, and, gathering up all the forces possible, they cast nineteen votes for a pastor, all of which I am happy to have received.

It was not through any spirit of personal courage or reckless adventure that led me, from one of the warmest and most congenial pastorates in Philadelphia that a man ever enjoyed, to this then most uninviting field; but it was the feeling that God had called me to the work, and I was sure he would see me through.

I have thought that it might be profitable to us to state briefly what kind of a church we have been trying to establish.

In the first place, I remark that we have been trying to build here a Christian church—distinctively such; in other words, a church where we should preach the Lord Jesus Christ and him crucified. My theology is all gone into five letters—Jesus. Jesus, the pardon of all offenses. Jesus, the foundation for all structures. Jesus, the balm for all wounds. Jesus, the eye-salve for all blindness. Jesus, the guide through all perplexities. Jesus, the hope for all discouragements. Jesus, the reform for all wrongs. I have faith to believe that there is more power in one drop of the blood of Jesus Christ to cure the woes of the world than in an ocean full of human quackery. Jesus is the grandest note in any minstrelsy. He is the brightest gem in any crown. Height overtopping all height. The centre of every circumference. The circumference to every centre. The pacifier of all turbulence. The umpire of all disputes. Jesus! Jesus! At his table all nations are to sit. Around his throne all worlds are to revolve. He is to be the irradiation of the universe. Jesus! Jesus! It is that truth that we have tried to preach in this Tabernacle.

Do you ask more minutely what we believe? I can tell you. We have no dry, withered, juiceless theology. We believe in God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, the Deliverer of the distressed, the Home for the homeless, the Friend for the friendless. We believe in Jesus Christ, able to save to the uttermost, pardoning the guilty, imputing his righteousness to the believer. We believe in the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, the Sanctifier, cheering up the heart in life's ills, and kindling bright lights in every dark landing-place. We believe that the whole race is so sunken in sin that nothing but the omnipotent arm of God can ever lift it out. We believe in grace—free grace, sovereign grace, triumphant grace, eternal grace. We believe in a Bible—authentic in its statements, immaculate in its teachings, glorious in its promises. We believe in heaven, the abode of the righteous; and in hell, the residence of those who are soul-suicides—of their own free choice refusing the divine mercy. We believe in the salvation of all men who accept Christ by faith, be they sprinkled or immersed, worship they in cathedral or in log cabin, believe they in Presbyterianism or Episcopacy, dwell they under Italian skies or in Siberian snow-storms, be they Ethiopian or American. All one in Christ. One Lord, one faith, one baptism, on the way to one heaven. We built this Tabernacle for the purpose of setting forth these great theories of the Gospel of the Son of God. Would that we had been more faithful in the pulpit! Would that we had been more faithful in the pew!

I remark, further, that we have tried here to build a church distinctively unconventional. Instead of asking, as some people are disposed to do, how other people do it, we have asked the question how people do not do it. Imperious custom has decided that churches shall be angular, cheerless, gloomy, unsympathetic; forgetting that what men call a pious gloom is impious, and that that church has the best architecture where the people are the most comfortable, and that that is the most efficient Christian service where the people are made most sick of sin, and most anxious after Christ and heaven. And so we called the architects together for our first church building, and said, "Give us an amphitheatre"—that is, a large family circle, gathered around a fire-place. For many years we had felt that an amphitheatre was the only proper shape for an audience-room. The prominent architects of the country said, "It cannot be done. You need a churchly building." And so we had plan after plan of churchly buildings presented; but in due time God sent a man who grasped our idea and executed it. So far from being a failure, it satisfied our want, and all our three churches were built on the amphitheatrical plan, and scores of churches all over the country have adopted the same plan.

And, my brethren and sisters, we fail in our work just in proportion as we try to be like other churches. We believe that God intended every church, like every man, to be individual, gathering up all its peculiarities and idiosyncrasies, and hurling them all toward some good and grand object. In other words, no two churches ought ever to be just alike. Here is a church, for instance, whose object it is to prepare philosophers, and artists, and critics for heaven. God speed them in the difficult work! Here is a church, on the other hand, that proposes to bring only the poor into the kingdom of Jesus Christ, looking not after the rich. God speed such a church in its undertaking! But there is a larger idea that a church may take—bringing in the rich and the poor, the wise and the ignorant, the high and the low; so that kneeling beside each other shall be the man faring sumptuously every day, and the man who could not get his breakfast. God speed such a church!

Oh! my friends, we need to break away from slavery to ecclesiastical custom. We dare not sing if anybody hears us. We dare not preach unless we have rounded off our sentences to suit the criticism of the world. We dare not dress for church until we have examined the fashion-plates, and would rather stay at home than appear with a coat or a hat not sanctioned by custom. When will the day of deliverance come to the Church of God, when, instead of a dead religion, laid out in state on a catafalque of pomp and insincerity, we shall have a living, bounding, sympathetic, glowing Christianity?

I remark, further, that we have tried here to build and to conduct a cheerful church. While, as you know, we have not held back the terrors of the law, and the sterner doctrines of the Gospel, we have tried in this house to present to this people the idea that the gladdest, brightest, happiest thing in all the universe is the Christian religion. There is so much trouble in the world; business men have so many anxieties; toiling men have so many fatigues; orphans have so many desolations—for God's sake, if there be any bright place on earth, show it to them. Let the Church of Jesus Christ be the most cheerful spot on earth. Let me say that I do not want anybody to come whining around me about the Christian religion. I have no faith in a religion made up of equal parts of wormwood, vinegar, and red pepper. If the religion that is presented to us be a depression, we will get along better without it. If it be a joy, let it shine out from your face, and from your conversation. If a man comes to my house to talk of religion with lugubrious countenance, and manner full of snuffle and dolorousness, I feel like saying to my wife, "You had better lock up the silver before he steals something." I have found it an invariable rule that men who profess faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, priding themselves at the same time on their sanctimoniousness, always turn out badly. I never knew an exception. While those who are the most consistent, the most useful, and the most consecrated, have perfume in their conversation, and heaven in their face.

The happiest Christians that I have ever known have been persons from sixty to eighty years of age. By that time people get over the shams and pretenses of society, and have no longer any patience with anything like imposture in religion. O Christian! how dare you be gloomy? Is not God your Father? Is not Jesus Christ your Saviour? Has not your path all through life been strewn with mercies? Are you insensible to the fact that there are glories awaiting you in the better land?—doxologies of celestial worship, eternal chorals, tearless eyes, songs that resound under arches of strength, and hosannas that clap their hands at the foot of the throne? Is it nothing to you that all the hills of heaven are radiant with the faces of those who have gone up from you, and who are waiting for your coming, ready to keep with you eternal holiday? Is there nothing in songs that never cease, in hearts that never ache, in splendors that never die, to make you glad? Then take no more mercy at the hand of thy God! Give back the marriage-ring of love that Jesus put on your finger in the day of your espousal! Plant no more of the flowers of heaven where there ought to be nothing but nettles and nightshade!

We try to make this church a cheerful church. A man, on Saturday afternoon, stands in his store, and says, "How shall I meet these obligations? How can I endure this new disaster that is coming upon me?" He goes home. Sabbath morning finds him in the house of God. Through the song, through the sermon, through the prayer, the Lord Jesus Christ says to that man, "O man! I have watched thee; I have seen all thy struggles. It is enough; I will see thee through; I will stand between thee and thy creditors. I will make up in heavenly treasures what you have lost in earthly treasures. Courage, man! courage! Angels of God, I command you to clear the track for that man; put your wings over his head; with your golden sceptres strike for his defense; throw around him all the defenses of eternity!" What is the consequence? That business man is strengthened. He goes to the store next day feeling that God is with him and ready to deliver.

That same Sunday there is a poor old woman in the church hearing the Gospel. Oh! how shrunken she is! She wears the same dress she wore twenty years ago. How faded it is, and now out of date! She sits and listens as well as she can. Her eyes are so dim she cannot see half-way across the church. Her ear is so imperfect that she can only catch occasionally a note of the psalm or a word of the preacher. Some one sitting next to her gives her a book and finds the place for her. She says, "Thank you, miss, thank you!" She holds the book close up to her eyes, and with a voice all full of tremors, sings:

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the billows near me roll,
While the tempest still is high;
Hide me, O, my Saviour hide,
Till the storm of life is past,
Safe into the haven guide—
Oh! receive my soul at last.

And Jesus says to her, "Mother, are you weary?" And she says, "Yes, Jesus, I am very tired." Jesus says, "Mother, are you poor?" And she says, "Yes, I am very poor. I cannot sew any more; I cannot knit any more. I am very poor." Jesus says to her, "Mother, would you like to rest?" She says, "Yes, Lord, that is what I want—rest." "Courage, mother," says Jesus, "I will see thee through." She goes home. The next morning, in the tenement-house, some one dwelling on another floor comes to her room and knocks. No answer. The door is opened. She is dead! The night before, the chariots of God halted at that pillow of straw, and Jesus kept his promise. He said that he would give her rest, and he has given her rest. Glory be to God for the height, the depth, the length, and the breadth of such Christian comfort! Oh! that we might have such joy as that which inspired the men at the battle of Leuthen. They were singing a Christian song as they went into battle. A general said to the king, "Shall I stop those people singing?" "No," said the king; "men that can sing like that can fight." I would that we had a singing church, a joyful church, a jubilant church, a comforting church; for then we would have a triumphant church.

I remark, further, that we have here tried to build a church abreast of the times. It is all folly for us to try to do things the way they did fifty or a hundred years ago. We might as well be ploughing with Elijah's crooked stick, or go into battle with Saul's armor, or prefer a canal-boat to an express train, as to be clinging to old things. What we most need now is a wide-awake church. People who are out in the world all the week, jostling against this lightning-footed century, come into the church on the Sabbath, and go right to sleep, unless they have a spirited service. Men engaged in literary callings all the week, reading pungent, sharp writings, cannot be expected to come and hear our ecclesiastical humdrum. If a man stays at home on Sundays and reads the newspapers, it is because the newspapers are more interesting. We need, my brethren, to rouse up, and stop hunting with blank cartridges. The Church of God ought to be the leader, the interpreter, the inspirer of the age. It is all folly for us to be discussing old issues—arraigning Nero, hanging Absalom, striking the Philistines with Shamgar's ox-goad—when all around about us are iniquities to be slain.

Did I say that the Church ought to be abreast of the times? I take that back. The Church of God ought to be ahead of the times—as far in advance as the Cross of Christ is ahead of all human invention. Paul was a thousand years ahead of the day in which he lived. The swift-footed ears that have passed since Luther died have not yet come up to Luther's grave. Five iniquity four thousand years the start, and the feet of Christianity are so nimble that if you will but give it full swing, it will catch up and pass it in two bounds. The Church of God ought to be ahead of the times.

I remark, further, that we have tried here, in the love and fear of God, to build a church that would be characterized by conversions. I have heard of very good people who could preach on for fifteen or twenty years, and see no conversions, but yet have faith. It takes a very good man to do that. I do not know how a man can keep his faith up if souls are not brought to the Lord Jesus Christ. That church that does not bring men and women to the feet of the Saviour is a failure. I care not how fine the building or how sweet the music, or how eloquent the preaching, or how elegant the surroundings—it is a failure. The Church of God was made for just one thing—to get men out of the world into the kingdom of heaven. The tendency in churches is to spend their time in giving fine touches to Christians already polished. We keep our religion too much indoors, and under shelter, when it ought to be climbing the rocks or hewing in the forests. Then it would be a stalwart religion, a robust religion, a religion able to digest the strong meat of the Word, instead of being kept on the pap and gruel of spiritual invalidism. It is high time that we threw off the Sunday clothes of sickly sentimentality, and put on the work-day dress of an earnest, active Christianity.

Here is Brooklyn, here is New York, here are the United States, here is the whole world, to be converted. It is eighteen hundred and ninety-four years since Christ came, and yet Europe, Asia, Africa, North and South America, are still unevangelized. More people born every year into the world than are born into the kingdom of God. At that rate, I ask any one who can do a simple sum in arithmetic to calculate when this world will be brought to Jesus. At that ratio, never! never! never! And yet we know that it is to be brought to Christ. But the Church will have to change its tack, and take a wider sweep with the Gospel net than any it has yet taken. I believe that the great masses of the people are now ready to receive the Gospel, if we give them a chance. A boy goes along the street at night, and sees a fine house beautifully lighted up, and hears music, and he says, "I wish I was in there, but I have not been invited;" and so he passes on. Here is the Church of God, lighted up with festivity and holy mirth, and the world passes along outside, hears the music, and sometimes wishes it was inside, but says that it is not invited. Oh! invite the world to come in! Go out into the highways and hedges. Send a ticket of invitation, printed in these words, "Come, for all things are now ready."

We have had conventions all over the country discussing the subject, "How shall the great masses be brought to Christ?" They have passed splendid resolutions at the close of the meeting—a long list of eight, ten, or fifteen have been read, and then the presiding officer has said, "All those in favor of the resolutions for the conversion of the world, purifying the cities, and redeeming the masses, and making everything all right, say Ay." "Ay! Ay!" say a thousand voices. "All opposed—No." "The ayes have it." There! the world is converted. Ah! we do not seem to get along by such a process.

If this world is ever to be brought to God, it will not be by the handful of ministers we have in this country. It will be by the great masses of Christian men and women discharging their duty. If the private church membership of this country would but put on their armor, and go forth, I believe that in fifteen years this whole land would be redeemed for Christ.

Since we have been together as pastor and people how many have been promoted to the glories of heaven. They died sweetly, calmly, as only Christians can die. They have put down the staff of their pilgrimage; they have taken up the palm of the victor. The Lord Jesus has swung his arm through this church a good many times. He has been up and down all these aisles. One who sat right here, so that when I used to preach I could almost put my hand on his head, when I came back from my summer vacation, was gone. Oh! how the glories of heaven shone around that old man's face as he sat here Sabbath after Sabbath! Gone now. Happy spirit! Happy with all those who have passed the flood!

One army of the living God—
To his command we bow;
Part of the host have crossed the flood,
And part are crossing now.

I thank you for all your kindness, for all your sympathy, for all your prayers for me as pastor. It is a sorrow to me that I am to be absent even for a few months. I have worked to the full extent of physical, mental and spiritual endurance for this church.

Now we start out on our twenty-sixth year. How many of us will close it here, I know not.

A Galilean Fountain.

Was this the Well From Which the Water was Drawn That Became Wine?

HERE have been conflicting opinions regarding the true site of the ancient Cana of Galilee—the scene of the first of the Lord's miracles. It lay not far from Capernaum, and on higher ground, and is referred to by Josephus, the celebrated Jewish historian, as a village of Galilee. The site has, by a general concurrence of expert investigators, been usually identified with the little village called by the Syrians Keft Kenna, about four miles east of Nazareth, and in the highway of Tiberias. It is very small—a mere hamlet—and exceedingly neat and well-kept, looking pleasantly down from its hillside, where it nestles amid orchards and plantations of olives.

Our illustration shows a very old spring or fountain in the neighborhood of Cana, to which tradition points as being that from which water was drawn for the wedding feast at the time of the Saviour's visit to the village. The spring is enclosed by a wall

A BEAUTIFUL TRIBUTE.

NAME well-known to hymn lovers in America and the world over is that of Mrs. Annie S. Hawks, who has forwarded to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the beautiful poem printed below.

Mrs. Hawks, whose portrait is given at the beginning of this article, was born in Hoodsick, New York, May 28, 1835. For several years past she has been a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y. Although from early life she devoted much attention to educational and literary pursuits, yet little publicity was given to her effusions till about 1868, when her pastor, the Rev. R. Lowry, discovering her talent, encouraged her to write for the good of others. Among the first and tenderest of her hymns, was, "Why Weepst Thou?" and "Bright Jewels." Her songs have also appeared in "Pure Gold," "Royal Diadem," "Brightest and Best," and "Tidal Waves," and have been copied in numerous other musical compilations. Among her best known compositions are "In the Valley," whose familiar lines have been sung by many thousands, and "Here Am I." Among the other famous pieces from her pen are, "Who'll be the next?" "Yield, O Yield," "Wholly Thine," "Living for Christ," and the grandest and sweetest of all, "I Need Thee Every Hour." The last named was the outgrowth of her own experience. Having sent it to the Rev. Mr. Lowry, he caught the spirit of the hymn and gave it musical expression. It was first sung in the National Baptist Sunday School Convention in Cincinnati, November 10th, 1872 by three thousand people, and its popularity began from that hour.

The latest poem from her gift-pen, she has entitled:

SORROW-TOUCHED.

By the Authoress of "I Need Thee Every Hour," after hearing Dr. Talmage preach in Brooklyn Tabernacle, Sabbath morning, April 29, 1894.

JACOB wrestled with the angel
And prevailed at break of day;
But with halting step thereafter
Went along his pilgrim way.

So of those who are victorious
In the conflict, over sin,
All who rise from depths of sorrow
A sublimer height to win.

Sorrow-touched? be patient with them,
'Tis God's finger on them laid;
Though they neither shrink nor murmur
And in heart are undismayed.

Do not ask them to forget it;
Can that touch be lightly worn?
Wrestling by the brook of Jabbok—
Marks of conflict must be borne.

Sorrow-touched? they're ever with us;
Though our hearts with gladness thrill,
Some are wrestling with the angel
In the darkness—wrestling still.

Some have risen, though in weakness
As the angel sped his way; [ness,
For they saw with clearer vision
At the breaking of the day.

ANNIE SHERWOOD HAWKS.

Accompanying the poem is a note from the authoress in which she says:

Rev. Dr. Talmage:

DEAR SIR:—In acknowledgment of the courtesy extended to me from your pulpit last Sunday, and its pleasant surprise, also with thanks for the comforting which your sermon held for me, I venture to enclose these lines, hurriedly written, and remain,
Very sincerely yours,

51 Park Pl., May 3, '94.

ANNIE S. HAWKS.

SHORTEST PASTORATE ON RECORD.

A Record in Short Pastorates Appears in "The Congregationalist," which so far as we have heard has not been exceeded. It reports that a pastor in central New York accepted the call of a certain church, and on a recent Sunday morning preached his inaugural sermon. He found, however, that he had misunderstood the condition of the affairs of the church, and on the evening of the same day he preached a farewell discourse and left the town early the following morning.

A FOUNTAIN AT CANA OF GALILEE.

(From a photograph brought by Rev. Dr. Talmage from the Holy Land.)

But, living or dying, let us cling to Christ. Oh! that all the people would love him! I wish that I could take this audience this morning and wreath it around the heart of my Lord Jesus Christ. Oh! he is such a dear Saviour! He is such a loving Jesus! He is so precious! Oh blessed Jesus! Sweetest sound I ever heard, or ever expect to hear, is thy name!

My closing prayer this morning is that God will have mercy on the dying population of our great cities, and that the whole earth will put on bridal array for the coming of her Lord. Ride on! King Jesus! Ride on! Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, from everlasting to everlasting, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory! Amen! and Amen!

of limestone. To visitors, some limestone jars, probably of great age, are shown as the veritable vessels that were used to hold the miraculous wine; but this story is of a piece with many other absurd claims made by monks and others. Another tradition declares that the jars, with one exception, were all brought to France in the time of the Crusaders. A Greek church in the village is said to have been built over the house in which the miracle was performed.

About eight miles to the northeast of Nazareth are the ruins of a place called Kana-el-Jellil, which some have been disposed to believe was more probably the true site of Cana. It also stands on high ground overlooking a plain. Once a considerable village, it is now little better than a heap of stones. Unlike the other site, it gives no absolute evidence of antiquity.

MOSES SENT AS DELIVERER.

S.S. Lesson for May 27, Ex. 3: 10-20. Golden Text, Isa. 41: 10. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

WHAT child of God is there, among such as have been eminently used of him, who knows nothing of failure? Speaking of his own mistaken zeal in his days of unbelief, the Apostle Paul says: "I obtained mercy because I did ignorantly in unbelief; and, furthermore, he ventured to believe that God was glorified especially in the grace which he had shown to him, 'the chief of sinners.'" (1. Tim. 1: 13-16.) Something of the same sense of shame, mingled with the deepest gratitude to God, may have filled the heart of Moses when he entered the land of Midian as a refugee. His first halting place there was by a well. The seven daughters of Jethro, prince, or priest, of Midian, came to water the flock; for water was too precious at some seasons, to be left to the discretion of hired or slave shepherds. But other shepherds claimed the water, and drove away the young women. The courtly Moses could not suffer this, he "stood up, and helped them"—not too absorbed with his own unexpected reverse of fortune to forget, or fail to help, others who were in trouble. He is a coward who is self-absorbed. A mind stayed on God, does not brood over its own troubles or wrongs. The Lord was with Moses as he had been with Joseph. Jethro's daughters related to their father what had happened, and he reproved them for neglecting to bring the Egyptian stranger home with them. Moses found a humble occupation in tending Jethro's sheep; and in the eyes of God this was

No Degradation:

it was indeed a forward step towards the great ministry for which he was being surely prepared. He who has learned to accept anything and everything which God permits, has learned in a school of which the highest education of earth falls short. Forty years elapsed; Jethro's daughter, Zipporah, had become Moses' wife and had borne him two sons, one of whom he named Gershom—a "stranger here." It was a recognition that his stay in Midian was transient, that he had not yet entered upon his life's vocation. But if, as is probable, he was in the habit of communing with God in the neighborhood of Mount Horeb, the presence of God was still home to him, and in his banishment also "he endured, as seeing him who is invisible." His calling of God was still the thing he lived for; all else he passed through as a pilgrim and a stranger. God, who knows the value of time, had not accounted forty years too long a time for Moses to unlearn the forty years of his Egyptian education. In the littleness of daily life, he gave the future deliverer of his people the opportunity to test what the philosophy of Egypt could do for a man, and to prove how far all he had learned from man could enable him to bear the rude reverses to which he had been subjected. His after life proves that he learned in this school how to fall back upon God for all. Moses led his father-in-law's flock, "to the back of the desert, and came to the mountain of God, even to Horeb." How did Horeb come to be the mountain of God? May it not have been already, a place where God was wont to meet his servant, and commune with him, in those days of his banishment from Egypt?

God had Waited, and now his appointed time was come. While Moses was tending the flock, "The angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire, out of the midst of a bush." All he saw was a bush burning, without turning to ashes. Moses was familiar enough with natural law to recognise in this something supernatural, and he said, "I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt." Moses looked out for the first cause in everything; he was open to an interview with God; he knew how to pay attention, and God noticed it, and said, "Moses, Moses." "Here am I," was the ready answer. "Draw not nigh hither; put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." This was a lesson which Moses had not learned in Egypt: the noise of his own footsteps, the importance of his own presence was something to him there; men knew, and he knew, how learned he was, and mighty in words and deeds. (Acts 7:22.) But now he had learned to give place to God, to tread noiselessly, and to keep silence, to retire into the background that God might be all in all; now God could speak to him, and he could hear.

"I am." This was to be the strength of Moses' future service: he must learn that whatever God had revealed himself to be, that he is eternally: the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, unchangeably, forever. And the once mighty Moses, hid his face, as the seraphim veiled their faces. Curiosity gave way to holy worship: he was in the presence of his God. "And the Lord said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry by reason of their taskmasters; for I know their sorrows; and I am come down to deliver them." Yes, Moses, hide thy face, shrink into nothingness: another has taken up the cause of thy people, and he will do what thy human energy and impetuosity failed to do. "Come now, therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people, the children of Israel, out of Egypt."

God can use only broken vessels for his highest service, only those who through the deep consciousness of their own failure and nothingness have learned really to count upon him. "Moses said unto God, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?" Was this the same man who had been so astonished forty years before, that his people did not recognize his vocation? Yes, the same, but transformed by the forty years' training of his God. Let us learn the lesson. The deliverance of the people, including all the visitation of the ten plagues, did not probably occupy one entire year, while the preparation of the instrument needed forty years! God knows the value of time, and nothing is so precious in his sight as the preparation of his chosen ones for himself.

Who am I,

"Certainly I will be with Thee;"

was to be Moses' only, but sufficient equipment; this was all-inclusive. But God gave to his now emptied humbled servant, a token also that he had sent him: "When thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain." But Moses needed yet more; the people had lapsed into idolatry, and worshipped the gods of Egypt and he must give them some guarantee that he was a true messenger, and came with a true message. They might ask him: What is the name; what is the character of the God who thou savest hast sent thee? It is not sate to go on an errand for the Lord, without making sure of God before hand, for all contingencies which may arise. The kingdoms of this world may stand for a time, when made of mixed material—"iron mixed with miry clay"—but the kingdom of God does not stand by anything which man brings to it, either of power or wisdom. God may and does use man, but only as the instrument of his own power and his own wisdom. Oh how truly had Moses unlearned all which made him mighty in words and deeds! he could not go one step forward without his God. "What shall I tell them about thy name?" "I am that I am," was God's answer; tell them, "I am hath sent me unto you." And moreover, tell them it is the God of their fathers, "the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob . . . this is my name forever, and this is my memorial unto all generations." I am, not I was, the God Abraham; whatever I have been, that I am. "I, the Lord, change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." Such was God's revelation of himself. Perhaps only Moses, Joshua and Caleb understood it, but it was the strength of Moses' career, and it is the strength of all those who really put their trust in the Lord. And God gave to his servant the details of his commission, and confided to him how it would be received; the elders of Israel would hearken to his voice, but Pharaoh would oppose himself, and then God would smite Egypt, manifest his own power, and afterwards the king should let Israel go.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

MENEPHTAH'S STATUE AT MEMPHIS.

ABOUT seventy-eight years intervene between this lesson and that of last week. According to the common chronology, which, however, is not accepted by all scholars, the date of this lesson would be B.C. 1491. The great Rameses was dead and his younger son, Menephtah, reigned in his stead. He was a weak but stubborn king, as we learn from the Bible and from the Egyptian records. A picture of his features, as carved by his orders on a statue at Memphis, forms the initial of this article. The statue was that of one of his predecessors of the twelfth dynasty, but Menephtah unscrupulously blotted out the face and had it carved in his own image, leaving the lower part of the statue untouched. A still more flagrant act was that of erasing the name of a predecessor from an inscription of brilliant achievements and inserting his own name in its place. Such acts show the character of the man with whom Moses had to deal. When Moses was called to his life-work, he was in Midian, in the vicinity of Sinai, the south-eastern part of the little triangular peninsula which is at the head of the Red Sea. It will be necessary for the teacher to explain how he came to be there. The story is given in the second chapter of Exodus. In Stephen's speech (Acts 7: 20-30), additional details are mentioned. From these it would appear that Moses might, if he had been so minded, have held aloof from his own people and have occupied a princely position in the Egyptian court. The temptation must have been a strong one, with all the advantages apparently on its side. The struggle is often repented in modern life. A man is happy in a quiet life with congenial home surroundings, but light from some common object or event, like the light from the burning bush, flashes a thought of duty into his heart. There is some vicious neighborhood near him which needs the Gospel, or there are heathen nations waiting for the news of Christ. He becomes uncomfortable. He wonders that no one takes up the work. Ought he to do so? He puts the thought from him. He is too weak, too insignificant, too halting in speech, the people will not listen to him and so on. But he cannot rest. Conscience reminds him that with God with him he will be strong and one after another the obstacles are removed and he is held strictly to his duty. Peace and rest go out of his life; henceforth he shall know nothing but anxiety, and worry, and misconstruction, and discouragement; but the great work is done and the slave of duty goes to his reward.

I will send thee. He whom God sends on any mission need give himself no concern about his safety, but only as to his own faithfulness. The knowledge that God had sent him must have inspired Moses with courage. History tells how such a belief, even when wrongly founded, imparts intrepidity. When, in the year 1420, Joan of Arc presented herself at the Dauphin's court, and declared that her Lord had commissioned her to drive the English out of France, she was laughed at. Could she succeed when the most famous generals in France had failed? But the country girl could not be ridiculed out of her faith. With sublime confidence in God, who, as she believed, had commanded her to fight, she went forth and won one battle after another until the English dreaded her more than a veteran commander. It was not until she felt that she was obeying the King and was not acting under God's commands that she lost her confidence, suffered defeat, and met a cruel death at the hands of her enemies.

That thou mayest bring forth my people. It was a hard and a difficult task. God had said, "I am come down to deliver them," but he uses men to accomplish his purposes and Moses was chosen to serve him in this instance. He was evidently reluctant; but he obeyed. Moral courage is often combined with physical timidity. A story is told of two soldiers being detailed for an expedition of extreme peril. There was little probability of both escaping alive. One soldier was a reckless, defiant man and the other a delicate, nervous man, but true as steel to his duty. The latter looked pale and was silent as they left camp, and the other said to him contemptuously, "I believe you are afraid." The man stepped doggedly along as he answered: "I am; and if you were half as much afraid as I am, you would not go at all."

Who am I that I should go? The most successful servants of God have often been slow to believe that they were able to serve God as leaders or preachers. John Knox, who was one of the most faithful and intrepid servants of Christ, was such a man. His learning and well-known piety marked him out as a man who in Scotland's need was qualified for distinguished service, but his modesty kept him back. Again and again he was urged to preach, but without avail. At last, in a public service, John Rough, his pastor, addressed him by name from the pulpit. "Brother Knox," said he, "ye shall not be offended. I speak unto you that which I have in charge, even from all these that are here present, that in the name of God and of his Son Jesus Christ, and in the name of those who call you by my mouth, I charge you that you refuse not this holy vocation." Knox, referring to this incident in the great church later in life, when Scotland rang with his name, quaintly wrote: "Whairat the said Johnne abasht byryst furth in moist abundant tearis and withdrew himself to his chamber." From that chamber Knox came forth ready to undertake the work, having been made obedient to the call.

Certainly I will be with thee. That promise must have cheered Moses in many a time of difficulty and peril in his after life, as it has supported many since who, like him, have engaged in the Lord's work. Some Indian chiefs, having become the open enemies of the Gospel, Mr. Eliot, "The Apostle of the American Indians," when in the wilderness without the company of any other white man, was, at various times, treated in a threatening and barbarous manner by some of those men, yet his Almighty Protector inspired him with such resolution that he said, "I am about the work of the great God, and my God is with me; so that I fear neither you nor all the chiefs in the country; I will go on, and do you touch me if you dare!" They heard and walked away.

This is my name forever. What power there is in a name! It calls up in the memory the character it represents. An army chaplain describing the death of a brave cavalry officer, says: "He was in a delirium when I went to him and was exhausting himself by frenzied efforts to rise from his bed. He tumbled himself on the field of battle and wanted to rally his troops, who he thought, were in retreat. His attendants were holding him down and he was struggling with them. It was a most distressing spectacle. I said to him: 'Do not excite yourself; you are near death. Let us fall to Jesus.' The mention of that name operated like a spell. His agitation ceased at once. After a moment's silence, he said 'Jesus, Jesus; yes, let us speak of him.' He needed him now. He said, come unto me and I will give you rest. I want rest; I am very weary. I will go to Jesus." He closed his eyes and fell into that sleep which has no waking in this world."

Where He Was Brought Up.

Our Traveler Visits the Childhood Home of Jesus—Children of Nazareth—The Virgin's Fountain—A Sad Funeral.

WE have never been so nearly in sympathy with Dr. Sharpe, or so intolerant with his wife's devout credulity, as after visiting the Latin and Greek churches built above the spots where the Virgin Mary received the visit of Gabriel and the announcement of the great glory to be bestowed upon her.

Each is in a crypt, and going first to that of the Greek church, we look respectfully, not reverently, at the dark, damp chamber, supplied with altar and the usual paraphernalia of the underground, or the upper-world shrine—candles, artificial flowers and other tawdry ornaments. We are in a sort of cellar, the stone walls of which are grim with time. A well yawns in the floor; beyond it is a locked gate. The sacristan thrusts his arm between the bars, and brows the light of a torch upon a flight of steps leading up into the darkness.

Our guide mechanically translates the Arabic that gurgles from his tongue:

"This church stands upon the site of the house of the Blessed Virgin. This was her kitchen. Here she was busy at work when the angel appeared to her and said, 'Hail, Mary! thou that art highly favored, for thou hast found favor with God.' The fountain bursts forth from the rock in celebration of the Event."

A cup is lowered into the well; we drink thereof, cross the palm of the sacristan with a piece of Turkish silver, and mount to the surface of the earth, obediently following our leader to another church, where the story is told, almost word for word, of a second subterranean chamber and spring.

A little heart-sick and a good deal disgusted, we thread the public ways of the "white city," discouragingly new in appearance, and long, as we have often and elsewhere longed, for something that will restore the best sympathy with what the place should recall.

"Mary and Joseph lived here," we say to ourselves and one another. "Here was the scene of the Annunciation; hence Mary went into the hill country in haste—perhaps up that slope over there—to visit Elizabeth. Here, her Son grew in favor with God and man. Here, cut to the quick by the home truths spoken to them by him in later years, the townspeople with whom he had been so popular as a youth, hurried him to the brow of the hill on which the city is built, and could have ended his ministry then and there but for a miracle." All this we know and believe, but cannot feel.

At a turn of the street we are confronted with something that alters the current of discontented meditation. A lad stands just without the threshold of a carpenter's shop. His tunic of blue serge is girt at the waist with a red sash; red slippers are upon the stockingless feet; the red tarboosh, or fez, worn by all Turkish subjects, sits jauntily upon short, fair curls. At sight of the leveled kodak, he laughs, and his hands chafe each nervously. From the recesses of the shop, black as midnight when one looks in from the outer light made more glaring by reflection from the white houses, a voice calls in not unkindly admonition, the boy laughs again, brightly and fearlessly, in moving away to his work. A bench extends from the door to the rear of the windowless shop, and two men, one turbaned, the other wearing the tarboosh, are busy about it. Our lad drops flat upon the ground, crosses his legs under him to gouge a square hole in a block into which a beam is to be mortised. He handles the chisel deftly, and now that he is at it, so diligently that he does not give us another look. But for the modern bench, the picture must be very like that which has been a theme beloved of such artists as Holman Hunt and earlier masters. Presently, the elder of the men, who stands near the door, glances around, his notice attracted by our shadows upon the floor, and touches, first his forehead, then his heart, bowing profoundly:

"Naharak said!" (Peace be unto you), he says gravely.

"And unto you!" we instruct our interpreter to reply. He is an old man, but hale, with clear eyes and a full white beard. "Not a bad model for a Joseph in a Holy Family," we agree, after watching him for a minute longer, taking in all the accessories of the tableau, even to the play of a stray sunbeam upon the yellow shavings curling from the bench to the floor.

There is fascination in the scene, and soothing. We are brought again into touch with a past that filled our minds at the first sight of the hillside town. Thus might the supposed father and docile Son, "subject" to all the conditions of a Galilean artisan's life, have toiled together for many a day and week during the thirty years of preparation for his ministry and his death. "Mar salaami!" (Good-bye) we call out at length, moving on, and between the deeper tones of the two men, rises the silvery treble of the apprentice:

"Mar salaami!"

A GROUP OF CHILDREN IN NAZARETH, PALESTINE.

Photographed for "The Christian Herald" by Marion Harland.

"In what language did our Saviour speak?" questions Alcides, suddenly.

The query is apparently new to David Jamal and our other escort, a Nazarene Christian, and a graduate of the Beirut College, a fine intelligent young fellow, by the way, and an honor to his Alma Mater. It seems quite certain, after some minutes' talk, that in a country where customs have changed so little in nineteen centuries, that one can hardly take a dozen steps without seeing or hearing something illustrative of Biblical history—the peasantry at least may use the dialect familiar to the household of Joseph, the carpenter. Did the musical phrase of farewell that lingers in our ear, often pass his tongue?

We are still talking of it when another turn brings us into an open square that must be the rallying-point for both sexes of all classes, so alive is it with movement and murmur. Right before us is a group of children, chiefly boys, of varying ages, arrested in some game by the abrupt appearance of strangers. The foremost and tallest boy lays a reassuring hand about the neck of a mere baby who is his charge, and blinks inquisitively at us in the broad sunshine; in the background on his right hand stands a much smaller child with a face of singular beauty. It is not possible to regard the children, especially the boys of Nazareth, with indifference, and there is something in this encounter that dizzies one by the swift rush of association.

"What do they know of the child Jesus?" we interrogate the young Nazarene student.

"Those who have Christian parents think and speak of him as do the children in your land and other Christian countries. The rest know little of him and care nothing for him. We have here Sunday and day schools in which the Bible is taught, and the story of our Lord's life and death is well known to the members of the Latin and Greek churches."

More children!

The soft thrud of their bare feet upon the pavement is hushed as they halt and huddle together in the exact focus of the insatiable kodak—neither timid nor bold, but moved by a common desire to inspect and make acquaintance with us. They are healthy, well-formed, and evidently well-cared-for. In all Nazareth, as we note with gratification, we see not one deformed child, or one professional beggar of tender years. All this may signify less than we fancy, but, without quite defining the sentiment to ourselves, we are glad that these things are so.

"The Fountain of the Virgin," says our jars in their hands to be filled at the spout, or trudging up the wet stairs with full vessels upon their heads. They chatter cheerily among themselves, and the most notable are in no hurry to hie them back to home and indoor labor. Of all marketable possessions, time is least considered in the East.

Sometimes, as we are not surprised to hear, there are wrangles over the common wash-tub, and quarrels as to precedence in the matter of filling the great earthen jars. In the sunny noon of to-day good humor prevails, and sociability is at high tide.

Mary was a peasant and working-woman like these. We check ourselves, as it guilty of irreverence, in wondering if she bore the narrow-necked "pitcher" upon her head with the audacious grace of that laughing girl who does not touch it with her hand, and if she adjusted it, before mounting the steps, upon a many-folded cloth such as the handsome woman down there has interposed between her veiled head and the dripping vessel. Yet—and again—the highly-favored among women was a daughter of the people, and her Son, at thirty-three years of age, had not where to lay his head.

A FUNERAL IN NAZARETH—ENTERING THE CHURCH.

From a photograph by Marion Harland.

A rhythmic murmur hums up the street leading to the open space about the Virgin's Fountain: the women cease their gossip; the children run off in the direction of the sound, and we follow more leisurely. All recognize the tuneless chant with which the mourners go about the streets. It is a Latin funeral, and the procession is led by a fat priest in full canonicals. An acolyte, clad in what always looks to be a white dressing-sacque, trimmed with cheap lace, swings a censer at his side. The coffin, borne upon the shoulders of friends or neighbors, is of a vivid scarlet with white bars crossing it. Behind a little company of what we take to be relatives and acquaintances, six cowed friars walk two-and-two. They are stalwart of frame and bearded up to the eyes; upon their large feet are strapped leathern sandals. Not a woman is seen in the band of mourners or among the lookers-on that struggle after the bier into the church.

We remain without the burial-ground until the short service is over. Church and cemetery are on the slope of the hill which rises far behind them. The whole town has the air of holding on for its life to the declivity. Every house is literally founded upon a rock, and the circumstance is but one of the numberless proofs daily laid before our eyes of the care with which the Nazarene Teacher studied the world in which he was brought up, and his tact in presenting to the "common people" analogies and types drawn from the life he shared with them.

The grave is partly dug, partly hewn, in the stone ground, and the bright red coffin, containing, we are told, the body of a young man, is set down upon the pile thrown up beside the mouth of the pit. The throng, augmented by many who have gathered from all quarters, closes about it, and the prayer committing dust to dust, is droned above it. Until now, all has been conducted as quietly as in an English churchyard, but at the conclusion of the service, the father, who has stood at the head of the grave, motionless, with folded arms and averted face, casts himself with an "exceeding loud and bitter cry," upon the coffin, and clutches it frantically. His friends close in about him, and with the feeling that we have no right to gaze upon a scene that has become exquisitely painful, we hurry down the hill.

Somewhere, on these steep slopes, the mortal remains of Our Lord's ancestors mouldered back to clay ages ago, and his pious foster-father was laid to rest, perhaps by the loving hands of him who wept at the grave of Lazarus, and in the death-agony committed his widowed mother to the care of his best-beloved disciple.

MARION HARLAND.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner at the command of the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash or postal notes.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, in order to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of the Town and the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

TOO LARGE A BUSHEL.

WE expect too much of our children when they become Christians. Do not let us measure their qualifications by our own bushel. We ought not to look for a gravity and deep appreciation of eternal things, such as we find in grown persons. We have seen old sheep in the pasture-field look anxious and troubled because the lambs would frisk. No doubt the children that were lifted by their mothers into Christ's arms and got his blessing, five minutes after he set them down were as full of romp as before they came to him. The boy that because he has become a Christian is disgusted with ball-playing; the little girl who because she has given her heart to God has lost her interest in her waxen doll, are morbid and unhealthy. You ought not to set the life of a vivacious child to the tune of Old Hundred.

When the little ones come before you and apply for church membership, do not puzzle them with big words, and expect large "experiences." It is now in the church as when the disciples of old told the mothers not to bother Christ with their babes. As in some households the grown people eat first, and the children have to wait till the second table, so there are persons who talk as though God would have the grown people first sit down at his banquet, and, if there is anything over, the little ones may come in for a share. No. No. If the supply at the Lord's table were limited, he would let the children come in first, and the older ones go without, as a punishment for not having come in while they themselves were children. If the wind is from the northeast, and the air is full of frost and snow, and part of the flock must be left out on the mountains, let it be the old sheep, for they can stand it better than the lambs. O, Shepherd of Israel! crowd them all in before the coming of the tempest!

IRRITATED DAYS.

THERE are times when everything seems to go wrong. From seven o'clock A.M., till ten P.M., affairs are in a twist. You rise in the morning and the room is cold, and a button is off and the breakfast is tough, and the stove smokes and the pipes burst, and you start down the street nettled from head to foot. All day long things are adverse. Insinuations, petty losses, meanness on the part of customers. The ink-bottle upsets and spoils the carpet. Some one gives a wrong turn to the damper and the gas escapes. An agent comes in determined to insure your life when it is already insured for more than it is worth, and you are afraid some one will knock you on the head to get the price of your policy; but he sticks to you showing you pictures of old Time and the hourglass, and death's scythe and a skeleton, making it quite certain that you will die before your time, unless you take out papers in his company. Beside this you have a cold in your head, and a grain of dirt in your eye, and you are a walking uneasiness. The day is out of joint and no surgeon can set it.

The probability is that if you would look at the weather-vane, you would find that the wind is north-east, and you might remember that you have lost much sleep lately. It might happen to be that you are out of joint instead of the day. Be careful and not write many letters while you are in that irritated mood. You will pen some things that you will be sorry for afterward.

Let us remember that these spiked nettles of life are part of our discipline. Life would get nauseating if it were all honey. That table would be poorly set that had on it nothing but treacle. We need a little vinegar, mustard, pepper, and horseradish that brings the tears even when we do not feel pathetic. If this world were all smoothness, we would never be ready for emigration to a higher and better. Blustering March and weeping April prepare us for shining May. This world is a poor hitching-post. Instead of tying fast on the cold mountains, we had better whip up and hasten on toward the warm inn, where our good friends are looking out of the window watching to see us come up.

THE TABERNACLE JUBILEE.

OWING to the very large edition of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, approximating 150,000 copies weekly, it is necessary to go to press a week in advance, and therefore the report of the National and International Reception tendered to Dr. Talmage at the Brooklyn Tabernacle last Thursday and Friday cannot appear in this issue. Justice will, however, be done to the occasion in our next issue.

The programme of the celebration was a most attractive and imposing one, including a Brooklyn city celebration on Thursday evening, with Mayor Schieren presiding, and addresses by Hon. John Winslow, Rev. Drs. Gregg and Carson, representing the Brooklyn Presbytery; Hon. David A. Boody; Prof. Ogden Doremus; Rev. Dr. Roche; Rev. A. C. Dixon; Rev. Dr. Louis A. Banks; Father Malone, Regent of the University; Rabbi F. De Sola Mendes; Hon. Bernard Peters; Hon. S. V. White, and others. On Friday evening there was a National and International demonstration, ex-Secretary Gen. B. F. Tracy, presiding. The opening prayer was offered by Chaplin W. H. Milburn, of U. S. Senate. Addresses were delivered by Hon. Wm. M. Everts; Dr. Chauncey M. Depew; U. S. Senator Patrick Walsh, of Georgia; His Excellency Prince Cantacuzene, the Russian Ambassador; Col. Frederic Grant; Rev. Dr. C. L. Thompson; Hon. Joseph C. Hendrix; U. S. Senator Daniels, of Virginia; U. S. Senator Manderson, of Nebraska; Rev. Dr. A. E. Kittridge; Hon. Wm. Ziegler, and others.

FARMERS TO THE FRONT.

WE rise to give out the hymn. It is the two hundred and seventy-sixth of the "Shovel and Hoe Harmony."

Whistle and hoe, sing as you go,
Shorten the row by the songs you know.

The agriculturists will all join in while some farmer gives the key-note with his pitchfork, and we are favored with drill and threshing machine accompaniment.

The outdoor life of our country friends now begins. We hope that they will plough up more health and good cheer than ever before. Standing and walking so much in the sunshine, they ought to be bright and glad. The breath of the field and woods ought to make them healthy. Their hard work ought to sharpen their appetite three times a day, and afford them eight or nine hours of sound sleep. We pray for their freedom from flood and drought, weevil and curculio; that there may be no longer storms after they get the grain down, no ring-boned or spavined horses at the time when they want all the teams, no hollow-horn to depress the cows, no gaps for the rising generation of chickens, no incursion of neighbors' cattle into the bean patch. We shall have a prosperous agricultural year. "How do you know?" cry out the rural population. "What sign in sky or ground or atmosphere do you judge by?" Our reason for thinking so is that it is almost always so. The good Lord has a way of abundantly blessing the fields. When one crop fails others make it up, as blind eyes almost always insure super-excellent ears. In the last six thousand years we do not believe that there have been twenty crops that might be called dead failures.

We are certain that this year, with not more than one or two exceptions of crops, we shall have large peaches, luxuriant corn, golden wheat, sound potatoes, rich grass, and great affluence of turnips, celery, cabbage and squash. While you are guessing by the moon, or the squirrel's storage of nuts, or the state of the mountain stream, or the almanac, as to what is coming to pass, we refer to the first agricultural journal ever written, and find in it: "While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease."

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Mrs. A. C. Clark, Leola, S. D. Can you tell me who is the author of the lines:

The mills of the God grind slowly,
Yet they grind exceeding small?

They occur in Longfellow's poem, entitled, "Retribution."

Jane Daly, Jamaica Plains, Mass. What was the first prayer and by whom was it made?

In all probability the first prayer uttered by human lips was coeval with the Fall, and was probably associated with the first offering of sacrifice. The earliest recorded instance is that mentioned in Gen. 4: 26, during the lifetime of the Patriarch, Enoch: "Then men began to call upon the name of the Lord."

W. H. H., Lyman, Warren, Mass., writes:

In Dr. Talmage's recent sermon preached at Macon, Ala., the lines commencing: "Love to steal awhile away," were written by a Mrs. Brown of Monson, Mass., a few miles from my home. The words were set to music by Doodalos Dutton of Monson. In Lowell Mason's Boston Academy of Music, 1838, you will find two verses and notes named "Woodstock." Mrs. Brown was afflicted by a domestic sorrow and would retire at eventide to a grove nearby to offer prayer and there composed the verses.

Anxious Inquirer, Racine, Wis. What money and education are necessary to become a foreign missionary; and would the profession of a trained nurse be useful in a foreign field?

Write to Rev. Dr. Torrey, Missionary Training Institute, La Salle street, Chicago, for full particulars. Special training is a decided advantage and an educated missionary is always more desirable than an uneducated one. We believe that experience as a nurse, or any medical training or experience, would be considered an advantage, particularly in tropical countries.

Lily Burruss, Baltimore, Md. Why was the shaft known as "Cleopatra's needle" so called?

The two obelisks originally brought from Heliopolis to Alexandria in the reign of Tiberius and set up in front of the temple of Caesar, were so-called. They are believed to have been originally constructed in the reign of Thothmes III., in the Sixteenth Century before the Christian era. History does not divulge the source of the name "Cleopatra's needles," which was probably an Alexandrian freak.

J. C. H. It is claimed by Theosophists that Christ studied magic, by which he performed his miracles, during the interval between the ages of twelve last mentioned in the Bible and thirty, when he began his real life work. Have we anything to prove or disprove this assertion? Was any magician ever known to raise the dead?

Untrue and absurd, like most assertions from the same source. Proof and disproof are equally out of the question. No "magician" ever yet raised the dead; power over death belongs to Deity alone, although spiritualized human agencies have been divinely used as instruments at different times for that purpose.

Yola, Buffalo, N. Y. Is it certainly known, or only surmised that "an ancient manuscript has been found in a monastery of Thibet," representing Christ as having been taught Brahminism, Buddhism, etc.? A theosophist who has been disseminating his false doctrines through this locality, has made that assertion one of his strong points, with the view of attracting professing Christians to his pernicious theories. He has misled the young, who were trained in the Christian faith, to the sorrow of parents.

The statement of the finding of such a manuscript still lacks verification. Even if found, it may prove unauthentic. The story is to the effect that the document was discovered in a Thibetan monastery by a Russian traveler named Nicholas Notovich. It is a "Life of Jesus Christ," known and honored among the Buddhists of that country under the name of Issa. The story is said to be written in the Pali language. According to the alleged translation Issa was born in the land of Israel. At the age of thirteen he fled from his father's house and went with merchants to Sindh. He learned to read and understand the Vedas. Then the priests threatened his life and he fled to another place. He went westward, preaching against idols, in Persia opposed the religion of Zoroaster, and returned to Judea at the age of twenty-nine. He at once began to preach there, was arrested, tried and found innocent, but was imprisoned, tortured and crucified in company with two thieves. The best Oriental scholars in Europe are thus far united in discrediting it, and believe the whole story about the origin and finding of the manuscript to be a fabrication.

Jennie Ellison, Reading Centre, N. Y. Who was Monte Cristo?

Monte Cristo is the name of a small island belonging to Italy, twenty-six miles south of Elba. It is a mountain of granite, 2,000 feet high, and inaccessible save by one landing-place. This island suggested to Dumas the hero of his famous story.

G. R. C., Hollidaysburg, Who were the heads of the twelve tribes of Israel?

Their heads or progenitors were: Reuben, the first-born; Simeon, Levi, Judah, Zebulun, Issachar, Dan, Gad, Asher, Naphtali, Joseph, and Benjamin. The tribe of Joseph was afterward subdivided into the two branches of Ephraim and Manasseh.

Subscriber, Vancouver, B. C. Do not the lighting of churches by electricity and gas, and the use of street cars on Sunday by Christian people, encourage the breaking of the Fifth Commandment?

We cannot see how they have any bearing, whatever, on the Commandment in question. "Subscriber" probably means the Fourth Commandment. As we have repeatedly stated in "The Mail-Bag," works of necessity and mercy alone are justifiable on the Lord's Day. If people live too far from church to walk, they must of necessity either ride or stay at home. And, similarly, since ministers cannot conduct evening service in the dark, illumination either by electricity, oil, or gas, would seem to be an absolute necessity, also.

W. A. N., Chicago, Ill. When a woman has left her husband on account of his abuse, cruelty and neglect, does Christianity demand it of her, after becoming a Christian, to go back and live with him and endure his brutal abuse and neglect?

Christianity demands that she make an effort to reform him and save him from himself. It is not necessary, however, that she should come again under the harrow of his abuse, and so impair or sacrifice her usefulness to the cause, and possibly imperil her own spiritual life. The whole question of duty in such a case must be a matter for the individual conscience. Some women, under like circumstances, might courageously return and conquer by love.

R. G. Stevenson, Britton's Neck, S. C. I noticed in a recent issue of your paper an account of the life of an aged negro woman. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD says that she is probably the "oldest Christian in America." There lives on my plantation an old negro woman whose exact age it is impossible to learn, though I know by certain incidents that she is past one hundred and fifteen. Her name is Phoebe Graves. She has been blind and bed-ridden for many years (at least ten), she enjoys tolerably good health, has a sound mind and body. This old woman is always cheerful, having implicit trust in God, though she lives in abject poverty. Strange to say, she was not converted until about four years ago.

Subscriber, New Providence, N. J. Yes; his address is 487 Greene Ave., Brooklyn.—C. L. Hewitt, Rollay, Minn. Contribution received acknowledged. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 4.—J. W. C. Hiles, Meadville, Pa. Contribution received. Have mailed you marked paper.—Friend, Port Royal, Va. Presbyterian.—K. M. H., Brooklyn. We have no information on the subject.—Friend, Rosedale, Pa. To renew your subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and secure the premium From Manger to Throne, you should forward $2 to this office.—J. W. Brash, Iowa Falls, Ia. The Eiffel Tower was 975 feet high, and its cost about $700,000.—E. K. Wehry, Clarence, Ia. You should make such inquiries through a lawyer.—R. K. Garfield, La Fox, Ill. Webster's or Worcester's are both standard dictionaries. The two latest and most comprehensive are those issued by Funk & Wagnalls and the Century Publishing Company, both of New York.—Mrs. L. A. Foster, Grand Rapids, Mich. Presbyterian.—M. Montymet, Philadelphia. We have no record of the date.—J. O. B., Salem, Oregon. No.—C. S. R., New Orleans. We cannot undertake to recommend any particular concern in the way you ask.—Elwyn Speilker, Egan City, Ill. Write to Harper Bros., publishers, New York, for full information.—E. C. L., Lyons, N. Y. Bella Cooke's address is 492 Second avenue, New York.—Allred. You can secure the desired information by addressing the American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia.—M. E. Dwyer, Roanoke, W. Va. Presbyterian.—V. D. Ransom, Elmwood, Ga. Write to Gen. B. F. Tracy, Brooklyn, N. Y.—Mrs. J. W. Sheerer, Cedar Rapids. We have not the information. Write to your local newspaper.—T. R., Wyoming, Pa. Write to Mr. Stearns, Secretary American Temperance Union, Reade st., New York.—Isaac W. Phares, Fowler, Ind., and H. C. Johnson, Devil's Lake, N. D. Write to Hubert P. Main, with Biglow & Main Co., music publishers, Ninth street, New York.—Geo. W. Jackson, Eureka Springs, Ark. We cannot give the information asked.—Mrs. Annie R. Hay, St. Joseph, Ill. The lines are from the famous hymn by Toplady, entitled, "Rock of Ages."—Subscriber, Mississippi. The meaning was that there should be no cessation of wars in his lifetime. 2. David was doubtless a converted man, but had backslidden when he sinned. 3. It means that we should hesitate at no sacrifice necessary for our spiritual welfare. 4. There are various descriptions, but probably none altogether authentic. 5. The Tabernacle's affairs are now permanently and satisfactorily adjusted. 6. Spring always imparts activity to business and brings more general employment in large cities. There are still thousands idle, but the majority are either employed or being helped in some way.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

THE TROUBLE AT BLUEFIELDS.

OUR governments are involved in the dispute at Bluefields on the Mosquito Coast of Central America, which lies to the east of Nicaragua. The Nicaraguan government has taken possession of Bluefields and proclaimed martial law; but the independence of the Mosquito people is guaranteed by England, and her interference has been invoked. Our government is also interested, inasmuch as the dispute may menace the control of the Canal now being cut across the isthmus to make a waterway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The possession of the Mosquito coast has been coveted by Nicaragua ever since she became an independent Republic. England claimed it as part of Honduras but formally abandoned her claims in a treaty which secured the neutralization of the coast. The treaty had the approval of our government as well as those of England, Spain and Nicaragua. The Mosquito people appear to have had a dread of being absorbed by Nicaragua, and at their instance, it was stipulated that England should make herself responsible for their protection against their powerful neighbor. Nicaragua agreed, on condition that it received a slice of the Mosquito Coast, and that was done, and another slice was added to Honduras. As to the provocation offered to Nicaragua to bring about her recent interference, there is a conflict of testimony, which will probably be sifted by an arbitration court. It is well known, however, that the Mosquito government has been of a lax kind, and that the influence of the traders and smugglers who have come to the coast from various lands, has been most injurious to the Mosquito people. The majority of those on the seaboard are said to be lazy, drunken, vicious, and generally degraded. There is, however, another class, of a much better type. These are the people who have heard the Gospel at the station which the Moravians have established at Bluefields. "This mission," says a resident of the town, "has done much noble work among the Mosquito Indians, in educating them, both morally and spiritually, and bringing them gradually to a state of civilization." The Mosquito government appreciates the value of this work and contributes a considerable part of its support. It is significant that the strongest protests against Nicaraguan annexation come from the converts of the mission, who dread being in the power of a government which, though nominally Roman Catholic, they believe to be godless. The contrast in the condition of these two classes of the Mosquito people is very instructive. We are often told that commerce is more effective than religion as a civilizing influence, but it has not proved so on the Mosquito Coast. There, as in Africa and elsewhere, the advent of commerce has been followed by drunkenness and other vices, while the preaching of the Gospel has yielded the peaceable fruits of righteousness. (1. Cor. 1: 18.)

A Geometrician Confuted.

Some young men fresh from college are reported by a Boston journal to have been convinced against their will of a variation from a geometrical axiom. Many years ago, says the report, a party of young men traveling in Virginia, set out to explore the Scioto Valley. On the third night of their journey they reached Clarksburg where they lodged with a man who boasted the title of surveyor. He was old-fashioned and illiterate, and the young men were disposed to make merry over his pretensions. They asked him how far it was to Marietta, and he replied that the straight road which had just been laid was exactly seventy-five miles, but there was a shorter road, which he pointed out. The young men laughed at the idea of any road being shorter than a straight line, and one of them gave the old surveyor a lecture on mathematics. The old man, however, would not yield to the authority of Euclid, for he declared that he had measured both roads. The next day the party set out, and in order to confute the old man, measured the roads. The straight road went over the hills, and the crooked road went round them, and, as the old man had said, the crooked road was the shorter. It is often so in the journey of life. The road by which God leads us may not be the one that seems best to us, nor the most direct according to our maxims, but in the end we shall find that it was the best way. "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." (Jer. 10: 23.)

Orphaned Robins.

A naturalist, writing to the St. Louis "Globe-Democrat," tells an interesting story of benevolence among birds. He says that he was interested in watching the building of two nests near his house. One of them was built by two robins in the fence surrounding his garden; the other was built in a bush near by, by two cat birds. Both pairs hatched out their young about the same time, but soon afterward the robins disappeared. He supposes they were killed. The young robins, who had depended on their parents for food, appeared to be starving. When the catbirds came with a worm or bit of food for their young, the young robins would thrust up their heads and make a great noise. Presently it was noticed that the catbirds were feeding the hungry orphans. Every night, too, while one of the catbirds covered its own young its mate performed the same service for the young robins. In this way both broods were reared, the robins growing up as strong and lively as though they had been cared for by their own parents. Thus the robins benefited by the fact that bird-life is so much more simple than human life. Human beings placed in the same circumstances as the catbirds might have had some hesitation in yielding to the emotion of pity for the orphaned family. They might have felt that all their energies should be devoted to making provision for their own old age, or to accumulating a fortune for their own children, not to caring for other people's orphans. Men are, as Jesus said, much better than birds, but there are some lessons he would have us learn of them and one such lesson may be learned from these catbirds. (Matt. 6: 26.)

THE MOSQUITO COAST TROUBLES—MORAVIAN MISSION AND SCHOOLS AT BLUEFIELDS.

A Steamer Aground.

An unusual spectacle was witnessed at Great South Beach, Long Island, on May

3. It was the large ocean steamer, "Persian Monarch," lying helpless on the sandbar. There was considerable alarm as to her safety. The ocean swell rolled her from side to side, and it was seen that if rough weather came on during the night the steamer would probably become a total wreck. Happily it continued calm, and when morning broke, the steamer was still heavily settled on the bar. Tugs were dispatched to her assistance, and after two hundred tons of cargo had been taken out of her hold, she was dragged off at high tide. She had been eighteen hours on the bar and had sustained some damage. How she came to be on the bar was a mystery, as it is five miles out of her course. A pilot had been taken on board a short time before the accident, but had not assumed charge of the steamer. He perceived, however, on coming aboard that the steamer was too near shore and suggested a change of course. A few minutes later the ship ran aground. There was a haze on the water at the time, but that would not account for the steamer's proximity to the land. The pilot's theory is that the disaster was due to an aberration of the compass. He says that there is a great deal of iron in the sand at that point, and if a large vessel approaches too near the bar the needle is apt to be deflected by it. Something analogous to this has been known to occur in the voyage of life. The Christian whose course is too near the worldly line is liable to fall into disaster. Worldly maxims and principles in such cases affect the conscience so that it ceases supposed that the future life of the soul depended on the preservation of its discarded habitation. We have learned better in this day, but we are not always so solicitous as they that our friends should have eternal life, otherwise we should make greater exertion than we do, to induce them to seek it where alone it can be obtained. (John 10:28.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Six Years ago there were Four Churches, ten elders, and 241 members in the Presbyterian Laos Mission. Now there are nine churches, thirty elders and 1,500 members.

A Correspondent of the "Record of Christian Work," says that at Dr. E. P. Hammond's meetings in Omaha, a large number of young people professed conversion. At one meeting over one hundred expressed the belief that they had passed from death unto life. "These have been days of great rejoicing in many families where there are new born souls."

Jewish Citizens of Great Britain are Much agitated by a proposal of the Government. The new bill for regulating Parliamentary elections has a clause requiring them to be held on a Saturday. The Jews are getting petitions signed against the clause, which, they declare, will prevent any conscientious Jew voting. They would consider it a violation of the Sabbath to mark a voting paper on that day.

A Society for Christian Work has been Organized in Union Theological Seminary, New York. So many of the students have given all the time they could spare from their studies to work in the missions and Sunday Schools, and the slums of the city, that it is found necessary to organize their labors to make them more systematic and efficient. Every student who wishes to engage in such work is invited to enroll himself for service and the Committee will see that he has the opportunity.

A Free Employment Bureau has been Established in New York to aid workmen who are seeking employment. No charge for registration is made either to the employer or employee. It is under the care of a committee of clergymen and philanthropists of which Dr. MacArthur, Dr. Greer and Dr. W. S. Rainsford are members. The President is Rev. John B. Devins.

At the Recent Meeting of the Managers of the American Bible Society, the announcement was made that a donation of $26.67 had been received from an auxiliary Bible Society, which had been organized at Soochow, China.

Dr. L. W. Munhall is Holding Union Evangelistic services at Mobile, Ala. His departure from Canton, O. at the close of his work there will not soon be forgotten by any who witnessed it. Fully three thousand persons followed him to the railroad depot to bid him Godspeed, and to express their gratitude for the blessing which had rested on his work. The Christian parents and friends of the converts were prominent in the procession, and gave the great evangelist such an ovation as is not often witnessed. The number of those who made profession of faith during the services was 535, and they are distributed among twenty-one churches. The Methodist Episcopal Church received a larger number than any other denomination.

Mr. D. L. Moody says that in his judgment, the whole country to-day is unusually susceptible to Christian influences. He is firmly convinced, however, that the old methods of meeting such an opportunity are the only safe ones: there can be no wholesale social regeneration, but men must enter one by one into the kingdom. Society can only be regenerated by the regeneration of individuals.

The "Interior" has Calculated that if the Foreign Missionary Societies could receive a contribution of five cents a week from each member of the evangelical churches of to-day, the whole world would have an opportunity of hearing of Jesus during this generation.

The Rev. John McNeill, whose Recent Visit here will be long remembered, has gone to South Africa to hold revival services. Writing from Kimberley, Mr. J. W. Burke, his assistant, says: "The way has opened up wonderfully here for us, and our meetings have been very good."

Many Religious Organizations and Benevolent Societies are deploring the loss they have sustained by the sudden death of Mr. Elbert E. Monroe. He was one of the Managers of the American Bible Society, Chairman of the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, President of the Board of Trustees of Hampton Institute, and held many other responsible offices. The freedom with which he gave his labor, time and money to religious and philanthropic work, made a place for him in the community which will not be easily filled.

Mrs. Baxter and Pastor Stockmayer have been holding meetings in Nashville, Tenn., Allegheny City, Pa., and other places. They have been deeply interested in the services they held at Fisk University, the Roger William Institute at the Central Tennessee College. Mrs. Baxter writes that "the intense attention of the students was most touching, and our hearts have been greatly drawn out toward them as God enabled us to open to them in the Scriptures, the life of Christ in his people and the coming of the Lord."

Additional Contributions for the Relief of the destitute in New York:

A sister's mite, Lyons, N.Y., 50c; Duff, Alexander, $1; Friend, Blue Rapids, Kan., $1; Friend, Montpelier, Vt., 60c.; Friend, Thomaston, L. I., $2; Hawkins, Mary, $2; Howard, Florence, $1; Hall, R., 50c.; In His Name, Pleasant Grove, Ind., 70c.; Passer by Relief Station No. 12, $4; Passer by Relief Station No. 12, $1.50; Simpson S. S., $4.50; Sub'r, Mich., $2; Mrs. N. St. Souvens, 77c.; C. W. and E. L. E., Lyons, N. Y., $1.

SERMONS WORTH READING

Helpful Discourses for the People.

THE TWO HEREDITIES.

A Sermon Preached in Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, by Pastor A. J. Gordon, D.D. Text: John 3: 6, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

THIS saying constitutes our Lord's justification for his stern demand for the new birth. Why must a man be born again? Because of his fallen nature. Nicodemus represents the culturists of the present day, who are always saying: "Educate men: develop them, bring out the good that is in them." "Rabbi, we know thou art a teacher come from God!" exclaimed this ruler of the Jews. As though he had said, "men need training and educating and thou art sent to be our divine instructor." "Nay," answers Jesus, "it is not instruction but regeneration which men need; verily, verily I say unto you except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Because men have been ill born they must be re-born. The flesh is flesh however cultivated, educated and developed, but it does not thereby become spirit. A new nature must be communicated before a new direction can be imparted: sin must have a divine life in order to have a divine character. Let us consider the two natures and the two heredities resulting therefrom.

1. The power of Natural Heredity.

That sounds like a terribly severe saying which is promulgated in Exodus. "I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me." But if we bring in physiology to interpret theology it is simply saying that the stream of natural descent is irresistible and that whatever gets into its current will flow on through many generations. And there is no point in which history and the Bible more perfectly harmonize than here. The consequences of one man's sin may not come out in his own life, or in the life of his immediate descendants, but they are certain to come out sooner or later. A dead body in a river may float on for miles under the surface and out of sight, and then suddenly come to the top to defile the whole atmosphere with its putridity. So a sin persistently committed and pursued for a life-time will start a disease or curse which may not come to the surface for generations, but it is almost certain to re-emerge sooner or later. This is the only way I can account for certain facts which come under my observation. The suffering and sickness and calamity which I sometimes find in families which seem not to deserve any such thing appalls me. But the secret often comes out in this—that some ancestor has poisoned the stream of descent very far back, and that the stream has not yet run itself clear. It is, I admit, a terrible law and one which has been much blamed by the wisdom of this world. But the simple fact is that such is the law and we must submit to and obey it. The self-indulgences of to-day are draughts on posterity payable two or three generations hence.

The Obligation.

What a tremendous obligation does this law put upon us to live sober and righteous and godly lives. What Napoleon said to his army at the pyramids, "soldiers, forty centuries are looking down upon you," we may almost reverse and say, "forty generations are looking up to you." The character which you are constructing is not your own. It is the building-material out of which other generations will quarry stones for the temple of life. See to it therefore that it be granite and not shale. Of the two I would rather inherit a faulty character than transmit one, which is saying that I had rather be sinned against than sinning. For I conceive of no greater remorse to heap on one than to gather his children and children's children about him at the judgment day, and set their sins and woes and misfortunes before him and say—"It is your heritage of transgression that treasured up wrath against the day of wrath for these." And then to take up the proverb of Scripture against him, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge." It is your sin and suffering which have brought that eternal weight of woe upon these who are bone of your bone and flesh of your flesh. The laws of heredity are irresistible: my descendants cannot reap a harvest of "well done's" if I spend my life in sowing a seed field of ill-doing.

And what a far-reaching influence does this fact endow us with. It makes us the teachers and Rulers of Generations yet Unborn.

Great wisdom as well as wit is contained in that answer of Dr. Holmes to the question of a friend. He was asked how early parental training should begin and he replied: "A hundred years before the child is born." You call that a paradox: I call it the deepest philosophy. In the present life of your child you may shape what is plastic and changeable, but what is fixed and unchangeable has been determined for generations back. "As the twig is bent the tree is inclined," says the proverb. True! with the pressure of your fingers you can twist a sapling so that it shall for all its life be gnarled and crooked, or straight and beautiful, as the case may be. But whether the tree shall bear sweet fruit or sour: whether it shall bear figs or acorns—that is something that cannot be determined by the pressure of your fingers,—the roots that strike far down and run far back. And heredity is the root of life, underlying long generations and taking the quality from them. A Puritan root was planted in the soil of Great Britain and nourished by rigid self-culture. In the Mayflower a slip of it was brought to our shores and here planted. It sent out its boughs unto the sea and its branches unto the river, and the oppressed of all nations came to find shelter under it. It is the quality of that root with its hundreds of years of rigid training and righteous living that has made New England character what it is. And when one of your Boston liberals stands up in his pulpit and preaches about "ethical culture," and says: "See how moral and virtuous we are, and how little need we have to depend on a dismal puritan orthodoxy to produce virtuous living," we reply in the words of Scripture: "Boast not thyself against the branches: but if thou boast thou barest not the root but the root tree." The very morality of Boston liberalism is the product of Puritan orthodoxy, and the very virtues of these advanced thinkers, as they call themselves, are the fruit of that old Calvinistic belief which stood for every point and punctilio of orthodoxy as though the destiny of the race depended on it. Culture can perhaps bend the sapling so that the tree which grows from it shall be straighter than it otherwise had been, but it cannot determine the future of that sapling, so that it is a thorn-tree now, it shall yet bear grapes hereafter. But regeneration in which the Puritan believed can do this. Yes! it is a wise saying: "Begin the training of the child a hundred years before it is born, and if you ask yourself 'when does my training and influence and example end let the answer be, 'A hundred years after I am dead.'"

II. The power of Divine Heredity.

There is a text in the first epistle of John bearing on this point which is very striking: "Whosoever is born of God does not commit sin: for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin because he is begotten of God." It is a saying which is very staggering to one's faith, and the interpretation of it has led to very opposite results—despair on the one hand and presumption on the other. One has said: "Alas, that settles it with me. It is no use for me to hope any further. I am sensible of constant lapses into sin, and if the Bible says that 'whosoever is born of God does not commit sin' then certainly I must surrender, and concede that I am a stranger to the new birth," and so the words drive some to despair. Another says: "Yes, that is very clear: one that is born of God cannot commit sin. Therefore it is possible to attain to sinless perfection. And that is what I have done. I believe I have lived for several years now without committing a sin." And so the words lead others to despair. They should produce a result exactly midway between these two—an intense striving after holiness and an intense humility because we come so far short of it.

What then is the true meaning of the words; This: "Whosoever is born of God doth not habitually and willfully commit sin. Sin is

No Longer His Element

and sphere. If he falls into sin he escapes from it as soon as possible. While he was unregenerated he lived in sin and loved it: now that he is regenerate he lapses into sin and loathes it. A fish when thrown out of the water struggles in pain and anguish because out of his element: a wounded dove when dropped into the water flutters and struggles because out of its element. One's home is in the air, and the other's in the deep, and neither can be easy in the other's habitude. The Christian "is born from above" in the language of Scripture, and is therefore a citizen of heaven. He cannot drop into the element of earthliness and sin without being made miserable just as a man whose home and habitude is in sin and corruption would be unutterably wretched if thrust into heaven among the angels and redeemed spirits. And why is it said that the regenerate man doth not commit sin? "Because God's seed remaineth in him." That is to say, his birth from God gives him the abiding life of God—the eternal life, the divine nature, which as strongly as the natural life tends to sin. Birth and blood will tell to the latest generation. If some ancestor of mine got intoxicated a hundred years ago at General Washington's inauguration-day, I am somewhat the worse for it since a grain of wrong can be transmitted in its evil effects through generations. But praise God if some fore-father of mine "lived soberly and righteously and godly" a hundred years ago, I am so much the likelier to do the same since the seeds of righteous character are surely conveyed from parent to children and children's children. This is what the apostle means by these words. "Whosoever is born of God, God's seed remaineth in him." He has a divine ancestry to keep him toward holy living, to give him an impulse and tendency to righteousness.

Tends to Holiness

What astonishing words are those when we seriously meditate upon them: "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life." The very life of very God dwelling within him as the source and spring of holy action. That life is sinless and incapable of begetting sin. Reproduce it a thousand times and the fruit will be the same, sinless and only sinless. "Eternal life means a life without end," you say. Yes, and just as truly it means

A Life Without Beginning.

Therefore the Christian is a man whose training began not a hundred years before he was born, but a hundred ages. The springs of his holy living take their rise in the beginning with God. As a boat thrust out into the current of the Amazon or of the Congo has all the momentum of the headwaters of those mighty rivers behind it to bear it on, so a soul which by faith believes on Christ and thus comes into eternal life has the impulse of God's beginningless life behind it to bear it onward in righteous living.

Here is encouragement for the weakest sinner. You say, O, young man, "Alas, what is the use of trying to be good? My whole nature is against me. What avails it to turn the weather-vane to the South, when the wind is blowing from the North? And it is just as much use for me to say, 'I will do right, I will be good, when the whole trend and tendency of my nature is against me.' Very true, and therefore Scripture saith plainly: "The carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed, can be." That settles it. You cannot get right-doing out of wrong-being. You cannot get a rising virtue out of a fallen nature. Therefore, it is that when we believe, God puts another mind within us. "It is called the law of the Spirit of life," which makes us free from the law of sin and death. Therefore, I beseech you, to let go of the fallen life of self, and lay hold of the risen life of Christ. The old life which is a perennial fountain of sin and death must be distrusted, mortified and put off: the new life in Christ Jesus must become our supreme reliance. For it is not only written "that which is born of the flesh is flesh," and "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," but it is also written, "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit and the Spirit against the flesh and these are contrary the one to the other." Take sides, therefore, with the Spirit and against the flesh. Trust to the death of Christ for the remission of sin: trust to the life of Christ for overcoming sin. So shall you be "conquerors and more than conquerors," through him that loved and gave himself for us.

UNWELCOME VISITORS.

In an Emergency Missionaries Appeal to God instead of to the Law.

CPROVIDENTIAL escape from robbery and violence in China is thus narrated in the Baptist Missionary Magazine, by Rev. Edwin N. Fletcher, of Huchau:

The Lord has granted us a most marked deliverance out of the hands of our enemies, giving us very distinct answers to our prayers and greatly strengthening our faith. Just before the Chinese New Year there is a ceremony called "Welcoming Spring." In this city the chief feature is a procession of all the high officials to the temple just outside our gate. Of course a crowd gathers to witness the pageant, and the most favorable point for seeing the sight is on the wall and in the open spaces just around our buildings. In view of the large numbers and the miscellaneous character of the visitors likely to come in on such a day we thought it best to keep the doors closed and explain that on account of the presence of large numbers and the danger of petty thieving, to say the least, we would ask them to call another day. This seemed to occasion some disappointment to those who sought admission, although most of them at first accepted our explanations pleasantly enough. But they gradually became more boisterous, pounding on the doors and saucily demanding admittance. We began to be apprehensive, as there were as many as a thousand people about, and the dangers of the mob spirit are great.

The first direct violence was a volley of stones against our front windows. Our house is right upon the street along which the procession passes and the crowd gathers. Before we could close our shutters more or less panes were smashed in all but one of the windows on the two exposed sides of our house. This happened about half past ten, and they kept trying to force an entrance all the forenoon, for it was now apparent that there was a number of desperate spirits in the crowd.

You may well believe we were all praying most earnestly for deliverance. My wife and baby had gone over to the other house, where they had also smashed out all the glass in the one window they could reach. We remained praying with the brethren. At about half past twelve they succeeded in forcing the back gate of the large compound by digging out the wall around the doors, which is there composed of bricks instead of solid mud. Even after the door was broken down Brother Mason was able to keep them out for a time. Finally, however, they poured in, a hundred or more, in spite of our efforts to hold the door, rushed up the yard, burst into the house and poured up the stairway until both the upper rooms were full.

Brother Mason soon followed them up, finding he could do nothing at the gate, and going up the stairs among them prevented further thieving, and persuaded them to go down and out, some of the crowd joining him and exclaiming against the thieving. The vicious ones found they were too helpless a minority to attempt violence, and in less than an hour the yard was cleared and we were left in peace. When the crowd left some officials of low degree appeared to assess damage and promise restitution. This makes very clear the fact that it was of the Lord and not of men that we were not consumed. In fact it was just as an answer to the burden of our prayer that deliverance came, for we had been praying not for help from the yamen but that God would move the hearts of the people and turn them from their evil purposes. It was just this that saved us.

He Spoke to the Heart.

How Christmas Evans, the Great Welsh Preacher, Moved a Strange Audience.

CHRISTMAS EVANS, the great Welsh preacher, came to his reputation in a curious way, wrote the late Rev. E. Paxton Hood, a famous English clergyman and author. It was at one of those wonderful gatherings, held at Velinvole, in the immediate neighborhood of Llanelltyd. A great concourse of people was assembled in the open air. There was, perhaps, some hitch in the arrangements. Two great men were expected, but still some one other was wanted to break the ice—to prepare the way. On so short a notice, notwithstanding the abundant preaching power, no one was found willing to take the vacant place. Christmas Evans was there, walking about on the edge of a crowd—a tall, bony, haggard young man, uncouth and ill-dressed. The master of the ceremonies for the occasion, the pastor of the district, was in an agony of perplexity to find his man—one who, if not equal to the mightiest, would yet be sufficient for the occasion. In his despair, he went to Timothy Thomas; but he, declining for himself, said abruptly, "Why not ask that one-eyed lad from the North? I hear that he preaches quite wonderfully."

So the pastor went to him. He instantly consented. Many who were there afterwards expressed the surprise they felt at the communication going on between the pastor and the odd-looking youth. "Surely," they said, "he can never ask that absurdity to preach!" They felt that an egregious mistake was being committed, and some went away to refresh themselves, and others to rest beneath the hedges around, until the great men should come; and others, who stayed, comforted themselves with the assurance that, at any rate, the one-eyed lad would have the good sense to be very short.

But for the young preacher—while he was musing, the fire was burning—he was now for the first time to front one of those grand Welsh audiences, and to be the preacher of an occasion, which, through all his life after, was to be his constant work. He took a grand text: "And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy, and unblamable, and unreprouvable in his sight."

Old men used to describe afterward how he justified their first fears by his stiff, awkward movements; but the organ was, in those first moments, building, and soon it began to play. He showed himself a master of the instrument of speech. Closer and closer, the audience began to gather near to him. They got up, and came in from the hedges. The crowd grew more and more dense with eager listeners; the sermon became alive with dramatic representation.

The throng of preachers present confessed that they were dazzled by the brilliance of the language and the imagery falling from the lips of this altogether unknown and unexpected young prophet. The surprise grew to amazement. Presently, beneath some appalling stroke of words, numbers started to their feet; and in the pauses, if pauses were permitted in the paragraphs, the question went, "Who is this? Who have we here?"

His words went rocking to and fro; he had caught the people; he went swelling along at full sail. The people began to cry, "Gogoniad!" "Bendigedig!" The excitement was at its highest, when, amidst the weeping and rejoicing of the mighty multitude, the preacher came to an end. Drawn together from all parts of Wales to the meeting, when they went their separate ways home they carried the memory of "the one-eyed lad" with them. Christmas Evans was from that moment one of the most famous preachers in the principality. Lord Byron tells us how he woke up one morning and found himself great. In those days a new great Welsh preacher was quite as famous a birth in the little country of Wales as the more famous reputation in the literary world of England.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

Conducted by Ira D. Sankey

O Church of Christ.

H. BUTTERWORTH

REV. GEO. G. PRIPPS.

1. O Church of Christ, Je - ru - sa - lem! Ce - les - tial grace be Thine:
2. Je - ru - sa - lem! Je - ru - sa - lem! I came to thee for rest,
3. O Church of Christ! Je - ru - sa - lem! What grace to thee is giv'n!

Thou art the dwelling-place of God, The gate of joys di - vine.
And found it more than earthly peace To be Im-man-uel's guest.
Thou art the dwelling-place of God, The gate from earth to heav'n.

Where'er for me the sun may set, Wherever I may dwell, My heart shall nev-er-more forget, My heart shall never-more forget Thy courts, Immanuel!

Copyright, 1893, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From SELECT SONGS No. 2, by per. of the Publishers.

"IN HIS KEEPING."

SAVIOUR, keep me by thy side,
Nevermore from thee to stray;
Take me, and my weakness hide
In thy keeping day by day.

In his keeping, Oh! how sweet!
What could tempt my soul away?
Resting at my Saviour's feet,
In his keeping, come what may.

When the world would win my heart,
And my footsteps almost stray,
Jesus saith, "My child, thou art
In my keeping; come away."

Trouble cometh—grief and pain,
Friends and loved ones find release,
Thro' it hear the sweet refrain,
"In his keeping there is peace."

When thy face the storm doth hide,
And the water upward swell,
May we know, whate'er betide,
In thy keeping, all is well.

Then, when this brief life is past,
All its sighs and strivings o'er,

We shall reach our Home at last,
In his keeping, evermore.

R. F. MCCORMACK.

CHRIST SUFFICIENT.

WHEN time seems short and death is near,
And I am pressed by doubt and fear,
And sins, an overflowing tide,
Assail my peace on every side,
This thought my refuge still shall be,
I know my Saviour died for me.

His name is Jesus, and he died
For guilty sinners crucified:
Content to die that he might win
Their ransom from the death of sin;
No sinner worse than I can be,
Therefore I know he died for me.

My faith is weak, but 'tis thy gift;
Thou canst my helpless soul uplift,
And say, "Thy bonds of death are riven,
Thy sins by me are all forgiven;
And thou shalt live, from guilt set free,
For I, thy Saviour, died for thee."

—DR. GEO. W. BETHUNE.

THE MILLENNIAL REIGN.

Christ's Reign on Earth During the Thousand Years to Be a Time of Universal Righteousness.

BY REV. W. MAUDE.

(Concluded from page 297.)

ISAIAH transported with the glory of the millennial vision, bursts forth into the glowing, burning words: "For Zion's sake I will not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the nations shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory." (Isa. 60: 21, 62: 1-2.) Yes; and seeing that righteousness, and the exalted position which Israel in consequence thereof occupies, the inhabitants of the world will learn that it is "righteousness alone that exalteth a nation."

Lastly, all ultra-natural incentives to unrighteousness will be absolutely banished from the earth. Hitherto the story of Eve's temptation in the garden has been the history of all Eve's children. Not only as "the prince of the power of the air," has Satan "worked in the children of disobedience;" and "as a roaring lion" gone about "seeking whom he may devour;" but even of himself and the saints at Ephesus, Paul says: "Our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world-rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places," or, rather, "the aerial regions." (Eph. 6: 12.) "And I saw," says John, "an angel, having the key of the abyss and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, the old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him for a thousand years, and cast him into the abyss, and shut it, and sealed it over him, that he should deceive the nations no more until the thousand years should be finished." (Rev. 20: 1-2.)

And how great a boon this banishment of Satan and his hosts will be to the world we can in some measure realize, not only from the history of the past, but also from the terrible results which almost immediately ensue, when, at the conclusion of the Millennial age, Satan will for "a little season be loosed out of prison and go forth to deceive the nations which are in the four corners of the earth." Why this brief return of Satan to the earth, to work such dire mischief is divinely permitted; why, according to St. John, it "must" needs be so, is indeed harder to understand further than this: (1) that it will conclusively demonstrate the inherent frailty of the natural man even at his best estate and under the most favorable circumstances; and (2) the incurable malignity and wickedness of Satan which is in nowise eradicated or subdued, even by the penal judgment of a thousand years.

These, then, are the four strong pillars on which the righteousness of the coming kingdom will securely rest. It must not be supposed, however, that during the Millennial period the reign of righteousness will be universal—that is, beyond the limits of Israel, "the righteous nation that keepeth the truth," for the contrary is plainly implied in Zech. 14: 16-19, and other passages; but whereas now it may with truth be said that unrighteousness is the rule and righteousness the exception, then it will be equally true that righteousness shall be the rule and unrighteousness the exception.

Meanwhile, as the darkness falls, which is to deepen into a very "noon of night" over the world; as "evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived;" as lawlessness, the noxious growth of ages, ripens its last deadly fruit; as the perilous times of the last days multiply their signs around us; still, above the shouts of victory that rise from the camp of the enemy, and amid the tumult of a world in arms against the Lord and against his Anointed, the watchful Christian can hear the Divine Voice, calm with the assurance of invincible power and immutable purpose, saying, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree: the Lord has said unto me, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

A New Work on Prophecy.

Just published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, a new booklet on "The Lord's Coming," by Mrs. M. Baxter, whose articles on the Sunday School Lessons appear week by week in this journal. Its fifteen chapters cover the period from the Parousia to the Millennium. Paper cover, 104 pages; price fifteen cents. May be obtained at this office, 92-98 Erie House, New York.

CHRIST'S CALL.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Commencing May 27. Ephesians 4: 1-6; 17-32.

CHRISTIANITY needs to be viewed in the light of a calling. Perhaps it has not so often been looked at in that point of view as it should have been. The importance of doctrine and right belief cannot be exaggerated, but they are not the whole of Christianity. We expect that right belief will issue in right conduct, and it ought to do so; but as a matter of experience we find that the effect does not always follow the cause. Irreproachable orthodoxy may, as many sad examples prove, be allied with unrighteousness. Character and conduct are essential parts of the religion of Christ. He came to save his people from their sins. They were to be delivered from the bondage of sin, from the dominion of the flesh, and from subservience to the principles of the world. They were called to a new life and were encouraged to obey the call by the assurance of forgiveness for past misconduct, and the promise of divine power for future holiness of life. The new birth was to be an introduction to a new relation to God, a naturalization in his kingdom, involving obedience to the laws of the kingdom and a behavior becoming citizens. The Apostle gives in the passage selected for the Topic a summary of these laws. As we read it we are impressed by the exalted conception of Christian life and character. A community in which every member was governed by such rules of action would be a model community, free from wrong-doing, from unkindness, from malice, uncharitable feelings, untruthfulness and all the ills of thought and speech and action which afflict human life in the world. It would be more. Negative goodness is not sufficient; there must be active love and helpfulness. Every member is expected to seek opportunities of doing good. This is not in mere gifts of money; charity, as we understand the word, is mentioned only incidentally. But there is to be a spirit of brotherhood cultivated, a readiness to serve others and promote their happiness. There is no limit to this spirit. Each one must be willing and eager to sacrifice his own interests, his time and labor in the service of the society or his individual brother. His own life must be pure, and he must be actively beneficent. That is the law of the kingdom, and it is easy to see how delightful and joyous life in such a kingdom must be. With all the mean, sordid, selfish, ambitious principles which govern life in the present day, banished, and in their place, love, gentleness, forbearance, kindness and helpfulness installed, the elements of true happiness are combined. It is to this that we are called. This is the kingdom Christ came to set up, not in heaven, but in this world. The call comes to each and every one that takes upon him the name of Christ. What if some do not obey? What if some are unfaithful? Then there is the more need of obedience on the part of others. There should be no complaining, but each should so live that if all were like him, the society would exist as Christ conceived of it.

THE B. Y. P. U. CONVENTION.

The prospects are good for a most successful convention of the Baptist Young People's Union at Toronto on July 19-22. Massey Music Hall has been engaged for the meetings. Prof. Vogt, the organist of the Jarvis Street Baptist Church, has consented to take charge of the music during the convention, and since he is a musician of distinguished reputation, and a choir leader with few equals in this country, this part of the convention programme will be of superior order. The Transportation Committee has succeeded in making favorable arrangements with the railroads. All the passenger associations of the country from the Mississippi to the Atlantic and from Winnipeg, Quebec and Halifax to the Gulf have granted a one fare round trip rate, save the Western Passenger, which, too, is expected to follow in a few days. The special rate it is hoped will be extended west of the Mississippi to the Rockies, perhaps to the coast. Present indications are that it will be the largest convention for attendance in the history of the Union.

AN ACTIVE B. Y. P. UNION.

We are apt to think of the various young people's organizations as masses, and to dwell upon their strength and work in the gross as seen in their annual conventions; but it should not be forgotten that each organization is made up of small societies and its usefulness depends on the activity and fidelity of those component parts. The Convention is the field-day when these Societies appear in brigade formation for celebration and review. The real work and the real

MR. EDGAR C. LANE,

President of the B. Y. P. U. of Tremont Temple, Boston.

benefit come in the ordinary routine of the individual Society. In recognition of this fact, we publish this week the record of one Baptist Young People's Union which has become conspicuous by its activity and usefulness. It is the Union of Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., of which Dr. Lorimer is pastor. This was organized in September, 1891, and has now 337 members. During that period the sum raised and disbursed amounted to $3,228.94. Over one-half of this sum went to the home and foreign Missionary Societies of the Baptist denomination, and the remainder for local objects of religious or philanthropic character. The Union is thoroughly organized for aggressive work. Its committees are numerous and their names indicate the kind of field they cover. These comprise Committees denominated respectively: Devotional, Instruction, Entertainment, Social, Missionary, Publication, Strangers, and Visitation of the Sick. These Committees are expected to render reports of their work to the general Society once a month. The aim of the Union is to interest every member in some special line of work for which he or she is best adapted and to secure active, personal labor directly in the work. In so large a church as that of Tremont Temple which has over two thousand members, there are ample opportunities for helpful personal effort. These the Union endeavors to fill, and it reaches beyond them to the non-churchgoing people in the city and to the special classes who are in any way in need of Christian sympathy and kindness. The President of the Union during its infancy was Mr. C. F. Jameson, one of the Deacons of the church. His successor, elected last month, is Mr. Edgar C. Lane, whose portrait with that of the Vice-President, Mrs. Edgar L. Rhodes, appears on this page. Both these officers, with Mr. F. F. McLeod, the second Vice-President, and the Chairmen of the various Committees, are devoted to the interests of the Union, and have originated excellent plans for increasing its efficiency, and developing its powers of usefulness.

THE TENEMENT HOUSE CHAPTER.

The Tenement House Chapter of the King's Daughters presented its second annual report at a large meeting recently held in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York. Mrs. G. H. McGrew presided. The financial report showed that about $3,500 had been raised during the year for the work, whose demands had been so great these hard times as to absorb this income and all but about $700 of a balance from last year amounting to $2,000. The report of the superintendent showed the following particulars: that the calls at the office were 7,073; average number of families under care each month, 102; cases of special nursing, 76; garments distributed, 5,913; bunches of flowers distributed, 15,008; mothers and children sent on day excursions, 596; mothers sent to the country for two weeks, 10; children sent, 255; ice tickets distributed, 689; days' work secured for women, 1,446; for men, 1,304; through the East Side Relief Committee and for street cleaning, 1,698; permanent work for men and women, 46; and that in the Penny Deposit Bank there are seven hundred depositors. Mr. Jacob Riis, the devoted friend of the poor, whose works have been the means of arousing sympathy and gaining help for the needy, eloquently presented the claims of the chapter to the support of the ladies of the city.

THE WORLD'S C. E. UNION.

The suggestion that a World's Union of Christian Endeavor Societies be organized, comes from Rev. J. W. L. Closs, President of the New South Wales Colonial Union. It has been well received here and in England and has the hearty approval of Dr. F. E. Clark, who says, editorially, "Of course the World's Union, if formed, would rest on the basis on which all other Endeavor unions are. It would exert no authority over local Societies any more than the United Societies or State Unions. In the future, as in the past, the Society will owe allegiance only to its own church. It will stand for spiritual, not organic, unity. This World's Union will not multiply meetings, or increase our responsibilities. The little management that it will need can be safely entrusted to a small body of directors from the various Christian Endeavor countries, but it will stand for our spiritual unity, and represent our world-wide fellowship in a tangible, intelligible form."

MRS. E. L. RHODES,

Vice-Pres of the B. Y. P. U. of Tremont Temple, Boston.

THE Y. M. C. A. IN NEW YORK.

An exhaustive report of the Young Men's Christian Associations, of New York State, has just been issued by the State Committee, whose headquarters are at 40 East Twenty-third street, New York City. The report shows that there are now in the State in active operation 149 Associations, with an aggregate membership of 39,540. Work is carried on at twenty-seven points for railroad men, with a membership of 8,472. There are twenty-one College Associations with 1,526 members. Efforts are, also, made to reach French and German young men at four points. The Boys' Department have a membership of 3,576. There are forty-nine buildings in the State, valued at $3,048,050.

The lines of work include Educational classes in which special effort is made to help young men in their daily vocations, physical culture, social entertainments, Bible classes, Gospel meetings and the many attractions of fully equipped "homes" for the all-round development of the young men in our cities and towns. Connected with these statistics is a report of the proceedings of the annual convention, showing with more detail the progress made in the year. Addresses by Rev. R. A. Torrey of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, and by Association men, dealing with Association topics upon Educational, Athletic, College, Railroad work, etc., and the problems in the development of this particular field of work which were delivered at the convention are included in the report.

AMONG THE ORDERS.

The Christian Endeavor Societies and the Sunday School Association of St. Louis have raised more than $4,000 for those out of work.

Mr. W. G. Sprigg, of the Melbourne Y. M. C. A., is leaving Australia to take up the work at Cape Town, where he has been appointed general secretary.

At the end of April the Epworth League comprised 12,290 Chapters and 2,526 Juniors. This shows a gain during the month of over three hundred Chapters or more than ten a day.

The "Northwestern Christian Advocate" says that a prayer-meeting is held at five o'clock every Sunday morning by a number of young men of a Pennsylvania Epworth League to pray for the salvation of their friends.

The newly organized Young Men's Christian Association at Calcutta, India, is about to establish a branch in the centre of the native student population. Thousands of these natives speak English, and it is believed that a great work can be accomplished among them.

Native Young Men's Christian Association work has been begun at Chefoo, North China, with encouraging prospects. Dr. Corbett, of the American Presbyterian Mission, presided. Four or five Christian natives spoke. A second place has been opened and at present it is hoped to work the two, three nights a week each.

The National Council of the Y. M. C. A., of Sweden, have arranged for a grand Swedish concert at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday, June 5, at 3 p. m., to be given by a select choir of sixty-eight high-class Swedish singers, who will visit England to sing during the Jubilee of Y. M. C. A. there. The object of the concert is to support the work of the Associations in Sweden.

The General Secretary of the Epworth League is expected shortly on the Pacific coast and preparations are being made there to give him a cordial and enthusiastic welcome. Dr. Schell's journey thither will be broken at various points to give the Leaguers an opportunity of becoming personally acquainted with him.

A branch of the Young Women's Christian Association was formed at Rathowen County, Westmeath, Ireland, about a year ago in connection with a gathering for sewing and Bible study which had for some time been held among the women of the neighborhood. With God's blessing the work has grown and flourished so much that it now numbers thirty-nine members, who meet weekly. In the last twelve months 210 articles of clothing have been made for the poor Protestants of the neighborhood.

The new organization of the Boston Y. P. U., is divided into four districts, one for each Association. The Central Union acts through its governing board as an advisory board to the four Associational Unions. There are to be two meetings or "rallies" of the Central Union every year; one in March, the other in September. The March rally is to be the business meeting and election of officers and committees. The Associational Unions are to hold rallies in each of the four Associations at least every two months. R. J. Condon has been elected president.

A Royal Outing.

Queen Victoria's Visit to Italy—The Beautiful Villa Fabbriotti.

AT the present season, when Europe is at peace, and crowned heads are amiably disposed towards each other, an interchange of courtesies is going on which, to us at a distance, looks very charming indeed. Quite recently, Queen Victoria visited Italy, and was received with great pomp and demonstration by King Humbert and a host of Italian officials. On her arrival in "the City of Flowers," as Florence is poetically called, she was driven to the beautiful Villa Fabbriotti over a path literally strewn with flowers, flung by enthusiastic Florentines. At the Villa, a huge posy of lilies of the valley in a great majolica vase, awaited her, together with a bouquet of red roses.

The Villa Fabbriotti (which is shown in the illustration), is one of the most charming residences in Europe. It is on an eminence known as the Collina Montughi and overlooks Florence. Built by the famous Connt Fabbriotti in 1848, it is a sumptuous, ornate, and imposing edifice, surrounded by a spacious terrace. The east and west wings of the building are connected by an entrance court roofed with glass and adorned with fresco paintings on the walls; balconies on the first floor, adjoining the Queen's private apartments, command a delightful view. The gardens, though on a steep ascent, are laid out with many beautiful walks. Indeed, the whole hill is covered with gardens and looks like a semi-tropical Paradise, with its brilliant display of flowers of every hue, fragrant shrubberies and dark green cypresses as a background. The view to be had from the windows and terraces is incomparably fine, taking in a sweeping circle of hills, with snow-tipped peaks, while the green vale of Arno lies below, marked here and there by farms and villages.

There are few buildings in Southern Europe, outside of the palaces, that have been more enriched by art than the Villa Fabbriotti. Its walls and ceilings are frescoed by eminent artists, and the grounds are made still more beautiful by the addition of statuary and bronzes. In one of the old rooms of the Villa, Princess Pauline Borghese, Napoleon's loveliest sister, passed away. She was in many respects a remarkable woman, and almost worshipped her brother, whose death at St. Helena gave her a shock from which she never recovered.

There is a portion of the eminence of Montughi, on which the Villa is built, that possesses a strange historical and religious interest. The Ughi were a powerful family with many palaces and strongholds. They were called the "Avvocati della Hlensa," or Advocates of the Church, and in this capacity represented the Bishop of Florence in all quarrels which, according to mediæval custom, had to be decided by an appeal to arms, or, as it was then called, to the "judgment of God." The Bishop, as a priest, could not fight in person, so he retained the Ughi to fight for him, and the tie between the two parties was acknowledged by an annual offering of certain articles of food from the Bishop to his advocates. On a special day in the year this offering was brought with great pomp from the Bishopric to the Ughi Palace, and the custom continued until quite a recent date.

Royalty has its embarrassments, and, when it takes to the country for an outing, it is pleasant to know that its surroundings are usually shorn of much of their pomp and display. At the Villa Fabbriotti Victoria has reserved for her own use a simple suite of four rooms on the first floor. Every day there is religious service at the Villa, but on Sunday the service is specially fine. Princess Beatrice trains a choir for the Sunday service. There are only a few guests. In the mornings of week days the Queen drives about the neighborhood in her familiar donkey-carriage, and later in the day she usually accompanies some of her grandchildren on a short outing to the Armo, the Pitti Palace, or some other place in the suburbs, or to the English cemetery, where she can often be found musing among the monuments.

Poverty No Bar to Success.

Interview the most successful business men you know, and in nine cases out of ten you will find that they began life as poor as woman who was obliged to wait at the breakfast table for a dozen boarders to straggle down, in her waiting moments manufactured yards of a dainty lace, which she found a profitable way of employing the time. Another young woman, who daily waited a quarter of an hour for an elderly friend to go driving, kept a book on the hall table, and in waiting times of one summer, managed to do a creditable amount of historical reading. Another kept a book "going" in each room of the house, and whenever she waited for dinner, managed to read a few chapters of whichever book was handiest. The only reading moments of one busy woman was the time she spent every day putting her baby to sleep, and her book was kept in readiness for the operation.

Home Prayers.

What shall we gain from family prayer? For ourselves, an uplift for the day, the starting of our work upon a higher plane, an added assurance of help wherever we shall find need, and the setting straight of what has already gone awry; for our children and the stranger who may be within our gates the proof, if proof be needed, that our religion is first and foremost in our hearts, a thing of which we have no cause to be ashamed, no desire to keep in the background, that we may rely upon our God for help in all we are to do and meet throughout the day. If, then, into the little service we put what is best in ourselves, will not the children, even though they may receive no immediate benefit, recall the hour and circumstances after they have gone away from us—possibly some word, or

FRIENDSHIP.

If you have a friend worth loving,
Love him. Yes, and let him know
That you love him, ere life's evening
Tinge his brow with sunset glow.
Why should good words ne'er be said
Of a friend—till he is dead?

If you see the hot tears falling
From a brother's weeping eyes,
Share them; and by kindly sharing
Own your kinship with the skies.
Why should any one be glad
When a brother's heart is sad?

If your work is made more easy
By a friendly, helping hand,
Say so. Speak out brave and truly
Ere the darkness veil the land,
Should a brother workman dear
Falter for a word of cheer?

Scatter thus your seeds of kindness,
All enriching as you go—
Leave them. Trust the Harvest Giver,
He will make each seed to grow.
So, until its happy end,
Your life shall never lack a friend.

—ALICE CARY.

CHILDREN'S SUNDAY.

IF the Lord's day is made a day of peculiar delight to children, with the understanding on their part—as they come to years of understanding—that this is because the day is peculiarly the Lord's day, there is a gain to them, so far, in the Lord's plan of the Sabbath for man's welfare in the loving service of the loving God, writes Rev. H. Clay Trumbull. But if, on the other hand, the first impressions in the children's minds concerning this day of days are, that it is day of harsh prohibitions and of dreariness and discomforts, there is so far a dishonoring in their minds of the day and of him whose day it is; and for this result their unwise parents are, of course, responsible.

As children grow older, and are capable of comprehending more fully the spiritual meanings and privileges and possibilities of the Sabbath, they need more help from their parents—not less help, but more—in order to their wise use of the day, and to the gaining of its greatest advantages. The hour of family worship ought to have more in it on the Lord's day than on any other day of the week. Its exercises should be ampler and more varied. Either at that hour, or at some other, the Sunday School lesson for the week should be taken up and studied by parents and children together.

There are homes where the children have a Sunday School of their own, at a convenient hour of the day, in the family room, led by father or mother, or by older brother or sister, with the help of maps and blackboards, or slates. There are other homes in which the father leads a children's service of worship, in the early evening, and reads a little sermon from some one of the many published volumes of sermons for children.

Wherever either of these plans is adopted, there should be a part for each of the children, not only in the singing and reading, but in asking and answering questions.

Apart from such formal exercises as these, one child can be showing and explaining a book of Bible pictures or of Scripture cards to younger children; or one group of children can be picking out Bible places or Bible persons from their recent lessons. Variety in methods is desirable from week to week, and variety is quite practicable.

A Chinese Idea of the Piano.

A Chinaman, lately returned from a trip to Europe, treated his countrymen to the following description of the piano: "The Europeans keep a four-legged beast, which they can make to sing at will. A man, or more frequently a woman, or even a feeble girl, sits down in front of the animal and steps on its tail, while, at the same time, striking its white teeth with his or her fingers, when the creature begins to sing. The singing, though much louder than a bird's, is pleasant to hear. The beast does not bite, nor does it move, though it is not tied up."

VILLA FABBRICOTTI, WHERE QUEEN VICTORIA LODGED WHEN IN ITALY.

the poorest. But they did not seek their betterment at the hands of other people. With character, industry and a resolute spirit, they carved their own fortunes; and this is true of the tens of thousands who control to-day the financial resources of our land. It is true that in America, as elsewhere, idleness and dissipation and bad business methods will clothe a man in rags; but the men who retain their success longest are as a rule those who have made it by their own earnest efforts.

Saving the Odd Minutes.

Fifteen minutes waiting for the lazy ones to come down to breakfast! writes Mrs. Margaret Sangster. Fifteen minutes for the unpunctual ones to go for a walk or a drive! Fifteen minutes waiting for the luncheon or dinner bell to ring! Fifteen minutes waiting for a dressmaker's pleasure, for the child to come back from an errand, or for the restless baby to go to sleep! Not to speak of the half-hours and hours spent in trains and boats! Something can be done with these odd moments which are so exasperatingly unproductive to the diligent ones. A prayer, or verse, and because of it he kept or helped in ways we dream not of? Of course, there is the danger of its becoming a mere form, and so in time growing distasteful and irksome, but that lies in our proper power to prevent.

Walking Biographies.

In Japan, every part of one's toilet is eloquent. Every fold of the dress, every turn of the sash, has its meaning. You can tell the sex of the tiniest baby by its garments, for the little girls have the brightest, gayest colors. Every woman is a walking biography of herself. You know by the dress, the coiffure, the sash, her rank, her age, her position. The wife's dress differs from the maiden's, and pure womanhood has its insignia of honor which immoral women may not wear. You might object to the dress etiquette which betrays years in the arrangement of the costume, but in Japan it is considered quite as much of a compliment to ask a woman her age as it would here be considered an impertinence. She will always answer you at first by saying, "How old do you think?"

CHAPTER XVI. (Continued.)

MRS. LANIER expressed no further solicitude as to the chances of detention in his homeward journey. The clear shining of his holiday mood continued throughout the walk and talk.

Mrs. Paull paused for a last look at the outer scene before entering the house.

"Our white Christmas is over!" she said, regretfully. "There goes the stroke of twelve! Ah, well! we have enjoyed every blessed minute of it. 'From early morn to dewy eve,' it has been without spot or wrinkle or any such thing. We give it back to God as pure as when we received it from his hand."

"And so went our white king to his burial!"

Her brother looked at her in surprised inquiry.

"You spoke of a ringing in your ears or brain, of a certain snatch of a song. That sentence has haunted me all day. I read it in an account of the execution of Charles I., written as you may know, by a devoted royalist. The snow fell upon his bier as they carried it to the vault; when it got there, the black velvet was as white as wool. 'And so went our white king to his burial,' are the concluding words of the narrative. That they should pursue me to-day is an absurd, and, so far as I can judge, a causeless haunting, although I do not deny that I am a Stuart-lover."

"Now, your lines are beautiful, comforting and always apt."

He hummed them in putting together the brands on the hearth, and piling on stout logs that would be ablaze by the time Lanier and Marie returned:

I know thou wilt not slight my call,
For thou dost mark the sparrow's fall.

"I don't know that I care to get away from my 'haunting.' I could lay nothing pleasanter to heart. And the inevitable association of 'Ye are of more value than many sparrows' is a soft pillow for temples a-throb with the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches."

"Good night, my Evangel! God bless and keep you and give you many, many more white days!"

Mrs. Paull caught up his haunting rhyme, going over words and tune musingly, a smile upon her lip, as she laid off her dress, put on a wrapper, and went back to the parlor-fire. She stirred the bed of scarlet coals, lay back in her father's chair, her feet upon the embroidered stool and thought her own happy thoughts until the merry-makers found her there, fully awake to the interest of the story of their drive and entertainment.

Marie kissed her of her own accord, outside of her mother's chamber-door.

"You are too good to me, mamma! I wish I were a better child to you!"

"All dear and lovely things have come to me this Christmas-tide!" murmured the mother as she laid her head on the pillow and heard the toll of "one" from the hall-clock.

She was talking asleep when the humming of a distant choir seemed to bring to her the fragment of the "old song our father loved to hear you sing." She could have fancied that she heard her brother's voice in the celestial music:

I know thou wilt not slight my call,
For thou dost mark the sparrow's fall.

She sat up, startled, but partially awake; then smiled and sank back among the pillows.

"Dear, dear old Roger! No wonder that I dream of him!"

The stillness of night and slumber enwrapped dreaming household and landscape. Except that the morning pines responded fitfully to the captive winds under the ice, and that long, brooding breathings stirred the unclothed limbs of oaks and hickories, nothing moved in the solemn amphitheatre within the rampart of the hills, until, at four o'clock, the snow began to fall.

Great flakes drifted straight eastward, and caught upon and clung to the trees, floating down and down, slow and large, until the nearest hills were invisible behind the wavering white veil. The trees ceased their sighing under the increasing weight of damp snow; the mysterious groans beneath the ice were muffled out of hearing; the earth that had slept while the moon shone, lay dead in her misty shroud.

